the hande of God, and therupon he fretted himselfe. VVe must not do so: but oure laying forth of oure miseries before God must bee to the end he may be inclined to pitie vs. And the holy scripture is full of such texts where the faithfull say, Alas Lord what is man? Behold, Dauid saith, Seeing that my life is but a breath that passeth away without returning, Lorde, wilte not thou haue pitie vpon vs to succoure vs, seeing thou perceuest vs to be so fraile? And that God heareth such requests, it appeereth by other texts [as by this:] he remembered that they were but flesh, a breath that passeth and returneth not agayne. Ye see then how God witnesseth that when he shewed mercie to the children of Israell, and dealt not with them according to their deserts, it was bycause he sawe they were but flesh, and that there was nothing but corruption in them, and therefore he bare with them. Seeing then that Gods will is such as to spare vs in consideration of the wretchednesse that is in vs: it is certaine that we may and ought to alledge that poynt vnto him, when we intend to obteyne mercie at his hand. Therefore let vs marke well that the words which Job vseth are lawfull for vs, and that the same is a good forme of praying vnto God, so be it that we go to him with humilitie, and say, Lorde, consider what I am, for I am as a leafe, yea euen as a leafe that is already withered, and yet goest thou about to wipe me out and to ouerwhelme me vtterly: and who am I? I am as stubble that is alredy drie, or as grasse that is alredy cut downe: there is no more life nor substance in me: alas my God, if thou persecute me moreouer, what shall become of mee? If we speake after this manner, God will accept such complaints. Not when we come to him with such pride as if he were bound vnto vs: but when we lay our miseries before him to the end he shoulde succoure vs and remedie them: such manner of prayers are heard at his hand. And therewithall let vs beware of questioning as Job doth: VVhy esteemest thou me as thine enemie? Job alledgedh it as an vnseemely thing for God to do, [as if he had said:] See lord, thou art almighty: and what am I? lesse than nothig. And yet commest thou to hold plea against me, whereas I am but a wretched rotten tree, and there is nother life nor sap more in me. VVilt thou then trie thy strength against me? as he saith heretofore, so repeateth he his words. And that is the cause why I sayde, that we must keepe our selues from beeing so caried away by our affectiuns. For althoug God be almighty, and we as frayle as may be: yet notwithstanding it is not for nought that he entereth into battell against vs. If we thinke that straunge, we must shut our eyes: that is to say, wee must not bee so ouerwise in oure owne vnderstanding, as too saye, I would fayne knowe the reason why God handleth me after thys sorte. Let vs keepe our selues from such presumptuousnesse. Yea marie, but what is meant by thys, that God who hath all thynges in his hande, and with his only looke maketh the mountaines to melte P/4.97.a.5. as waxe agaynst the fire, or as snowe [against the sunne] who with hys onely word can destroy the whole world: dothe neuerthelesse aduaunce him selfe too fighthe hande to hand with me, I say with me that an. a wretched creature? VVhat meeneth that: VWell may we argue on that sorte: but God will make the conclusion to confound vs.

Then let vs not be ouerwise as I said, but let vs take Gods scourging of vs for good, how great, or how strong so euer he be, and how dreadfull so euer his maiestie be towrdes vs: let vs not ceasse to yeld him the glorie, assuring oure selues that hee is righteous, and that he doth he doeth all things according to reason, though he bend himself against vs, and make countenance as though he would ouerwhelme vs. But in very deede there is good cause why God should shewe himself our enimie, yea euē though we be vnable to withstand him, and that he despysē vs. For inasmuchas wee bee so proude as wee will not stoupe vnder him, and will alwayes seeme rightruouse: he must needes shewe vs our lesson, yea and he must shew vs it by force: for by our good will wee will not yeeld our selues guilty, and therefore God compellētē vs by scourging vs according to our deseretes. And is not this a iust caufe why God should shewe himselfe our enimie? Again, put the case that God mynd not to scourge vs for our sinnes: yet if he shewe himselfe too bee our enimye and bee against vs, it is to the end wee should fight against the tempation of desirousnesse too knowe why wee bee so condemned, which is a very greate and combersome temptation. Gods meening therefore is to see whither we wil abyde sume and stedfast in his seruice, notwithstanding that he seeme to bee 20 our enimie. And seeing that his drift is such: why should wee not beare it paciently? Yee see then how we ought to bee restreyned from pleading, notwithstanding that God shew himself our enimye, and that there bee no power nor abilitie in vs to resist him. For hee hath iust reason to doo so, though wee bee not priuie to it, and again he sheweth vs it partly, wheretore wee ought too be contented with the small taste that he giueth vs. Herewithall wee must take warning by these two similitudes, what wee bee: namely to the end wee may lerne 30 to walke warely, and also knowe how greate neede wee haue too bee hild vp and maynteyned by Gods hand and too bee strengthened by his goodnesse. VVhat is a man when God leaueth him in his naturall state? No doubt but he thinks himself a iolly fellow. For wee see how men are sorted in ouerweening, and beare themselfes in hand that by their owne wilidome strength and all that they haue besides, they bee able to moue mountaynes and woork woonders. But what sayeth the scripture of them? Behold a broken leafe, behold a withered herb, behold drye stubble. That is to say, wee bee without fresnesse, without substantialnesse, and woorsle tha nothing: and whatsoever glorie wee weene we haue, it is but a blast.

Seing thē that God setteth such mirroors afore vs, let vs looke vpon our owne feeblenesse, and lerne to humble our selues and to rid and strip ourselues naked from all ouerweening. For what doo men when they challenge anything to themselfes, but deceyue themselfes as it were wittingly and willingly? Lo how God commeth foorth, and telleth vs he wil not haue vs so beguiled with fond and foolish opinions. And therefore hee telleth vs wee be no better than grasse cutte downe which withereth out of hand, so as we be without lyfe, and destitute of all strength and grace. Thus much concerning this point. Now Job addeth, That God boldeth him locked vp as in a payre of stockes: and therewithall he sayeth also, that God wrytētē bitternessē against him, and maketh him to posseſſe all the sinnes of his youth: thou lockest mee in the stockes sayer he. And why is that? He sayeth that God sheweth nothing but signes of wrath against him. And forasmuchas sentences are oftentimes giuen by wryting: Job hauing an eye to the commō phrase of his countrie, sayeth, that God wrytētē bitternessē against him: that is to say, that hee chargeth him with the greeuousest crymes that could be devised: Like as a iudge that abhorreth a wretched offender which is before him, inhaunceth his offences, and goeth about to shewe that they be so out-rageouse as they cannot be punished too rigorously. According herevnto, Job complayneth, that God wrytētē so ouerrigorous a sentence against him, as it is ynough to make a mannes heare stand vp stiffe vpon his head. And he addeth further, that he reneweth the remembrance of the sinnes of his youth, of purpose to make him posſeſſe them. And what doeth this Making of him too posſeſſe them import? It is as much to say, as I could not bee stripped out of my clothes, but I must also be as it were bound. Like as when a man is in his house (for when he is abrode in the feeldes, he is after a sort stripped out of his possessions) euen so doost thou Lord make mee to keepe possession [of my sinnes.] That is too say, I cannot bee rid of this cursed and vnhappy possession of my sinnes: I am so wrapped in them, as I cannot get out of them. Here Job acknowledgeth that God hath iust cause too scourge him: but yet for all that, hee ceaseth not too bee out of pacience and to chafe. And therefore so much the more ought wee too stand vpon our gard, seing that he which was the singular mirrour of pacience was neuerthelesse prouoked too such temptations.

But now let vs come to knowe why he speaketh of the sinnes of his youth. There are twoo reasons: The one is, bycause that in that age the lustes are scene to be whorest. And for that cause also it is sayd in the Psalme, Psal.110. How shall a yoong man order his wayes: euen by keeping thy word. VVhy is there more speaking of young folk rather than of others? It is bycause that mannes nature which is alwayes sinfull and wicked, doeth then cast vp his greatest froath, and hath the most boyling affections: and therefore hath neede of strongest brydile. Forso much then as men committe moste faultes in their youth: Job speaketh precysely therof.

And heere ye see also why Daud sayeth, Lord remember not the faults of my youth. psal.25. Hee speaketh expresly of that age, bycause hee knew hee passed it not without offending God many waies. For there is greate vnauidednesse, and vnrule lust wherewith a yong man is blinded, [insomuch that he thinketh that] nothing is vnpossible to him, there is no stayednesse too rule him withall, but there is excesse of ouerweening and such other like things. And so ye see one reason why the sinnes of youth are spoken of here. The second reason is, that Job ment to declare that God brought all his sinnes too remembrance, as if he should frame an indytement of all the faults that he had doone euer since he was a child. And in so doing he complayneth of ouergreatē rigour, as if hee should say, Lord though I haue erewhyles done amisse, well, thou hastē ben so gracious to mee as to bring mee backe and to reforme mee to thy seruice: wherfore then doost thou gather a beadroll of my faults which ought to haue bin forgotten? VVherefore commest thou to lay them before mee again? Seing thou hastē pardoned mee them, isit meete that I should be iangled in them new againe? Yee see then whereat Job amed.

And hereby wee be taught that when God wrytētē bitterly against vs, that is to say when he sheweth vs all the signes of rigour, and that we be lothsome in his sight: wee must not think wee haue gained aught by finding fault with him. For we haue well deserued much more, and that is the poynt that we must alwayes come backe vnto. Furthermore of whom is it long that God wrytētē bitterly against vs, and that he vseth not his accustomed sweetnesse which he is woont to vse towards those that are his? Of whom is it long (say I) that he sheweth not himself so sweete, but of our selues? For Gods prressing of vs with his iudgement, is bycause he seeth well that we haue neede of such and so vehement a remedie. And for proof thereof, it is no easie matter to meeken a man that is so giuen to pride. God then wryteth bitterly against vs, to the end we should be vtterly abashed, and yet in the meane whyle he ceaseth not to receyue vs to mercie. True it is that he will hyde himself for a tyme, as he hid himself from Iob : according as hee will say hereafter, VVherefore hydest thou thy face from mee? But let vs mark that after God hath hid his face away so for a season, he will shewe himself graciouse and pitifull towards vs : yea verely when he perceyuth it to be mete for vs. It is true that he maketh delay and letteth vs linger in Payne : but he will help vs in conuenient season. Then let vs mark, that whensoeuer God wryteth bitterly against vs, it is too assuage the miserie within a whyle after, according as it is his office too put vs intoo the graue and to pull vs out againe. They that abyde in condemnation haue no will to come too Gods mercie, and to the redemption which he hath purchaced for vs, and that is the cause why they bee shet out. In the meane tyme we haue whereof to thanke God harte, forsonuchas wee see that being woorthie too bee condemned at his hand, wee are neuerthelesse acquit. See how God allureth vs dayly. VVhen wee come too a Sermon, there he sheweth vs what we be and what our sinnes and vices are : there he condemneth vs, and dayly pronounceth many sentences against vs, insomuch that we cannot open the holie scripture, but wee shall find some condemnation there in euery leafe. On the other side, we canot so couer our vices but God wil shew vs them, behold thou haste doone such a fault, behold thou haste committed such a sin. See I pray you how our Lord dealeth. But hath he once made vs ashamed of our sinnes? Byandby after he sheweth vs that he will be mercifull to vs for our Lord Iesus Christs sake. Thus yee see what ought to make vs too magnifie his goodnessse. Furtheremore although he bring our old sinnes to remembrance again: let vs assure our selues hee doeth vs no wrong therein, nother haue wee any cause to reply against him : but we haue so much the more cause too blisse him, in that wee see that when hee hath once forgiuen our old sinnes, hee receyuth vs still to mercie for euer after. In what state doeth God find vs when wee come out of our moothers womb? It is true that the naughtiness which is in vs is not yet perceyued: but yet haue we the seede thereroof inclosed in vs, so as we bee cursed already bycause wee come of a cursed and crabbed stocke. But God pardoneth vs our originall sin, that is to say, the sin that wee drayne from the roote of mankynd. Hath he pardoned vs that sin? He forgiueth vs the sinnes of our chylhood and of our youth, and many mo sinnes doeth he continually pardon vs afterward when we be come to fortie, fiftie, and three score yeeres of age. For God is not only contented to forgiue vs a sin that we haue committed twentie yeeres ago : but also if we come to him for a sin that we committed to day, he receyuethe vs, and he is mercifull to vs. Forasmuch then as we see he is so slowe to wrath, and so forward to shewe mercie: alas, ought we not to bee rauished with desire too glorifie him in his mercie? Lo how the reading of this sentence must bee a warning to vs not too grunt against God though now and then hee bee somewhat wiþ the bitterest and roughest towards vs: but to pray him too assuage his rigour, and that the assuaging of the same may the more allure vs too come vnto him. Finally Iob addeth that which I haue spoken of: namely, that God boldeth him in the stockes, and that the soles of his feete (which he termeth the roots of his feete) are as it were printed within. Ye see him (sayeth he, he speaketh of himself in the third person) as a rotten tree, and as a motheaten garment: and what shall betye then if thou list to pursue a rotten tree and a motheaten garment? VVee see yet better that which we speake afore concerning the troublednesse that was in Iob. For he had such a pacience as yet notwithstanding was shaken, yea and so shaken as hee fretted and chafed against God: which thing we see in that he complaineth that he is set in the stocks and as it were locked vp. But let vs marke that as much at the least may befall vs. For we haue not profited so well in Gods schoole as this holie man had. Therefore we may be tormented after such a sort in our afflictions, as our impacience will bewray it self, although wee haue a true desire too hold our selues in awe vnder the hand of God. VVherefore let vs alwayes haue this point before our eyes, namely that we give not our selues the brydle too aduance our selues against God when he seemeth to passe measure in scourging vs. For he knoweth what we be able to beare, and he will not overlay vs with more than he knoweth vs able to beare out. And therefore let vs not droope, but beseeche God to strengthen vs in such wise in our infirmities by his holie spirit, as wee may ouercome all the temptations wherwith it is posseble for vs to bee shaken for a tyme.

Now let vs kneele downe before the face of our good God with acknowledgement of our faults, praying him to make vs perceyue them better than we haue doone that we may be sorie for them, and therewithall runne vnto him, that hee may receyue vs for our Lord Iesus Christs sake: And that although wee deserue that he should shewe himself a dreadfull iugde against vs: yet neuerthelesse he will shyne vpon vs with a fatherto countenance, to drawe vs vnto him, yea euen in such wise as it may be to haue acceso too his goodnessse, with assured trust that hee will pitie vs: And that in the meane whyle hee suffer vs not too quayle through the afflictions of this present lyfe, but that we may fight stoutly vnto the end, euen till he haue taken vs vp intoo the euerlasting rest which hee hath prepared for vs in heauen. That it may please him too graunt this grace not only, &c.

VVee

E sawe yesterday how it is laufull for vs to alledge our owne fraytie: namely, in way of petition that it may please God too haue pitie vpon vs. For in verie deede when we perceyueth vs to bee as miserable as can bee, that is it that mouueth him to mercie. But (as I sayd) wee must also beware that we murmur not when wee come vntoo God.
VVee must not make complaintes in allegation of our owne ryght; but only keepe onward still too the end hee may haue pitie vpon vs. But Job proceded not that way at all. And here ye see to what purpose the holie Ghoste setteth downe the complayntes that Job made: namely, that we shold not followe that which is to be condemned in him. In this text there are goodly sayings and such astend to a good end: but the maner is not altogether good nor allowable. Heere Job speakeith of mannes state such as it is in it self. Man (sayeth he) bath a short and transitorie lyfe. Marke that for one point. And that it is so, he confirmeth it by similitudes. For he commeth vp as a floure (sayeth he) it is cut vp, it withereth, it is dried vp, and it vanisheth away as a shadowe that bath no stay. VVe see then what the shortnes of mannes lyfe is: it is all one as a floure, which incontinently withereth, or as a shadowe which passeth and glydeth away. And yet for all that (sayeth he) this lyfe is also full of trouble and vnuquietnesse, and for that small time which we liue in this world, wee ceaste not too bee vexed and stinged with store of hartgrefes, so as we haue no rest at all: so miserable is our state in it self, and in good soothe we see it.
Considering then the shortnesse of our lyfe, and how wee be full of troubles and vnuquietnesse, we haue good cause too pray vntoo God that he vse not so great ri-gour towards vs, but rather that hee will beare with vs, that wee bee not oppressed out of measure. Lo what is layfull for vs to do. But Job passeth further: wherein we see the excesse that is to bee condemned. Behold (sayeth he) oughtest thou too cast thy looke or thy countenance vpon a poore creature that is so transitorie as it hath nothing but miserie in it? And wherefore doost thou bend thy self that way too catch mee in a trap? Am I a fit match for thee? VVe see that Job vnder pretence of his infirmite would haue shifted of God, that he should not haue plaged him. Not that he was fully resolved and concluded vpon that point: but he sheweth vs what our affections are which torment vs, and which we ought to resist, as he also resisted them well. How-beeit in the meane whyle, he ceaseth not to bewray how he was tossed with many euill thoughts, as every one of vs findeth by experience in himself. And consequently he addeth yet one sentence more. For therewpon a man myght reply, That God afflicteth not me without cause, forsomuchas they bee sinners. And what can wee doo to it, sayeth he? for wee come of a corrupt and euill lump, and how shold wee bee pure and cleane? No maruell if we bee full of fooyle. For from what spring issye wee? Too here Job speake, it shoulde seeme that men ought too bee excused bycause sin is in them by nature. But so little ought this too ease our euill, that wee are so much the more faultie. Asoone as we enter intoo the world, wee are already the enimyes of God, there is nothing but rebellion and naughtinesse in vs, there is nothing but the seede of sin. Come wee once too age, the mischeef is increased and augmented, and there is not so much as one drop of goodnesse in vs. Then let vs conclude that whereas men say [for their excuse,] that they are borne full of filthinesse: they ought so much the rather to bee cursed and reiecte of God. Thus see we heere yet one faultie affection more in Job, which is reported to vs by the holie Ghoste, too the end we may lerne to profit our selues by it, when we haue considered what our nature is. But now forasmuch as in effect wee haue labs meening, let vs marke what instruction is conteyned in this sentece, where he sayth, that man is of a short lyfe: and yet in the meane whyle filled with many troubles. Hereby we be instructed, first not to set our myndes to much vpon the world, seeing wee do nothing but passe away. And this is a verye common thing: but yet for all that, wee conceyue it not so well as were requisite. And for prooef hereof, although we haue but three dayes too liue heere, yet can wee not bee vntangled from the affections and cares of this present lyfe which is tickle and transitorie. A man will neuer thinck himself too haue goodes ynough. He that is desirous to come to honour, deuiseith and practizeth on all sides. To bee short, man is a bottomlesse pit, and an unsatiiable gulf, insomuch that he cannot bee satisfied with all the goodes on the earth, there is nother end nor measure in him. And what is the cause thereof?

Surely if wee considered the shortnesse of our lyfe, our lustes would bee alayed, and our desires would not bee so headstrong if wee could consider that our lyfe is nothing. Howbeeit, in the meane whyle wee be so sharp set vpon gathering of riches, as wee think vpon nothing else. And what is the cause thereof? Our mynd is alwayes heere beneathe. And so wee see that the confessio which every of vs maketh, (that is to wit, that our lyfe is but a shadowe that passeth away out of had) is but hipocracie and leasing. The truthe is, that it is so: but wee haue not printed it in our hertes, wee bee not fully resolute of it. Then is it no superflouse thing when as the scripture telleth vs so often that our life is nothing, and that it vanisheth away out of hand. Let vs assure our selues that ther is good cause to put vs in mind and remembrance of it, forasmuchas we forgette it, and it neuer tarrieth awhit in our harts. Thus ye see what wee haue to consider in the first place. And it is not ynough to knowe the shortnesse of our lyfe: but we must go yet further. For it were but a greef too vs too knowe that wee do nothing else but fade away in this worlde, and that our tyme glydeth away, if wee were not in hope of the endlesse lyfe: for otherwise wee shoulde be more miserable and more vnhappy than the brute beastes.
Therefore wee must make comparison with the hea-uenly life wherevnto God calleth vs euery day. And in so dooing, wee should despize the base and corruptible things of the world, and not be so much tyed to them as we be: and again we would aduaunce our selues aloft, to take all our contention and rest there. And secondly we might well alledge the same to God as oft as wee desire him to haue pitie vpon vs. For our miseries are the things that perswade him to succour vs, and to provide for all our necessities.

Thus much concerning the infirmite and shortnesse of mannes lyfe. But there is trouble also set downe.
And vnder that woord, Job hath comprehended all the passions wherwith we be turmoyled, and all our inordinate lusts and likings, which are as tormenters. For a man cannot haue a worse tormenter than himself, by punishing himself with his owne inordinate passions.
If a man bee giuen to vaynglorie, behold, such a fire is kindled in him as he shall thinke with himselfe that hee can neuer come soone ynough to credite and estimation: insomuch that if some man happen not to honour him, ye shall see him nettled. And if forae other hinder his aduaancement, streitwayes he enuyeth him. To be short, there needeth but one lust to ingender in vs a thousand others. So then, when we shall haue matched these two things toogither, then shall wee haue so much the more caufe to mislike of this present life. True it is (as I haue sayd afore) that this saying is not straunge to the world (for all of vs are conuicted by experience) but yet for all that every one of vs ought too set his mynd throughly vpon it. It is not without cause that the scripture speaketh thereof, saying that although a man come to fourescore yeeres and vpward, wee must not esteeme the same too be any long tyme. And why? Let vs consider what our chyldhod is. VVee liue a good whyle in the world, beforē wee bee entered intoo very life in deede. For [in our chyldhod] wee had nother wit nor reason. And verely although yoong foik haue discretion to discerne good and euill: yet do they so (as it were) overflowe their banks, as they runne at royst; and there is no settled constancie in them. Thus ye see that one part of our age passeth and slippeth away before we haue begonne to liue, bycause wee knowe not what it is. For in good sooth when a man knoweth not wherfore God created him, nor hath the skill too perceyue too what end he is set in the world: I pray you, too speake properly, ought it too bee sayd that he liueth? For hee hath no more but a confuzed knowledge. But are we come to the middle age? VVee see that then our cares increace the more. For if a man haue any regarde, he thinketh, I haue hitherto ben a rouer, I haue ben as wanton and fond as any man, and how may I now recover the tyme that I haue lost? It will be verye harde. Afterward, if a man haue a charge of children, he thinketh, go too there is no shift for mee but to take order for my state, and yet shall I never so soone come to it at any tyme, but I shall bee taken away from it incontinent. Thus ye see the vniquietnesse that beginneth to martir men. But is a man come to fiftie yeeres old? It may bee sayd that death is seene to summon them dayly. Although there were no diseases at all too assayle vs, yet it is well seene that wee drawe neere our end. Is a man come too fowrescore yeeres? It is seene that his graue is at hand, so as in a maner he is no more alyue. For it will greeue a man to see himself vnmeete for the world, he feeth that he is a burthen, and it brings many troubles, and if he bee combersome to others, he is more combersome to himself. Therefore it is not for nought that this is told vs. And why? for (as I haue erst sayd) wee set more by one yeere in this world than wee ought too doo by a hundred: and again, wee consider not how our lyfe is misguyded when it is not put to the true vse of it. So much the more then standeth it vs in hand to bethink vs well of such sayings and warnings: that is to wit, that man borne of woman is of a verye short and flyghtfull lyfe.

But for the better conceyuing of this shortnesse, wee must also match it with the troubles that are in it. For put the case that our lyfe were farre longer: what cause haue wee too like so well of it, seing wee bee so vexed in it? VVhy doo wee not rather come too the seeking of the rest that is prepared for vs in heauen? And herewithall wee haue further too marke, from whence these troubles come vppon vs: that is too wit, from our owne naughtie affections. For if wee were troubled but by other folks and in the meane whyle were at rest in our selues, yea verely at true rest: wee myght well complayne of our disquietnesse that this present lyfe had not his free course, and that it went not in his owne pace. But forasmuch as every man is a hangman to himself (as I haue sayd already) and our owne lustes, passions, and desyres are the cause of our vnuquietnesse and incomberance: too whome or against whome shall wee make our complaint? Then let vs lerne, that when wee haue considered all well, wee must not blame God, nor commence action against him: but only find fault with our selues. For the finall point whervnto we must come, is to know the shortnesse of our lyfe, and to be abashed at it when we think therof.

But this is yet better expressed in that which foloweth when he sayth, who is he that is pure, or how can that thing bee cleane which commeth of uncleannesse or filtbinesse? By this saying we be admonished, that all the miseries which we indure, procede of the corruption of mannes nature. And for the better comprehending of this doctrine, let vs note that when there is any speaking of man, or of that which is in him, the question concerneth not Gods work or creation: for Adam was created another maner of one than we be at this day. VVee be faine from the state wherein God had set Adam and all mankind in Adams persone. Adam was created after the image of God, and indewed with excellent giftes of grace, yea and vnsubiect to death. And what importeth that image of God? A perfectnesse, a righitousnesse, and a soundnesse wherethrough God vttered his greate riches, so that in effect man was as a mirrour of the excellent glorie that shyneth fully in God. But by sin we be bereft of all giftes of grace, and banished out of the kingdome of God. And bycause he hath forsaken vs, we are also destitute of lyfe, whcreof he is the fountayne and welspring. For wherein lyeth the fulnesse of all good things but only in God? Then must we needes conclude, that being cut off from him, we be left in all miserie, yea and euen in death. But (say I) this procedeth not of our creation, but of that wee be destitute of the benefite that God had giuen vs, and henceforth haue it not any more.

And how are wee bereft of it? By sin. Heere a man might moue a question: It seemeth that Iobs meaning is, that the cause of our vnbeleef and of all the sinnes and vices that are in vs, is bycause wee come and descend of Adams race: and wee come not of Adam, but as concerning our boodye. VVhere doeth sinne dwell? where hath he his proper seate? In the Soule. But there is no shewe of reason that mennes Soules also should come of the race and lyne of Adam. Therefore it seemeth that Iob reasoneth not aright. But wee haue too marke, that like as God created all mankynd after his owne image in the persone of Adam: euen so also through Adams sin, not only Adam himself, but consequently also all his offspring were depryued and shet out from the grace that had bene bestowed vpon him. And whereof commeth that? Bycause wee were all inclosed within his persone, according to the will of God. VVee must not heere dispute by naturall reason too knowe whether it bee so or no. It behoueth vs too knowe, that it was Gods will too giue that too our first father which he would haue vs to bee: and when he tooke the same from him, wee also were in the same ruine and confuzion with him. Then let vs haue an eye to this ordinance of God, let vs settle our selues therupon, and let vs not beleue our owne wit and imagination. Thus ye see shortly what we haue to berae away. True it is that this matter might be dilated more at large: but it is ynough for vs too vnderstand the cheef point in two or three woordes: which is, too mynd the thing that is conteyned here: namely that it is no maruell though though men be full of vncleanesse, and that there is nothing in them but filthinesse. And why? For they be taken out of a corrupt lump, and therefore there is not so much as one that is otherwise. True it is that although Iesus Christ was very man: yet was he exempted from all our vncleanesse: but that was by cause he was conceiued by the holy Ghost. God ordeined peculiarly that oure Lord Iesus Christ should be conceiued by power from aboue. And why? To the end that Adams vncleanesse might not light into him, nor hee be defiled therewith. But when that wee be conceiued (forasmuch as it is by the common order of mans nature) we be subiect to the said corruption. It is not possible to find any one mortal wight that is not full of all vnrighteousnesse, sauing only our Lord Iesus Christ. And why? For let vs marke from whence we come. So then we haue to call to remembrance what hath bin touched: that is too witte, in what wise wee ought to alledge vnto God the shortnesse of our life and the miseries wherunto the same is subiect: which is to the end he shuld haue pitie vpon vs, and not to murmur against him. Howbeit therewithall we must also mislike of our owne life. And that is it that I haue touched alredy: namely that if we wil well that our life is flightfull, and bethought vs of the miseries wherewith it is fraughted and as it were pestered: we wold not be so farre in loue with it as wee bee: but heere ye see a good cause why we ought to be so much the more waker. Neuerthelesse it behoueth vs to keepe a measure in this behalfe. For there haue bin many of the heathen whiche haue knownen the thing rightly that is spoken heere, and haue bin so fully perswaded of it, that they haue bin weary and loth to liue in this world, yea & we see they haue fordone themselues. And how was that? They sawe well the miseries that are heere: But wee must not come to such extremitie. VVhat then? VVhen we consider that our life vanishest away in a moment, let vs consider also from whence the same swiftnesse proceedeth: that is to witte, from sinne. For we were not created to the end that death should haue dominion ouer vs. That is come vpon vs from our father Adam, in somuch as all of vs are giltye [of his sinne.] Therefore when there is any talkke of the shortnesse of our life, we must enter into this acknowledgement of originall sinne. And againe, whence come all the miseries that hedge vs in round about, but bycause we be banished out of Gods kingdome where all our welfare lieth? Then are wee miserable so long as we be separated from God. But we be separated by reason of our sinnes: and therefore it standeth vs on hande to returne alwaies thither. VVhen we haue learned to blame our selues after this sort, we shal not deale as those do that murmur against God. How now say they? It is seene that men are as it were the chiefe worke of God among all his creatures, it was his will to shewe muche more excellencie and dignitie in them than in al the rest, and yet are they vexed and troubled beyond all measure. And what meaneth that? Vvere many heathenish folke haue heerevpon taken occasion too murmur a- gainst God, as who should saye, hee had set man vpon a scaffold to make a mockerie and gazingstocke of him, notwithstanding that he seeme to be the noblest of all creatures. But when we shall haue considered that all the miseries whereto we be subiect proceede of our owne faultinesse, bycause we be all sinfull: we shall haue oure mouthes stopped so as wee shall no more presume too murmur against God. Marke that for one point. But yet is not that ynough. For vnlesse we haue an eye too the remedie that God hath giuen vs: out of all doubt we shal be caried away with such desperation, as we cannot but blasphem God. And in very deede it is certaine that those which fordo the selues, do it as it were in despite of God. And why? For although they had knownen them selues blameworthy of their owne miseries: yet had it not booted them to the asswagement of their sorowe and heauinessse. Therfore if we will not fall into despaire; let vs haue an eye to that which is able to asswage al our anguish. As for example. First, although our life be mi- serable: yet neuerthelesse God maketh vs to tast of hys goodnessse so many wayes, as we may well conclude that we be rightly happie, bycause he maketh vs partakers of his benefites. Our life is short: howbeit it is not so shorte but God giueth vs respite ynough to know him to bee our father and sauoure, and to tast what his power is in vs, and calleth vs vnto him. If we shuld not haue this be- nefite past a quarter of an hour, nor injoy it any longer time: I pray you ought we not to make account of suche a benefite? Againe, although we suffer heate and colde, and hunger and thirst, and be diuers wayes persecuted, and besides the inconueniences that happen at other mens hands we haue a gulfe within vs, as in deede wee haue store of temptations that come vpon vs, which verely are as many incomberances: Yet notwithstanding God giueth vs some tast of his mercie in that we see he holdeth vs vp, and in that when it pleaseith him to cha- stise vs, either he giueth vs pacience, or else so measureth his rigoure, as we alwaies feele his goodnessse. Seeing the that euen in the troubles and vnpacience of the world we haue some occasion to comforde and cheere vp our selues in God: Is not that a recompence that ought too suffise vs? can we now complaine that God hath set vs in this world? Haue we not cause rather too blisse and glorify him? Then let vs marke well that it standeth vs in hande to beware that we fall not into such extremitie, as to say, VVo worth man, it were better that he had neuer bin borne, than to be so turmoyled in this world. If we haue not the foresaid consideration, we may be sure we shall come to confusion. VVhat is to be done then? VVe must ioyne both the poyncts togither and say, Alas what is this present life? For we be no sooner entred in to it, but we giue vp the Ghost. And if we tarrie heere any while at all: we see nothing before our eyes but my- serie. Not only the graue hemineth vs in on all sides: but also it were better for vs to die some one kind of deathe out of hande, than to bee so assaulted with thousande thousands. And afterward when we haue ouerpasseid so many incomberances, in effect we do but pine away by peccemeale. Therefore if wee bethinke vs well of oure state: we shall haue good cause to mislike this world, by- cause that all the inconueniences which we indure, do proceeide of our owne sins. But what though? Yet dothe God in the meane while make vs to feele his goodnes, and he will not haue vs so dismaid and ouersorrowed, as we shoud not haue whereof to reioyce in him. Furthermore forasmuch as he sheweth vs that we be but way- farers in this world, and that our miseries shall not continue heere for euer: the shortnesse of our life ought not to greeue vs, but rather to comfort vs. And how is that? For as for those which are so fantasticall as to say, Tush, what is mans life? It is gone with the turning of a hande. They that rest vpon that point, do fal to hartburning, and say, must we liue so small a while? Deth God play mockholyday with vs to say, returue againe to me out of hand? Could he not giue vs a longer life, or at least- wise make vs to knowe what were the remedie of oure life? But we haue not one day of good time: for our lyfe hangeth by a threed, and deirth is alwayes betweene our teeth. Behold (I say) at what poynct they be which do al- togither together settle and rest them selues vpon the shortnesse of mas life. But let vs thinke thus with our selues: VVell then, God meeneth not that we should linger heere for euer. True it is that we be subiect to many miseries, in somuch that he which knoweth his owne state ought to sigh and grone continually so long as he is in this world. But God hath appointed it an end, and when he calleth vs to him selfe, then is the good and sure rest. And the case standeth not therevpon hauing a life that is equall with this life in length of time: but God maketh vs partakers of his owne life, which is endlesse. And therefore let vs be of good cheere, seeing we haue whereof to rejoyce in the shortnesse of our life, and cause to be pacient, and no cause at all to bee very much out of quiet. And why? For if we had a hope of the heauenly life then should we perceiue that this world is nothing. And if we be now and then disquieted. VVell may we sigh for the matter, but we shall be comorted by and by, because we be sure that God will bring vs to a good end by receyving vs into his euerlasting rest. Thus ye see in what wise we ought to marke this doctrine if we purpose too fare the better for it. Furthermore, forasmuch as we see men so turmoyled with vnquietnesse, and tormenting themselues with their owne affectiōs and lusts: we haue so much the more cause to bridle our fleshly affections. For which of vs coueteth not to liue in peace? VV e can well confesse that although we haue all the world at wil, yet notwithstanding if we be vnquieted in our selues, behold it is so great a corzie, that all the rest is nothing woorth: we can confesse this. And wherin lieth our peace. In hauing our eye vpon God, and in resting in such wise vpon the loue that he beareth vs, namely vpon his free loue, as we do acknowledge ourselues to be alwayes unhappie, till he receive us to him selfe: and moreover in traueling towards him and his kingdome, without setting our harts vpon these corruptible things. Lo wherein the peace of men consisteth. But in steede heereof it seemeth that we will make warre with God, to the end he should rise vp against vs and make vs feele what an enemie we haue when he is faine to set vpon vs. And therefore let every of vs beware that hee bridle his passions and affections. For if we come like wild beasts to liit vp our selues against our God, must we not be worse than starke mad? Then let vs beare well in mind what is saide heere concerning the troublesomnesse of mas life: let vs so thinke vpon it as it may serue to rule and correct our wicked lusts, which stirre vs and thrust vs forward vnto all euill. Ye see then in what wise we ought to practise this lesson, to receiue good and available instruction by it to our saluation. Specially vpon this poynt where it is said, that no man can make that thing pure and cleane whiche commeth of vncleannessse and filthinesse: let vs marke well that heere our Lord ment to send vs to confusion, to the intent we should not haue aught wherof to boast, but only in him and of his meere goodnessse. And it is requisite that men should be shamed after that sorte, because they blindfold their owne eyes, and beare themselues in hand that there is much worthinesse in them. VV e see the diuell neuer ceased yet to deface that which is contayned in the holy scripture concerning the corruption that is in man. There haue bin heretiks ynoch, which haue borne the world in hand, that originall sinne is nothing, except we follow Adam of our owne will. But yet Gods will was that they should not altogether preuayle. Neuerthelesse, in the papacie, there is forging of free will, and there is building of morall vertues: the reason whereof is set downe afore. And to what end tendeth all this, but that men should like well of them selues, and thinke them selues to haue some goodnessse in them? Not that any body dareth saye that a man is able to save him selfe. For euen in the papacie it will be confessed that we haue neede of Gods grace, not only in forgiuing oure sinnes, but also in aiding vs with his holy spirite. And yet for all this, they say not that all commeth of him. The Papists will not confess that. But they say, that we haue a certaine portion of goodnessse in our selues, and that God had neede to helpe vs out with the rest. Lo howe 10 God is made a cohelper: that is to say, he must help our infirmities, but yet must we on our side be companions with him. The deuill hath so bewitched men, as he maketh them beleue they be l wote not what: and yet for all that, we see also, that too the worldward men stande greatly in their owne conceits. How commeth it to passe that such as haue any wite or knowledge do so aduance themselues? As for them that are in credite and authoritiē, are they not as idols that honoure themselues? To be short, there needeth nothing to perswade men that ther is great woorthinesse in them. For although no man tell it them: yet doth every man forge and frame store of leasings to beguile him selfewithall: and if there be any flatterings put to vs besides, we receiue them as easly as may be, and they be suger to vs. God therefore is fayne to knocke vs hard vpon the heads with great beetles to beate vs downe: for if he should let vs alone as we bee, pride wold dwell continually in vs, and wee wold not bow downe our necke, neither wold we be acknowledne of our dette, as they say. And that is the cause why the holy 20 Ghost speaketh to vs of the vncleannessse which is in vs by nature, as when Dauid in the one and fifteth Psalme saith, that he was begotten in sinne and that his mother conceyued him in sinne: he accuseth not neither his father nor his mother, but pleadeth giltie for him selfe, as if he had said, that hee was vncleane before God, euen from his birth. Howbeit we see that Job was so carried away in his former passions, as he applied this thing to thā cleane contrarie. VVherefore saith he that the thing which commeth of vncleannessse cannot bee pure and cleane: His intent is to seeke some startinghole, to abate the damnation that lieth vpon all men. But it is cleane contrariwise, as we see in the text that I alledged out of Dauid. For after that Dauid had acknowledged his horrible sinne whereby he had offended God, hee hild not him selfe contented with that, but passed further, saying: Alas Lord, it is not only in my life time that I haue done amisse: but I haue also brought such a possession of sinne from my birth, that euer since I was borne into the world I haue still increased more and more in the euill wherof 30 I had the seed within me.

Thus ye see how Dauid did set originall sinne before his eyes, not to hunt for any pretence to cleere himselfe before God, but to passe the condemnation wherein he was. Then must we so deale, when we speake of originall sinne, as it may not bee too exempt our selues from Gods iudgemente as we see these skoffers do, whiche say, that seeing man is ordeyned to sinne, seeing hee is misframed by nature, seeing there is nothing but ignorance in him, seeing he is al togither rebellious agaynst God: what can the poore creature do? Is it meete that God shoulde therevpon condemne vs? For certes although we be so wretched: yet is that no shifte for vs, but it rather serueth to inhauince our euill. VVhen Sainte Paule saith that we be naturilly the children of wrath: meeneth hee too cleere men that they might haue a good case to Godward, and that our sinnes might not bee layde too our charge because we haue the roote of them in our owne nature? Saint Paule meeneth no such such thing; but faith it is to the end that all fleshe should be confounded and all mouthes stopped before God. Ye see then to what point we must come as oft as we speake of originall sinne: namely, we must from day to day enter into the examination of our selues, to knowe that we haue offended God so many wayes as we haue deserued to die for it, and theraypon to say, Alas, when we haue gathered togither all the faults that we knowe of, yet are there an infinite sort beside. For it is vnpossible that men should call to mind the hundredth part of the offences that they haue committed against God. And yet besides all this, we be borne in sinne, yea and we bee so kocked in it, and behold we besinners before God, before we haue any discretion. VVhen we bethinke vs of this, we shall haue cause why to humble our selues and too yeeld all glory vnto God. VVhen Job saith, Who is he that can make a pure and cleane thing to come out of uncleanness? thereby he sheweth that men are starke mad when they beare them selues in hande that they bee pure and cleane.

Therfore let vs bear in mind, that as in respect of our selues, there remaineth nothing for vs but confusion and decay, bycause we be so ouerladen with sinne and vices, that God might rightly cast vs away: and yet neuerthelesse that forasmuch as he chalengeth to him selfe the office of washing and clensing vs from all our spottes, we must resort to him for refuge, and that specially bycause hee hath giuen vs our Lord Iesus Christ, who hath all cleannessse in him. God seeing vs defiled and stayned, and that the way was ouerlong and high for vs to come to him: hath vouchsafed to give vs such a holines in Iesus Christ: that if we can once wash our selues in his bloud, we shall become pure and cleane from all our filthynesse.<sup>26</sup> VVhen we once know what lump we come of, and that there is nothing but vncleanness both in our bodies and in our minds: Let vs pray our Lord Iesus Christ to voutsafe to rince vs with his bloud, and to shew out those his cleere waters vpon vs, whereof Ezechiell speaketh: that is too. Ez. 36.e.26 witte, That by the holy Ghost whiche was giuen vnto him in all fulnesse, we may be so washed frō day to day, as in the end we may come to the purenesse which hee hath promised vs. As now we haue need of a double cleasing. The one is that God should forgiue our faults: and that is the washing away of our spottes. The other is that he should renew vs by his holy spirite and clese vs from all our wicked affections and lusts. Hath he done so for one day? He must be faine to continue it all our life long vntill he haue brought vs to the perfection whiche wee long for, and shew vs that our hoping hath not bin for nought, and that we shall not bee disappointed of oure longing, condicionally that wee haue waited for it as hee requireth.

But let vs fall downe in the presence of our good god with acknowledgement of our sinnes, praying him too make vs so to feele them, as we may know how greate neede we haue to flee to his mercie: and that when hee shall haue made vs to feele his goodnessse in the middes of our afflictions, we may not desire to liue in this world, saue only to glorify his holy name. And so lette vs all say: Almighty God our heauenly father, we acknowledge and confess according too the truth, that we bee not worthy to lifte vp our eyes to heauen, to present our selues before thee, nor to presume so farre as that our prayers should be. &c.

The. liij. Sermon, which is the second vpon the. xiiij. Chapter.

5. Are not his daies limited? Is not the number of his moonethes in thee? Hast not thou made an ordinance vvhich he shall not passe?
6. Turnethee avvay from him, and let hym beat rest, till hys desired day come, as the day of a hireling.
7. For there is hope in a tree that is cut dovvne, that it shall spring againe, and that his impest will grovve vp agayne.
8. Although his roote be vaxed old, and that his body be seared and dead.
9. Yet vwill he spring agayne by force of vvater, and then vwill he spred foorth as a plant.
10. But if a man faile, so as he die, he commeth no more.
11. Like as if the vvaters should shrinke out of the Sea, and that a riuer should passe avvay.

Esteady wee sawe the request that Job made by reason of the sickenesse of mans life. The sum wherof was, that forasmuch as man is so fraile and flightfull a creature, it seemeth not reasonable that God shuld pursue him with such rigoure, and vther his force so against him. And (as we haue seene afore) he declareth that the life is not so short, but it is muche more miserable, and men are as it were in continuall torment in it.

But nowe hee addeth further, that God hathe the life of man in his hande, and hathe limited it a tearme which cannot be passed. If a man liued but for a fewe days, and that God hath not ordeined it: yet might a man say, well, God is displeased and therefore he cannot abide that a little time should passe without punishing them that haue done amisse. But seeing he hath foreordained that we should liue, and al at his pleasure and determination, and seeing he hath poynted the last instant of our life and will haue vs to come to the same: seeing it is so (saith Job) that he cannot indure that a man shuld finish his course, and come to his daies end as dothe a hireling: why doth he not handle me more gently? And seeing we be so troubled with vnuquietnesse in this presente lyfe, it may well be said that we be like a laborer that is hired by the daye. Looke vppon a labouring man, see howe hee toyles himselfe too earne a peice of money: but when his dayes worke is at an ende, hee taketh his rest, he hath his wages. Euen so is it with vs, all oure life long: bycause it is subiecte too so manye myseries, wee are in hope that when that is paste wee shall bee quite discharged. For if Deathe bee once come, it is as if wee hadde made an ende an end of our taske, we haue cause too be glad bycause we come to rest. Thus ye see what Iobs meening is. But heerewithall we must also beare continually in minde what hath bin said:namely that heere he declareth hys owne passions,which we must not allow of, for somuch as God condemneth them. And wherefore are they written?First to the end that we might see that euē the perfectest sort, (although they be neuer so pacient faille not to haue great hardnesse in fighting againte the passions of their flesh, when God layeth his hand vpon them.) VVe 10 must not thinke that lob and such other like were made of steele,or senslesse folke. Although there were a singular stoutnesse in them, and that they indeuered theselues to obey God:yet was it not without touch of brest, for they were faine to feele maruellous stings in their flesh. And although they outloode the temptations and gat the vpper hand of them : yet had they stormes and were tossed too and fro in the meane season. And this is tolde vs to the end we should stand the more vpon our garde, and pray God to strengthen vs, assuring our selues that 20 although we had neuer so good a desire to honoure him yet should wee be vanquished by and by, were it not that he holdeth vs vp by his hand and giueth vs stregh from aboue to fight valiantly with stedfastnesse. Besides this, we be admonished also not to be out of hart, though we seeme at the point to quaille, nor to bee discongaged for all that. For the excellenter men that euer were, haue alwayles bin so effeble for a time : howbeit God hath stood to them in such wise as they haue gotten the vpper hand in all their battrells. And God will giue vs such vic- 30 torie also,if we call vpon him, and be not so foolish as to sooth our selues in our owne vices. Finally let vs consider to what vse we ought to applie that which is sayde heere:namely, that God hath bounded the time of mans life. Very well. Is it to the end we might say he ought too leauie vs as he found vs: and that he should get him away from vs? as Job saide yesterday that it seemed vnreasonable that God should open his eyes vpon so wretched creatures, and that he ought to let men alone there because they be not worthy to bee matched with him, for 40 what strength is there in them? No. But let vs marke what a faire hande we should make if God shoule get him away from vs: I meane, if he shoule not guide vs to redresse vs when we do amisse. If we liue but one daye without Gods visitation we fail asleepe in our sinnes: & much more if he spare vs a long time : according as wee see that when men are in prosperitie,they know not that there is a God which is a judge ouer them: they cannot find in their harts to be hild vnder any yoke or to be bridled:a man cannot by any meanes bring them to reason. Seing it is so : how rebellious wold we be if God should let vs alone all the time of our life? How wold we play the horses that are broken looce? There wold be no way to make vs to knowe our selues, that wee might returne vnto God. Theresore it behoueth vs to pray him to pitie vs, and so to tame all the lusts of our flesh, as we may be teachable and obedient towards him. So then let vs marke well that it was an excessiue passion in Job to alledge that it were meete and conuenient for God to let men alone as they are, because their life is short and brittle, and because that hee him selfe hath assigned it a determinate terme. Againe it is very requisite that God should watch ouer vs and looke narrowly to vs, because it lieth not in vs to guide our owne steppes. And if wee were not in his protectiō, I pray you what wold become of vs? For it is pitifull to see with how many deathes we be besiegued. Had not God neede then to haue a fatherly care of our life? So whereas Job desireth God to withdraw himselfe from him , let vs pray him to draw neerer vs, and that in two sorts. The first is,that in ismuch as it is for our behoofe to be in his custodie to be mainteined by him:because we liue not but in him,nor are susteined but by his power : it may please him to make vs feele hys presence, and to know that he is neere at hand to vs,too aide vs and succoure vs. And furthermore (which is the second point) that it may also please him to be neere at hand with vs to chastize vs when hee seeth vs too farre out of square. True it is that we ought to pray him too vse such gentlenesse towards vs, as we may not be presed more than we be able to beare. But yet therewithall we haue also to desire him to lift vp his hand when hee seeth that we haue neede of any correction: For if hee should let vs alone, it were ynough to rocke vs asleepe and to make vs very blocks. Thus much concerning that point. But aboue all we ought to wey well that which is said heere,namely That the life of a man is determined by God, that he bath the account of our monethes in his bandes, and that he bath set an ordinance whiche cannot bee passed. Heerepon wee haue cause to take great comfort, for that our life is in Godshand. Behold heere what is the cause that me are so fearefull as they dare not stirre one finger but with trembling, and it seemeth too them that this thing or that thing may befall them:namely for that they knowe not that God hath them in his keeping, and that it belongeth to him as well to take them out of this world as he hath created them. For were we throughly perswaded of that,it is certaine that we should go on our pace, and not be so tormēted as we be:So much the more then ought we to make account of the doctrine that is conteined heere : that is to witte that God hath limited our dayes. Howbeit it is true that we must keepe a mean in this behalfe. For although we ought to warrant oure selues seeing our life is in Gods hand : yet must we not be rash to cast our selues geerishly into any daunger:but we must walke aduisedly according as God commaundeth vs. There are some fantasticall persons, who hearing that the dayes of a man are numbered, and that we can nother lengthen nor shorten our life, because it is in Gods hand and at his good pleasure:will by and by saye, very well,then if I do all that comes in my head, it is all one : he that is borne to be hanged shall neuer be drowned,as the proverbe saies among the papists. Yea and whē the vnthrifts that are amēg vs are disposed to dally with God : they vse the same : and wold God it were not so common as it is, but in dede it is too common, and men know welynough of whom I speake. So the ye see how these despisers of God take occasion to say that we may shut our eyes and passe through fire and water, because God hath limited our dayes. Yea but it is not to that intent, that the scripture speaketh so. It saith that God having put vs into this world knoweth how long he ought to hold vs there, and that we be in his hande, and that it behoueth vs to depart hence whensoever it shall please him according also as it is saide in the nintieth Psalme. Psal.90.4.3

And wherefore is it told vs:to the intent we shuld learne to put our selues into Gods hand, and to say: VVe Lord seeing it is so that thou dispositest of vs at thy good pleasure:giue vs the grace to liue and die according too thy good will, that we may not couet to liue longer than shal please thee, and also that our life may not seeme ouerlong to vs when thou listest to hold vs heere; and that in the meane time we may serue thee by spending the time well which thou hast giuen vs, the rather for that it is so short. And agayne, heerepon, Lord,seeing thou holdest our life in thy hand, and yet will not haue vs to knowe what the terme of it is , but hast reserued it to thyne owne owne knowledge : graunt vs the grace to walke in feare and warely. Thou hast giuen vs meanes to mainteyne this present lyfe, thou hast gyuen vs meate and drinke. Giue vs the grace to vse them soberly and with all temperance.

Moreover thou hast giuen vs remedies: If wee bee diseased, thou wilte not haue vs too want any thing. And therefore giue vs the grace that we may not desire to tari in this flightfull life , but only to serue and honoure thee. So Lord let vs walke in all points as thou commādest vs, according to that which is said in the one and nintieth Psalme, that God will send his Angels to garde vs that we may not stumble nor make a false step when we walke our wayes, that is to say, that we may not play the stray colts,nor skurrie heere and there,as these vnythrifts do, who will not by any meanes submit themselfes vnto God. Therefore whensoeuer we abide in the way that he sheweth vs:then are we garded by hym and his Angels. This done , wee must also conceiue a good and holy hardinesse when God will haue vs to enter into any daunger. As how: VVe see at this day what the state of the poore Christians is : that is to witte, that they be as sheepe in the woolues mouthes. Now if wee should go about to excuse our selues from seruing of God, and forbeare to confess our faith because it cannot be done without ieopardie of our life : suppose yee that God will accept so fond an excuse: No. And why ? For he hath our life in his hand : let vs trust in him that he will keepe vs as he is good and faithfull : if it please him that we shall continue, it shall not be without hys will, and then will he giue vs strength and power. Thus ye see how we must applye that to our vse which is spoken heere. Otherwise, it will betide vs as we see it hath done too many others, who shrinke away and give ouer the seruice of God because they shun the crosse. And why is that ? Their vnbeleefe is the ground thereof, because they know not, or at leastwise are not throughly perswaded that God hath appoynted their tearme, and that they cannot prolong it,do what they can. For if we were fully resolued of that poynt, it is certayne that wee should be the bolder to spend our selues when it standeth vpon the honoring of God and the performance of our duetie, according as becommeth every man in his degree. I say we should haue another manner of constancie and stoutnesse than we haue. True it is that this must not make vs rash,in such wise as we shuld go seeke daungers of our cwne heads and without aduice. But whensoeuer neede shall require, we shall not sticke to go vnto death,forsomuch as we know that men(whatsoeuer they attempt or practize against vs) are able to do nothing.

So then seeing that this doctrine is greatly for oure profite, lette vs determine too beare it well in minde, and therupon conclude , (according also as our Lorde Iesus Christ telleth vs) that the very heares of our heads are numbered, and that God holdeth vs in such wise in his custodie, as we neede not to feare that any thing can happen vnto vs without his good pleasure. True it is that Satan assayeth all the meanes he can : and on the other side we see that men make full reckning to turne all vpside downe , and it should seeme they wold confounde heauen and earth togither.Yea but when they haue done their vttermost, they are not able to take away our life except God giue them leaue and be willing therewith. And how can we withstand them ? So then,let vs looke only what God commaundeth vs, let vs looke what our calling and duetie beareth to do, and let euery man imploy him selfe faithfully, assuring our selues that we sha-

finish our course, yea euen bycause we be in the hand of God. Thus ye see what we haue to marke vpon this sentence. Now after that Job hath said so, he addereth: That there is hope in a tree: when a tree is cut, he may spring againe, and specially if he haue nurisshment of water, he may flourishe afresh. But there is not the like hope of a man: when he is once dead, he is past recouerie (saith he) and therfore God ought to haue pitie of so poore a creature. Heere at the firste blush it may seeme strange, that Job cutteth off all hope from a man when he is once dead. For it seemeth that heere is no rememberance of the euerlasting life, as though mes soules died with their bodies. But let vs note first of all, that when Job speaketh of men, he speaketh in his passions and torments(as we haue seene alredy)and therfore he hath no further respect but to this present life, according as when we be pressed with any miserie, our minde runnes vpon nothing but that. If it be sommertime and we be ouerwhot, we thinke that hard frost were the pleasantest & hol somest thing that could bee. And why? Because we be forepossessed with the passion that greeveth and tormenteth vs. So the forasmuch as Gods hand was so sore vpō Job, he had none other regard but to get out of his presente peynes : and as for the hope of the life to come, he minded it not at all. And heere it is to be seene what menne are when they bee troubled after that sorte with aduersitie,if God doe not releue them and strengthen them.

True it is that Job cannot be charged to haue cōcluded that God doth vtterly roote out men, when hee taketh them out of the world:Job(l say) made no suchfinal cōclusion. But yet for all that we must note that he was so dazeled with his passions, that as then he remembred not that man continueth stil in God after his death, and hath there a secret life, & that the same life hath a good seed, so as we shall be fully restored to a perfectiō, from which we be farre off as now : that is to witte , in his heauenly glory, and glorious immortalitie. Job the had not that remembrance with him,to settle him selfe therupon, but was dazeled in his passions for a time. And therefore we must looke to our selues, that we be the warer,as I saide afore. Euen so is it in the rest of these words. Certainly Job knew wel that God doth men a singular good turne when he visiteth them. And if a ma had asked him why? Is it not a great honor that God doth to vs, in that wheras we be but stinking carkeffes, yet he voutsafeth to cast his eye vpon vs, and to chaitise vs whē we haue done amisse,as the father doth his child? He wold haue answēred, Yes. But yet for all this, he was not able to conceiue it at the first brunt, that he might haue resisted hys owne passions, but was faine to be tormented and too indure great distresse. So much the more then ought we to receiue this aduertizement : Alas Lord,our life is but short and brittle, there is nothing but filthinesse and corruption in vs, and yet for all that, thou forgettest vs not. Deserue wee that thou shouldest regarde vs ? Are wee worthy that thou shouldest visit vs: Alas no Lorde. For the very Angels of Heauen are not woorthie of that : and how then shoulde we be worthy, who are but rottenesse and stinch? But what for that ? Thou of thine infinite goodness art willing to be friendly and familiar with vs, and thou beholdest vs with piie. And when we haue done amisse:in sted of tying vs therunto, thou still pullest vs backe to thee, and assayest all meanes:to bring vs to repentaunce. And Lorde what a goodnessse is that? Lo how we ought to speake. The same also is to be said in this presente sentence, that wee may fare the better by it. For sith that men haue no strength in them selues, nor can spring and shoothe foorth braunches new againe as trees do which haue some roote in the earth:but do rotte away quite and cleane:let vs acknowledge the good that God doth vs in that it please him to preserue our life after the common order of nature, and also keepeth it hidden aloft to be manifested againe in time conuenient. Therefore let vs acknowledge the same to be an inestimable priuiledge. But for the better vnderstanding of this lesson, let vs marke first that althogh men bee immortall, yet they haue it not of their owne strenght. For it is not without cause that Saint Paule yeeldeth the title of immortalitie and euerlastingnesse peculiarly vnto God. And what shall wee saye of the Angels then? VVhat shall wee saye of men? Are they mortall as the brute beasts? It is certayne that we feele wel how god breatheth power into our soules. Ye see then that we haue this spirituall life from elsewhere and as it were do borrowe it. But that is not all. For although oure soules come not to nought, ne rotte away as our bodies do:yet notwithstanding whē they be alienated from God they be in a farre more horrible death, than if they were vtterly returned to nothing. Our state were better if we were vtterly foredone than to be separated from God and to feele him to be against vs. Then must God be faine too giue vs another life, which is, that he knit vs to himselfe by the grace of his holy Spirite, so as hee may liue and reigne in vs. If we haue this once:it is the chiefe benefite wherein we can ioy. But in the meane while God worketh after a straunge fashion and vnknowne too mans reason. For let vs consider what the state of the faithfull is during their life in this world. They are not only set in like state with the vnbeleuers, but are made much more poore and miserable. For if a man looke vpon the children of God, he shall find that they be afflicted, so as it seemeth that they ought to be cut off from mankynd as though they were not worthy to liue vpon the earthe. Thus ye see after what sort God suffreth his to be dealt withal. VVhat is to be done then? Let vs come backe to that which Saint Paule saith to the Colossians, that is to witte, that we be dead, and that our life lieth hid in oure Lord Iesus Christ, and God will shewe it in due time. 40 And by this we see a goodly similitude in that which Job setteth downe. For he saith that the trees fade at the coming of winter, there appeereth no more greenenesse in them, and it seemeth that all is dead when the leaues are falne off, and the trees themselues frostbitten: and yet for all that, life ceaseth not to lie hid both in the rootes and in the heart of them. VVe see that when the spring time is come, all shoothes foorth againe, and the liuelines that was vnsene for a time sheweth it selfe anew. Now if God shew vs this in the trees:will he not vtter a greater operation towards vs that are so excellent creatures? Soothly when Saint Paule speaketh of the resurrection, he reproueth men for their beastlinesse, because they consider not how God doth shew vs as it were natural figures of the resurrection, by the growing of the corne vpon the earth. Looke vpon the corne that is in the barne, it is drie, it is cast into the ground, and there it rotteþ. VVe see it springeth vp againe, and for one graine there commeth vp twentie, or thirtie, or ten. Seeing then that God reneweth the graines both of wheate and of other corne yea and that euē by rotting: what will he do to men? VVill he not vtter a farre greater woork in them? Now then, are not we senslesse and brutish, when we perceyue not after what manner God woorketh to confirme vs in the hope of the life that he hath promised vs? As much is to be thought of that which he sayth heere now. For when we see the trees(which in winter time were dead, or at leastwise seemed dead) become fresh and greene againe in the spring time: we must be confirmed in that which God declareth to vs, namely that although our life be hidden, and we be heere as it were in the shadow of death, yet shouldest not that hinder vs to lifte vp oure heads continually, and looke for the resurrection that he hath promised vs. Yea and euē now although wee seeme dead, yet haue we Gods spirite dwelling in vs, which is a sufficient warrant of our life. And whensoeuer it shall please God to take vs out of this world, although our bodies rotte away:yet notwithstanding, seeing hee hath printed the seale of his holy spirite in our soules:think we that they shall perish when as he is the protector of them? So then, the fraikie that is in mans life ought too stirre vs vp the more to magnifie Gods goodnessse towards vs. If God wrought after another order, that is to witte, if when he bringeth vs backe to hym selfe by faith, he shoulde place vs heere as it were in a little Paradise, so as wee shoulde be lyke the Angels, and his power should shew it selfe in vs, and we be void of all these infirmities which we see, and our lyfe might not be like a shadow that vanisheth away, nor we bee walled in with so many miseries, but God shoulde dwell in the midds of vs and reigne peaceably in vs: Verely these gracieuse gifts were so well worthy to be highly esteemed: But yet shouldest wee in the meane while mistake them, we shoulde not knowe from whence they come, we shoulde be caried away into a vaingloriousnesse. As nowe when God humbleth vs so many waies, if wee looke vpon our present state, we see nothing but death. And yet neuerthelesse on the other parte hee sheweth vs and maketh vs too perceiue it both by experiance and by faith, that we be aliue, yea verely in him, as of whose life we be partakers, and he maketh vs to see as it were in a glasse the said immortalitie which we waite for. Seeing then that God after he hath humbled vs, bringeth vs to the hope that I speake of: haue wee not the more cause to make much of his goodnessse to vsward, and to say: Alas Lord that thy spirit should dwell heere in oure bodies which are but wormes: and as for our soules there is nothing but wickednesse in them: and yet notwithstanding, thou O Lord hast chosen both our bodies and our soules to be the temples of thy maiestie, thou hast dedicated them to that vse. Lorde how greatly are wee in thy dette: How much are we boīd vnto thee? Againe, although this body heere do go to decay, yet are wee sure that they shall be restored once againe, and that instead of this transitorie lodging, we haue adwelling place prepared for vs in Heauen, and therefore it ought not to greeue vs to droope away by little and little till we bee quite and cleane dispatched. Seeing we haue that, ought we not to be stirred the more to praise God? So then, we see how we may applie that thing to our instructiōn, whiche Job turneth heere too an euill vse in going about to expresse the pangs that he felt, and whereagainst he fought.

And furthermore when we speake of our owne state, let vs marke well that on the one side we must consider what we our selues are, and on the other side what God is able to do, and what his power is. I haue saide alredy that it is very requisite that men shoulde know themselues and looke into them selues. And why? I haue told you that also alredy: that is to witte, because wee neede no prickinge forwarde to vaingloriousnesse. For howe frayle so euer we be, yet it is too bee seene that the most parte of vs ruffle it out, and runne riot, and forget the miseries that ought to bridle them.

VVe see thys with our eyes, and euery one of vs should be infected with that vice, if God prouided not for

for it. Therefore we cannot forbear the considering what our miserie and feeblenesse are, and that our life is as wretched as any thing can be. VVhe we know this, we shall haue good cause to mislike of our selues and too call vpon God and to pray him to haue pitie vpon vs. And also therewithall we must consider what his power is. And why? For if we measure that which we hope for, by that whiche wee see, what will become of it? VVhat shall become of the resurrection? VVhat shal become of the euclastic saluation that is promised vs? VVhat shal become of his heauenly glory? For is it likely, that when our bodies are rotten, they shall bee partakers of Gods glory? Or that we, who see our selues to bee so fraile as now, must be companions with the Angels in Paradise? or specially that we shall be matched with the sonne of God? VVe knowe that all maiestie and all soueraintie both in heauen and earth are giuen vnto him. [Is it likely] that we should resemble him? or that we shoulde be members of his body to be partakers of al that which is giuen vnto him? Can this enter into mans reason? VVhat is to be done then? Let vs acknowledge that which Sainte Paule saith to the Philippians, that God will raise vs vp by his power, whereby he made al things. See whither Saint Paule sendeth vs when he intendeth to strengthen vs in the hope of the resurrection. As if he should say, My friends, let vs not looke at that which is possible in our imagination, for God will not haue men to rest there. But let vs enter into a higher consideration, which is that God disposeth all things, yea euen aboue our vnderstanding, insomuch that whē we thinke vpon his works, we be astonisched, and not without cause. For he worketh wōderously: insomuch that we through that power of his (faith he) whereby he made all things, are trāfformed into the glory of our Lord Iesus Christ. And although our bodies be now weake, and subiect to so many necessities: yet shall they be taken into the heauenly glory.

Thus yee see the two thinges whiche wee haue too consider: namely too humble oure selues on the one side: and on the other to haue a certaine and infalible hope of that which surmounteth our capacitie, and cannot be conceiued of vs in case as we be. But heerewithall let vs gather that which Job meeneth heere. For insomuch as man cannot receiue of him selfe, nor is renued as trees are, but is as if a riuier shold drie vp, or as if the waters should shi:ake out of the sea: therefore wold he that we should not be plagued at Gods hand, so long as we be in this world. Yea but it is cleane contrarie. For if that men so destitute as they be, cannot for all that hold themselfes from pride and exesse and from starting out of their bounds: what wold they do if they had no correction, as I said afore? So much the more then had God neede to abate mens pride and presumption which cannot easly correct it selfe. Forasmuch then as men do so lifte vp them selues against God, and every man forget himselfe, yea and is puffed vp when he hath rest and ease: we had neede to be chastized, and to haue new correctiōs day by day. Yea verely. For if God shuld let vs runne out the race of our life without making vs to feele his roddes, and not quicken vs vp when we haue done amisse: Alas he shuld never come in time. VVhere-to tend the corrections that God sendeth vs now a dayes, but to call vs to repentance? Now if God shoulde tarrie till we were dead, the gate would bee shut, there wold be no time of returning vnto him.

2.Cor. 6.1.2. Beholde (saith Sainte Paule) the acceptable dayes and the dayes of Saluation are while we be in our way. Then if God shoulde see men go astray and runne here and there, and let them go on till they were falne downe and tumbled headlong into the pit whiche they couldē never get out of: what a thing were that?

Therefore it behoueth vs too reason contrarie too that which Job did: that is to witte, that seeing our lyfe is short, and not in so good case as a tree ('et vs put the case it were so) bycause that when wee bee departed out of the world, it seemeth that all is perisched: therefore it is good that God shoulde chastize vs as long as wee lyue. And to what end? To call vs to repentaunce: for after death there shal bee no more time. And as for the rest, let vs not doubt (as I haue touched afore) but Job was of opinon, that it is good for men to bee visited of Gods hande although they shunne it. But there are skoffers whiche alledge Iobs example for a shrowding sheete, saying: Behold, the holy men haue forgotten the hope of the resurrecōion, they chafed agaynst Ged, and complayned that God pressed them ouersore, in somuch that they had no leasure to subdue their imperfections: and why then shall not the like be lawfull for vs? But (as I haue declared alredy) although wee bee pacient in bearing of Gods chastizements, and in induring them quietly as we ought too do: yet fayle we not to be moued, too haue our fleshe to shewe it selfe somewhat rebellious in vs. Therefore we cannot come vnto God to serue him, but wee shall bee astayled and pricked on ali sides. But what for that? VVe must still fighte, according as the Apostle saythe, that we shall get no victorie but by fygting. And the cheefe battell that we haue to fygchte, is against oure selues and against our owne vices, and that is the thing wherein we must imploy our whole force.

So then lette vs marke, that whereas Job speaketh heere of the lyfe of man as a person without regarde of the resurrection to come: he rested not wholly vpon that poynte, (for he had well forseen what that was) but meant too expresse the passion that he felt, too the ende that every of vs should betinke hym selfe, and not be earied away when suche temptacōions befall vs. Moreouer if Job were weakened after that sorte: let vs assure oure selues that we shall bee weakened much more. Howbeit, God which assisted him, will do the like for vs also. For his power is as invincible to main-teyne vs at this day, as it was then. Hee calleth vs too hym at this day euen of his owne goodnesse, which is not abated that he shoud not make vs to feele it as well as he made his seruantes of old time to feele it. And therefore when we see all things so confounded nowadays in the world, as we wote not what to say nor where to become: let vs runne to our good God, casting oure eyes vpon our Lorde Iesus Christ, who will deliuere vs from all miseries and from all the troubles that are at this day in this world. VVell then do we feele our selues feeble and weake? Let vs looke vpon our Lorde Iesus Christ, who is the power of God his father. Do we see our selues as good as alredy dead? The fountaine of life is come vnto vs forasmuch as God hath sent vs his on-ly sonne. And to what ende. Euen to drawe vs out of the dungeons of death, and to assure vs that being vni-ted vnto him, we can never be set beside the saluation that is prepared for vs. Ye see then that if wee haue our eye settled vpon our Lorde Iesus Christ, wee shall not fai'e to thinke oure selues lase as well in the middes of death, as of the troubles of this world, bycause that by the meanes of him we be sure we shall come to the heauenly glory wherinto he is entered before vs, when we haue finished the course which we haue to runne, which now is subiect to so many miseries.

But let vs fall downe before the presence of our good God with acknowledgement of our faults, praying hym to make vs perceiue them better than we haue done, and yet notwithstanding after such a sort, as we may not become as folke forlorne, but returne to the remedie, desiring him to be pitifull to vs, and to shew himselfe the same towards vs, which he hath bin towards his in all times: and furthermore, that seeing it hath pleased hym to be at one with vs in the person of our Lorde Iesus

Christ, and that our Lord Iesus Christ hath giuen in his owne selfe vs so good a gage of his loue, specially by the death and passion which he indured [for our sakes] he suffer vs not to forget or to despise so greate a benefyte, but rather that we may put our whole trust in him, and by that meanes be stirred vp to call vpon oure good God in all our necessities and miseries. That it may please him to graunt this grace not only to vs but also to all people and. &c.

Esa. 2. d. 19

He Pprophet Esay shewing howe horrible Gods wrath is and howe heauy to beare, saith that such as feele it wold faine that the mountaines should hide them, and wish that they might fall downe vpon their heads: and oure Lorde Iesus

Lu. 23. d. 30 Cointallo hath vied the selfe same words. And that is done to shew vs that we must not be so dulheaded as we be: For we know not what a thing it is to haue God against vs. True it is that we shall well ynough feele the mischiche when he persecuteth vs: but that is not all, nor the chiefe thing that wee haue too do. It standeth vs in hand to wey throughly what Gods wrath is. And why so? For when we understand Gods hand, then bethinke we our selues of our sinnes. And therewpon we be abashed, and perceiue full well that we must needes perish except God haue pitié vpon vs. Howbeit forasmuch as we shunne that feeling: our Lord exerciseth vs to make vs throughly awake, when he intendeth to shew vs mercie. Thus ye see what is to be gathered of Iobs wordes when he saith, O that thou woldest bide me in the graue. For he preferred death before his life in case as it was. And why? Because he wold haue escaped Gods hand if it had bin possiblē. For he knew well it was a far terribler matter to haue God to be his iudge, than to die a hundred times. And this ought to touch vs the neerer and to make vs thinke better vpon our sinnes than we haue done, too the end we may know that when we shall haue indured all the miseries of the world, it is nothing in comparison of appeirring before Gods iudgement seate, when it commeth to the yelding vp of an account. If we be but sicke a little, we crye out alas: and if there happen vs any mischance, men shall heare vs make complaints: and yet our sinnes shall be buried all the while, and never come too our thought or rememberance. Heereby we shew howe vntoward we be in judging of things. Therefore as ofte as we heare that those which haue bin scourged at Gods hand haue desired death and to be hidden in their graue: let vs assure our selues that the same is the thing which we ought to feare aboue all other, that is to witte, that God sheweth him selfe as it were an aduersarie against vs. And when we be perswaded that the same is the greatest daunger that can befall vnto man, we will laboure by all meanes to retourne vnto him. VVhen our sinnes come to our mind Alas (will wee say) in what case are we? For if God shew him selfe our enimie, how shal we do? in what case shall wee be? Then let vs preuent the matter: and behold we shal be so prouoked to seeke vnto God for grace, as we shall never be at rest, till he bee at one with vs. Thus ye see the vse wherevnto we ought to applie this lesson. And we must marke well howe he saith, I wold fayne that thou baddest bidden me in the graue, and that I were shut vp in it, vntill such time as I were cut off. Heere he sheweth wherfore hee desireth deathe: namely bycause hee felte himselfe shut vp vnder Gods iudgemente, and could find no way to scape out. And heereby we be warned that our startingholes shall serue vs to no purpose in the end: and that when wee haue fisked hither and thither never so much, wee must bee fayne to be as it were shut vp. VVee shall haue profited wel for one day, if wee can haue this lesson in minde. VVhy so? For although God threaten vs never so much yet it is seene that there needeth not any thing to make vs belieue that we be able to shift out of it, according as euery of vs imagineth one shift or other, in somuch that our hipocrisie is the cause that Gods threatnings pierce not our harts, as were requisite. And there is nothing that prouoketh more Gods extreame vengeance, than when he sees that we make none accouut of his wrath. Lo what prouoketh him extreameley.

So then let vs learne by that which is said heere, that whensoever G O D listeth too pinche vs in good earnest, there will bee no scaping for vs nother by one meanes nor other, but wee must bee fayne too bee fastshut vp. On the other side if God giue vs anye respit, and specially if hee shewe vs how we may obteine fauoure at his hande: let vs vse that oportunitie. It is said immediatly, I wold that thou baddest bidden me in the graue. Heere it mighte be demaunded, And is not death a token of Gods wrath and curse? Is oure comming thither too any relief? VVhat doothe that boore vs? Verelye it seemeth too bee the vttermost extremite, and that God cannot shewe any greater rigoure vpon vs than too put vs too deathe. But Iob hathe heere conceyued deathe amisse, as I haue shewed heeretofore: and that must we beare well in mind. Hee was ouerpessed with anguishe, bycause G O D made hym too feele his miserie. Therevpon hee bethinketh him selfe howe hee myghte bee ridde of it. At leastwise (saythe hee) I shoulde wander in the darke. But as long as I beare my fleshe, (as hee saythe for a conclusion in the ende) and so long as my soule is in me, I am in paine, I am tormented, and I haue no thyng but distresse. If God had taken me out of thy world, I shoulde haue some ease, and there wold be

be an ende: and (as he hath sayde afore) he should haue his ende as the hyreling, whome yee see at rest when his terme is at an ende, and his couenant come out. Thus yee see why hee desirith heere too bee shette vp in his graue. Furthermore let vs marke, that hee knewe well ynough that men ceasse not too bee vnder Gods hande by dying, but that they must bee fayne to be iudged by him, and to feele him still. Job knewe that well ynough. But in the meane while hee had an eye too the miserie wherwith he was pressed: and he was as it were so fast tyed therewith, as he thought not of all the rest. Ye see then that when God persecuteth a poore sinner, hee hath no further respect but to say, Alas must I be enclosed heere without remedie, and must my miserie encresse, and I perishe in the ende, because God will never leaue pursuyng me? The sinner hath no respect but of the thing that is so harde for him to beare. For this cause hee thought death too bee nothing, and that it shoulde serue him to bee a salve for his sores. After that manner spake Job in desiring to be couered in his graue and to bee as it were locked vp in the same. And when hee sayeth, Vntill thou bethinke thee of mee, and vntill thou set mee a day: thereby hee sheweth howe there is some feeling stil euuen after death, howbeit that to his seeming as hee was then caryed away and rauished, there shall bee some respite for him to take his breath, insomuch that when he shall be gone out of this world, then shal he not be in such confuzion, nor in so hard and heauie case as he felt there. But (as I haue sayde) Job coulde not but knowe that euuen after death wee haue an account too make, for hee sayeth, I will wylte in the graue vntill thou appoynt mee a time too bethinke thy selfe of mee. This Be-thinking heere is nothing else but Gods calling of hys creatures too iudgement. But Job was so troubled in witte, and the sayde passion did so turmoyle him, as hee judged not with so settled a minde as he ought to doo. And why? First and formost, so long as wee liue in this worlde, what shoulde wee more desire than that God shoulde haue vs in remembrance? For if hee forget vs, what shall become of vs? Peter sayde, Get thee away

Luk.5.b.8. from mee O Lorde, for I am a wretched sinner. Yea but we must go the contrarie way to worke and say, Lorde come neerer vs: for without thy grace, we bee nothing. So then it is very needful that god should remember vs. And how? To mainteyne and preserue vs, so as hee vpholde vs and haue pitie vpon our feeblenesse, to releue vs the same and to guide vs by his prouidence. Ye see then that God must be faine to remember vs, or else our state is verie miserable. For there is nothing that a ought to be so much afayde of, as to be forgotten of God. Lo heere one poynt. Againe, although God take vs out of thy world, yet forgettest he vs not, though he seeme to forget vs. For hee keepeth those that are his, alwayes in his hand & custodie. And as for those that are damned, they be reserued as it were in Chaynes vntill the day of executing the sentence. Ye see then that God doth alwayes beare vs in minde. And when the scripture sayth that he hath forgotten vs: it is because we perceyue not his present succors, like as if a poore man that lingreth in paine, desire God to helpe him, and feele not his helpe nor sees any likelyhood that God heareth him. Thus ye see after what sort it is sayd that he hath forgotten vs: to wit, for ought that we do perceyue: but yet for al that he remembreth vs continually. Job then did amisse to surmize that if he were dead he should be forgotten till God should call vp all his creatures at the latter day, & summon them to his iudgemēt seat. Job therfore did not consider this remembrance of Gods towards vs so well as was requisite. But we may well see it, if we be perswaded of that which I haue sayd: namely that God ceaseth not to thinke vpon vs though hee leaue vs there for a little while, so as oure bodies rot in the earth, and our soules abide in suspence, wayting for the day wherin all the world shall be repayed. Moreover, so long as we liue, let vs be fully resolued, that there is nothing better for vs than to haue God too thinke vpon vs: yea euen though it were to punish vs. If God thinke vpon vs to make vs feele his fauor: there in consisteth all our ioy and glorie according as it is sayde in the eight Psalme. Alas what is man, that God shoulde vouchsafe to looke vpon him, and too watch ouer him? VVe be as a little shadow, we be nothing at all: and yet it pleaseth God to haue a fatherly care of our life. And ought not we to acknowledge a woonderfull goodnesse in him in that behalfe? So then we must highly esteeme the sayde mercie which God sheweth vs, in being mindfull of vs, euen too make vs feele his goodnesse. But (as I sayde) although he chastize vs for our sinnes, yet is he gracious to vs. For thereby he sheweth that he is lothe we should perish, in that he calleth vs back againe to him when he feeth vs in the high way to destruction. For are not all his chastizings as manie warnings, which he giueth vs to come to repentance? Ye see then how we ought to set the more store by Gods grace in that hee is mindefull of vs: and not desire him to forget vs. This is it in effect which we haue to remeber concerning this sentence. Nowe there ensueth, Shall the man that is dead lye agayne? For I looke for my chaunge all the dayes of my battell, or of my trauell. Heerein Job sheweth how sore hee was troubled in minde, better than hee did afore. For hee was in suche distressse, as hee wist not what the ende of men is, or whither they shoulde bee rayzed againe or no, when they bee deade. Truly this seemeth straunge at the first blushe. But wee muste marke what I haue sayde afore, namely that Job speaketh of hys former temptations whiche hee withstood. There is great difference betweene beeing vtterly beaten downe by a temptation, and betweene the feeling of it, or the beeing shaken with it, and yet in the meane while too withstandit. VVhat a number of euill opinions and fancies will come in our heade? According as we knowe that men receyue many mockeryes at Satans hande. Beholde, one wicked fancie that commeth in our heade is that wee greatly distrust God, [as if wee shoulde saye] what canst thou tell whither God thinke vpon thee or no? Howe knowest thou whither hee hath giuen thee ouer? VVhat wotest thou whither hee vouchsafe too looke towards mortall men or no? Behold the thoughts that men haue euer among: and that is to make vs humble oure selues. And forasmuch as wee see our selues so full of vanitie: we haue so much the more need to walke in the feare before God [and to say:] Alas what a thing is this? I ought to implore all my wittes to the glorifying of my God, and behold the most part of my wit is occupied about such maner of thoughts. Yea and there come outrageous blasphemies in my head. Greatly then ought men to be grecued with themselues when they conceiue such fancies. But the faithful do repulse the incōtinently. For assoone as the devill goes about too trouble vs after that fashion, we be armed with Gods word, & fence our selues with the buckler of faith as the scripture speaketh. Although the diuell cast firie darts at vs, as S.Paule sayth: Eph.6.1. yet enter they not so into our soules as to wound vs: the poysen of them percerth not so deepe into vs. True it is that Satan will assault vs mightily: but yet that sting of his shal be neither deadly nor infectiue. VVe then shall repulse al these wicked conceyts when we be so assayled.

R.

But

But the other sort are wholy possessed, and are so farre out of square, that sonic doubt of Gods prouidence, and othersome think that God hath vtterly reiected them, by meanes whereof they bee as it were vtterly vnder foote. Then is there great difference betwixt a fleeting fancie that commeth in our heade for a while, and which wee withstand: and a sure perswasion that settelth it selfe and taketh root in vs. True it is that whē we shal haue fought against all the temptations of Satan, and ouercome them, yet shall we not come to a full end, but we must mourne still before God, because wee haue not glorified him so perfectly as were requisite: neuerthelater hee accepteth such stedfastnesse, when we resist euill after that maner. See howe Iob hath delt in that behalfe. He reherseth the temptations wherewith hee was assayled, but yet for all that hee was not ouercome of them. And verely there are three degrees to be noted. For somtymes there come fancies to our minde, and wee drieve them away out of hande. Sometrymes wee shall be in paine and distresse, so that we shall bee almost tyred with them, [and say] Howe shall I outweare this temptation? But yet in the ende when Satan presseth vs therewith, God dooth still strengthen vs. The thirde degree is when wee bee vtterly borne downe and ouercome. As for Iob, hee not onely came to the first degree too haue the fleeting fancie to aske whither men shall rise agayne or no: but also he came to the seconde step of temptation. For when he sawe himselfe so pressed with miserie: hee thought with himselfe, what intendeth God to do with mee? It seemeth that he is minded to wipe me quite away. And seeing I haue him mine enimie what shall become of mee? Iob then was tormented with that temptation (which was euill) because he marked howe God was so agaynst him: but yet washee not ouercome. And al- though the battell were verie sore and harde for him to endure out: yet gat hee the vpper hande. Thus yee see after what sort we must take this sentence. For had Iob settled in that opinion, it had beene a cursed blasphemie to aske whither man shall rize againe or no. But surely hee was assayled in such wylc, as yet neuerthelesse he abode still in the beleefe that hee had conceyued, and the spirite of God gaue him the vpper hande. VVee muste not therefore charge him with blasphemie for so dooing, neyther muste wee condemne him of misbeleefe for it. For fayth is not without fighting: it behouethe to bee throughly exercized. And howe is that done? By the diuels casting of many occasions of vnbelinefe and misbelieve in our way. Thus yee see the true tryall of our fayth. Iob then must not be cast out of the number and companie of the faythfull for being so assualted. Also it is too bee noted, that hee did not aloneby doubt, but also was so caried away, because he was pres- sed by Gods hand. If Iob had bene demaunded whither men perish vtterly by dying: he woulde haue answered no. For although the body rot away, God will raise it a- gaine: and the soule is reserved till the last day, at which time we shall be wholly restored. Iob would surely haue answered so, if he had bin examined of death in general. But sorasmuch as the case is nowe become peculiar too himself, because God pincheth him so sore as he woteth not where to become, insomuch as it seemeth that god is fully determined to confound and ouerwhelme him for euer: he is sore disraynd therat, & that is the cause of his doubting. Therfore let vs mark that Iob had an eie to that which was in his owne person: that is to wit, to Gods ri- gor, which was so great, as there was no likelihood at all that euer he should get out of the misery wherin he was. For this cause he sayth, Shall the man that is dead rize again?

Verely he meeneth of death, in case as when God vt- reth all his force to bring a man to naught. And what is that? It is as if he should say: Alas Lorde it seemeth that thou art minded to bar me of the hope which thou hast giuen vs of our rising againe. For seing thou handlest me so rigorously, doth not this straunge dealing which thou vseth towards me, tend to the vtter fordoing of me? And when thou hast fordone me, who is he that can make me vp againe? Then his surmizing is, not that God will put him ouer to a further time: but that he will vtterly root him out of the number of creatures. And that is the cause why he demaundeth whither it be possible for a man to come to life againe when he is once dead. It is because God dealeth so straungely with him, as it may seme that he is minded to bring him vtterly to naught. And heere- by we be warned to pray God to handle vs so measura- bly, as wee may always haue the hope too assure our selues, that our miserie shall not endure for euer, but that God will remedie them, and that it is his office to rayze them out of their graues which are in them. For if we beleue not that, wee must needes fall into horrible dis- paire, which wil dismay vs, as we see it had happened vnto Iob, if God had not hilde him vp by strong hand. And here ye see also why it is sayd, Lord chastize me, howbeit with reason. Not that God is at any time vnreasonable: But by this worde Reason or Judgement, Jeremie ment a moderate fashion agreeable to our infirmitie, when wee be not tempted so strongly but we may always perceiue that God will pitie vs in the ende, and remedie our mis- eries. Thus ye see wherof wee bee admonished in this text when it is demaunded whither the man that is once deade shall liue againe. As touching that which insu- eth, namely, I will wayte till the day of my chaunging come: some men expound it, that if Iob wist that God woulde rayze the dead, and that there were any hope of the re- surrection and renewement: he would wayt for that day. But it must be taken more plainly: that is to wit, Lorde comfort me, for I am nowe at my wittes ende, I see thou vseth nothing but force, I see thou executeſt nothing but violence agaynst me: and so must I still fight and streyne my selfe too the vttermost, and I haue none other com- fort but onely to wayte for the day of my chaunge. See then in effect after what sort Iob vnderstoode that say- ing. Hee rather reasoneth with himselfe and with God, whither a man shall returne too lyfe agayne when hee is deade. As if hee shoulde say, I see my selfe heere in so wretched state, as too mine owne seeming I must be vt- terly confounded, and there is no meanes of recouerie. For sith that God is agaynst mee, and is minded to bring me to naught: what is to bee sayde to it? But yet heere- upon hee inforceth himselfe, and calleth his courage too him, concluding thus: yet will I wayte for the day of my chaunge. Heereby therfore wee perceyue that Iob gat the vpper hande, and wanne the prize in that battell. For notwithstanding that he entered into debate whither he should rize againe or no: yet in the ende hee sayth, Be- holde, I will wayte for the day of my chaunge, yea even all time of my trauell. As if he had sayd, True it is that as long as my time lasteth, I wishe that God shoulde keepe me sherte vp in my graue, that hee shoulde cast mee intoo some dungeon, and that he should cause the hilles to fall vpon mee: but yet must I tarie his leysure still, yea euen in the middes of the afflictions wherein I am. And al- though they be harde and vnable to be endured, yet not- withstanding forasmuch as there is a chaunge, the same must suffize me to giue me some comfort, & to nourish me in the obedience of God. Now we see what the mee- ning of Iobs wordes is. And we haue a good & profitable lesson lesson to picke out of this saying. First, whensoeuer wee be assayled by Satan, and tormented with naughtie imaginations, and specially when there commeth any distrust to leade vs too dispayre : wee must not make these disputations, but quickly and shortly conclude too resolve our selues vpon Gods truth. Ashewe? Some haue a pleasure too intangle themselues in lewde imaginacions : and there will come some opinion in theyr heade, yea euen some opinion that is lewde, and tendeth euen to the dashing of themselues agaynst God. And heere-vpon they fall too debating and imagining whither the same be possible or no. And howe fareth it? Therefore when our heades runne vpon wheeles after that sort, and wee fall to chawing vpon the bitte, in hatching so lewde opinions which are cleane contrarie to fayth: it is all one as if men should fall to devising of their state wyth their enimies that come too beseege their Citie. For if they giue care to them and allow their counsell, it is the destruction of the whole towne. They will not set opē their gates to them: but it is all one as if they did. Euen so is it with those that snarle themselues in their owne lewde opinons which Satan putteth in their heades: for if they abyde by them, the ende will be the leading of them to destruction. VVhat is to bee done then? Let vs followe the experience that is shewed vs here by Job. Verely he was assaulted daungerously when he doubted whither he should euer rize again or no, seeing that God had brought him so low. And if he had continued in that minde too the ende, what a thing had it beene? But after hee had beene so assayled, he cutteth off the matter out of hande.

No (sayth he) I will tarie the day of my chaunge, how so euer I speede. Lo what we haue to do: namely to conclude according to Godstruth. Also when we conceiuе any lewd imaginations that may turne vs from the faith, and from the way of saluation: we must by and by come backe and take holde of some sentence of the scripture: and when we see our selues fenced with Gods truth: the conclusion must be that we will not dispute about it seeing that God hath spoken it. Thus ye see the souerein remedie that we haue to beate backe Satan, in this behalfe: that is to wit, when he goeth about to turne vs aside from the fayth, and from obeying of Gods worde. Furthermore when Job sayth that be will tarie for his chaunge: that worde deserueth to be weyed throughly. Verely he speakest of the resurrection, and therefore meeneth that we must be wholly renued, so as the corruption which is in vs by reason of Adams sin, be vtterly done away, and god receiue vs into the immortalitie of his kingdom. Lo here the chaunge whereof Job speaketh: And the same is also the thing that we must haue an eye vnto. For without the resurrection we cannot comfort our selues, neyther wil al that euer man can alledge be sufficient to cheere vs. VVe see also that the holy scripture directeth the faythfull thither when it purposeth to content them, and too giue them assured and settled rest. Be ye sure (say the seruants of God) that wee bee called to be partakers of the heauenly glorie which God hath promized to those that are his: and therfore be ye glad of it. Howbeit for the better assurance of this last chaunge, wee must consider the chaunges that God maketh at this day euen during the course of this life, how God maketh many alterations in vs, whereby he giueth vs alreadie some taste of the last chaunge. As for example. VVe be in some trouble, & well, we be as it were shet vp there. VVhen we looke for the ende of it, we see none, there is no remedie, it is past recoverie, and we bee forlorne: and sodeinly God hath such pitie vpon vs as we be deliuered out of hand. See ye not a change that ought to lead vs furtherforth, which is to vnderstand that there is a much perfeccter deliuernace than all these are which we perceyue at this day particullary? Then let vs learne to acquaint our selues well with the chaunges that God maketh dayly, that we may bee lifted vp a high, and by that meanes be quiet till the time that we be renued in the kingdome of heauen. Also here ye see after what maner Dauid hath spoken. For when he speaketh of the chaunges of Gods hand, whither it be Psal.77.c.15 in rescuing men out of trouble or in casting them into it, that saying is of great weight though it seeme not so. For men haue alwayes this fonde opinion concerning fortune, [to say,] See what ill fortune is befallne mee, see what good fortune is happened mee. No: they bee the chaunges of Gods hande, and to that poynct must we alwayes bee brought. Howbeit among all the chaunges that are made in the worlde, the liuelyest Image of the laste renewement, is Gods quickning of vs by his holie spirit, and his inlightning of vs by fayth, and his making of vs newe creatures in oure Lorde Iesu Christ as the scripture speaketh. Let vs consider what the birth of men is. True it is, that when wee come into this worlde, 2.Cor.5.c.17 wee bring some remnant of Gods Image wherein Adam was created: howbeeit the same Image is so disfigured, as wee bee full of vnrightuousnesse, and there is nothing but blindnesse and ignorance in our minde. Yee see then what the state of men is at their birth. But God inlightneth vs by his holy spirite, yea euen in such wise as wee bee able too beholde him, so farrefoorth as is expedient for the transforming of vs into his glorie and for the reforming of vs by his holy spirite. Therefore when God shall haue so chaunged vs, as wee feele him dwelling in vs, and by meanes thereof wee fight agaynst our wicked lustes: and whereas other men do ordinarily delight in their vices, and as it were bath themselues in them: we seeke the cleane contrarie: so as what euill soeuer is in vs, the same mislikes vs, and we mourne for it, and therewithall follow the good, and bee altogether desirous to giue our selues ouer to the seruynge of God: Is not that a woonderfull chaunge? For such maner of doings will neuer spring out of our selues. VVhen wee taste of Gods gooiness, so as we be sure of his fatherly loue towardes vs, and specially haue the certeintie of our saluation too call vpon him as our father: See yee not a chaunge that is able to shewe how mightfull Gods hand is? For men of their owne nature can neuer open their mouthes too call vpon God in truth. True it is that they may well haue some ceremonies, as the Heathen folke pray vntoo God, and the Papistes also do babble and make prayers that are long ynough: but all this is nothing because they be not assured in their prayers, nor fully persuaded that God should be their father. Do wee then see that God is willing to heare vs? Are wee desirous to serue him and to honour him? It is euen as much as if he had chaunged vs, and cast vs newe againe in a mowlde, and as though hee had put vs newe againe to making. For doubtlesse it is not for naught that the scripture calleth vs newe creatures in oure Lorde Iesu Christ. And in other places where we bee sayde too bee his woorkemanschip, because he hath created vs to good 2.Cor.5.c.17 Gal.6.d.15. Epb.2.b.10 woorkes: Saint Paule meeneth not that God hath created vs, onely to bee mortall men: but also to the entent we should do good woorkes. Therefore when God doth so chaunge his faythfull ones, yee see a speciall woorke of his wherin he vtereth his power aboue nature. And heere ye see why I sayd that we must take holde of such chaunges, that we haue assured hope of the resurrection. If wee doubt whither God will renue vs at the last day when we must come before him: how hath God chaunged vs alreadie? To what purpose doth he now put his grace into vs? To what purpose shall he haue giuen vs corage to serue him and honor him? And to what purpose also shal he haue giuen vs the spirit of adoption, but to assure vs of the hope wee haue of the euerlasting glorie? All this were to no purpose. So then the chaunge that wee perceyue in our selues as nowe, is an infallible witnesse of the heauenly glorie which we see not yet, and which is hid from vs. But God giueth vs a good ernest pennie of it, according as it is sayde that the holy Ghost is the earnest pennie and pledge of it. And why? It is because of the effectes. For the holy Ghost is not ydle in vs, but rather sheweth openly that he dwelleth in vs, to make vs the children of God. And wee no sooner bee Gods children, but we must by and by enforce our selues to do good workes, and to follow his will. Ye see then in what wyze the faythfull ought too practize this lesson. And Job sayeth precisely, that bee will wayte for that chaunge all the dayes of his trauell. VVhich saying is woorthie too be well marked. For if we be tossed with neuer so many troubles, it is not ynough vpon some good motion and affection, to say, now must wee trust in God: for that is nothing vnlesse we holde out, yea euен in the middes of all our encounters. First of all therfore let vs marke, that hope is not a dayes bird or a monethes bird, but must continue too the ende. And doublesse when we be fully settled vpon Gods promises, he holdeth vs still in the same, too the end wee may not quayle every day, but that when wee haue ouerpasseſ ſome tyme, wee may alwayes bee ſtabliſhed more and more, vntill God haue 30 perſoured the things which as yet are delayed too another time. Yee ſee then that it booteſt not too haue had ſome good affection, or too haue truſted in God, except it continue ſo throughout. And Job hath ex-preſſed the ſame thing the plainlyer vnder the woordre Trauell or Battell. And why ſo? For he meeneth that we go not to God at our eaſe, as wee ſee well ynough. As long as we ſuffer nothing, we can finde in our hartes too liue ſtill in this worlde, & to prolong our life double if it were poſſible. Our deſire is then that God ſhould handle 40 vs without greeuing vs, and pleafe vs in all reſpects, and obey vs in all our deſires. See how eaſily we would paſſe the time if we might go but our owne pace, if we might haue no temptation, and that there might be no heauineſſe in feare, nor any ſuch thing elſe. But it is ſayde that wee muſt giue atteſtance all our life long, yea euен with fighting. In theſe woordes, All the dayes, there is ſhewed vs, that if the time linger and ſeeme long too vs, we muſt not take it for an excuse to doo euill, and too be greeued, and to giue ouer all in the middes of our iourney: but we muſt continue to the ende. Under this woordre Battell or Fighting, is expreſſed vnto vs the ſtate of this preſent life: which is, that beeing but wayfarers in this worlde, wee muſt be fayne too fight, too bee be-ſeeged on all ſides, to be in continuall perill, to be temped ſomtymes with cares, ſomtymes with aduersities, and ſometimes with ſome daunger. Therefore let vs thinke vpon it. Heerewithall let vs vnderſtande alſo that wee muſt fight agaynst the luſtes of our owne flesh. But notwithstanding all diſtresses, yet muſte wee ſtill wayte for our chaunge. Thus ye ſee what wee haue to beare away in this ſtreyne. And now for a concluſion Job ſayth, O that thou wouldest anſwere him that calleth to thee, and that thou wouldest accept the worke of thine owne hand. This ſerueth but for a larger declaration of the matter that wee come to treat of. His intent is to ſhewe what the change is that he hath wayted for, that is, that God ſhould bee gracious to the worke of his owne handes. Surely ſome expound this preſent ſtreyne as God would beare down the worke of his handes. But that is conſtreyned. Therefore his meening is nothing elſe but that he will quietly abide Gods leſure, till he ſhew by effect, that he will accept him as his creature. And that is the cauſe why hee ſayth heere, I will anſwere whenſoever thou calleſt me. For Job protesteth that he wil no more ſhuſ god nor ſhrinck backe from him when he calleth him, but will be readie to come, yea euен with a cheerefull courage. And why? For he knoweth that God will ſhew himſelf pitifull towards him. Thus ye ſee that the thing which we haue to marke in this ſtreyne in effect, is that euен in the mids of our troubles, when it ſeemeth that God is ſore diſpleaſed with vs, and that we ſhall not come any more to attonement with him, yea & that he will not recken vs any more in the number of his creatures: when al this is come to paſſe: yet neuertheleſſe we muſt fight againſt ſuch diſ-payre, vntill wee haue gotten ſo much as to hope for the chaunge that we wayte for. See then how this teſt ought to prouoke vs to be of good comfort in our aduersities, and to pray God to ſtrengthen vs ſo with his power, that although we be tossed to and fro with many ſtormes, yet we may not ceaſe for all that too keepe on our way ſtill towards him, and to make no doubt of comming thither, howſoever the worlde go. For although hee ſeeme too haue caſt vs off and to be angrie with vs: yet if wee returne vnto him, and cal vpon him, he wil anſwer vs and ſtabliſh the hope of oure welfare by making vs too feele the loue that he beareth vs, that wee may bee throughly perſwaded and out of doubt of it.

Now let vs fal downe before the preſence of our good God with acknowledgement of our faults, praying him too make vs ſo too feele them, as the ſame may bee a meane too prouoke vs to returne vntoo him, with true repenteſce, and we may proſper thereiñ more and more, till hee haue taken vs out of the miſeries of this worlde, to gather vs into his kiŋdomē, where wee ſhall inioy his euerlaſting reſt to the ful, whereof as now he giueth vs but a taſt by his holy Ghost. That it may please him to graunt this grace, not only vnto vs, but alſo to all. &c.

E sawe yesterday in what wise wee may answere God: that is to saye, in what wise we may come freely vnto him:namely by knowing that he loueth vs,& that he accepteth vs as the woorke of his hande. For so long as we know not whither God mislyketh vs or no, we must needes be afraied and shun his presence, as much as is possible:and so ye see in what case the wretched creatures are whiche haue no taste of Gods goodnesse too trust in him, that they might comfort themselues. Therfore let vs marke well,that it behoueth vs to bee perswaded of Gods loue towardes vs,that thereby we may conceyue such trust, as we may present our selues vntoo him , and bee well assured that our soueraigne welfare is to answere him, that is to say,not too hyde our selues from his sight , but too bee alwayes willing too be guided by his hande,so as wee desire nothing but to be vnder his hand, and at his direction. But by the way we haue to consider these wordes , the worke of thine handes. For, the thing wherein wee may settle oure trust that we be acceptable to God, is that he hath created vs, and that we be his. Then must wee not pretende to bee loued at Gods hande for any deserthes of our owne , but because hee sees we are his workmanship . True it is, that we are his woorkmanship alreadie,in that wee bee men : But there is yet more, that is to wit,he hath fashioneid vs new again after his own Image,through the grace of our Lorde Iesus Christ. VVhen the holye Ghost teacheth vs how we shoulde pray vnto God, he setteth these 30 wordes afore vs, Lorde we are thy workmanship . After

Esa.64.c.8. this maner it is sayd in Esay, & likewise in the fourescore

Ps.95.b.67 and fiftenth Psalme. VVe are thy flock, we are the worke of thy handes : and in other textes . Lorde thou wilt not

Ps.138.b.8. despize the woorke of thine handes;thou wilt not forsake that which thou hast begunne,without finishing of it. Ye see then whereof we ought to take occasion too trust in God. For if wee bee agreeable vntoo him, and come vntoo him, wee bee sure that hee is readie too receyue vs. And why? Euen because wee bee his creatures, and hee hath formed vs, and he will not cast away the thing that commeth of himselfe. Marke this for one poynt. Howbeit,(as I sayde) wee must not looke onely too our first creation : for the hope that wee shall haue thereby , will bee verie slender, because Gods Image is as it were blotted oute in vs by Adams sinne. But forasmuch as God of his owne infinite mercie hath renued vs , and adopted vs too bee his children in our Lorde Iesus Christ, and imprinted his Image againe in vs : therein wee bee hys woorkmanship , and maye come with our heades vp-right too call vpon him, and assure our selues that he will not shake vs off , but that wee shall be welcome too him. Therefore let vs marke well this streyne , according too the profitablenesse thereof : which is , that men are in a wretched case when they knowe not whither God doo loue them or no. And why? For they must needes bee afrayde , and the same fearefulness muste needes cause and engender a rebelliousnesse in them , so as they shun

God, and eschue his hand as much as they can, and striue agaynst him. Yee see then that men are as wilde beastes, and cannot submit themselues vnto God,vntil such time as they know that he loueth them. But on the contrarie side, when we knowe that God fauoreth vs,then are wee bolde to approch vnto him,yea euen to answere him:that is to say,to yeeld our selues simply to his will, and to take in good worth whatsoeuer he doth or dispozeth of vs, yea and although hee scourge vs, torment vs, and put vs too distresse : yet must we still flee vnto him,as too him that hath a care of our saluation, and will bring vs therenvto. And howe shall that be done ? Not for our deserthes, but because God is woent too poure o'ret his grace vpon vs, and because we be beholden to him for al the good things that we haue. Thus ye see that if wee acknwldege oure selues alreadie bounde exceedingly vnto God , and yet notwithstanding that he will still increase his grace in vs, vntill he haue brought vs to full perfection : we may bee out of doubt that he will performe all that he hath begon in vs. Lo here in effect what wee ha' e to beare in minde concerning this streyne. Therevpon Job entereth agayne into his complaints:And no maruell though he do so. For althoughe Gods children doo comfort themselues in the mids of their sorowes, and set before their eyes the things that may giue them good hope:yet for all that, they can- not but be tossed with some troubles, & when they haue indured one battell, they must bee faine to enter into a second and a third. See in what minde Job was. He tooke the sentence that we haue seene, to resolute himselfe that he might come freely vnto god. And the reason is,because God accepteth the woorke of his owne handes. But nowe beholde he is assayled newe againe. Howe? Thou numbr'est my steppes (sayth he) and delayest not my sinne. The text is, Thou keepest not my sinne. But this worde keepeth signifieth to watch or wayt vpon. In effect Iobs meening is,that Gods iudgement presseth him too excessiuely. Howebeit hee speaketh as a man not well at ease in his minde. For it is certaine that God is alwayes slow to wrath, as he himselfe telleth vs, and wee our selues see. VVhich of vs percey- ue not that god vseth great and long sufferance towards vs when we haue offended him ? For if he were hastie to punish vs,what should become of vs? So then we se that God doth well ynochough keepe our sinnes : that is to say, put them vp & not punish them so rigorously as we haue deserued. VVherefore then is it that Job complayneth so? It is because he felte himself shet vp in such anguish, as he was able to indure no more. He looketh not rightly vnto Gods dooing, neither is hee able too iudge aright in such trouble : but hee complayneth according too his greefe. Hereby we see,that when we be so heddie in our affecti- ons,we cannot iudge of Gods works with a settled mind. Therefore it is no maruell though at most times we glo- rifie not God as were requisite, and as wee ought to doo. And why? For our passions doo so carie vs away, that if Ged doo vs any good, yet can hee not content vs. For we be like vnstable gulfes, and we think that al that he dooth for vs is too little , and that hee ought to do euery thing that we woul'd. s. him. Againe if he chastize vs, we are so teder as it is a pitie to see it: by and by we fal to murmuring, we thinke him to rigorous, and although he handle vs after a gentle fashion , yet can not wee deeme so. And what is the cause of it? Our owne outragious af- fections. Yee see then howe God is not glorified at our handes as he ought to be : and that is because we be bli- nded by the affections of oure fleshe, which trouble vs in such wise,as we cannot haue a moderate and sure iudgement. So much the more ought wee to fight against such temptations, and to beatem them backe,to the end we may acknowlede that God handleth vs with iustice and e- quitie, and that all his doings are faultlesse and according to reason. To the ende then that wee may conceyue this thing : our affections must bee thrust downe, and kept as prisone. For if it befell to Job to deeme amisse of Gods iudgements,as we see he hath done : what will betide vs, who haue not profited the hundred parte that hee did? Notwithstanding Job is somewhat to be borne withall,because that God(as I haue sayd heretofore)handled him after an extaordinarie fashion. And if this be well considered, it is to the greater condemnation of those that are discontented with God though he haue wayted for them with long pacience. As howe? Beholde, a man, that hath committed many offences, and whome God hath long spared, is forced in the ende too feele some correction, or otherwise hee woulde still keepe on his owne race: and therefore God punisheth him. Now as soone as wee bee touched with his hande, we fall to crying out Alas, and to lamenting as though hee were ouerrigorous towardes vs: and yet notwithstanding wee cannot denie, 10 but that he hath delt gently and levingly with vs in deferring the punishment that was due to vs. If he punish one sinne, we haue committed a hundred, and if he send vs any correction, surely it shall be light in comparison of that which we haue deserued. If we were in Iobs case, so as God pressed vs, yea and that we knew not wherfore: if he made vs not to fele our sinnes(as we haue sene)but were minded too set vs as it were vpon a scaffolde for an example to others: or if he afflicted vs so without shewing vs why: howe sore woulde euerie of vs bee greeued 20 and disquieted? So then as oft as God visiteth vs wyth his roddes, let vs looke homewarde to thinke well vpon our sinnes, and to consider that we haue long time afore deserued that God should shew vs such rigor. And wheras we haue bene borne withal, & not touched at the first day: let vs acknowledge our selues beholding too him therfore, and that the same proceeded of his infinit mercie, & that his present afflictiong of vs is because we haue compelled him to do it, by prouoking him to much with our sinnes:and to be short, that we haue abused his good- 30 ness and grace, wherethrough he bore and forbore vs so long time together. Thus ye see what we haue to note. Furthermore let vs not quarell with God though he put not vp our sinnes. For what a thing were it for a man to haue euill lurking in him, if he be not purged of it? for the euill that is in him will become vncurable, whereas it might wel be remedied, if it be not delayed to long. VVe see what commeth of those that shun phisick. VVhen an inconuenience that is comming vpon vs is foreseen: if we refuze to take a purgatiou to preuent the mischeef, 40 and forslow to prouide for it till it be growne to the ful: it will bee past time to deale with it as then, for the disease wil haue gotten the vpper hand. If there be a strong feuer too come vpon a man: or if there bee any disease that is too bee taken out of him: if it be let alone, ye see it swelleth and rankleth, and it is ynoch too make the partie lose a limine, yea or his whole bodie. For it will kindle a burning feuer, so as there shall bee no more meanees to heale it. Even so is it with vs: If God shoulde put vp oure sinnes with silence, it were euen a ranckling 50 of them to encrease our paine: and when he should come to purge vs, it woulde be too late. And so God sheweth vs great fauour when he clenzeth vs of our sinnes, according as he knoweth to be meete for our welfare. Therefore we haue no cause to complaine of him, but rather to glorifie him in that hee hath a care of vs, and specially for that hee taryeth not till we aske the thing that is for our profite, but preuenteth vs by correcting the couert disease that is within vs. Thus much concerning thys streyne. Nowe Iob addeth, that his sinne is sealed vp, and 60 that God hath added to his misdoings. The worde Adde, is not taken in that sense which many men expound it, that is to wit, that God shoulde make Iobs iniquities greater than they were, (like as a cruell man is woont to do, who when a light and pardonable fault is committed, maketh a heynous and unpardonable crime of it, so that by this saying that God added to Iobs misdeedes, it should be ment that God did make them greater & more heynous than they were indeede:) But the text sheweth that it tendeth to another ende. For it is no new thing, (specially in Iob and in the Psalmes) to see repetitions, as which is a very ordinarie matter in the Hebrew tung. But now let vs looke to the contents of the verse. Iob borroweth this similitude, namely that God hath bound vp his sinnes, as it were into a bundle, and locked them al vp togither in a chest, and set his seale to it, as who shoulde say, that nothing shoulde escape him. And therenvnto he addeth, that God hath layd a good weight vpon it, like as in Zacharie Zach. 5.c.8. (where it is ment that God shetteth vp mens sinnes) it is sayde that God layeth a masse of Leade vpon the vessel wherein they are, so that after he hath shet them vp in the vessell, hee layeth a masse of Leade vpon them that they shoulde not get out. So then Iob continueth heere the similitude that hee had set downe, saying that God hath sealed vp his sinnes to the entent that nothing shoulde escape him, and that there shoulde not be so much as any one poynt left out. And to expresse this, he sayeth, that God hath added a good counterpeyse or weight, so as nothing can bee drawne away, but all his misdeedes must abyde before God, to come to account, and to bee judged and condemned. Now then wee see what is the plaine meening of this sentence. And verely Iob had some occasion too speake so, because that (as I haue sayde) hee was pressed after an extraordinarie fashion, for that it is not Gods custome to handle men so roughly. Iob therefore had some occasion too make that complaint. But yet must we alwayes come backe to that which I haue touched: namely that he was forced with excessive passions, and therefore hilde no measure. For it is certaine that if God had listid to haue punished him with rigor, he could haue founde exceeding great sinnes in him, and haue made him too feele a farre greater chastisement. But what for that? He considereth no more but what God is woont to do to men, and therupon maketh his complaint. But we on our side haue first to consider, that we bee farre off from the perfection that was in Iob. Therefore whensoever the Lorde punisheth our sins, let vs assure our selues that if he chastize vs for one or two, there are three or four, yea and a great number mo. Let euery of vs call himself to account: and when we haue well examined our life, shal we not find a gulf of sin in vs? Shall not euery man be faine to confesse that he is ashamed of himself? Let men summon thesclues, & let the search a litle what our life is. And how are we to godward? VVe are but hypocrites & dullards if we be not ashamed of our selues, and as good as ouerwhelmed with cōfusion in that case. Sith it is so that God himself condemmeth vs, can we say that we suffer not for our sinnes, or that he doth vs wrong? Alas no. But we ought to know that he letteþ slip a great sort of our sinnes, yea and euen the most part of the, and that he is not desirous to punish vs rigorously, but giueth vs occasion to bethink vs of our sinnes, and leasure to be sorry for the, and to aske him for giueneſſe of them. Thus ye see what we haue to mark in this sentence. But herewithall let vs marke also, that Iob acknowledged his owne sinnes: & that is, to the entēt we should not think, that he meant to iustifie himself heretofore, or that he doth as these shamelesse persons do, who thinke themselues to be without spot, yea & that God is in det to them. Iob went not that way to work. And how then was he iustified? I haue told you alreadie after what sort: namely by acknowledging that which God did to him. But yet for all that, Iob doth here put himselfe into the aray of sinners, and hee knoweth well that God can finde faultes ynoch in him: neuerthelater it greeueth him that God should handle him with so excessive and

and vnaccustomed rigor. And hereby must we take warning, not to looke what God doth vnto other men. For that is the thing that oftentimes diueth vs to impaciece and murmuringe. VVee see that God punisheth not those which (to our seeming) haue offended as greatly as wee, yea and more too. Beholde, (say we) God beareth with such a one, and I see that if hee and I were compared together, it woulde be founde that he hath offended more than I. Thereupon we conclude, that God keepeth not so euē a hande nor such vprightnesse as he ought to do. 10 Or if wee bee shamed too blasphemē him so: yet ceasse wee not too repyne at him, and too say, what a dealing is this? VVherefore dooth God punish mee for my sinnes, when in the meane while I see hee letteh others alone that are no better than I. If I looke vpon my neighbours, I shall finde them more faultie than my selfe, and yet I see not that God handleth them so rigorously as he dooth mee. Thus yee see howe men are greeued at the hart when they looke heere and there. But what? It is a fonde fashion too passe from our selues: for euerie man ought too shette his eyes, and not to looke what God dooth vntoo other folkes. Let it content vs that hee is righteous, and if hee handle me more rigorously than those whome I take too bee more offenders than my selfe: well, hee knoweth it is good and expedient for mee, hee hath a reason that is hidde from mee, and it behoueth mee to bee contented with his will, and therewpon to submit my selfe simplie vntoo him. Furthermore wee bee greatly to blame also, in that wee take vpon vs too iudge oure neighbours. For wee inhaunce 30 their faultes, and lessen oure owne, and although wee knowe not the tenth part of the faultes that wee haue committed, yet are wee ouer sharpe fighted too marke and beare away what other men doo: yea and (which worse is) although the thing be good, yet are we so malicious that we ceasse not to condemne it. Therefore let vs forbear such maner of condemnings: and whensoeuer it shall please God to handle vs rigorously, let vs assure our selues hee hath iust cause too doo it, although the same bee vñknowne too vs as nowe. Thus yee see 40 what we haue too remember in this sentence. And immediately Job addeth, That a Mountayne goeth to decay, that Rockes melt, that the water holloweth the stones, and that the man that is in miserie is destroyed by God, specially if God utter his force agaynst him. So ne men are of opinion, that Job doth here compare death with the Mountaynes, Rocks, and Stones, as if he should say, how now? Mountaynes consume, and so do Rockes: but death endureth euer, death keepeh stil his strength & liueliness. VVhat is ment by that? But this construction is ouerforced, as 50 men may perceyue. Othersome thinke that Job is weary of lingring so long, and that therewpon hee sayth, Howe nowe? I cannot see mine ende, I desire death, and death commeth not. If I were a Mountayne, I might be vndermined in the while: If I were a Rocke, I might droppe downe, as we see Rockes fall into the deepe sea: and if I were stone, there needed but water too eate mee hollowe. And we see that if the sea ouerflow his bankes, it marrēth a whole Countrey: and if there come a great rage of water, it maketh suche a hauocke, as neyther feeld nor lande, nor cattell, nor house, nor any thing else remayneth vnturned vp. And I am a poore frayle creature, I am not so sturdie as the Mountaynes: and yet for al that, I cannot die. Verely this exposition is meetyt convenient, and it draweth nie to the true naturall meening. Howbeit, Job ment simplie, that the mountaynes consume, and that God vseth violence towarde him, according as it must needes be a great force that shall consume mountaynes and rockes. Beholde then what Job ment. VVho am I Lord, sayth he? Thou seest there is nothing but weaknesse in me, and yet howe doest thou chaste me? Thou needest not but touch me with thy little finger, yea thou neededst not to come neere me, giue but a puffe at me, and beholde I am vndone. For if God doo but looke vpon vs with an angrie countenance, wee can looke for nothing but for death and destruction. So then God needeth not to arme himselfe, nor to gard himselfe with great power, to ouercome silie creatures that are lesse tha nothing. Therfore if he vse great violence, as though he would thunder vpon the mountaynes, or as though he meant to ouerturne the rocks and to clyue them asunder, and to scatter the stones: there is no reason in so dooing. Thus yee see what Job ment to say. But we must alwayes remember that Job speaketh not as a man in his right wittes, nor as a man that considereth things as he ought to do, that he might minde them with reason: but slingeth himselfe out of his boundes agaynst God. And why? For he sheweth after what maner he had beene tossed & shaken: not that hee resisted not the temptations (as I haue sayd afore:) but because he felt so vehement temptations in himself by reason of his vexation & torments, howbeit that he withstood them by the grace of God. By this we perceyue, that if God plague vs, it cannot be but we shall be troubled if wee looke vpon others, and the same is an augmenting of our owne miserie. So much the more the must we bridle our affections, and therewithal resort vnto God, that it may please him to restreyne our lusts, and not suffer vs at any time too ouershooote our selues: and moreouer, that when he intendeth to humble vs, & therewpon giueth vs the bridle in such wise, as we can not refrayne from chafing agaynst him when hee afflicteth vs: [it may please him] to graunt vs the grace to resist & fight still, and not suffer vs to abide in those murmurings too chafe still vpon the bit: but that we may so mayster oure selues by the apparant working of his holy spirite, as wee may subdue our fleshe, and holde our selues in true subiection: and as he may dispose of vs, and we gloriſe him in all his dooings. Thus yee see what we haue too beare away in the first place of this sentence. As for the rest, whe he sayth that man is miserable, and bath such store of miseries as cannot well be expressed: he meeneth to conclude therby, that God ought not to pursue men so sore. But by the way, let vs looke a little vpon the hardnesse that is in vs when God afflicteth vs. Though we be beaten neuer so much, is it seene that wee be euer a whitte the softer? or that we bow our neckes the more? or that he winneth vs to become teachable and obedient? Alas no. But wee see that God maye make the same complaint in these dayes, which he made in the Prophet Esayes time: what shall I do more, sayth hee? For from the sole of the foot, to the crowne of the heade, there is no whole part in thy people. God is wearie because hee had chastized that people so muche, and assayde too bring them to amendment. VVell then, yee see heere a people that was beaten, and double beaten, and forworne with plagues, warres, and famine, both generally and particularly: Finally, they are become like wretched lepres that rotte in their owne afflictions: and yet for all that they are styll as stubburne or more stubburne than euer they were afore. Yee see then that oure Lorde dealeth in this behalfe as a father that feeth no amendemente in hys Children, and is greeued at the hart, that notwithstanding all the correction which he vseth, yet his children are altogether stubburne and vnreformable, and therfore hee maketh his moane saying, Alas, what a thing is this? I haue lost my labor. Euen so doth God complaine

of his people. And see wee not as much in our selues at this day? So then let vs marke, that although wee bee miserable, and haue many defaultes in vs: yet ceasse we not therefore too bee still harde harted and stubborne. Yea and in respect of the blind pride and feerche presumptuousnesse that is in vs, and as in respect of oure rebellion and wilfull stubburnnesse, in all these things wee exceede both the Mountaynes and the Rockes, notwithstanding that we bee but a little shadow or a smoke. And therefore let vs not thinke it straunge, if God vtter such force for the correcting of vs. And why? For hee respecteth not the infirmite that is in vs, but the wilfull hardhartednesse wherthrough we would withstand him. Are the Mountaynes verie high? Let vs loke a little vpon the hart of man. There is suche a trayterousnesse in vs, that wee coulde finde in oure hartes too mounte aboue the Clowndes, yea, and too attayne too Gods thronē too plucke him out of it. And although wee be but wretched carions: yet notwithstanding there is suche a malapertnesse in vs, as we woulde controll God in all his woorkes, and cannot finde in our hartes too submit oure selues vntoo him, and too say, well Lorde, holde thou the soueraigntie ouer all thy creatures, and let none grudge agaynst thee: but we will put God too his stint at every turne: and then if wee do not all things after our fashion and to our liking, we fall to checking of him. Againe if he giue vs not leauē too doo what wee list, but holde vs short: then, lo(say wee) must we be in so strayte a bondage? It seemeth that God is mynded of set purpose too trouble men here, without hauing regarde of our state: but sith he appoynteth vs to liue here bilowe: why suffreth he vs not to haue at leastwise that which our nature desireth, or else why gaue hee vs not another inclination? See the deuylishe prydē that is in men. Moreouer there is in vs a malicious wilfulnesse, so as if God labour too bring vs backe too him, is hee able too compasse it? Are wee teachable? On which side soever he turne vs, it bootteth not. For we haue alwayes the sayde ouerstatelnesse and pride of hart. And although we haue playde the hypocrites for a little while: let a man but turne his hande, and hee shall finde that there was poysone hidden vnderneath, so as we returne too doing as wee did afore. VVee see then that this hardhartednesse hath neede too bee corrupted after a straunge fashion. And this is it which our Lorde speaketh of in Ieremie. For hee complayneth of the people, that they were vnreformable: howebeit it is vnder another similitude than the Prophete Esay dooth it, as I haue alledged afore: and the comparision that God maketh there, is verie fitte for the matter which we be nowe in hande with. God sayth that the people are like a Cake that is baked on the one side, and vnbaked on the other. As for example, let vs put the case that a man make a hote fire, and the harth is all burning and sparckling: well then, one takes a Cake and layes it vpon it: the Cake baketh not, but scorcheth on the one side, and is soft paste still on the other. Euen so is it with vs: on the one part there is nothing but frailtie, according as it is seene that men can say well ynough, Alas what are men? they are nothing but wretchednesse and miserie. VV speake verie truely in so saying. Howbeit, when God visiteth vs, and chastizeth vs, doo wee shew that we can bake vnder his corrections? Nay wee will rather burne, than bake. That is too say, God shall not win one good amendment by all the chastizings that he sendeth, but we will rather fall to chafing and stomaking, and therewithall wee kindle the fyre of his wrath and vengeance. Ye see then that wheras God would haue vs to be well baked, we do rather burne. Lo why he vseth such violence in chastizing vs. Now let vs go & complain that God should thunder vpon the mountaynes, and that there is no reason in his doing: and see if we shall mend our case by it. VVhat shall wee win by pleading so? It shall bee the next way to increase our damnation. Then let vs assure our selues, that seeing God sendeth such a wilfull hardhartednes in vs, hee muste needes set strong hande to vs, and not vse his fauourable meanes: for that will doo no good. Thus ye see what wee haue to marke in this streyne. And further let vs bee sure that when God chastizeth vs, if he strike not as boystously vpon vs as he woulde do vpon a Mountaine or Rocke: the same conimeth of his mercie. But wee see it is greatly requisite that God should vse such roughnesse. For we can not say but he regardeth our welfare howesoever the worlde go: I say euē when he sendeth vs. For when he seemeth to haue brought vs euē vntoo hell, yet doth hee giue vs wherewith to comfort and cheere vp our selues. But wee must thanke his fatherly mercie for it, and acknowledge it to be a wonderfull gracious goodness that God vseth towards vs, when in steede of iust thundring downe vpon vs, he sheweth himselfe so gentle and friendly, as hee seeketh nothing but to make vs feele his goodnessse. Thus then yee see in effect what wee haue too marke in this streyne. And immediately Iob addeth, that God vtereth his force so farre, that bee euē chaungeth his countenance, and frowneth vpon him, and bee knoweth not what his beyres shall bee, whether poore or riche, noble or vnmoble. Iob goeth on with his complaint, and sheweth that when God shall haue punished men all their life long, theyr ende also shall bee sutable therewith: and when they bee departed out of the worlde, they shall haue no more intelligence what is done heere. And afterwarde hee addeth for a conclusion, that so long as his fleshe is vpon him, it must needes bee payned, and his soule muste bee sorrowfull, and he himselfe muste mourne. Surely this complaingnt is not voyde of vnthankefulnesse. For Iob ought to knowe, that God doth alwayes mingle his fauor with the afflictions that he sendeth vs, so as we haue cause too blisse him. But he considered not that. VVhy so? Because hee was ouerpionate and sorrowfull. Also wee muste beare in mynde what wee haue sayde afore: that is too witte, that as oft as God scourgeth vs, wee must bethinke vs of the benefites that wee haue receyued of him, and that will helpe too asswage oure greefe. For when wee muze vpon nothing but the miserie that wee indure, wee are so ouerraught with sorowe, as wee can not blisse God, nor call vpon him, nor settle our trust in him. But if wee looke the other way, [and think with our selues] God hath done vs thus many good turnes, and will he not holde on still? Then oure sorrowes are asswaged: and therewithall also wee recouer boldenesse too call vpon God. Heerevpon wee conclude, that it behoueth vs too be pacient, and that it isynough that he hath shewed himselfe too bee our good father, and that his correcting of vs with his owne hand, was bycause hee tendereth oure welfare. Yee see then that the thing which we haue too marke in the first place, is that Iobs rushing out intoo such rage, was because he loked no further but to his owne miseries: and that therefore it behoueth vs to bethink vs of Gods benefits when he afflieteth vs, to the ende that oure sorrow may bee asswaged and sweetned thereby. And if wee doo so, wee shall find that God sendeth vs no such greefe, neither of body nor mind, but there is always matter of gladnesse with it. And howe? For although wee bee subiect to manie diseases, as colde, heate, and such other sufferings: yet when wee haue this shifft of approching vntoo God,

God, and power to vster our infirmities vnto him : Is it not a recompence that ought well to assuage all the sorowes that we haue conceyued ? VVee see then in what wise we may resist such manner of complaunts, which are full of vnthankefulnesse : namely by thinking vpon the benefits that we haue receyued at Gods hand in former times, & therevpon by trusting that he wil continue them in time to come . But verely we must be warned, that as long as this life lasteth wee muste be fayne to grone, and when our flesh is greeued, wee must be fayne to lament. 10 And why ? To the end wee desire not to liue here at our ease and as we would wish : God hath told vs that he wil haue vs troubled in this present life, bothe in bodie and minde, and therefore it behoueth vs to make full reckoning of it . But let vs marke, that euen in the middes of all our sorrowes, wee shall haue wherfore to prayse God Rom. 7. d. as S. Paule doth. He calleth himselfe miserable. VVretched man that I am (sayeth he) who will deliuere mee from the prison of my bodie ? But by and by he yeeldeth thanks to God through our Lord Iesus Christ . As concerning 20 that Job sayeth, that the man which is departed knoweth not what is done here bylowe, nor whither his offspring be poore or riche : It is not to grounde an article of our fayth vpon, that such as are gone out of this world know not what our state is : for Job speake as man ouercumbered . Therefore we must not take here any certainie of doctrine : nother is it greatly for vs too inquire of suche matters . And why ? Let it suffyze vs that God hath set vs in this world to communicate one with another : and every man ought too employ himselfe vpon his neyghours . God hath giuen mee such a gifte or abilitie, and therefore I must apply my selfe that way . Agayne one of vs may pray for another . But when he hath taken vs out of this world, the sayd communicating is taken away frō vs, and there is no more communicating as there was before : nother must we do as the Papists do, who are wont to runne too the deceased Saincts, as though they had not yet finished their courses . Nowe for as much as the Scripture teacheth vs not what wee ought to doo in this behalfe : let vs leaue that thing in doubt and in suspence, whereof wee haue no certayne resolution by the wordē of God : for singlenesse of minde is also a thing wherein it behoueth vs to walke . But as touching this text, wee see in effect, that Iobs meening is nothing els but that man is miserable . And why ? For as long as this life indureth (sayeth he) it is full of Payne and anguishe . And what is death ? It is the extremest of all miseries, because that there a man seemeth to bee vterly rooted out . Job spake after that maner, because that (as I haue sayd) he was caried away of his passions . But on our parte lette vs bee contented to languish and to haue our flesh payned, and our minde distressed during this life : for yet haue wee whereof to reioyce in God, because he promiseth to bee alwayes our father and Sauiour . Doo we die ? VVee knowe that is our aduauntage, as S. Paule sayeth, Rom.14. b. because that by that meanes God taketh vs out of the mi- 8. & Phl. series of this worlde, too make vs partakers of his riches 1. c.21. and glorious immortalitie.

Nowe lette vs kneele downe in the presence of our good God with acknowledgement of our faultes, prayng him to make vs feele them so as wee may craue forgiuenesse of them at his hand : and that wee may bee so stirred vp to pray, as he may make vs too feele his goodnessse and mercie, and wee profit more and more therby : and also that all the time of our life wee may giue ouer our selues too the glorifying of his holy name, and to the praying of him as he deserueth : And that when he hath once brought vs into the right way, he will never suffer vs to swarue any more aside, but that wee may continue with inuincible strength and stedfastnesse, euen too the ende . That it may please him too graunt this grace not onely to vs but also to , &c.

The. viij. Sermon, which is the first vpon the fifteenth Chapter.

E Liphias the Themanite ansyvered and sayd.

2. VVill a vvise man bring foorth knovvledge of vvinde , and fill mens bellies vvith the East vvinde ?
3. VVill he reason of vnmeete matters, and of vnlavyfull vvoordes ?
4. But thou pullest avvay feare, and turnest prayer avvay from God .
5. Thine ovne mouth shall reproueth thee of vnrightuousnesse, and thou hast taken the tung of craftinesse .
6. Thine ovne mouth shall condemne thee, and not I, and thine ovne lippes beare vvitnesse against thee .
7. Art thou the first man borne ? vvarst thou created before the mountaynes ?
8. Hast thou heard the secrete of God, or is vvisedome restrayned vnto thee ?
9. VVhat knovvest thou that vvee knovv not ? vwhat vnderstandest thou that is not in vs ?
10. For vvee be baldheaded and auncient . There is an older man among vs than thy father.

Hen wee know wee haue spoken truth and in Gods behalfe, and yet men reiect all that we haue sayd: it is a very harde and grieuous temptation . For in that case not onely we be blamed in our own persons: but also we see that men refuse the things that are of God . Neuerthelesse it behoued Job to vndertake such a battell, as we see in this streyne . He had maynteyned his case, not by suttletie, nor of wilfulness, nor through ignorance : and yet notwithstanding it was layd in his dish that he bad taken to him the tung of craftinesse, or of the despizers of God, and that all his sayings had bene but as winde wherein there had beeene no firmnesse nor reason . Job therefore is greeuously charged here for maynteyning the doctrine which he knew to bee of God . And this muste serue for our example at this day . For many are so greeued when they see that men receyue not Gods worde, but rather that the most parte of the worlde condemneth it . But what for that ? Seing that men haue at all times bene stubborne against God, and he could never yet make them too receyue that which were for their behoofe: let vs not think it straunge that we also must passe the same way, and that the authoritie of God and of his woordē is imbaced by our stubbornesse and by the malice of men, consideringe that their iudgement is so awke and that they cannot giue themselfes so goodnesse. And as for those that haue the charge to beare about Gods woerde and too preache it: though they see men reject it: yet let them stande too it stowly, and lette not such doings thrust them out of the way . For not onely Iob was condemned in his sayings, but the Sonne of God also . VVee see that men were so farre off from accepting his doctrine, as they did rise vp furiously agaynst it, and accused him of blasphemie . If the like bee done at this daye, it is no noueltie . But in the meane whyle lette vs determine too doo that which God comandeth vs . Let men aduaunce themselves as much as they list, and lette them resist God and his truth : yet must all that bee ouerpased, and wee must not ceasse to doo our duetie . Marke that for one poynt . And by the way it behoueth vs too marke, that although the woordes which are rehearsed here by Eliphias, haue bene misapplyed to the persone of Iob: yet neuerthelesse, in generalitie we may gather a good and profitable lesson of them . And firsfe of all where as it is sayd, that a wryse man will not bring foorth Wyndie Woordes, nor fill his hearers bellies with the Easterne Wynde: it is the same thing which we see commonly in the Scripture: that is to wit, that our woordes ought not to bee vnprofitable, but rather well seasoned with salte, according as Sainct Paule vseth the same similitude, and afterward to expresse his meening, sayeth that our woordes ought to bee substantiall, meete to edifie and too profit those that heare them, that they may bee instructed in the feare of God, guyded aright when they bee in the way, and incouraged . Yee see then that vpon this saying of Eliphasis, we haue too marke that our woordes ought to tende too edification . And if they do so: they shall not be lyke the winde: that is to say, they shal not be puffed vp with a vaine swelling, but there shalbee a substancialnesse in them wherewith too feede mens soules . And truely here yee see why it is sayd, that good and holy doctrine is as it were foode . By taking conuenient foode wee bee satisfied, we gather strength, and our stomacke is not accloyed, but there insueth good and naturall nourishment . Euen so is it with the woerde of God . VVhen it is well applied to our vse, we bee filled with it, and wee be nourished with it, and yet in the meane whyle there is no windiness that breakes vp vpon our stomacke, and brings no substanciall nourishment with it . See then the two poynts that wee haue to note . The first is that if men finde no sauour in our woordes when we haue tolde them the thing that is good, profitable, and of God: wee must not therefore be out of pacience, considering that the same hath happened not only to Iob, but also to all the seruants of God, so as their doctrine had no sauour to the worldward, but was mocked at, and taken to be but winde or a trifling thing . But contrariwise on our side let vs bee well aduised, that when wee speake, it may bee too the edifying of our neighbours, and carie substanciall profite with it: and euen in our ordinarie and common talke muste wee obserue the same rule . For although we haue there some more libertie: yet notwithstanding God condemneth the vanitie that is in vs, when wee bee giuen too prattle of vnprofitable matters . Neuerthelesse wee see that men can haue no holde of themselues, nother can they make any mirth, except they raunge out into windie woordes . And are men so greatly giuen vnto that? That is no warrant to say it is therefore lawfull for them . For God findeth fault with it as wee see . Therefore let vs holde vs to the doctrine that I alledged out of S. Paule: which is that our talke muste not bee vnprofitable, but seasoned with salt, that it may edifie and profite the hearers . But aboue all, when the eace standeth vpon the handling of Gods woerde, it must be more neerely looked too without comparison . Then in this eace let vs haue a regard to vse such a sobrietie, as wee defile not the thing that God hath ordyned for our salvation . For it is certayne that when wee speake of God and of his woerde, if we do but dally with it, and rayse vnprofitable questions and vayne disputations about it: it is high treason to God . And wherfore? For our Lord hath shewed vs that his woord ought to profit vs . But if we fall to handling of it after such a sorte, as wee apply it not to his right and lawfull end, but play with it as with a tennisbal, and passe not for the good instruction of it, but haue our eares filled with winde, so as the same serueth but to satisfie mennes vayne curiositie: Is it not a desiling of a holy thing? Is it not a great wrong and dishonour to Godward, when the thing that serueth for our salvation, is despized and thrust vnder foote? So then, lette vs looke more neerely too our selues: and when we deale with holie things, let the same bee with such reverence, as good and substanciall instruction may alwayes issue of it: that is to say, that it may so settle in vs, as our soules may bee nourished by it . And it behoueth vs too marke well this similitude of the winde which Eliphias vseth here . For (as I haue sayd alreadie) if a doctrine bee good, there will bee such a substancialnesse in it, as wee shall be fedde with it, and wee shall finde that it is good too reste vpon it . Contrariwyse, too what purpose are all these curiosities? True it is that there will be good store of winde, of gay shewes, and of greate likelyhoods in them: but yet for all that, in the ende they disappoint vs . And here yee see why Sainct Paule sayeth, that knowledge of it selfe dooth but puffe menne vp, when it is not matched with loue: but loue edifieth, when wee heare Gods woerde too our owne instruction, or talke of it too the instruction of others . But if wee couet to bee counted skiffull, and by foolish vaynegloriousnesse desire every of vs too bee esteemed sharpwitted, and to bee thought well seene in the Scriptures: what is it else but winde and puffednesse as Sainct Paule sayeth? And lo what the Diuinitie is which menne haue forged and framed too themselues by their owne vaynegloriousnesse: like as wee see that in all the Papacie, that which men call Diuinitie is nothing else but as a blast of the Easterne winde which seareth things, and hath no substance in it to feede and nourish the poore soules withall . But a man might make a generall distinction of it in twoo poynts . One parte of the Popish diuinitie consisteth in questions and quarrels that bring no fruite . And firsfe of all they trouble themselues aboue them all the dayes of theyr life, and cannot finde any resolution of them . And why? for their minde is too seeke that which God did neuer disclose, yea and which his will is too haue hidden still from vs . Nowe wee knowe that when hee hath not spoken, hee will haue our mouthes kepte sherte, and that our eares shoulde not itche too listen what it shoulde bee, but that wee shoulde bee ignorant where hee teacheth vs not . Thus yee see that our true wisedome is, not too desire to knowe more than that which God sheweth vs in his schoole . And yee see also what the Popish diuines are, whiche moue questions of those things whiche God would haue vnowne vnto vs . They can well debate: but they can neuer conclude: for all their reasons are but guesses . But put the eace it were possible too haue certayne resolution, and too say, thus it is: yet shall a man bee never the more edified nor profitid by being resolued of that which they debate in their schooles . For there is no disputing whither wee be fauored by Gods only onely mercie : they shewe not, that for as much as wee bee sure of the forgiuenesse of our sinnes, wee ought to haue so much the greater cause to prayse and magnifie his goodnessse towards vs : there is no telling what comfort wee ought too take in our aduersities. No, for there is not alake but of flittering in the ayre. The menne that doo least good, are counted of greatest skill : those are fellowes alone. For they bee contemplatiue, that is to say, they sore about in the ayre, and haue no steddi-ness in them. Thus ye see a shamefull defiling of Gods word, and although there were in the Papacie no doctrine that were wicked and fully false in it selfe : yet neuerthelesse that maner of veine which they haue founde out, is too bee abhorred : for by that meanes they haue peruerted the true and naturall vse of Gods word as I sayde afore. So then let vs beare well in minde, that all suche things as serue but too piffe men vp, and too seare vp their soules in steed of feeding them and giuing them good nourishment & substance, ought to be vtterly cast away. The seconde part of the Popishe diuinitie, is too stablishe a Freedome of will in men, and too make them beleue that they haue some power in them to attayne vntoo good: or if they atteyne not fully too it, yet too bee helpers and companions too God when his grace hath preuented them, and to lift vp themselues in such wise by their owne strength, as good deseruings may proceede thereof : and that when they haue done what is in them, the grace of God shall not fayle them (as who should say, they were able to binde it:) and on the other side that they be able to purchase fauour at Gods hande by their owne workes, and that if there bee any default in them, they may supplie them with satisfactions. Now then the Papists do thus teach men that they be able to do this and that of themselues : is it not a puffing of them vp with presumption and ouerweening, that they might aduaunce themselues agaynst God, and sooth themselues in their owne strength as though they were able to worke woonders? Marke heere a poynt which is muche more hurtfull than the vnprofitable questioning that I touched afore. Verely both of them are to be greatly misliked : but yet is there much greater harme in this latter. For if men trust in themselues, and flatter themselues in their owne strength : it is the next way to ouer-throe them quite, it is a deadly poyon, and it is not onely a simple puffing vppe, but also a diuelish pride, whiche serueth too sende wretched soules too destruction. By this meane then wee see, that all the Popishe diuinitie is but winde, which serueth but too piffe vp wretched soules, and not to giue them any nourishment. VVhat is too bee done then? Let vs learne too vse edi-fying talke, and such as may feede oure seelie soules, that wee may bee taught the feare of God, and therewithal knowe that wee can doo nothing of oure selues, but must bee fayne too drawe oute of the fountayne of all vprightnesse and iustice, and that God must be fayne to make vs partakers of his grace, for without that, we shall be voyde of all goodnesse. VVhen such doctrine as this is set forth, it will serue to edifie, and wee shall bee nourished and battled by it. Moreouer let vs indeuer also to drawe our neighbours too the lyke nourishment, so as we may bee fed with Gods truth, as with the substantiall foode that must edifie vs too the full. Thus yee see what wee haue too remember in effect concerning this sentence. And streyght after, there is another declaration whiche wee ought too marke well: For Eliphias sheweth wherfore hee likeneth fondu doctrine too a blasting winde. Thou takest awaie feare, and withdrawest prayer from God. True it is, that the seconde woerde which hee yseth, signifieth somtimes a Muzing, Myn-ding, or Betthinking! but yet commonlye it is taken for prayer and supplication. And no doubt but Eliphias ment heere too note the twoo principall partes of the edifying whiche wee haue too receyue by good doctrine. For what is the marke that God ameth at when hee setteth his woerde afore vs? It is too holde vs in awe, and too make vs too walke in his feare, and obedience: and also too make vs put our whole trust in him, and too call vpon him, seeing wee bee destitute of the spitte of wise-dome, rightuousnesse, power, and life. Marke then the twoo poyntes that wee haue too obserue, if wee intende too shoothe at the right marke, and too come to the poynt whiche God calleth vs vntoo. True it is that wee shall heare of many things when Gods woerde is handled afore vs. But (as I haue sayde) all commeth too those two poyntes. Eliphias therefore intending too conclude that Iobs learning was but a winde that puffeth vp and swelleth the stomacke, sayeth that it taketh away feare, and withdraweth prayer from God. As if hee shoulde saye, when we be turned aside from the feare of God, and are not minded too call vpon him, and to flee vnto his goodnesse, all is but a winde that will make vs too burst, and not nourishe vs at all. By this then we may the better see what the edification is that he speaketh of. It is oftentymes sayde by S.Paule, that all must bee done too edi-fying. And what is that edifying? It is that wee shoulde Ro.14.c.19.

bee taught too feare God, and stablished in the same 1.Cor.14.c.2: more and more: And secondly, that wee shoulde bee 26.
taught too call vpon him, and warned too seeke all oure 1.The.S.5.b.11. welfare in him alone, according also as that is the place where wee shall finde it. As touching Feare it importeth as much as that oure lyfe muste bee ruled according too the wil of God. For what becommeth of men when they knowe not themselues too bee subiect too theyr maker?
They rushe out into all naughtinesse. VVe know what oure lustes are. Then if the feare of God reigne in vs, wee muste acknowledge that hee hath not put vs into the worlde to liue at suche libertie as wee liest our selues: but reserueth his whole right ouer vs, so as wee must obey him. Beholde (I say) what this woerde Feare impor-teth: that is to say, that we shoulde learne to direct oure whole life to the will of God. VVe haue his law whereby he guide.h vs, & sheweth vs how to discerne betwene good and euill. Then except we will be vtterly confounded, we must beginne at that poynt. But yet for all that, what can further vs in the feare of God, saue onely the gouernance of his holy spirite? For wee bee voyde of all goodnesse, and are giuen too nothing but euill.
And if wee lay Gods lawe too the lyues of men, wee shall finde a deadly battell betwixt them, as betweene fire and water, yea, even their whole nature: and that there is not any thing more contrarie to Gods rightuousnesse, than all the affections of our flesh. For (as Sainet Paule Rom.8.b.7. sayeth in the eyght too the Romanes) they are all enimyes vntoo God. Seeing the cace is so, we must come to this praying, and forso much as wee drawe wholly vntoo euill, yea and are wholly caryed awaie and rapted vntoo furie, wee muste beseeche God too lay hande vp-on vs and too guide vs, and too make his hollye spirite too rule ouer vs in suche wise, as wee may freely and with a single harte sticke vntoo his rightuousnesse and vntoo all that euer hee calleth vs vntoo: and also that hee suffer not the temptations of Satan and of the VVorlde too turne vs from dooing good: and that it may please him too forgyue vs oure faultes, and too bee alwayes mercifull and louing towardes vs. Thus yee see howe prayer ought to bee ioyned with the feare of God.

For it is not yngough for vs to be shewed what we ought to do, and what God requireth at our hand, and what is our ductie: but wee must also be encouraged too go to him, and to haue our whole recourse vnto him, to seeke that thing there which wanteth in our selues, to the ende that he may releue our neede, and remedie the same, as who is the chiefe and only Phisition. And when we haue well borne away this text, wee shall haue profited greatly for one day. VV<sup>e</sup> come oftentimes to sermons. But what for that? VV<sup>e</sup> do but wander if we bring not these two points, and giue not diligent hearing. For wherfore come we thither? To know what God requireth at our hands, and how we ought to walke, that wee be not as beasts in this worlde. But God alloweth none other rule but only that men should obey him and frame themselues according to his will. For all the deuotions that men can devise, are but starke folies, according as wee see how the wretched Papists torment themselues fore, so as there is no end of doing one thing or other. But what for that? what gayne they by it? For all their doings are but their owne deuices: the Lawe of God is as good as buried among them. So then let vs beware we beguile not our selues: but let curcomming vnto Sermons be to attayne to a certaintie wherein we may not fayle. VV<sup>h</sup>ich thing will then come to passe, when we admit nothing els but onely Gods will to rule and gouerne our whole life. Howbeit, that is not all that we haue to do. For it is to no purpose for men to beate our eares with preaching, and to say, behold, thus muste yee do, behold, thus doth God commaund you: vntil such time as we haue learned that it is he only that printeth his lawe in our harts and ingraueth it in our bowels, that it is he which giueth vs power to sticke to his comauendements, that it is he which by his holie spirit giueth force & effectualnesse to the doctrine, that it is he which of his goodnesse accepteth vs & forgiueth vs our sins: [I say it is all to no purpose] til we haue learned those things, and bene taught to resort vnto him, to demaund at his hand whatfoever we haue neede of. It is not yngough for vs to haue it tolde vs, thus and thus must ye doo: but (as I sayd) God must bee fayne to giue vs strength to performe that which wee shall craue at his hand. Furthermore by this we be admonished, that our fayth is not edified by aduersitie: but that it alwayes ingendreth in vs a desire to prayse God, and to resorte vnto him. VV<sup>h</sup>en it is tolde vs that our Lorde Iesus Christ hath reconciled vs to God his father, and shed his bloud to wash vs with, that wee might be pure and cleane, and that he hath payde the price of our rausome, that wee might be quit by his rightuousnes, & so become acceptable to God, & he vse his mercie towards vs: the knowing of all these things (say I) is to the end we should throughly cleave vnto him, and say, well then, how may we be sauued but only by the mere grace of God, in asmuch as our Lord Iesus Christ hath made satisfaction for vs: and to the end that our fayth should rest therepon? But must we therfore lie still asleepe? No no: but we must awake that wee may repayre vnto God, and say, where is our welfare? In the death and passion of our Lorde Iesus Christe, therfore we must seeke it there, for we shall not finde it among men. And how must wee seeke it but by prayers and supplications? Then let vs come vnto God, and say, Lord sith thou seest vs voyde of all goodnesse: fill thou vs with thy grace. True it is that we be wretched sinners: howbeit for asmuch as wee bee the members of thy Sonnes bodie, wee shalbee made rightuous by him. True it is that wee bee full of spottes, but he hath wherewith too elenze vs, hee hath a good washing for vs. True it is that wee bee giltie of euerlasting death, and bound therevnto: but our Lorde Iesus Christe hath set vs free from it. VVherefore, Lorde bee so good too vs, as to make vs partakers of the thing which is purchased for vs by thine infinite goodnesse. Beholde in what maner wee ought to haue recourse vnto God, [lette vs say] yea Lorde fill thou vs with thy holie spirite, that lie may leade vs by his strength: and suffer vs not to faynt for any temptation that can befall vs. Thus yee see in effect what wee haue to marke out of this streyne. But Eliphas doth afterward vpbrayd Job, that he hath chosen the tung of craftinesse. This present saying importeth that he doth but mocke with God as they do which are bereft of all feare and reverence, and haue not any more reason in them. For sometimes men shall sinne through simplicitie, and yet stande in some feare of God, howbeit they shalbe dulled [for the time:] according as wee shall see many that are not touched after a lively forte, but are little better than brute beasts, and yet notwithstanding there shall some feare of God lie hidden in them, which is as good as choked: well then, such maner of folke haue more simplicitie than craftinesse and malice in the. But othersome thinke themselues to be very sharpwitted, if they can scoffe at all religion and dally with God and with his maiestie, and take vnmeasurable libertie to follow all evill of set purpose. Yee see then that the crafte or subtle folke of whom Eliphas maketh mention in this streyne, are not such as do amisse through ignorance and ouersight, but such as wilfully and of sette purpose make none account of God, nor of the handling of his woerde contemptuously, to make a sporte or a stage play of it: for behold, that is the toppe of all iniquitic. So then let vs marke well, that if God let men runne so farre vpo the brydle, as to shewe themselues futtlewitted agaynst him: then hath Satan taken such possession of them, as it is right harde too bring them backe againe to the right way, yea and in a maner impossible. And wee see also in what wise the Prophet Esay thudereth against such kind of folke, saying, Cursed be you that make you lurking-holes: for he vseth that similitude in speaking of these futtleheaded folke, which beare themselues in hand that they can beguile God. VVhen they haue sharpened their wittes and inuented fine slightes, behold, all their straying of themselues is to abolish the feare of God. For marke whereat they begin. If we be so brydled (say they) that if there be but one woerde of Scripture for a thing, wee muste yelde vnto it without gaynesaying: what a thing were that? for there are many things that are not vnderstood, and againe a man may doubt of this or that. And what a thing is it for vs to be compelled too yelde such authoritie to Gods woerde, as it may not be lawfull for vs too aske howe the case standeth? These politike heads therefore whiche are so desirous too worke wyles with God, begin at this poynt: namely of taking leaue to keepe men from seing what the thing is that menne call Gods woord, to the end that all mouthes should be tung-tied, and that men might raze it out quite and cleane. And when they be once entred into that doubt: afterwarde they harden themselues in it. And good reason it is that God should leaue them there, and that Satan should cary them headlong. And when they be come to that poynt: they doo nothing else but bleare out their tung against al doctrine, there is no more greefe nor remorse of conscience in them: but to be short, they be bereft of all humantie and become brutish. Thus yee see why I sayd that it is impossible that those whome God hath left at that poynt, should euer returne to the way of saluation. And therfore let vs beware that we hold our selues streyly in subiection vnto God, to beare such reuerence to his word, as we

as we may shun and vtterly abhorre and detest the slights and suttleties wherin the wicked sort delight and welter themselues. For they thinke not themselues to be sharp-witted ynough, till they haue dispyzed God. Also there are of these fanatical and fleeing heades to bee seene, who thinke themselues to bee verie dullards and of no estimation, till they haue learned to mocke God, and rid themselues quite of all Religion, so as they herken not any more too him, too say, Beholde it is God that speakest, and he is too hee obeyed. VVe see many nowe a dayes who thinke it to bee an ouergreat simplicenesse too submit a mans selfe so willingly vnto God. And what meane they by it but to shake off all feare of God? To such confuzion are we come: and therefore it behoueth vs to be verie ware, and to set much store by the simplicitie which God requireth of vs. Verely his minde is not too haue vs dulheaded, for fayth is not as the Papistes imagine, namely that men shoulde go on lyke Goslings. VVhen the Papistes say, men muste liue simplie: what simplicitie meane they? It is that men shoulde not disceirne betweene white and blacke, nor knowe what they ought to holde and to follow. But God(as I sayd) will not haue vs so ignorant, we must bee children in lewdnesse,

1. Pet. 2. 4. 2. and not in vnderstanding (as Saint Peter sayth) and wee
1. Cor. 14. 4. must learne of God, and fetch light at the brightness of his holly spirite and of his woerde, that we liue not lewdly, but desire to be fed with the foode of simplicitie and vprightnesse as with milke. For like as God handled his children after that maner in olde time: so will hee haue the same foode set before vs at this day also.

But by the way we haue to note, that Gods seruants must be readie armed agaynst suche stumbling blockes, when men cast them in the teeth that they dispize God, and that theyr whole drift is too bring all too confuzion, as now adayes the Papistes are so shamelesse, as to vpbrayde vs that wee seeke nothing but to bring men to a fleshly libertie, that there might bee no more honestie among men, nor any man passe to serue God, or to exercise himself in brotherly charitie. VVell this is layde to our charge: but not to our charge alone. VVee see that Job was assayled wyth the lyke temptations: and therefore let vs beare them with such pacience, as we may shew before God and the worlde, that men doo vs wrong in charging vs with that euill: and well may we answer so, if we haue had an eie to frame our selues to that which God sheweth, and too giue attentiuē care to that which he sayth to vs: and furthermore that wee chalenge not the knowledge of any thing but that which we haue learned in his schoole, that we may continue in the same. For that onely worde is ynough too beate backe all the flaunders which the enemies of the truth do lay vpon vs. Herewithal let vs turne men away from trust in themselues. For whereas we be commaunded to serue God purely, is it not too the ende we should put our whole trust in him, and that we should vnderstande howe we ought not to do whatsoeuer seemeth good too our selues, too turne aside eyther too the right hande or too the left, but simplie in all respectes follow whatsoeuer God commaundeth vs: Ye see then that we ought to be pure afore God, and also to haue a good report among men that we walke aright. But if wicked folke flaunder vs, we must beare it paciently, and yet for all that, knowe them too bee impudent and shamelesse. Eliphias hauing spoken so, addeth that Job ought not too trust so much to his own wit. Art thou the first man (saith he) wert thou borne before the mountaynes? Heere are auncient and gray bearded men, yea euen such as are elder than thy father? Art thou of councell with God? VVhen Eliphias vpbraydetb Job after this fashion, that hee is not olde ynough, and that he ought not to take vpon him such a libertie of judging: verely hee hath some colour in his saying, as we haue seene afore. For when God is so gracious vnto a man as to let him liue long time heere: hee may well haue learned many a thing. And agayne wee knowe that mennes wittes are the better settled by age, and that yong men cast foorth many bubbles, which age reppresteth. So then it is too bee presumed, that an olde man forasmuch as hee hath profited by liuing long in this worlde, ought to be perfecter and to haue more certaine skill than other men. But yet for all this, we see that in steed of profiting by long life, the most part go backwarde. For men might oftentimes with their age attaine to good knowledge and vnderstanding, yea and vntoo some wisedome. Howbeit forasmuch as naturally wee go from euill to worse, if God vpholde vs not: Therefore it is to bee seene that the most part of men become more fooles in their age than they were in their youth. Marke that for one poynct. Againe also there is no trus-10. Pet. 2. 4. 2. ting in oure owne agednesse in respect of Gods wise-10. Cor. 14. 4. dom: For hee dealeth it foorth as it pleaseth him, both to yong and olde: according as hee sayeth by the Pro-phete Ioell: Beholde, the dayes shall come that I will poore oute my spirite vpon all fleshe. Your olde men sayeth hee, shall dreame dreames, (that is too say) they shall bee my Prophetes, for I will teach them) and your sonnes and daughters shall see visions. In that place wee see how God calleth as well yong as olde, and aswell women as men, to the receyving of that wisedome which he sendeth into the worlde. And so must all the glory [of age] be throwne downe, and when old folke haue liued neuer so long, and haue neuer so muche experience, it behoueth the to know that yet for al that, it foloweth not that they must needes know the secrets of the kingdome of heauen. For that is in the hand of god, & men must not presume to know it by reason of long time. True it is that if God call vs in our childchoode, we ought to be confirmed more and more. But age is not the thing that bringeth that. It is the working of Gods grace, and everywhit of it proceedeth from him. Therefore we haue no cause to stande in our owne conceyte nor to brag, as if hee had any thing at our handes. Heerein wee see what the dotage of the Papistes is, who grounde all the foundation of their fayth vpon antiquitie, saying: See sirs, oure doctrine is not newe, it is not start vp yesterday, nor a yeare [or twaine] ago: but the worlde hath liued so long tyme and wee bee in possession of it. But what is that too the purpose afore God? For the case standeth vp-on the hauing of the euerlasting truth, whiche hath beene from before the making of the worlde. And so wee must go to God, and to our Lorde Iesus Christ, if wee will haue a sure resting stocke for our fayth to leane vnto. For the matter concerneth not a score of yeares, nor foure hundred, no nor a thousande: wee muste haue the euerlasting truth whiche hath beeene disclo-zed to vs from the making of the worlde. For if wee haue that, oure fayth shall bee well settled. But if that want, all is but vanitie, wee shall always bee in a mam-miring, there needeth but one little blaste of wynde; and beholde, oure fayth is quite blowne downe. Then let vs beare in minde, that antiquitie muste not beare suche sway with vs, but that yong folke maye vtterly refuse to bee ruled by suche as are their elders, specially if they go about to turne them from that which they haue learned concerning the onely one God, and hys truth. Lo what wee haue too marke. And heerewyth-all as for those that haue liued long time in this worlde, let them not glorie in theyr age, nor say that they ought 10. Pet. 2. 4. 2.

too take other folkes in a trip : but rather know that they are so much the more bound vnto God, sorgiuing them the meanes and occasions too bee settel and stayed : and furthermore lette them farther all their wisedome vpon God, so as all pryd be cast downe, that they imagine not themselves too haue gotten any knowledge eyther by length of tyme, or by finenesse of witte, or by their owne forecast, or by their great experiance, or by any thing els. How then ? Because it hath pleased God too powre out his spirite vpon vs, that wee might knowe howe greatly wee be beholden vnto him . And lette the yong men also on their side knowe, that if God haue giuen them any gifte of grace : it is because he will not leauem them destitute of his spirite, no more than the olde folke and such as haue liued a long time : but intendeth too shewe that in making vs all partakers of the selfesame grace of his spirite, he will also make vs all heyres of his heauenly kingdome and to come to his euerlasting glorie, which he hath now reuealed vnto vs alreadie in part.

Now let vs kneele downe in the presence of our good God with acknowledgement of our faultes, praying him to make vs so to feele them, as we may flee to him alone, as to the partie that is able to remedie all our harmes, and seeke him in such wise, as wee may bee hilde prisoners vnder his obedience, and not desire any thing but too sticke purely and simply to his woerde, renouncing what soeuer is of our owne nature, bicause there is nothing but corruption and fowardnesse in it, and also praying him to renew vs in such wise by his holie spirite, that by being like shapen too his image, wee may haue so much the better certentie and prooef that he taketh vs for his children, and wee also may yelde him thankes agayne as too our father . That it may please him to graunt this grace, not onely too vs, but also to all people, &c.

The. viij. Sermon, which is the second vpon the fifteenth Chapter.

This Sermon is yet still vpon th: viij. ix. and x. Verses, and then vpon that whiche followeth.

11. Seeme Gods comfortes a small thing vnto thee ? and is this straunge vnto thee ?
12. VVhy is thy heart rauished : and vvhy do thyne eyes makeligne, 13. That thou bucklest thy self against God, and vitterest the vvordes of thy mouth before him ?
14. VVhat is man that he should bee cleane ? or he that is borne of vvoiman, that he should bee righteous ?
15. Behold, he findeth no stedfastnesse in his Saincts, nother are the heauens cleane in his sight :
16. And hovv much more is man abhominalle and filthie, vvhodrinketh iniquitie as vvater ?

Ee sawe yesterday the reproch that was offered vnto Iob in respect of his age : and therewpon I sayde it was good reason, that yong folke should bee ruled by the counsell of their elders, and giue eare to such as haue had more experiance by reason of long vse : and also that forasmuch as God hath giuen old men the grace to liue long, they ought too consider that they are bound to teache others, and to shewe them the way : and yet for all that, that both yong & old ought to know, that there is no true wisedome but of God, who giueth it frō aboue, and that God dealeth forth the same in such wise as he thinketh good, and men must not imagine that he is bounde vnto them : for he hath promised too poure out his spirite vpon great and small as he liileth, to the end it may be knowne too be a free gift, and that the prayse of it ought to bee giuen too him alone. Now heere againe Eliphas vpbreydeth Iob, that he bath 50 not heard Gods secretes . This poyntheth at all men in generall. For it behoueth vs too vnderstande the rudenesse and weakenesse of our owne witte : and the true meane to do it, is to reuerence Gods secretes, knowing that they are incomprehensible, & to ligher for vs to atteyne vnto. For as long as men presume vpon their owne witte, and thinke to atteyne to the heighth of Gods secretes: it is certayne that they cannot be humbled, nor brought to any modestie. Yee see then that the poynth whereto we must come, is that wee must reuerence and honour Gods secretes, seeing we haue not the capacitie to comprehend them: in so much that we haue no more to do, but to acknowledge our owne infirmitie, and to crie out euery one with Dauid, Lorde howe high are thy determinacions, howe ought we to reuerence them ! Yee see then in effect what Eliphas ment in saying vnto Iob, that he had not heard the secretes of God . And this doctrine is as often repeted and as common in the holy Scripture as any can bee, bycause it is harde too abate the pryd which is naturally rooted in all men. For not only euery one of vs will take vpon him too bee wyser than his fellowe : but also wee cannot finde in our hartes too acknowledge our owne slendernesse, to humble our selues even when wee come before God . Therefore wee haue neede to be brought lowe, and too bee warned (as the Scripture doth it) that wee must not go about to comprehend the purpose of God. For that is to high and to profound a thing for vs. VVhat remayneth then ? To honour it, acknowledging our own rawnesse and weakenesse as I sayde afore . But by the way wee muste come to that which Sainct Paule sayeth in the first to the Corinthians : that is to wit, that our Sauiour hath giuen vs of his owne spirite , whereby wee know and comprehend that which is aboue all our capacietie. Then although we be not of cousell with God : yet hath he shewed vs the fauour and honour, to disclose vnto vs that which is vnknowne and hidden from vs. How is that ? There is none that knoweth what is in man, but the spirit which dwelleth in him sayeth S.Paule : and the spirit that dwelleth in God is giuen vnto vs . Thus ye see how we be made partakers of the things that are vterly separated from vs, and wherevnto wee cannot by any meanes approche. Marke heere a singular grace which wee ought too make greate account of : namely that our Lorde hath enlightened vs, even vs that were wretched blinde soules . And althoough wee comprehend not the things that are here bylowe : yet are wee lifted vp aboue the heauens, and that thing is reveled and knowne to vs, which the Angels wonder at. See ye not an inestimable honour ? howbeit, when Sainct Paule sayeth that this is done by Gods giuing of his spirite too vs, he excludeth not his woerde . For when God intendeth too disclose his secretes, he not onely sendeth vs inspirations, but also speaketh vnto vs. Neuerthelesse it is not without cause that Sainct Paule imputeth that thing too the spirite . For wee may well reade and heare : but wee shall not not profite a whit except God open our minde, that wee may vnderstande what hee telleth vs by woerde of mouth . Therefore wee muste match the Spirite and the woerde together : that is too say, wee must beleue that our Lorde hath layde foorth the treasures of his infinit wisedome vnto vs, in giuing vs his Lawe and in teaching vs his will by his Prophetes, but specially in his Gospell. And on our side let vs also consider, that his opening of our eyes is, to the intent that the things which are conteyned in the holy Scripture, shoulde not be as a strange language to vs, but to the intent we should acquaynt our selues therewith : for by our owne wit wee should neuer attayne to it. Now then wee see how men must humble themselues, knowing well that they be not of Gods counsell, and therefore ought to honour his secretes . And furthermore forasmuche as it hath pleased God to make vs priuie to his will : Let vs conceyue his meening according as he sheweth it vnto vs. But yet for all that, wee must not be ouerwise, for when God giueth vs his spirite to shewe vs the things that are hidden from vs and passe the reache of mans reason : it is not to the ende wee shoulde know all that is in him, for wee must holde our selues contented to know but in part as

1. Cor. 13. d. yet, as sayeth Sainct Paule. Therefore let vs beware wee

12. passe not our boundes, but onely let vs discretely seeke that which God would haue vs too know . And we shall finde that, in the holy Scripture : lette vs go no further. Furthermore although wee vnderstande not the tenth parte of the things that are in the holy Scripture : lette vs pray God too discouer dayly more and more , the things which are hidden from vs as yet : and therewithall let vs walke vnder his subiec<sup>t</sup>ion, that wee bee not rashe too runne too farre . For it behoueth euen the forwardest and perfectest men too vnderstand, that it is not for them as yet too know all the secretes of God : for that is reserued till the latter day . And surely it is not without cause, that Davuid (though he were so excellent a Prophet) crieth out, that Gods determinations are a wonderfull thing . Hereby he sheweth vs howe it is impossible for vs too atteyne to the perfection of such vnderstanding, vntill God haue bereft vs of this mortall flesh : and so lette vs assure our selues, that as long as wee be in this worlde, wee are but in the way . Thus yee see what wee haue too remember in this streyne . Nowe Eliphias addeth, Wecness thou that Gods comfortings are but a small thing? and is there any secrete in thee, or is it straunge to thee? For this woerde Secret betokeneth straunge . Eliphias meeneth heere too reprove Iob of prude and vnthankfulness : for he sayeth too him , Howe now ? It seemeth that thou despysest the consolations of God, and thou thinkest it straunge that he shoulde comfort thee. If any man were at that poynt, surely it were an ouer greate prude, yea and a despysing of Gods grace, whiche were not too bee borne withall . And why ? for wee ought to esteeme Gods comfortings aboue all things . If wee bee troubled, what shifte or what remedie is there for vs, except God bring vs backe againe into the right way ? So then lette vs marke well, that if wee bee combered with any perplexitie, and bee at our wittes ende in any matter, wee can not dispatch our selues of it, nother is there any other shifte for vs, than that God doo pacifie vs and content vs : and that is suche a meane as wee muste make great account of aboue all things . For when wee bee in the greatest trouble in the whole worlde, God can well inighten our wittes and bring vs too quietnesse . Then neede wee no more, but that God shoulde shewe himselfe, and wee bee ridde out of all trouble . If heauen and earth shoulde (as yee woulde say) bee confounded togither, so as there were nothing but confusion ouer all : yet if it please God too appeere vnto vs, he will sette all things in order agayne after suche a sorte, that the things whiche were as greatly intangled as could bee before, shall become cleere, so as wee shall see nething too trouble and vexe vs . Lo what cause wee haue too commende Gods comfortings. But this consisteth more in deede than in woerde. For they that flee too God for refuge, may well perceyue of howe greate force his comfortes bee, and what a strength they haue to appeaze vs . If wee haue but the least comberance of the worlde, beholde wee bee in vexation and distresse, according as wee knowe that menne are giuen too vnquietnesse, and as soone as they haue neuer so light an occasion of greef, it seemeth that they themselues kindle the fire too torment themselues withal to the vttermost. See (I pray you) in what state men are, so long as God leaueth them a sleepe. But whē we be in such troubles, then we perceyue dayly how God bringeth vs backe . Verely it seemeth to our selues, that we shal neuer scape out of some perplexitie, & therfore we are astonished at it, and say, Alas what shall become of mee. VVe be drowned so deepe, as wee thinke we shal neuer be able to get out of such cōfusion: and yet notwithstanding God setteth suche an order, as wee be vtterly abasshed, and our mindes are in quiet and appeased . VVhereof then commeth suche alteration, but bycause God woorketh so mightyly in our hertes, too the ende wee shoulde magnifie his comforts exceedingly . But what ? Although wee bee conuincyd by experiance, that none but onely God can comforte vs in our perplexities and anguish, and that when it pleaseth him so too do, wee haue well wherewithal to content our selues : yet notwithstanding wee forgette it in the turning of a hand, and if any grieve befall vs, there is none of vs all but he feedeth the humour by chafing vpon the brydle . There is no talke of repayring vnto God, too say, how now ? Behold, thy God hath shewed thee heretofore, howe it is he too whom thou muste repayre, and yet notwithstanding thou thinkest not of him . So much 40 the more then must we marke well this sentence : that is to wit, that when men make not account of Gods comfort, to be deliuered thereby frō anguish, perplexitie and trouble of minde : they be tootoo vnthankful: & besides their vnthankfulness, they haue also a shamefull pride, in that they perceyue not their owne necessitie, that they might seeke remedie for it. And their prude is expressed yet better in the woord Secret, when Eliphias sayeth, what secret is there in thee? as if he should say, wretched creature, feelest thou not thine owne frayltie ? But surely if men knew themselues as they be in deede: they should needes fall to agreement with God, and be inflamed with suche desire thereof, as they would neuer be at rest, vntill God had made them feele his grace. But what ? we be so blockish, as we weene our selues to be wise , whereas there is nothing but foolishnesse and vanitie in vs . VVe thinke our selues too haue the remedie of our miseries in our sleeues . If we happen to be combered with any trouble, we fal to sharpening of our wittes, and we muste needes be deuising of some shifte or other : as who would say, that 50 all that matter could be forged in our own shap. But yet for al that, mē are so ouerweening. And therfore it is sayd heere, what secret is there in thee? Then if wee perceyued how grosse, ignorāt, and doltish we be : surely we would not be such foples, as to surmisse that we haue wherewithal to deliuere our selues out of our anguish & trouble: but we would go streight wayes vnto God, being well assured, that he onely can set things at a stay, according as we perceiue in very deed, & as he himself sheweth wel ynough.

Thus much therefore concerning this sentence. But (according as I haue sayde alreadie) let vs put the same in vre. And forasmuch as our life is subiect to so many miseries, as it is impossible that a man should haue one minute of rest in himselfe, withoute carrying awaie and without forgetting of himselfe: let vs go to God that he may comfort vs, & let vs make account of the warnings that he giueth vs, as they deserue. And God comforteth vs diuerse wayes: for (as I haue sayd alreadie) he cleareth all the troubles, wherout of it seemed that we should neuer get out, and dispatcheth them in such wise, as we perceyue that he hath deliuered vs. Now let vs come to that which Eliphias addeth. He sayth, that Iobs hart is caried away, and that bee maketh a signe wyth his eyes to lyft vp him selfe agaynst God. Heere Eliphias reproacheth Iobs pride, howbeit wrongfully and without cause. But according to that which I haue sayde alreadie, although this matter be misapplyed to Iob himselfe: yet may we gather a profitable lesson of it, and suche a one as serueth all oure turnes. Therefore hee sayeth. How is thy hart rauished, 20. howe hath it surprised thee? For worde for worde it is thus: Howe, hath thy hart seazed thee? And how is it that thou maketh countenance with thine eyes to plead against God? to make a signe or countenance with the eye, is to bee so scornewfull, as to do nothing else but leere (as men say) and to turne away oure eares when men tell vs any thing. And we knowe that men do so, when they regard not the things that are spoken, but take them as superfluous matter, as if nothing could be alledged which were not knowne afore. To be short, we see that Eliphias ment 30 to condemne such a pride in Iob, as though he humbled not himselfe vnto God, to hearken what he sayde vnto him. Herewithall he sheweth that such pride is yll grounded, when he sayeth that Iobs hart is rauished. Then is it certaine, that this pride is alwayes one of the vices in men: and therfore inasmuch as our Lord seeth men stand so in their owne conceyt, and wex hard in their pride: he is sayne to shewe them that they bee but fooles, and vtterly witesse, in presuming so much of themselues, and in bearing themselues in hand that they haue whereof to 40 vaunt. For if we haue any appearance or likelihood of a bilitie, by and by ye shall see vs lifted vp so high, as there is no holde of vs, and we stie so farre till we bee readie to breake our neck. Our Lorde perceyuing vs so wholly giuen to be puffed vp with presumption, asketh vs, who are ye? VVhat haue ye? Open your shop, and let men see what is in it. But if men shoulde come too such triall it would soone be perceiued, that there was nothing but foolish weening in al that euer they imagined to be in them. Thus ye see what we haue to gather vpon this text, where 50 it is sayd, that if men open their mouths agaynst God, or pretende to vaunt themselues and humble not selues as becommeth them to do: the same proceeedeth of a fren tikenesse, and they be not well settled in their wittes. For had they never so little knowledge and discretion: it is certaine that they would be humbled, and not go aboue to withstande God after that sort, nor presume vpon any thing that is in themselues, considering that they haue not any thing but condemnation in them, and that they must be sayne to abide confounded in their owne shame. Behold heere an excellent sentence, if we haue the skill too appie it well to our owne instruction. VVhat is too bee done then? Let vs learne, to know our selues, and according to the old Prouerbe, we shalbe hibled by and by so as we shall not vaunt our selues. But what? men can not refreyne to start out of their boundes: and that is the cause why we runne so a head as we do, yea euен to the casting of our selues into suche ouerweening, as God is

fayne to fall vpon vs, as the enemie of the proude. And this will not be very hard for vs, if wee be not rauished nor caried away too stande vpon our selues. For what causeth men too bee so blinde when they haue any vertue, vprightnesse or wisedome in them? It is bycause they are prisoners to themselves: that is to say, bycause they bleare their owne eyes, and blinde themselves wilfully. For he that will not beguyle himselfe, but marke what God commaundeth him: shall finde ynochough there to humble himselfe withall. But wee will stoppe our owne eyes wilfully, wee will needes be deceyued wittingly. Nowe when men carie themselves away after that sorte, they must needes giue God the slip, and not regard any thing that he sheweth them, but rather make a mocke of all that is tolde them. But in the end all must fall out too their confusion. Now lette vs come too the principall poynt. For hitherto Eliphias hath vsed a Preface, to shewe that nothing hindered Iob too make his owne profite of the warnings that he had heard, but that he was puffed vp with pridy, and was vnthankefull vnto God. Now he addeth: VVhat is man that he shoulde be able too iustifie himselfe before God, or that he shoulde bee found pure and cleane? For God findest not stedfastnesse in his Sainctes, (that is to say in his Angelles) nother are the heauens cleane in his sight: and what shall become of stinking, abominable, and corrupt man, which drinketh iniquitie as water? Like as fishe is fedde with water, so are men soked in sinne and wickednesse: and shall they then take in hande too iustifie themselves before God? For firste and formeſt they had neede to be cleaner and purer than the Angels, and they had neede to surmount the brightness of the Sunne and the Starres, seeing that the heauens themselves are infected before God, if comparison should be made betweene them and him. This hath bene treated of in parte already heretofore. Howbeit, as it is not repeated here without cause: so haue wee neede to call too minde the things that haue bene sayde afore. For it is a notable lesson and such a one as cannot be minded too often. First it behoueth vs to know after what sorte the Angelles haue not stedfastnesse before God. Some haue expounded it of the Diuelles: but there is no reason in so doing. For what a thing were it too say, the Diuelles are not rightuous, and therefore muste not men take vpon them too bee so. VVe know that the Diuell is the Prince of all iniquitie and naughtinessse. But here is expresse mention made of the Angelles. And yee see howe that in this place they bee termed the Sainctes or holie ones of God, according also as the holy Scripture yeeldeth them the same title, and oftentimes calleth them the eleſt or chosen Angelles. But nowe lette vs consider after what sorte God findest 1. Tim. 5. d. 21. no stedfastnesse in them. It is not onely bycause they shoulde not haue the constancie too continue in goodnessse, vnlesse God preserued them by his power: but bycause that of a very truth, they haue not so found and exquisite a rightuousnesse, as that they might rest themselves vpon the same when it commeth too the poynt of presenting themselves afore God too render their account. That poynt (say I) shall not bee founde in the Angelles. And howe so? For wee see they haue none other desire but too obey God, nother are they subiect to euill lustes as wee bee, there is no temptation in them too thrust them out of the way. And when wee desire that Gods will should bee done in earth as it is in heauen, wee meene thereby that the obedience which the Angelles yeelde vnto God, is without impeachment, and not an vnperfect and feeble thing as ours is, who when wee desire to doo good, do go too it limpingly, and

and are not the tenth parte so giuen too the seruing of God as were requisite. How then do we understand that God finideth not stedfastnesse in his angels,that is to say, they be not able to answer before him ? I haue told you afore,that in iudging of vs god vseth the measure which he hath set downe in his law : that is to witre, that wee loue him with all our hart,with all our mind, and with al our strength. I hys ye see a meane righteousnesse wherewith God contenteth himselfe when the eace concerneth the iudging of Angels and men. But euen according to this righteousnesse we be faultie : for who is hee that can boaste of the yeelding vp of his whole affection vnto God and not to haue bin drawen away from it by some wicked lust? Alas,we be so farre off from atteyning to that poynt, as it is very much if we be in the way thitherward. Ye see then that all men are condemned before God,euen as in respect of this meane righteousnesse. And ye see also that when Sainte Paule alledgedeth this sentence, Cursed is hee that fulfileth not all the things that are conteined in the law: he saith it is a sentence that condemmeth vs all. But the Angels are acceptable too God in respect of this righteousnesse. And why? Because there is no blemish nor spotte in them, but all their desires are set wholly to the seruing and honoring of God, so as they giue themselves to nothing else. And so according to the righteousnesse of the law, God accepteth the as I said afore. But ther is another higher righteousness in God, which surmounteth all creatures , in somuch as no Angell is able to satisfie it. And no wonder at all : for what comparison is there betweene an infinite thing, and a thing that hath bounds ? Behold, although the Angels haue great glory in them: yet are they but creatures. And what is God? He is an infinite thing, insomuch that whē we think vpon him,we ought to be rauished into astonishment. So then let vs not thinke it strange, that Gods righteousness should be so high, that when all creatures come to that poynt, all that is to be found in them shall be nothing at all, but they shall deserue to be vterly wiped out. Therefore it is said heere, that God finideth no stedfastnesse in his Angels : that is to say, if he listed too vse the said extreame examination toward the Angels, they must needs vanish away, and all must needs bee cast downe and sunken. Howbeit forasmuch as God is contented to be honored and serued by them according to the rule that he hath giuen vs in his law : they stande before his face, and hee auoweth them for righteous, as they be in deede and tried so to be. But these be two diuerse things:namely that God hath a righteousnesse which he hath measured after our capacite:and yet commeth to such rigoure as to say, who is he that hath attained to it? Now then we see that if we come before god: there we shal be condemned and accursed. And so farre are we vnable to stand vpright , that the very Angels of Heauen are confounded there. And why? Because the very Heauens themselves are not cleane. For whereas God hath created the Sunne to give light to the worlde, and giuen some brightness too the starres also:it foloweth not therefore that they haue a diuine perfection. VVe must remember what hath bin said afore: namely that all the creatures that God made,do keepe still some marks of his grace. But if a man woulde compare that which is in the creatures,with that which is in God : he shall finde that the one is all, and the other is nothing. Thus ye see how the heauens are not cleane, that is to saye, that there is alwayes some imperfection in the creatures, so as they haue not the power to stand before god,as in respect of the infinite glory that is in him. And now it is said,that seeing the eace is such,what shall become of men? This is it that I haue touched alredye : namely that although God wold examine vs but after the meane righteousnesse which he hath set foorth in his lawe : yet we should all of vs be found gilty, and an vniversall damnation shold lie vpon all mankinde, vnder the which we lie ouerthrown.

To be short,behold how men are confuted two ways. For if we will come to God with our head vpright, and go about to iustify ourselues before him:our confusyon must needes appeere so much the more. For shall wee be rightouer than the Angels of Heauen ? But we see there is no creature that is able to hold out, when hee commeth before the creator. The Creator must needes swallow vp all with his glory, and make all things to vanish that seemed too bee aught woorth , yea and all that seemeth to be woorderfull:according as it is said , That the Sunne shall giue no more light, and the Moone shall be darkned. And why? Bycause the glory of God shall Esa.13.b.10 shine faire brighter.

The Prophet Esayes intent is to do vs to witte, that whensoeuer God spreadeth foorth his glory,all that euer is in creatures must vanish away,though it haue bin neuer so highly esteemed afore. If the Sunne(which is but a sensesse creature) do darken the light of the Starres all the day long, so that although they abide still in the skie, yet they are not seene while the Sunne shineth : what shall the maiestie of God do? Are the creatures able to approch neare vnto him ? If one creature excell another:what shall God himselfe do? Thus ye see howe we be confuted in one wise if we presume vpon oure owne righteousnesse, and come to God with a foolish ouerweening, thinking that God ought to bee bounde vnto vs, and that we were able to bring any woorthinesse vnto him. For though we were rightouer than the Angels of Heauen , and purer and cleaner than the very Heauens:yet were it nothing at all of that which we surmisse ourselues to haue. Marke this for one poynt. Howbeit let vs not go to the perfect righteousnesse, lette vs come but only to the meane righteousnesse which God hath set out vnto vs. Let vs looke no more but what may be in creatures,he requireth nothing but that we should loue him with all our hart,with all our mind, and with all our strength. And no man can say, but that this is more than reasonab'e:but yer for all that,do we it? VVherevnto do we give our minds? Are they set wholly vpō God? Are they so loozened from the earthly bandes , as they may lift themselues vp to heauen? Do we leade heere a spirituall life, forsaking ali things that may turne vs away from God: It were very meete we shoulde so If the matter stand but only vpon praying vnto God:(let vs take that for an example)the scripture sheweth vs,that when a man commeth to pray vnto God , he must retire into himselfe, and discharge his mind of all eaces,of all passions, and of all other like things that may hinder him , so as we must be vterly ouerthrown by feeling our owne wretchednesse , that wee maye seeke helpe at Goddes hande.

Lo how prayer is a thing of greater prerogatiue than all the rest of our life:and yet come we once to praying: we see our selues to be so fleshly , that we haue an eyre to many wicked fancies, whiche wee cannot quite and cleane leave. And although we haue some good mynde in praying : yet misse wee not too be drawn still diuers wayes. Seeing then that wee be so fugitiue in so holye a thing as prayer is: what will the rest of our whole life be? In deede every one of vs ought too perceiue it well ynoch: and it is a foule shame that we must be tolde these thinges, and that men know them not throughly of themselues. Sith the cace standeth so: Alas can wee be able to stand before God? shall we stand now vpon the iustifying of our owne righteousnesse? It is true that Job went about no suche thing, and that Eliphas did hym wrong and iniurie in accusing him of pride. But by the way we must profite our selues by this lesson, and consider aduisedly what is said heere of men. For they be not only charged with frailtie, (as the Papists them selues will easly confess) that we be weake, and therefore that there is no sufficiete righteousnesse in vs too satisfie God) but wee be led further heere, that is too witte, that men be altogether faped in sinne. For it is not demanded in this sentence, how men can iustify them selues, sith they be not able to fulfill the law, but are bewrapped in many imperfections, laden with so many infirmities, so inconstant and fleeting, and such other termes whiche might be spoken against men without comming too the very poynct: but it is said that men cannot iustify them selues, because, as they are abominable, and filthy, and drinke iniquitie as water: that is to say, their proper nurishment is sinne, and there is not somuch as one droppe of goodnesse to be found in them: and to be short, lyke as the body draweth his sustenance of meate and drinke: so also men haue none other stiffe in them but sinne: all is corrupted. Not that the very substance (as men terme it) of our bodies and of our soules is an euill thing: for we be Gods workmanship. But in this cace we speake grossely, to expresse that all that euer is in vs is atteyned with euill. Verely our bodies in their owne being, are the good creatures of God: and so likewise are our soules: but all that is in them is peruered. For wheras God created our soules good, they notwithstanding are infected with euill, and there is not one droppe of goodnesse in the which is not stained & vterly imbaced. Thus ye see in effect what is shewed vs here. The first of al, we haue to note, that there is great differēce betwixt weakness and corruption. For if it be saide that men are weake as the Papists prattle: the heathē mē haue said ful asmuch. And who is he that saithe not so? The Paynims haue said that mē are inconstant, that it is a very harde thing to followe vertue, and that we be inclined to vice. The Paynims (I say) knew al this welynough: and the Papists themselues will confess it at this day. But yet for all that, they know not of a very truth that there is not so much as one drop of goodnesse in mē, & that they be abominable before God, vntill he haue reclaymed the by his grace. Howbeit to the end that men should not presume vpon any thing that is in the selues: the holy Ghost calleth the here abominable, stinking, fylthy, & nougāt-woorthe. Behold also how it is said in the Psalme, God looked downe from Heauen to see if there were one righteous man, and hee founde not one. They are all gone oute of the waye, they are all become abominable and stinking. True it is, that in steade of stinking, some haue translated vnprofitable: but the very meaning of it is, that we be withered away, that there is nothing left in vs, but are as a thing that is vterly corrupted. And it is said expresly in the Psalme, that God knew men to be so. And why? Because men wold always be theyr owne judges. To what purpose is that? Forsooth wee wold haue God tied to our fancie, and bycause we think ourselues men of sufficient abilitie, we wold that God shoulde content him selfe with our opinion. But on the contrarie part it is said, that let men iustify themselues as they list, let every man cratch his fellowes itch, lette them sooth one another in their naughtinesse, and lette them play the drunken sortes: and yet shall not G O D leauē hys looking downe from Heauen. And what shall he synde heere: stinch and lothlinesse. VVē be lothsome to God, and yet in the meane while we thinke ourselues to haue maruellouse stiffe in vs. But what gaine wee by it? So then as oft as we be tempted to pride and statelinesse, too thinke wee haue any appearance of vertue in vs: lette it come too oure mynde to summon ourselues before God, and lette vs bethinke vs of thys dreadfull saying, that when God hāthe looked downe, and when he hathe examined men throughly, there is not one, no not euen one, but hee is infected and stinking before him, and lothly in his sight.

Thus then ye see how this sentence is to be vnder-stoode. And whereas it is said that we diuinke iniquitie as it were water: it serueth yet better to expresse, that all our whole life is giuen to euill: and that as a fish feedeth vpon the water, so men do nothing else but feede vpon sinne. Verely wee ought not too blame God for the euill that is in vs: for Adam was not created in the corruption which is spoken of heere, but he purchased it of hym selfe: for God founde all the things too bee good whiche hee had made. Man therefore who is the excellentest of all creatures, was not marred after that fashion, till hee had withdrawn himselfe from God. Gen.1.d.31. But when hee had once separated himselfe from the fountaine of righteousnesse, what could remaine vnto him but naughtinesse and corruption? Thus we see from whence all our naughtinesse proceedeth, and that wee oughte not too blame God for the vices whervnto we be subiect, and vnder which we be hild prisoners, according to the scripture, whiche sayeth that we be sold vnder Rom.6.c.16 sinne, & become the bondslaves of Satan. VVe must not 17.φ.7.. blame God for this, but we must learne to know that it 14. is the heritage which we haue frō our father Adam, and therfore we must take the whole blame to our selues before God. Lo in what wise we must vnderstand this corruptiō and bōdage of sinne that is spokē of heere: not to make it serue for an excuse, to say, alas what can we do withal, as we see those do whiche blasphemē God for (say they) seeing that men are so giuen to euill, what can they do with it? They haue not the power to withstande the temptations: and ought they not then to be acquitte? And if God condemne them therepon, is hee not too cruell? Ye shall see men blasphemē after that sort. And therefore let vs keepe our mouthes shut, assuring our selues that all the euill resteth in our selues, and that we be vterly sooked in wickednesse: and that if we will bee iustifyed before God, it behoueth vs to yeld our selues giltie of our owne accord. Otherwise, that which is said in the one and fyfteenth Psalme must euermore be accomplished: namely, that God shall alwayes bee founde righteouse in iudging. Though wee fall to checking against him, yet shall hee continuallayes righteouse, yea euen to our confusion. Are we then desirous too bee iustifyed before God? There is but one onely meane to do it, which is to come and confess, that there is nothing but horrible confusion in vs, and that wee haue not so much as one drop of goodnesse. And therefore lette vs desire God to receiue vs to his mercie, and too make vs righteouse for oure Lorde Iesus Christes sake. That is too saye, too wſhe away all cure fylthynesse with the bloud of hys Sonne, and too impute hys righteousnesse vnto vs: as, of a truth, when wee be clothed with his garmente, we shall be acceptable to our good God, because we shall haue a perfect and more than angelicaly righteousnesse in vs.

Now let vs fal downe in the presence of our good God with acknowledgement of our faults, praying him too reach vs his hand that we may not continue in trouble and

and shame:and that although we haue to walk through many temptations, yet we may not be destitute of hys ayde and succor:but that by his comforting and strengthening of vs, we may so get the victorie in all encounters,as we may haue cause to yeld him thankes:and that according to his working in vs,we may be stablished for the tyme to come , euen till wee haue obteyned the full victorie , and are come too the glorie of Heauen, where wee shall triumphhe with oure Lorde Iesu Christe. That it may please him too graunte this grace not onely too vs, but also to all people and Nations of the earth,&c.

The lix. Sermon, which is the third vpon the xv. Chapter.

17. I vvill tell thee, heare me: I haue seene, and I vvill declare vnto thee.
18. VVhat vvise men haue told, as they receiued it from their fathers, and haue not concealed it.
19. To vvhorne alone the land vvas giuen, and the straunger passed not through them.
20. The vvicked is alvvayes as it vvere in trauell of child, and the number of yeeres is hid from the outragous.
21. The noise of feare is in his eares: vvhen he is in peace, behold the destroyer shall come vpon him.
22. He beleeveth not to get out of darknesse: he shall see the syword.

Esterday we sawe in what plighe man is when he is out of Gods fauoure:that is to witte, that there is nothing but confusion and fylthyngesse in him:so farre is he off from being able to haue any righteousnesse that may stand before God. Now in the meane while wee haue too consider Gods great goodness towards vs in clothing vs with a righteousnesse that surmounteth the righteousness of Angels. VVe be as wretched and miserable sinners as can be, and yet notwithstanding God maketh vs righteous after a more excellent and precious manner than the very Angels are as in respect of their nature only(tor otherwise,they be partakers o: the glory of Iesus Christ, because he is the common head of al. for Christites righteousness is giuen vnto vs, whiche farre excelleth the righteousness of the Angels. And heerein wee haue cause to magnify the goodness of our God. But in the meane season let vs come too the matter that Eliphias purifieth heere. He treateth of a thing that is true in it selfe,if it were rightly applied:that is to witte, that the wicked never haue any rest,but are in such vnquietnesse,as they neede none other hangman to torment them than themselues. But heerevpon he concludeth amisse, that Job is a wicked man. For although he were astonished at his greeves:yet notwithstanding(as hath bin said already) he ceassed not to trust still in God. The doctrine therefore(as I said)is good and holy:but the same must be applied accordingly. And for this cause I told you that in reading the holy scripture,we must alwayes pray God to giue vs the skill and discretion to perceiue to what ende he tendeth, and what his drift is , that wee may fare the better by that which shall be shewed vs: for we shall go continually backward if God drie vs not forward. But to the end we may take the more profite by that whiche is conteyned heere:let vs follow the proesle of Eliphassis words.*Hear me (saith he) and I will tell thee what I haue seene.*He speaketh of his owne experience:and afterward he addeth, that the same doctrine wasreceiued and hild after the same maner among the wise men too whome God had giuen the grace not only to be able to rule wel themselues, but also to haue the gouernement of realmes and countries:and he addeth, that they bld them peaceably without any passing of straunger through them: that is too say, without any mans usurping of that which God had put into their hands. Vereyly whensoeuer God indueth men with excellent gifts, we must not despise the same, but consider that the spirite of God dwelleth in them, and that if we be so skornefull as to refuse that whiche they tell vs, the iniurie thereof redoundeth not to a mortall wight, but to the living God. For thereafter as God vttereth his gracious gifts, so wil he haue vs also to receive them to our common profit. Eliphas therefore hath some good colore and pretence to alledge the authoritie of luch as had ruled realmes and countiess : but yet is not that ynoch, except we knowe that it is God which speaketh. And for performance thereof, ought we to trust to the authoritie of men? True it is that God comandeth vs to be teachable, and not too be stubborne-harted and hard to yeld obedience when we know that the thing which is told vs is true. And so ye see how the authoritie of men ought to be received. But if they fall to turning of the truth vpside downe, and to conuerting of it into falsehood, there is no reason why men shoulde be wedded vnto them. Thereforie wee must beare this poynt well in remembrance. For we see there are two vngacious extremities The one is when men reiect all knowledge and wisedome. For if there be any men among vs, whome God hath aduaunced aboue others, and vnto whome he hath dealt greater abundance of his holy spirit:it is certaine (as I said afore) that in despising them,wrong is offered vnto God. Neuerthelesse, we see many stubborne folke, which will not by any meanes submit themselues to the counsell or aduise of any man. There is also another extremitie , whiche is, that being possessed with a foreconceiuied opinion that a man is skilfull, of great witte , and well experienced, wee bee so sotted therewith, as we looke no whit further. But we must not suffer ourselves to be led so : for God doth alwayes reserue his owne right to himselfe. And what is that? Vereyly that we shuld be subiect to him alone,speciafly in caces of salvation. True it is that there are ordinances and ciuill polices of me,wherto we must be obedient, but yet is al that referred vnto him, & depedeth vpon him. In the meane season ye see heere a resolute poynt, which is that God wil have vs to be taught at his hand. For when we yeld such authoritie vnto me, what do we else but rob God of his authoritie & preheminēce? This extremitie therfore is to be contēned as well as the other. The meane betwixt these two vices is, that when we see that God hath bestowed of his gracious gifts vpon any man,we must haue him in estimatiō, take counsell willingly at his hand, and vnderstand that in despising hym we do wrong vnto God , because it is his will that wee should honor such. Is it so? Yet notwithstanding let vs not ceasse

ceasse to discerne, least we be beguiled vnder the shadow of some opinion that we shall haue conceiued of some mortall man, and thereby bee turned out of the righte way, and God also disfeated of his preheminence by the same. Thus much concerning this poynt. Now Eliphias addeth, that these men haue not concealed the things that they had learned of their forefathers. VVherein hee sheweth, that they had behaued them selues faithfully. For whensoever God giueth vs the grace to be wel taught: he doth it not for our selues only, but to the intent that others also should be drawen to the same knowledge, and that we should all of vs be partakers togither of the thing that hath bin giuen vs. And heere ye see that Gods instructing of vs first, is to the end that when we see our neighbours ignorant, we should indeuer to leade them with vs into the same way wherinto we our selues are entre already. He that knoweth Gods truth, must not keepe it close to himselfe, as though it were but for him alone. VVhat then? He is bound to his neighbours. And therefore if hee see them go astray, let him reach them hys hand, let him call them to him, and let him shew them what he knoweth. For wee neede not bee afraid that it shall be any prejudice or hinderance to vs, though all men be made partakers of that which God hath giuen first of all vnto vs. If a man haue but small store of worldly goodes: surely if he deale them foorth vnto others, he shall soone see the end of them. But when God hath enlightened vs with his word, and also giuen vs his spirite: the more wee laboure too giue vnto others, the more shall we be enriched ourselues. Thus ye see a sentence 30 which we ought to marke well when Eliphias sayth, that those to whome God had giuen singular gifts aboue others, had not concealed the thing that they had learned of their aunceters. And heere also ye see the marke that God gaue vnto his seruant Abraham, to shewe that hee wold use well and faithfully the couenant which he had receiued. Abraham (sayth hee) will indeuer to teache hys household and those that are to come after him: hee will shewe them the ordinances and Statutes of the Lorde.

Then let vs marke well, that when God openeth our eyes, and is so graciosa to vs as to teach vs his truth: it is not to the end that euery man should keepe it to himselfe, and other men haue no part nor portion of it: but we must (as much as in vs lieth) draw all the world to it. Now then seeing we be bound to all men in generall, yea euen vnto those of whome God hath not giuen vs the charge: what ought a houholder to do towards his seruantes and children? VVhat ought a minister of Gods worde too do, who is specially appointed to that office? 50 VVhat ought a magistrate to do, seing the sword is giue vnto him, and he sitteth in Gods seate? Then let vs marke well that although we haue nother wife, childe nor seruants: yet notwithstanding if God haue bestowed any gift vpon vs, we be bound to distribute it abrode, and to make it common to all men to their edification. Marke this for one poynt. Much more reason is it, that if a man haue a houholder, he ought to be so much the watchfuller and carefuller to instruct and teache those whome God hath committed to him, and of whome he shall render an account. Such as are ordeyned to be Shepherds to feede Gods people, must employ all their strength and power therevpon, nother must they openly or particularly conceale that which they haue received: according wherevnto Sainte Paule sheweth that he is cleere from blud: that is to say, he is not faultie before God, for hee had taught them Gods truthe faithfully without ceasing, as well at home in their houses as openly abrode.

Also let the magistrate for his parte looke to himselfe, and let him not through negligence quench the lighte that God hath put into him. But to the vttermoit of his power let him indeuer that justice may reigne and haue her full course, that God may be honored and hys truth receiued, and that leasings and all things that are contrarie to true religion may be done away. Lo what we haue to remember in this steyne. Now whereas Eliphias saith, that God had giuen them the land and no stranger had passed through it: it is to expresse that they had receiued an excellent prerogatiue from aboue. For it is certaine, that if a man be able to mainteine the gouernement that is put into his hand, it is a token that God favoureth him, and it becommeth him too acknowledge that benefite: For there is no policie of man able too do that throughly. Also whereas Eliphias saith, that those of whome hee speakest, had reigned peaceably, and that God had blissted them in such wise as they were not troubled, but had so guided their subiects as their dominion conteyned in quietnesse: thereby wee be done too vnderstand, that when God mainteyneth states, and a countrie is in peace, we must not fater it vpon mortall men, but acknowledge it to bee the speciall benefyte of God. And our acknowledging of it must not be only in honoring the men by whome God serued his turne in doing it, but also in yelding God his due praise.

Now let vs come to the chiese article that wee haue touched. Eliphias saith that the wicked man is alwayes as it were traveling with child, that he never bath any rest, that he is in continual torment, that hee looketh euer at the sworde, and that he knoweth not the number of his dayes. And oure Lord vseth the same threate against the transgressors of Leuit.26.f. his law: namely that he will send them such a fearefulnesse, Deut.28.g. that their life shall hang afore them by a thread, 65. that their eyes shall be sunken in their head, and that they shall be in such anguish of mind, that in the morning they shall say, who will warrant me my life vntill night? and when night is come, how may I endure till tomorrow?

Lo how God punisheth such as walke not purely according to his law. And in good faith what purenesse is there in our life? If we desire to be at rest, and not too be tossed with any cares, it behoueth vs to know that we be in Gods protection, and we must be fullie resolute of it: and then it is certaine that we may passe through fire and water: that is to say, hap what hap will, we shall be sure of a good and stedfast leaningstocke. But if wee know not that God watcheth ouer vs, or at leastwise if wee thinke he is against vs: wee must needs be afraide and not know where to become. Therefore it is not without cause that God vseth the said manace against the transgressors of his law. And so is Eliphassis saying very true, that the wicked is alwayes fearefull according also as the Prophet Esay likeneth the thoughts of wicked folkes too waues that beate one against another. Esa.57.d.20 VVhen any tempest is, yee see the water stirreth, and the waues come rushing one against another, and breake asunder. Euen so is it with a man that is not ayded by G O D. It is not any one passion that shall carrie hym away and torment hym, but there shall bee manye contraries, and hee shall bee in suche a peck of troubles with it, that hee shall bee vtterly at hys wittes ende. And so when it is tolde vs that the wicked manne is in suche vnpacience: Lette vs assure oure selues that it is Gods rightfull vengeance vpon all those that haue not soughte too bee at peace wyth hym. And howe maye wee haue peace with with God? By walking in a good and pure conscience: and specially by knowing that we haue none other foudacion to stand vpon, saue only his mercie, in that wee be in his fauoure for our Lord Iesus Christes sake: and that therwith we call vpon him, assuring our selues to be happie both in life and death, bycause it pleaseth him to be present with vs, and to receiue vs and gather vs vp to himselfe. Marke (I say) how the way for men too haue peace with God, is to assure themselves that their sinnes are forgivien, and to pray vnto him: and therewithall to walke in his obedience, so as they indeuer to haue a good and pure conscience towards their neighbours. And this peace is ioyned with a ioy, which Sainte Paule termeth the ioy of the holy Ghost, which is when we be strengthened by faith. Saint Paule saith that this ioy is ghostly, and he vseth that terme purposely, bycause the wicked do sometimes reioyce: that is to say, they friske and laugh and are merrie when all things go well with them, and they forget themselves after such a sort, as they feele not their owne miserie, but become dull. Yea but this peace wherewith God filleth them, shall be nothing at all too their profite. And what manner of peace is it? It is not for that they draw neere vnto God: but rather they turne their tayles vpon him. But the true peace which is happie and blissted of God, is when wee haue an eye vnto him, and come to him, & therupon are in quiet, assuring our selues that he receiueth, reckeneth and auoweth vs to be his so as he will not giue vs vp, but guide vs always both in life and death. Thus ye see what we haue to remember in this sentence. Howbeit it is true that euer among the faithfull are insuche troubles, as a man can hardly discerne betweene them and the despisers of God: but yet in the end God setteth them at rest. For by handling them after that manner, he maketh them too knowe their owne weakenesse, that they may humble themselves, and learne to call vpon him, and put themselves wholly into his hand, and trust altogether too his goodnessse.

Moreover, sometimes he pricketh and spurreth vs, too make vs come to him the more earnestly, and to beseach him to reach vs his hand, and to shew that he hath a care of vs, and that whensoever we be tossed after that sorte, we neede no more but to vnload our cares into his lappe, and to rest our selues there in all caces, and there to take all our contention and comfort. Ye see then that the faithfull may well be striken with feare and trembling: but yet will God make them to feele what that peace is which he is wont to giue to those that are his. And although the same appere not at the first brunt: yet in the end they shall alwayes be comforted: according as it is said in the Psalme, Lorde thou hast comforted me after the sorrowes of my mind. For God may well hold vs short sometimes: but he will set vs at libertie in the end. And heere ye see how that which Eliphias addeth ought to be expounded: namely that the extorcioners, even the person that is full of violence shall not know the number of his yeeres. The faithfull are at that poynt as well as they. Furthermore, we haire what request Dauid maketh. Shewe me at leastwise (saith hee) what my time is, that I maye take my afflictions in good woorth, when I perceiue that they shall not last for euer. We haue seene the lyke request made by Job himselfe, saying that he knew not what the length of his time was, nor how long God was minded to hold him heere. Why then doth Eliphias referre it specially to the despisers of God, and to such as are full of pride and outrage? It is bycause they be full of care and thought for their life: & yet in the meane while wote not how to account it. And we for our part knowe that we haue no certayne terme heere, howbeit that we shall continue heere so long as it pleaseth God to mainteine vs. Seeing we be come into the worlde, and it is God that hath set vs heere: we must giue him leaue to hold vs heere, or to take vs away at his pleasure. In the meane season we haire how he telleth vs by his worde, that he guideth vs altogether, that the heares of our heads are numbered, that wee neede not too be afraid of any thing though we were beset with neuer so many daungers, and that we ought not to surmisse that thinges are mingled togither in this world, or that fortune beareth any fway. For although wee be but fillie wormes of the earth: yet doth God thinke vpon vs, and he hath our life in his hand, and will keepe it well and safely. Ought it not to suffise vs when we know this protection of God? Seeing (I say) that we be assured that God keepeth a reckening of our yeeres and dayes, yea and that he numbereth the very heares of our heads: do we not perceiue a sufficient certaintie? And so it is not without cause that Eliphias saith, that the extorcioners know not the number of their dayes. And why? for they seeke it with as great anguish as may be, saying: How now: May we liue yet still? Are we sure of this or that? But when they haue made their long disputations, and great discourses: they always turne backe to a continuall vnquietnesse, bycause they rest not themselves vpon Gods prouidence. But we for our part must not do so: but we must pray vnto him, that after we haue put our liues into his hand, we may be quiet, whatsoeuer troubles befall vs: knowing that for somuch as he hath made vs and fashioned vs, he is able to delyuer vs from all daungers whensoeuer he listeth to shew himselfe our deliuener: and therupon we must conclude, that he will watch ouer vs when we be asleepe. As much is to be thought of that which Eliphias addeth: namely, that the outrageouse man doth alwayes behold the sworde, that is to say, he doth see the infinite daungers that hem him in round about, by reason whereof he quaketh and is agast. This agreeth properly vnto Tyrantes. True it is that their state may well seeme to bee happie. Howbeit they be so troubled in their mindes, that they perceiue it to be better for them to haue bin of small and base degee, than to bee so honoured and feared: and yet in the meane while they themselves are afraide, not onely of men, but also of every leafe that shaketh vpon a tree. Verely ther was a Tirant that confessed as much. For when one flattered him and said he was a prince of such maiestie as it mi<sup>c</sup>ht seeme that he was a God in the world, and that euery man might desire to be in his state: If thou (saith he) wart in the like case that I am, and knewest as much as I, thou wouldest not wish to chaunge thy state for mine. Heerepon he caused a goodly banquet to bee made redy, and setting this his familiar friend in his own place, caused a naked sworde to be hanged ouer his head with t.l.e poynt downward.

VVhen he saw the daunger that he was in, he could nother eate nor drinke: and as for all the braueries that he had esteemed so highly afore, he made no more account of the. And this is it that Eliphias meeneth: namely that Tyrantes and cruell folke shall alwayes liue in feare, notwithstanding that they seeme too bee well at ease, and haue great power and gardes. And why? For they haue the sworde continually before their eyes. Some man will demaund, whither the faithfull shall not seele the daungers that threaten them. Yes certainly: yea and it is good for vs to seele them. For if we wist we were wairanted, we wold not care to runne vnder the wings of our God, but we would play the colts that were broken looce.

God therefore is fayne too warne vs and put vs in minde that we be besiegged with a thousand deathes, and that we bee not able to step foorth one pace withoute tumbling into our graue. VVhen we confidet this, and therwithall see plagues, warres, famin, such store of myseries, such store of diseases, and so many other inconueniences both by beasts and by other thinges, so that looke how many creatures we see in heauen and earth, we see as many deathes or at least wise as many thynges against vs: then we bethinke vs, Alas wee be very wretched creatures if God pitie vs not. Moreouer we be prouoked to runne vnto him, and to say : Lorde thou seest that if thou sheeld me not with thy hand, I haue not one minute of an houre to liue, and therefore good Lorde voutsafe to preserue me. See how the faithfull beholde the sword : howbeit iu beholding it, they behold also the grace of God: and when they be made priuie to the dangers wherein they are, they flee to the said suretie which is shewed vs so often in the scripture: which is, that if we put our whole truist in God, hee will not only be a wall and dubble rampire to vs (as it is said in the Prophet Esay:) but also a wall of brasse or steele: and at a word , he will be an invincible fortresse to vs. Lo how the faithful hauing behild the sword, do neverthelesse behold Gods protection, being well assyred that although death seeme to manace them on all sides, yet shall not the sword come at them : and if it do come, yet shall they not fall headlong as men say. But the wicked shal for their share haue this fearefulnessse, that the beholding of the sword shall sinke into their stomacks, and make them say , beholde, 30 such a daunger or such a mischance will light vpon me : is there no meanes to shift it off? On the other side they shall see God pursuing them, with his darts ready to rush vpon them, and with his bow bent, that is to witte, with his thunderbolts to strike them downe. No maruell then though they be greatly out of quiet, & in great distresse. And so we see the difference that is betwixt the feeling of daungers by the children of God, and the troubles and fearefulnessse of the vnbeleeuers. True it is that sometimes the faithfull shall see the sword, and be afraide of it: but their feare bringeth them to that which I touched afore : that is to witte, God putteth them in minde too humble them selues, and afterward draweth them home to himselfe, and giueth them the rest whereof they were destitute for a time to their profite. And thus ye see what we haue to remember in this sentece of Eliphassis. And whē we once haue the knowledge of these things: thē we may well applie the doctrine to our i. nstructiō & soule-health. As how ? For first of all we see what the state of mā is. Ye see heere a lively picture, wherin our Lord sheweth vs, that while we be in this world, we must be put in feare and not alwayes haue rest, but sometimes bee disquieted . Very well, yet for all that, every man goeth astray, every man shrinkes away from God, and the mischiefe increaseth and groweth dubble , and therefore it behoueth the terrors to increase also and too become much more terrible, that they may daunt vs. VVhy so ? VVe haue made warre against God, and it is good reason that he should do as much to vs, yea and that al creatures should be armed against vs. This done, Forasmuch as we see the disease : we must come to the remedie of it, which is to acknowledge that our God wil not forsake vs, and that he tarrieth not till we come to seeke him, but preuenteth vs of his goodnessse, and sheweth vs that if we call vpon him, we may well put our life into his hands, and he will be a good and faithfull keeper of it. VVhen we know this once, then shall we see, that God doth vs much more good in mayntaining vs, and in taking vpon him the charge and office of preseruing vs, thā if he exempted vs from all daungers. Put the case that men were in this worlde as in an earthly Paradise , so as nothing might trouble them. They should not bee so happie, as when in the middes of many afflictions and troubles they find that God commeth downe , that is to say, abaseth himselfe so low as to thinke vpon them, & to watch for the preuenting of inconueniences , and for the beating backe of all daungers that might befall them , and putteth himselfe betweene them and their harmes, too the intent they should not be ouermated and troubled out of measure. Furthermore let vs vnderstand, that if God do no v and then leau vs and withdrawe himselfe from vs , and hide himselfe in such wise as we perceiue not his succoure, nor can be assured of his protec̄tiō: we must not be dismaide for all that , but pray him to voutsafe to shew vs his countenance that wee may see it for our more assurance , according as wee see howe Dauid speaketh: Lord(saith he) make thy countenance to shine Psal.4.b.7. vpon vs, and it will be much better for vs than if we had abundance of all kind of goodes. VVhen Dauid sawe himselfe at such an afterdeale, & it seemed that God had giuen Satan and the wicked men bridle , yea and that he was troubled also in his mind so as there came no more helpe to him from aboue: Lord(saith he) I desire no more but that thou make thy countenance to shine vpon vs : that is to say, that thou giue me but some little tast of thy goodnessse, to know that thou hast receiuied me. Thus ye see how it behoueth vs to desire God too put away the grosse and thicke cloudes that hinder vs to perceiue the loue that he beareth towards vs. Furthermore when we see the wicked in such trouble and vnquietnesse, let the same be a bridle vnto vs. For we must profit ourselues by Gods vengeance when we see them a farre off vpon the wicked. VVe must not tarle till God bende himselfe against vs, & till he rap vs hard vpō the pates. No no: but if he spare vs, & in the meane while wee see he punisheth thole that haue despised him, and shakē off his yoke: Let the same serue to hold vs in awe and warinessse, so as we may say, Alas, we see heere these wretched caytifes that haue aduaunced ourselues in pride and presumptuousnes against god: & what paimēt haue they? we see they neede no hangmā to torment them. VVhy, who is he that tormenteth thē? It is god that persecuteth them after that sort. Thē let this wake vs and hold vs backe, that we cast not ourselues out of our bounds. Besides this, let vs also be so much the more giuen to the seeking of this peace which is an inestimable benefite & treasure: & let vs hūt after it so much the more busily , calling to remembrance what S.Paul saith. The peace of god(saith he)which passeth al vnderstāding of mā, keep your harts & minds: that is to say, whē we be once sure of this protection of God that we can resort vnto him, not doubting but that hee receiueth vs as his owne children: he saith that that manner of peace surmounteth all vnderstāding of mā. VVhereby he doth vs to witte, that we comprehend it not, except God giue it vs by his holy spirit, as in very deede he must be faine to worke in vs , to make vs come too that poynt. And by the way we haue to marke, how that for a conclusion it is said that the noise of feare shall alwayes be found in the eares of the wicked and of the despisers of God, and that when they be in most quiet, the extorcioner shall fall vpon them. Heere Eliphas speaketh two things: The one is, that whē the wicked are in their prospēritie, sodaine destruciō shal fall vpō thē like a storme 3. &. that they perceived not, insomuch as it is said of thē, that Pro.10.d. when they say peace, all is sure : and when they oueruaunt thēsclues against God laughing al his threatnungs to skorne:

to skorne: euen then will it come to passe that God shall ouerthrow them, when they mistruste it least. True it is that the scripture must needs be fulfilled, which is that the wicked shall feele the thing that he is afraid of. But contrariwise also God will send them that which they feared not, to roote them suddainly out of the land. Ye see then howe Eliphassis meening is, that euen in the middes of peace, pilling and polling shall light vpon the despisers of God. But the cheefest thing is the said souđ of fearefulness which shall alwayes afright them and hold them as it were vpon the racke. And what kind of thing is that sound: It is not the voice of man nor of beast: but a deaf sound, which God sendeth them euen when al things are at rest, when there is no noise at al to trouble them. For yet neuerthelesse must this pursue them, insomuch that they shall start and tremble at it, according as we see in the example of Caiue. Behold Caine had no rest, and yet who pursued him? God had appointed no iudge to arreigne him, nother had he any body to stand against him. Verely the bloud of Abel cried out for vengeance. But as for men, he was sure ynough, he triumphed, he built a Citie after the name of his eldest sonne, euery man stoođe in awe of him, and yet in the meane while he quaked like the leafe of a tree. And wheroft came that? Euen of the secret voice, of the voice that was not herd with the eare, but yet was the same a dreadfull noise, in somuch as although the wicked know not what it is that God sheweth them, yet notwithstanding they cease not to be continually agast. Now when we heare this, let vs pray God to make vs heire also the sweete and amiable voyce, whereby he sendeth vs tidings of his faterly goodnesse & loue. Thus ye see that the only remedy wherby we maye bee deliuere of the sayd scareful-nesse and astonishe me nte wherewith the wicked are disnaide, is for vs to beseech God to make vs heare the voice of the Gospell, where he telleth vs that he receyueth vs louingly, that he is our father, that he accepteth vs as righteous for our Lord Iesus Christ's sake, and that both in life and in death he will alwayes hold vs in hys hand. VVhen this voice soundeth in our eares, so as we vnderstand it throughly, we shall not be dismayed at these deafe and blind skarings, as the vnbeleeuers are: but we shall be surely fenced against all the dismayings that can bethide vs. Therefore if we haue our recourse vnto God, and he by his holy spirit gie vs the grace to rest vpon his promises: let vs not doubt but he wil stablish vs more and more in all the good things that he shall haue giuen vs, and so strengthen vs by his power, that in all the terrours of this world we shall euermore stand stedfast, vntill he haue taken vs into his eternall rest.

Now let vs cast our selues downe in the presence of our good God with acknowledgement of our faultes, 20 praying him to make vs feele them to our disliking of them, and that in the meane time we may not ceasse to trust, that like as hee receiueth wretched sinners vnto mercie, which is the thing wherein he vttereth the richnesse of his gracie goodnesse: so also it may please him to make vs partakers thereof: and that therewithall it may please him also to continue that which he hathe begonne in vs, vntill he haue brought vs to the full and whole perfection. And so let vs all say. Almighty God our Heauenly Father, wee acknowledge and confess according too the truthe, that wee bee not worthye to lifte vp our eyes to Heauen, too presente oure selues before thee, nor to presume so farre as that our prayers should be. &c.

The lx. Sermon, which is the fourth vpon the xv. Chapter.

23. Hevwill trotte vp and dovvne for breade, knovving that the tyme of darkenesse is in his hande.
24. Anguish amazeth him and ouercommeth him, as a king that is prepared to battell.
25. Bycause he hath lift vp his hande aganste God, and strengthened himselfe aganste the Al- mightie.
26. Hevwill leape vpon his necke, and crush the strongest part of his shield, 27. He hath couered his face vwith fat, and fatted his bovells.
28. He hath inhabited the desert cities, and the ruinous houses that vvere falne dovvne.
29. He shall not aduaunce himselfe, his riches shall not continue, nother shall there be any remainder of them.

Esterday I shewed you to how many miseries and daungers our life is subiect, in somuch that we must alwaies needes tremble for feare, if we seek not our rest in god, knowing that hee hath care of vs and wil maintaine vs. If this were not, we should neuer be in quiet. Moreouer when we vout-safe not to heare the message of peace which God prepareth and sendeth vs, we must be skared by men. And it is a iust punishment for the vnthankfulness of al such as receiveu not so great a benefite, for it is impossible that God should beare it. Behold how God sheweth vs, that first he is willing to forgiue vs our sinnes, and that al-though we deserue to be ouerwhelmed at his hand: yet he desireth nothing but to be at one with vs by his mercie. He addeth that he taketh vs into his protection, and will be the keeper of our life. Are we not worthy to be deliuere vnto Satan, if we refuse this honoure and priuiledge? And not only to be vexed by men, but also to quake and be afraid though no man pursue vs. Then let vs learne to rest our selues vpon God and to sticke too the promises that he hath giuen vs, to the end we maye walke safely and quietly heere beneath in the middes of daungers.

60 And now Eliphas addeth, that the wicked man shall trotte vp and downe for bread, knowing that the day of darkenesse is in his hande. Some lay foorth this sentence as if hee saide, that God wil impouerish the wicked howe greate riches so euer they haue, so as they must bee fayne too beg. True it is that that curse is conteyned in Deut.28.d.33. the lawe, and we heare also how it is sayd in the Psalme, Psal.53.d.19. that the righteous is neuer forsaken, nor his seede Psal.37.d.19. begge their bread, but God nurishest those that are e.24.

his, in the time of dearth. If God prouide in such wise for his faithfull ones as to succoure them at their neede: wee muste not thinke it straunge that on the contrarie part he plucketh his benefites out of the wicked mens hands, bycause they be sotted on them, and make idols of them, certenly we see that therich folke of this world become hungerstaruen, notwithstanding that they despise both God and men, and beare the selues in hand that all is for them. And this causeth God now and then to spoyle them and strip them in such wise, as they are scene to go a begging, notwithstanding that they had such abundance erewhile, as they were redy to burst. But in this place Eliphias ment to say more. For he not only speaketh of the neede wherevnto they be brought which despise God but he meeneth also that euen in the mids of their riches they shall still be ful of care, and no whit better than poore folke, but shall thinke with them selfes: Go to, it may be that I shal want, as we see by experiece. For although God give the vnbeleuers all that euer they can wish, so as they haue their garners and cellars full, and money wherewith to buy both corne and wine, yea and although they haue prouision made for them: yet are they afraid that the earth shuld faine them. True it is, that sometime when all other men are lyke to sterue for hunger, it seemeth to themselves that they haue great store: according as we see how our Lord Iesus Christ sheweth in the example of the rich man, which saith, Go to my hearte, be merrie, take thine ease, thou maist sport thee at thy pleasure, for I haue store of goods laid vp for thee heere. The rich men therefore may well trust in their goods, and yet for all that they may be stiill in doubt and not ceasse to think, I may hap to fall into such an inconuenience, and such a thing may lig at vpon me. To be short, (as I haue touched alredy) they be vnfaſtiable gulſes: for although they had all the whole world yet wold it not ſufſice them. Thus ye perceiue what Eliphias ment in saying that the wicked ſhould runne vp and downe for bread, as we ſee it. Looke vpō a very rich man: if there happen him any little losſe, he will make a fisking, and he will not reſt: till he haue compassed that which he hath taken in hand, hee muſt pine and martir himselfe out of measure. And if he bring his matters to paſſe, he muſt raife yet a newe ſtocke of money too get more withall, and he dares not eate one bit wi houē cark and care: or at leaſtwiſe if hee eate but haife his fill him ſe fe, he repineth at thoſe that wil eate. And why? He is r̄uer well at eaſe, till hee haue pinched as much as will ſurue to compaſſe the thing that he goeth about. Is it not a trotting vp and downe for bread, when a man that hath wherwith to find haife a ſhire, thinks himſelfe too haue nothing bycause he is not able to ſtaunche his owne deſire: But God puniſheth him after that manner by a contrarie vengeance. Therefore when we ſee this, we ought to understand right well, (if we be not worse than blind) that God executeth a notable vengeance vpon ſuch me, and a vengeance worthy to be remembered. For can a man haue pleaſure in neuer beeing at roſt? If a man ſhoule grudge vs of our meat and drinke, it wold ſeeme vnto vs that he went about to starue vs, and wee woulde blame them of crueltie which ſhould do ſo. And if a man bee not his owne friende too do good too him ſelue, but thiſkes he hath not haife ynough, although hee haue a hundred times more than he hath neede of, is it not apparent that God hath blinded him? And yet notwithstanding this vice hath reigned in all times. Therefore it is not without cauſe that Eliphias doth heere ſet vs down a iudgemente of God in ſaying, that the wicked ſhall trotte vp and downe after bread. And he addeth, that they know that the day of darkenesſe is in their handes. Some expound this to be meant that the day of darkenesſe is at hand, or else that trouble is at their elbow: that is to ſay, that God will pay them ſuch wages as they haue deserued. For whereof commeth it that they be ſo formeygred in the middes of their abundance which God hath giuen them, and that when he hath fraughted them with his benefites, yet notwithstanding they dare nother eate nor drinke? VVhereof commeth this? They be punished for their crueltie, rauenousnesſe, and deceites that they haue uſed towards their neighbours. Ye neede not ſeeke farre for the cauſe wherfore they be punished after that manner. For looke howe they haue troubled poore folkes, and raked other mens goodes too them, and taughte too them ſelues whatſoever they coulde fin ger: ſo muſt GOD bee fayne too recompence them agayne.

Thus yee ſee the darkenesſe that is in their handes: That is to ſay, all the miseries that they indure, proceede of their executing of tirannie againſt poore folks, for that they ſpared them not. But the plaine meaning of theſe woordes, namely (that they know that the day of darkenesſe is in their handes,) is that whatſoever they do or what paynes ſo euer they take, althoough they be rich and mightie, yet can they not wind them ſelues out of the affliction that God ſendeth vpon them. It is certaine that ali that euer the couetous ſorte do, is to prouide thit they may neuer want. But were they wel aduised, they wold be contented with that which they haue: but they can not away with that. And why? For (as I haue ſaid alreade) God ſo blindeth them, that they become ſo dull, as they cannot perceiue that the goodes which they haue, ought to ſuſſice them. Heerevpon they practise all that euer they may, they triall meanes to bring their matters about, and when one way will not ſerue, they ſeeke another way to the wood. The couetous ſort therefore haue not their hands idle, but take vpon them to remoue the whole worlde, rather than too be diſappoyned of theyr purpoſes. Dayly they bee making of new ſhiftes (as they tearme them) and yet in the meane while they ſee that darkenesſe is in their handes: that is to ſay, when they haue done what they can to prouide for them ſelues, when they haue uſed all meanes poſſible, yet can they not ſhift their hands from beeing in continuall miserie: for God hath bereft them of that benefyte, according as it is ſaid in the Psalme, that God will giue reſt to his weſbeloued, (whereas in the meane while the wretched vnbeleuers, Psal.127.4.2 ſhall riſe early and go late to bed, and not dare eate their bread but with ſorrowe, and yet notwithstanding ſhall further themſelues no whit thereby,) ſo as they may eaſily perceiue, that God hath bliſſed them, and increased the worke of their hands.

VVe ſee then contrariwise, that which is ſet downe heere: namely that the wicked ſhall haue much adoo to further their labours. And why? For their handes are againſt God: that is to ſaye, all their laboure is miſliked, and ſpite of theyr teeth they muſt bee fayne to knowe, that affliction is layde vpon them therein, and that they cannot rid their hands of it.

Then haue we heere a very notable ſentence: that is to witte, that the abundance of goodes is not able to ſuſſice vs, and that wee cannot make oure accounte too bee at oure eaſe, bycause wee haue ſtocke of corne, wine and money. And why? For the materre is not too bee founde there: but the perfectiōn of all happinesse, is Gods gyuynge of reſt to his faſthfull ones. Then let vs leарne not to gyue our ſelues to this outragious couetousnesſe, wherewith we ſee the moſte part of the worlde world caught and caryed away. But after we haue betake our selues vntoo God, let vs pray him too make vs feele that he is our fosterfather, and let vs receiue whatsoeuer he giueth vs, crauing our ordinarie foode at his hād without attempting of vnlaful meanes, and absteyning from robberie, violence, deceytle and such other like things, & desiring to be nourished as it shal please him to shewe vs fauour. Thus ye see what we haue too marke in the first place. And furthermore let vs pray him, so to blisse the labour of our hands, as wee may perceyue that the things <sup>10</sup> are not inclosed therin: but rather to make his countenance shyne vpon vs, that is to say to make vs find his fauour and goodnesse by giuing vs good successe. For whē men that labour do get their liuing honestly, they haue wherof to thank God: & therby they perceiue that God hath enlightened them, and that his fauour is as a cresset to guyde them. Therfore we haue cause too pray to God for it. Furthermore if wee now and then recoyle backe insted of going forward, let vs lerne this counsel of God to refort vntoo him, and pray him that he suffer vs not to be of the cōpanie of those that see so much dark-nesse in their liandes, but rather that when he hath giuen vs any meane, he will make it to prosper in such wise, as we may knowe that he is neare at hand to vs. Thus you see in effect what we haue to remember in this sentēce: <sup>20</sup> now Eliphias addeth, that for as much as he liftēd vp his hand against God, and strengthened him self against the Almighie, God will take him by the necke and catch hold of him, be strongest and thickest of his armour. Here the reason is redred why our Lord sendeth fearfulnesse vpon the wicked, & why he tormenteth them, and also disappointeth them of all their attempts, and turneth all things cleane contrarie to their intent: namely bycause they liftēd vp themselfes <sup>30</sup> against him. True it is that a mortall man will be ashamed to think of making warre against God: and the wicked themselfes are so farre off frō being acknowleden that they be minded to lift vp themselfes against the almighty that they abhorre the verie woord: but yet for all that they ceasse not to do it. For proof hereof we need not to send a trūetter to God to desie him, when we mynd to make warre against him: for if we trouble our neyghbour wrōgfully, if we use deceytle and extortion: behold, God setteth him self against vs. If we thought we made warre against him, and not against mortall creatures, would wee be so mad as to ouershoote our selues in such sorte as we doo?

If we considered with our selues, that God sheweth him self to be an enimie of the outrageouse, would we then lift vp our selues after this fashyon against him? And whē we fal to outrage, I pray you is it not a full encountering against God? VVe take it not to be so: but yet is it so ne-uerthelesse. VVhat should there neede any Sophistrie in this behalf? As I sayd afore, when we speake of making warre against God, it is not men: that we chalendge him by an herault with a trumpet: but if we be so proud as to presume vpō our owne strength and power, to take more vpon vs than God giueth vs leauē to doo: it is certayne that we come to rush against God. As much do we when we disquiet poore folk, and go about to set our foote vpō the throte of them. Therfore whē we fall to aduauncing of our selues in this wise aboue our bounds: it is all one <sup>50</sup> as if we defied God to his face. And so this sentēce is woorthie of remembrance, where Eliphias sayeth: that God will leape in the neckes of those that aduance them-selfes after that sort against him. He sayeth expressely that they liftēd vp their hands against God. Verely this similitude is taken of those that fight in battell, neuerthelesse the meening of it extendeth yet further. For Eli-phassis meening is, that when men take that vpon them which is not laufull for them, by vsing any outrage or iniurie: God will take part with their neyghbours against them. True it is that when they cannot compasse their matters by that meanes, they go too it with some deceytle and priuie packing: and the although the world perceiue not, yet doth not God ceasse to be their crūtie, for nourishing of their wicked affections secretly within them.

How beeit they shall be so much the more vnexcusable when their iniquitie sheweth it self abrode. He therefore that polleth a man of his goodes, shall be hild for a mur-therer before God, yea euen though the wrong that he doeth may be excused before men. And so Eliphias ment to shewe here, that men ought not too think it straunge though God take such vēgeance of the wicked that haue not cloked their wrongfull doings, but haue made them knowne to the whole worlde. And in good fayth, when they shall haue runue in and out after that sort, whē they shall haue eaten vp one, and fleeced another, and when they shall haue executed many extortions and cruelties, is it not hygh tyme that God shuld step afore them then or never? For it is not for nought that he reporteth him self too bee the defender of the poore that are vexed wrōgfully. No, it is apparent: yea and oftentimes we cry out vnto God for vengeance. And wherfore doo poore folk indure such things? It seemeth too them that God leaueth them in the briars, and is not willing to do them any right. But in such temptations it behoueth vs to resort to that which the holie scripture sayth: namely that it is not yet conuenient tyme. He knoweth why he ma-keth delay, and it were for nothing else but to giue tyme of repentance to those that doo euill, too make them the more vnexcusable, and also too stire vp the poore folk that are oppressed to calvpon him, and to flee vnto him, and to betake themselfes wholly to his prouidence, assuring themselfes that he will ayd and succour them whē he seeth it meete and expedient for their welfare. Howbeit when we see God woork in deede after he hath ta-ried a long tyme, ought we not to opē our eyes to behold his iudgements? Should we still be dazed at them? And <sup>40</sup> afterward he addeth, that they had strengthened themselves against the Almighie. When he sayeth that they strengthened themselfes, he meeneth that they hardened them-selfes. For how is it possible that men should gather strength to lift vp themselfes against God? May it be by going about sea and land, and by assembling all the help that is possible to be found? No. Howthen do they strē-ngthen themselfes? By a false imagination, when they haue such an ouerweening of themselfes, as they think them-selfes able to withstand God. Nor that they are directly of that mynd, but bycause they forget that God is able to do them harme. For were it not so, they would not be so stubborne in euill as they be, nother would they be so wilfull when men shew them their faults, and labour to reclyme them. Therfore the pride & stubbornesse that is to be seene in men, is a sure record, that they take them-selfes to be strong and mightie ynough too beate backe the hand of God whē it commeth against them. Lo how this saying that they strengthened themselfes, to be vnderstoode, Not of the verie deed doing, for that is impossible: but through due iish ouerweening, bycause they shake off al feare, and beare themselfes in hand that they shoud not indure him any more to be their iudge: and to be short that they ought not to owe God so much dutie as to come account before him: and therwithall they become the bolder to giue themselfes ouer to all naughti-nesse, as though it were laufull to do what they iſt. And Eliphias giueth the title of almighty vnto God purposely according to the circumſtāce of the place. Not that God can at any tyme be ouercome:but Eliphas intended here to skorne the pridefulness of the wicked in strengthe[n]ing themselues after that maner against God. And who is he? what meene you? He is the Almighty: yea and what shall become of your strength? If ye had to encounter with creatures, it would stand ye in hand too knowe which of them is strongest: But sith you make warre with God: must ye not needes be ouerthrowne ere yee come to hand stroks? There is no strength but of him: yea and whereas yee haue borowed it of him, will yee come too turne it against him? Thinke ye that hee will suffer the strength which he hath giuen you, to diminish anie whit of his maiestie? Must it not needes serue him to confound you withall? Yee see then for what cause Eliphas hath expresa set downe here the woord Almyghtie, in reproching men for strengthening themselues against God. But we haue yet one other good and profitable lesson to gather hereof: which is that if we wil not haue warre with God, we must be well ware that we absteyne from all euill dooing and from all wrong, and we must liue among our neyghbours without woorking them any annoyanc or iniurye. For assoone as wee doo but stire one finger to poll other men of their goodes, or to trouble one and to devoure another: behold God is as it were chaledged by vs to make warre with vs, because wee haue gone about euill towardes them whom hee hath taken into his tuicion. VVe see that when earthly princes haue giuen their protection too any howse, if a man do them any wrong, it is not simple felonie, but hygh treason, whereof they will be auenged. And doo wee imagin that God will bee lesse priuileged than princes? He hath set his badge vpon all poore folk, by taking them into his owne charge and protection. Now if any man come to torment them and afflent them, will he suffer it? Then (as I sayd) let vs lerne too brydle our selues, too the end that wee vse no outrage against our neyghbours. And furthermore also let vs keepe ourselues from this frenzie that is spoken of heere. For wee bee not well in our witts if wee take our selues too bee myghtie and strong against God. Therfore let vs aduisedly walke in modeftie, and acknowledging the frayltie of our nature, let vs humble our selues, and let the same serue to hold vs within our bounds, and knowing that thing which God permitteth vs too knowe, let vs bee contented too walk playnly on our way without running ouer the feeldes like stray cattell: for what else is that but too strengthen our selues against God? when we presume to doo that which God hath forbidden vs, shall wee esteeme it to bee but a single disobedience? Is it not more than a diuelish furiousnesse? So then let vs vncease our selues out of all prude and presumption, and simply followe that which God sheweth vs. And if wee be tempted now and then with the sayd vayne fancies, let vs marke well this woord Almyghtie too brydle vs with all, saying: How now? wretched creature, what wilt thou doo? wherevpon muzelst thou? for thou strenge[n]est thy self in thyne euill: and behold God tellethe thee that he will lift vp himself against thee, and thou must be fayne too feele him thy soe and mortall enimie. Therefore restreyne thy self, except thou intend too feele his myghtie hand which is able to destroy thee quite and too make cleane riddance of thee. Mark (I say) what wee haue too note in this sentenc. And furthermore let vs herken how Eliphas addeth, that God will eaze the wicked folkes by the necks, and that if they bee never so well armed, so as they haue bothe helmet and sheeld, God will seaze vpon them through the thickest of their furniture. VVhereas hee sayeth that God will seaze the wicked by the necke: it is too shewe that they shall bee caught in such wise as they cannot by any meanes escape. For it is sayd that a man is hild by the necke, when he is shet vp in extremitie and distresse. God therefore sheweth that he will deale after the same fashyon with wicked folk, and that he will not handle them with stroks of cudgells, nor only giue the a blowe or twaine, but seaze vpon their necks to choke them. And good reason it is that it should be so. For wee see how crueli they haue ben too their neyghbours, and that they haue hild their foote vpon their throats as much as they could. God therfore must not vse gentle corrections towards them: but his assayling of the must be with extremitie to their confuzion. And forasmuch as the wicked do trust in their armour and artillerie because they be well furnished: and forasmuch as they will needs barre God from comming at them: it is sayd purposely, that he will rip them through the thickest of their armour, and that all their resistance and fortifying of them selues against God, shal not boote them a whit against his force. They shall haue bothe corslet & sheeld, and yet for all that, God will compasse his intent. VVhereby we be warned to walk continually in feare: for wee ought to be afraide of Gods punishments according as the Heb.10.f.31 holie scripture sayeth, that it is a dreadfull thing too fall into the hands of the liuing God. Let vs not surmyze that wee haue to do with a mortall man. Assoone then as Prou.16.6.

God threateneth, let vs fall flat downe, and not be so hardharted as too swell against God. The wrath of a king (sayeth Salomon) is the messenger of death: and what will the wrath of God himselfe bee? when God sendeth vs woord of his displeasure, see wee not how death is present at our backs? Therefore let vs not misbehave our selues for all the help that we can haue at the hands of men or of al other creatures: let vs not think our selues to be euer the neerer our purpose when wee imagin our cage to bee well prouided for. For if wee were to fight against creatures, it myght auayle vs: but forasmuch as our warre is with God, can we serue our turns against him, with that which he hath in his hand, and with that which he disposeth at his pleasure? VVhen we shall purpose to marche on the one side, he will make vs turne head another way if he thinke good. Yee see then how wee haue too consider, that if wee arme our selues against God, our owne sword must cut our throte. For God will not send an armie against vs, nother needeth he to make any provision wherewith too destroy vs: for we our selues shall woork our owne decay. Therefore (as I sayd) let vs not trust to our owne fence nor to all the meanes that are here bylowe, assuring our selues that all those things shall nothing profit vs when wee haue too do with God. Again, if wee see the wicked aduaunced, so as their necks swell (as the Ps.73.4.6.
7. threescoreandthirtenth the Psalme speaketh of them) info much as it seemeth that they should burst with their puffed necks: let vs neverthelesse wayt alwayes paciently till God lay his hand vpon them. For he knoweth well how to daunt them, so as all theyr swelling shall vanish away intoo the ayre. If wee see the wicked to haue so greate furniture, as (to our seeming) they be sure and no euill can befall them: let vs not think that all that can be any let vnto God that he should not ouerthrowe them and destroy them when their time commeth. Then must we not be afraide when we see the wicked florish and in their cheef Ruffe, or rather to be so well vphild and vnderpropped, as it seemeth that they bee not too bee delt withall. God, God (I say) must be fayne to strike the stroke. And when hee putteth foorth his hand, they may may well seeke help and succour at the hands of creatures, but yet shall they be cast downe and vtterly destroyed. Lo how the faythfull haue wherwith to comfort themselues when they see wicked men rage in despizing of God and infected with all rebelliousnesse, or rather vtterly hardened, in such sort as it is impossible to make them bow, that they myght knowe that in the end God wil performe that which he hath sayd and spokē. For that which hath ben spokē by Eliphias, is as a sentence vttered by the holie Ghoste, euē for the two cōsidērations that I haue spokē of, that is to wit, that the faythal myght hold theselues in all modestie and lowlinesse, and not attempt any thing against God: and that when they see the wicked haue their full scope in the world, & theselues borne downe with many wrongs, they should cast vp their sighes vnto God, desiring him to performe that which he hath once spoken: according also as it is good that they call vpon him, and haue their only refuge vnto him. And consequently it is sayd, that distresse shall light vpon the wicked, and come vpon him as a king prepared to battell, or rather as it were wynd about him. For the word that Eliphias vteth here, signifieth a ball, or a bowle, or any round thing. For we knowe, that when it commeth to giuing of battell, sometymes men cast themselues in a ring according as the case requyreh: and so was doone in old tyme. Therefore this sentence may bee expounded, that distresse shall be as a king in a redinesse [to giue battell]: and that whensoeuer God shall send affliction vpon the wicked, it shall not be like an enimie that hath no power nor strength: but like a king that hath soldiers ynow to giue his enimie the ouerthrowe. Or else a man may referre the sayd Roundnesse to the wicked, which shall bee inuironed on all sides, that is too say, which shall haue no way to scape. For if God seaze vpon him, it shall not bee too beseege him on the one side or on the other, but before and behynde, on the ryght hand and on the left, and he shall bee so inclosed on all sides, as there shall be no startinghole for him. And this is the most conuenient interpretation. Then let vs mark well how Eliphassis meening is, that when God is mynded too punish a man, after long taryance and long sparing of him, his shewing of himself too be angris not too be pacified by and by: but he will come about him on all sides, so as he may never scape his handes. Thus ye see what the effect of this sentence is. But herevpon we haue yet one good lesson more to gather. For wee bee put in mynd that it is not for vs too dallye with God, for somuchas if we be ouerpessed with his hand, we may well woork all the wyles wee can, but we shall never be able too scape out of the distresse wherwith it shall be his pleasure too pinche vs, nor from the aduersitie wherevntoo we shal be subiect, but wee must be fayne to tarie in it spite of our teethe. And why? For God hath a woorderfull furniture. He is not like mortall men, which spitte out their choller at their mouth when their handes bee to short, I meene euen kings and princes themselues: who can storne well ynough, but their strength fayleth them at their neede. But it is not so with God: he hath alwayes furniture ynough too compasse his enimies withall. VVhat remayneth then? Let vs beware that we make no warre against him. And for performance thereof, let vs forbear all injurie and euildoing. For if we play the looce Colts, we shall find at length that God hath meanes ynow too reyne vs backe by force, if wee list not too submit our selues vnto him of our owne good will. But immediatly it is sayd, that for somuchas be bath fatted his eyes, forasmuchas his face strouteth with greace, forasmuchas be bath stuffed his bellye, and forasmuchas he hath ouer larded his gattes and inhabited the desolate townes and forsaken houses: he shall come to decay, and not prosper.

Verely to the intent this sentence may bee the better vnderstoode, wee must lay it foorth after this manner. Although the wicked man dwell in desert Townes, yet crammeth he his belly and his bodie, bearing himselfe in hande that he shall make all the worlde newe again, and that his dooings are woorderfull: But yet shall all go too decay: and althoughe hee make a faire shewe for a tyme, yet shall hee not continue, but God shall turne all vp syde downe.

Howbeeit, as yet we comprehend not Eliphassis meening, except we knowe first what it is too ful a mannes face with greace or fatte. God doeth not here condemne the fatnesse that is in mennes bodies: but now and then he vteth that similitude, whē he intēdeth to expresse that men are puffed vp with prydē when they be in prosperitie, bycause it is the thing that maketh vs forget our owne infirmitie. Lo why our Lord sayeth, that fatnesse blindeth vs. And in verie deede it is a common prouerb among vs [to say that prouander pricketh men] Also when the Hebrewes intend to speake of a lowely man, they vse to say he is cast downe. For our Lord tameth vs in such wise by afflictions, as we lerne to humble ourselues before him and to rid our selues quite and cleane of all prydē and pertnesse. So then, like as in all the rest of the holie scripture, so also in this sentence, when it is sayd that the wicked are fatted, it is not ment simply that they bee fatte of their bodyes: but that they take such a prydē in their goodes and riches, that they be as it were puffed vp against God, and full of poyson and presumptuousnesse. And although they be but leane of bodie: yet are they redie to burst with another cursed fatnesse forasmuchas they be puffed vp against God. Yea and we see that their fatnesse (that is to wit, their diuelish malapertnesse) maketh their eyes too strout out of their heads, as it is sayd in the threescoreandthirteenth Psalme that their eyes are as good as halfe bursten, by reason that they bleare themselues in their delyghts and pleasures, and consider not that they may bee bereft of them all in one minute of an hour. Marke (I say) howe fatnesse blindeth the wicked, and how they are as good as bursten to their owne shame and destruction.

Psa.73.b.7.
But now let vs come too another sentence. Eliphias sayeth that the wicked shall not prosper. And what is the reason? It is bycause he is puffed vp with fatnesse. VVil we then be blisfed of God, and be maynteyned in good state and true happiness? Let vs keepe vs well from pampering our selues with fatnesse: that is too say, let vs keepe vs from being pampered with prydē, that wee presume not to make our selues this or that: but let vs walk in all mildnesse, knowing that we depend vpon the hand of God, and that when he hath lifted vs vp, hee can also soone cast vs downe again. Therefore let vs be moued so much the more too serue and honour him, and let vs not bee so vngracious as too giue him occasion too ouerthrowe that which he hath builded, and too destroy it quite bycause wee would make another Towre of Babylon, and presume to lift vp our selues against him. Euen so happeneth it (sayeth Eliphias) Although the wicked haue inhabited the desert Cities, that is to say, although they haue had such scope, as it might seeme they would make the worlde newe againe, for too inhabite deserte Townes is as muche as not too be contented with the possession of things that are in good plught, but too fyght against God, that they myght be new makers of the worlde and setters vp of things that were were destroyed. The wicked then may well haue all this outward shewe, but there shal be no cōtinuance, bycause they aduance themselues against God. But on the contrarie part, when we be vndoone and stripped stark naked, then wil God shewe vs the fauour to build vp again the things that are forsaken, cōditionally that we go not about it with vayne prude, nor presume any thing vpon ourselues, but desire him to reache vs his strong hand, & so to guide and governe vs alwayes by his holie spirit, that when he hath once begonne to shewe his gracie 10 fauour towards vs, he will continue the same and bring it to perfection.

Now let vs fall downe in the presence of our good God with acknowledgement of our faults, praying him to make vs feele the in such wise, as we may lerne to mis-like more and more of our selues, and that forasmuch as we be so much giuen to prude and vayne presumption: it may please him to open our eyes, that when we perceiue our owne feblenesse and infirmitie, we may run wholly vnto him, and in calling vpon him acknowledge that we haue no power to strengthen our selues, furtherforthe than it pleaseth him to quicken vs that are in death, and as it were to rayse vs vp again to lyfe, and moreouer, that he will maynteyne vs in his fauour, and make vs so too feele it bothe in bodie & soule, as we may desire nothing but to yeeld our selues wholly to his seruice, and that by our example we may allure others to like humilitie, so as he may be honored and glorified both of greate and small. That for the dooing hereof it may please him too rayse vp true and faythfull, &c,

The lxij. Sermon, which is the fifth vpon the xv. Chapter.

30. He shall not depart out of darknesse, the flame shall sindge his braunches, and he shall go awav vvith the breath of his mouthe
31. He shall be deceiued vvith vanitie, and shall not stand: For vanitie is his chaunge.
32. He shall be consumed before his time, and his braunches shall not florish.
33. He shall be bereft of his sounenesse, as a vine is, and God shall cast him off as an Olif tree doth his flouvres.
34. The congregatiōn of the hypocrites shall bee desolate, and fire shall deuour the house of Brybes.
35. For he conceyuethe mischeef and bringeth foorth vanitie, his belly prepareth deceyt.

Eſa. 59. b. 9. Yesterday we sawe how the despizers of God aduaunced themselues in such wise as it may seeme there are none but they, and that God giueth them greate aduantage, favoring them, in such wise, as they not only mainteyne themselfes in their state, but do as it were make a new world: and yet notwithstanding that their end cannot bee but cursed and shamefull. And this is it that Eliphias addeth a new saying, that the wicked shall not depart out of darknesse. And herein he discerneth the children of God and the afflictions that they indure, from those whom God hath vtterly reiected. For it may come to passe that wee shall be in darknesse as we see the holie Prophete complaineth that God hath withdrawen his light from them, so as they grope about, and knowe not which way too turne them: neuerthelesse God giueth them an end of it after they haue languished for a tyme, & reacheth them his hand and draweth them out of it. But it is sayd of the wicked, that they shall neuer get out of darknesse, but shall abyde ouerthrown in it without end. And hereby (as I sayd) they be discerned from those whom God affliceth but for a tyme, and whom he meeneth too succour. It is sayd that God will deuoure their braunches: that is to say, how greatly souer they be aduaunced, God will consume the. For in this place I take not their braunches for their children and offspring, but for their whole state. And surely vnder that terme is comprehended all that euer springeth out of a tree: too do vs to vnderstand that when God shall haue punished the wicked, they may wel conceyue many hopes, and beare themselfes in hand that they shall spring againe but theyr hope is a slope sayeth Eliphias. VVhyso? Fire shall consume al: that is to say, Gods wrath shal be as a fire to burne them vp, and when they are likely to releeue againe, it shall not be so: Finally he addeth, that the wicked shal go away with the breath of his mouth. True it is that this may wel be verified of God. For the Scripture sayeth oftentimes that God will consume the wicked with the only breth of his mouth, to shewe what power he hath to punish the wicked and his enimies. God the needeth not to arme himself, nōther needeth he to make any preparation to punish those whom he listeth: let him but only open his mouth, and breathe vpon his enimies, & behold they be ouerthrown and destroyed. For like as Gods word quickeneth vs, when it pleaseth him to inlighten vs with his grace, (as wherin consisteth all our welfare) and like as, though we were as good as dead before, yet we be releued again as soone as God sheweth vs his fauour: so contrariwise whē he vttereth his wrath against the wicked, he needeth no more but the opening of his mouth too drowne the in destruction. And this same also is the cause why S.Paule sayeth that when Antichristie hath reigned in the churche, at the last he shal be consumed with the breth of Gods mouth according to that which I haue alledged out of the prophet Eſay, who termeth it the mace wherwith God is woont to breake & to daunt al his enimies, when he listeth to haue his sonne reigne. This sentence therfore is vnderstood of some, that the wicked ca neuer get out of their afflictions, nor neuer shal be deliuered out of the darknesse wherinto they are entred, because God pursueth them, or hath his mouth open too consume them, and his word is of such power, as it shall make them to perish vnhappily. Howbeit the true and fit meening of it is that the wicked man shall go away with the breath of his owne mouthe: that is to say, as a puffe. 60 Verely some also do vnderstand it thus: namely that the wicked may well gnash their teethe & chafe in themselues, but yet God will not cease to destroy them, according as we see how the vnbeleeuers are full of pride, and that if God touche them and lay his hand vpon the, they play the Bulls and fome at the mouth like wylde Bores. VVe see then that they haue a greate breathe in chafing and fretting: but what win they by that? Can all their sturdiness and resistance against God be able to saue them?

No.

Eſa. 11. 4.

2. Theſſ. 2. b.

No. And so shall it be a verie true and conuenient lesson that howsoeuer the wicked doo striue against God and how full of pride and bitternes so euer they be, yet shal they notwithstanding escape Gods hand nor saue themselues by that shift. Notwithstanding, we must come to the sense that I speake of, because it is most agreeable: namely that the wicked shall go away as it were in their breth, so as they neede no more but to open their mouth, and by-and-by they vanish away. To be short, Eliphias met to say, that when the wicked make greatest shewe of themselves before men, and it seemeth that they shall continue without end: then shal be their chaunge: insomuch that they shal no sooner breathe but they shal be fordone, so as they shall be but as a breath that commeth out of a mannes mouth. Now we know that when a man puffeth out his breth, it vanisheth away sodeinly and becometh nothing. Therefore let vs marke well, that although the despizers of God seeme to haue a lasting life: yet shall it soone vanish away, so as it is not without cause that they be likened to their breth. True it is that the same thing is verified of all men. For what are we? what firmenesse is there in our nature? wherin consisteth our life? True it is that our soules are created after the image of God: but yet for all that, mannes life is as a blast, and if we breathe not we be vndoone, with the yeelding vp of one gasp we be dead. And so this fraytie wherof Eliphias speaketh here, is not only in the despizers of God, but in all men. Furthermore wee haue wherewith to comfort vs, in that God preserueth vs: and although our life be so fleeting, that it is but a shadowe or a smoke: yet notwithstanding we be sure ynough of it seeing it is in the hand of God. Thus ye see wherin our whole comfort lyeth. And therefore let vs assure our selues of bothe twayne: that is to wit, that by nature we bee nothing, and may perish euery minute: and yet notwithstanding, that God of his infinite goodnesse putteth a difference betweene vs and his enemies. For when they haue cast out their forme: they must perish at a blast: but although we languish so as we be not like too liue past the giuing of one gaspe more, yet nevertheless God will strengthen vs with his power, yea even with a secret power which shal beare no shewe at all to the worldward, and yet we shall bee so maynteyned by him that we shall bee still aliyue whyle the wicked go to be wasted away. Lo what we haue too beare away in this sentence. Now consequently it is sayd, that the wicked being deceyued in vanitie, shall not stand out, because that vanitie shall bee his chaunge. True it is that this sentence is vnderstoode diuersly: for the woord which we translate too stand out, is taken also too Believe. And so some expound it that the wicked man being in vanitie will not believe that vanitie shall bee his chaunge. Again, there is a double vnderstanding in another word: so that whereas wee reade vanitie, there is the woord Rigb:nesse or Certaintie: as if it were sayd, that the wicked man belieueth it not too be true. VVhy so? Because that vanitie is his chaunge. Nevertheless the most receyued and commonest construction is this: namely that he which is so deceyued in vanitie shall not stand out or continue, or will not believe that vanitie is his chaunge. As touching the woord Believe, (if we followe that construction) wee may picke out a good lesson out of it: which is that when God bereeueth men of their wit and discretion, they can neuer receyue any good warning or profitable counsell. VVhy so? For they are stubborne. Then doo yee see a punishment of God which we must marke well and bee afrayd of it: which is, that except God make vs conformable, wee shall neuer discerne what is good and profitable. Besides this

although we haue men about vs that gue vs good counsell, and seekes to profit vs, and shewe vs what is good for vs: yet notwithstanding wee shall bee so foward, that all that euer is sayd too vs shall take no place. And this we see dayly. For when God bereeueth men of their vnderstanding: too shewe his vengeance the more vpon them, and to make them the more vnexcusable, he will gue men leauie to speake still too them, and too counsell and incorage them still to goodnesse: but they shall continue still a sleepe at it. For if a man aske them whether they will willingly perish or no, they will answer, no. But if a man put them in mynd of their salvation, or if a man shewe them and point them the way too it: they had leuer breake their necke and tumble into a dicke that is redye before them, than too walke in the way that they are called vntoo. VVee see this: And therefore so much the more must wee marke well such iudgements of God, that wee may walk warely. For is it a small thing too tempt our God in such wise as he must be fayne too picke out our eyes, so as wee may not knowe on which side too turne vs, and although hee reache vs his hand and shewe vs which way is good for vs to go, yet we go quite contrarie?

Behold a horrible vengeance. And yet we see dayly that such as are wilfull, and haue often tempted God by reiecing his grace, are in the end forced to fall into such a blindnesse, as they doo no more discerne ne can any more beleue the doctrine of fayth. Also heere yee see that it is not a common gift vnto all men to beleue the Gospell. VVee see the woord of God is preached, and should there be any gaynsaying if men were not wilfull and foward? VVhereas God declareth him self to bee a father and a Sauyour, and aboue all thing whereas hee seeing vs full of sinnes giueth vs a warrant of our saluation in the persone of his Sonne, assuring vs that although we bee full of all iniquitie, yet notwithstanding our Lord Iesus Christe hath satisfied for vs, so that by the meanes of his death and passion we be set cleere and may appeere before Gods iudgementseate, and bee hild there for rightuouse and giltless: I pray you, if we were not vtterly brutish, which of vs would not give eare too it with earnest desire? But wee see that the Gospell is despized, yea and that many conceyue such rancour against it, as they would rather plucke God out of his seate, than submit themselues too his doctrine.

And whereof commeth this but that it is not in mannes power to beleue the benefite, vntill it be gien him of God, and that when men are left to themselues and giuen vp to lewd mynd, they must needs reject all goodnesse and chooze all euill, and altogether to their owne destruction. Forasmuch as we see this, let vs humble our selues. For he that will aduaunce himself in his owne conceypte, must in the end be bereft of all vnderstanding. For it behoueth vs too keepe our allegeance vntoo God when he hath giuen vs a right mind, cleere vnderstanding, and good reason, and at the leastwise wee must confess that the same cometh of him, & pray him to continue it in vs, & not suffer vs to abuse so singular a gift, but rather cause vs to apply it to the right vs, namely by yeelding our selues to his obeysance, and by sticking throughly to his doctrine. Ye see then what we haue to doo, when we see so many poore blind soules wandring ouer the fields, & not able to discerne any thing, who euē though a ma would guide the & shewe the the right way, would neuerthelss draw still the contrarie way. I say we must acknowledge that wee ouiselues should doo the like if God did not by strong hand hold vs and drawe vs to him.

himself. For it is notynough for him to call vs, and to shew vs which way we should go: but he must be fayne to draw vs also as the holie scripture sayeth: that is to say, he must giue such an operation to the knowledge which he offereth vs, as we may be touched with it, and our hart as it were tyed too it. Therefore after that God hath taught vs what too doo: hee must also immediatly therewithall gue vs a mynd to followe the good. And so (as I sayd) we may gather a good and profitable lesson of ti is saying, that the wicked will not beleue. And why? Because he is deceyued with vanitie. And the reason is added expressely, because that when a man is forepossessed by naughtie affections, and snarled in many errors and corruptions: ye see hee is like a desperate person, and there is no comming to him to shewe him his errour. Howbeit we be deceyued with vanitie before hand by nature: what bring we out of our moothers womb, when it is sayd that there is nothing but foolishnesse and vntiuthe in our vnderstanding? Behold a generall sentence, to shew that as soone as wee bee borne into the worlde, we be quyte and cleane voyde of truth afore hand, vntill such tyme as God haue reformed vs. And why? wee go on forward altoogither vntoo euill. And therefore we shoulde bee shet vp in this condemnation all the sort of vs, were it not that God did drawe vs out of it by his mercie. For wee are all of vs deceyued in vanitie, and none of vs is fit to receyue that which is good, true, and profitable for our welfare. But if we be intyced to manye deceyts, Satan wil beguyle vs out of hand. As how? Marke mee a yoong man that hath liued in simplicitie all his lyfe, or that hath not liued any long tyme. As for example, admit there bee a yoong man of twentie yeeres age, that hath ben well brought vp from the beginning, and hath not tasted of false doctrine nor of other wicked things. Although that such a one sceme to bee sufficiently well disposed to receyue goodnessse and too yeeld himself teachable: Yet must God be fayne too woork in him, or else hee can never come to good. And why? For our nature is forward vnto cuill, and altoogither giuen vntoo it, as I sayd afore. But if there bee any one that is wylle and full of naughtinesse, and hath ben nuzled in wicked doctrine and superstition, as we see the Papistes are, that is much more. These Clawebucks and Hypocrits that are armed a long tyme afore hand against God, and carryed headlong away in their errors, haue in such wylle applyed their whole indeuer to intangle themselues in the snares of Satan, as it is not possible to get them out againe. Then is it certaine that these sort of men doo much lesse beleue, as wee see by experience. For God doeth stil shewe fauour to those that haue had any simplicitie: but as for those that are so sotted in error and wholly giuen too it: the iustice of God must needs be shewed vpon them, except it be his pleasure too woork after a woonderrfull fashyon, according as he can well drawe whom he listeth out of the bottom of hell. But when he doeth so, it is a miracle well woorthie too bee knowne and magnified. Neuerthelesse wee perceyue that which is sayd, namely that the wicked man shall not beleue, after he is once sotted in vanitie. I say wee perceyue that God executeth his vengeance vpon such as are hardened in euill by long continuance in it. Now when wee heare this, we haue cause too thank God for drawing of vs to the knowledge of his Gospell, and for giuing vs a mynd to cleave vnto it. For that commeth not of our selues, it is a speciall gift of the holie Ghost. Moreouer also we bee warned to keepe our eyes open, that Satan dazel vs not, by setting his errors and de-ceyts in our sight. And why? For if we suffer our selues too be misseled and deceyued willingly: the mischeef must needs be increased, euen till it come too the roof whereof Eliphas speaketh here: that is to wit, till we be disfurnished of all reason, and bee no more able to beleue that which is for our welfare, but set our selues quyte and cleane against it. If we will not fall intoo this horrible vengeance of God, let vs prevent it. And how? Let every of vs bee heedfull and stand vpon his gard. And sith that God hath taken vpon him the charge to keepe vs so carefully, that hee tellet vs that nother Satan, nor all his force and praefizes shall be able to doo any thing against vs: let vs sticke to this promis, and not doubt but that he will fulfill it, and make vs feele the frute of it in due tyme and place. But now let vs come to that which I speake of, that is too say, that the wicked shall no more stand (for the woord importeth as much as to beleue, like as also the woord truthe may also signifie stedinessse) for it is verie true that the wicked shall not stand when hee is sotted in vanitie. And why? For vanitie is his chaunge. The reason serueth very fitly too confirme this principle, that the wicked shall haue no settling, nor finally prosper. For God maketh them too turne alwayes too vanitie. The woord vanitie is taken here in two senses. For when it is sayd that the wicked man shall not stand because he is sotted in vanitie: it is as much to say as he cannot stand when he is full of vnu-truthes and blinded with deceyuablenessse. And why? For vanitie (see how the woord altereth his signification) is his chaunge, that is to say, there is nothing for him but deceyuablenessse, and when he thinketh to haue things at his harts lust, all vanisheth away in the turning of a hand, so as he findeth nother help nor releef in his aduersitie, nor anye remedie of his miseries. Thus ye see what this woord vanitie importeth in the second place. And the woord chaunge fitteth well this sense. For when God shall haue led the wicked sort through manie turmoyles, and when they shall haue buskled themselves throughly teo and fro: on which side so euer they turne them, they shall alwayes fall into vanitie, that is too say, they shall be vterly disappointed of their expectation. True it is that they may set manye fayre hopes before their eyes, and beare them selues in hand that they haue wonne the goale: but behold, in the turning of a hand they bee deceyued, and see it is but follye for them too gape for one thing or other. Now let vs come too the gathering toogether of the things that are spoken here intoo one summe: namely that the wicked shall not stand out, that is too say, shall not haue anye settling or continuance. Although the despizers of God be exalted and triumph for a time: yet haue they not any settlednesse. And why? For God leadeth them continually thorough backewayes, in suche sorte as they fynde themselues beguiled and disappointed of their hope.

And this is a verie profitable lesson for vs. For, what is the cause that wee grudge at the wicked, and would fayne be partakers of their state? Bycause we haue not pacience too tarye the end of them, as it is sayd in the Psalme. For if our myndes were quiet, it is certaine Psa.73.c.17. that we should shudder at the end that is prepared for the despizers of God, bycause that at the last their ioy must be turned intoo weeping and wayling and gnashing of teeth, God curseth all their mirth, and the end of it must needs bee vnhappy. But what? wee raught only at the present things and runne after them: our lustes are so whot, as wee haue no forecare what may happen to morrowe morning. And so much the more ought

oyght we to marke well this lesson when it is sayd that the wicked man shall haue no settling. By this saying the we be taught, to brydle our selues when we see the despizers of God haue their full skope and liue at their ease, yea euen whyle we weepe and lament, so as wee ouershoot not our selues for all that, but give God leysure to finish out his woork. Again, let vs take hede that we like not to well of our prosperitie, but let vs ground our selues vpon God. If a man prosper, let him not dole vpon his good fortune (as they terme it) nother lette vs be so miscaried as to forget God: but let vs seeke too settle ourselues in him, for without that, there shall be no stedfastnesse. But the reason that Eliphias addeth here immediatly, must be throughly weyed that is to wit that the chaunge of the wicked shall be vanitie. And wherfore? For we see manye turninges in this world, and it seemeth to vs that alwayes the world will proue better and better for vs, bycause men doo feede themselues with wynd. If God afflicte them, then they hope vpon maruelous things: but there is no substance nor stediness in all their enterprises. Thus then ye see in effect what we haue too marke: and that is the right sense. Now it is sayd afterward, That the wicked man shall bee consumed before his tyme, & that his branches shall never flourish more. He shall bee like a vyne that hath his vnripe grapes stript of, and like an Olife tree that casteth his floures, yea and that the same floures shalde away when there commeth any frost, so as they perish vtterly. No doubt but that by these two similitudes Eliphias ment too confirme the former sentence, that is to say, that the wicked man perisheth before hee be full rype: and it serueth still too bring vs backe to the matter which we haue discoursed already. So then we see, that by setting before our eyes that there is no stableness in the wicked, our Lord calleth vs too a throughcontinuing stableness which shall not be deceyvable, nor serue alonly to tickle vs with a vayne and fond desire of it. Gods intent is not that we should bee deceyued with a vayne imaginacion in weening our selues to happie: but he would haue vs to be happie in good earnest. But how may that be? By settling ourselues in him and in his loue. Lo wherevnto he calleth vs? And contrariwise he sheweth vs that wee must not bee giuen too any of these worldly things too rest vpon them where is no rest too be had, and that wee bee but stark fooles if wee beate our braynes about it. But yet cannot all this turne vs from them, notwithstanding that God tellvs that all, the prosperitie and happinesse that men weere themselues to haue in this world when they be separated from him, is but deceyffulnessse. So much the more then standeth it vs in hand too marke well this lesson, where it is sayd that the wicked shall perish before his tyme. And whereas he addeth these comparsons, that he shall be as a vyne that hath his lowre grases plucked off, and as an Olife that casteth his flowers before his tyme, so as they can bring foorth no frute.

Hereby our Lord intended too expresse the outward shewe that the wicked shall haue, whereat we shal wonder, yea and also stumble. For when we see the wicked prosper, immediatly wee bee amazed, and such a fyre is kyndled in vs, that we could finde in our harts too be as they be, saying. And why am not I as such a one? Behold, yonder naughtypack is at his ease, and in the meane whyle I am put behind the doore. I see he settis his foote vpon my throte, and why haue I no meanes to bee reuenged of him? See how our afflictions chafe vs without measure as soon as we see the wicked prosper. But contrariwise our Lord sayeth to vs. VVell

Sirs, it is true that ye may after a sort be tempted by beholding this goodly shewe: for mennes lusts are sudeine and headye. But what for that? yee see how a vine is stripped of his vnripe grapes: when it is new burieoned, there needeth but one frost, too kill them. Or if the grases be growne to be full fashyoned, behold there falleth a storme that sweepes them all away, so as there remayneth nother grape nor leafe, but the vine is left all bare. Also, looke mee vpon an Oliftree, wherein is the beautie of it? Is it not in his floures? And yet notwithstanding, if his floures bee frostbitten, or if anye tempest light vpon them, all is cast downe. Euen so is it with the felicitie of the wicked. Truly (too the seeming of poore ignorant folk) their prosperitie shall bee such as nothing may seeme more desirable, than too be in their case: but anon bothe their floure and their frute fade away before they be rype. God wil plucke away al before it come to perfection, according as I told you that they shall not come to so much perfection as too shoothe out any floures or frute that shall not be taken away before it come to be seasonable.

Thus ye see in effect what is shewed vs here. And (as I sayd afore) it serueth too confirme the matter that hath ben discoursed already. Then let vs learne hereby, not to desire the felicitie that lasteth not past a day or a verye little tyme. But let vs lerne to be throughly happie as our Lord would haue vs to be: which is, to be well settled in him, and to assure our selues that if we be blisse of God, the same shall make vs too prosper not only for a day or twayne, but also bothe in lyfe and death. True it is that much aduersitie may befall vs in the meane whyle: but what a priuiledge haue we when wee may betake ourselues vnto God, and in that wee knowe he will not lay more vpon vs than wee bee able to beare, and specially that he will turne all our aduersities to our welfare and saluation? Seing then that wee haue this prorogatiue, haue we not wherwith to be contented? Although the wicked be at their ease for the present tyme: what certaintie haue they for the tyme to come? Although they aduaunce themselues, and think that God is not able too shake them (as it is sayd in the Psalme): yet haue they flings within. For God woundeth and pricketh them, or else tossest them from side to side in such stormes as they be not able to auoyd. So then let vs mark, that if we desire to be in Gods fauour, and to haue a continuing prosperitie, we must be grounded in him, and then can we neuer quayle. VVe know what is sayd in another sentence of a Psalme where the wicked are spoken of: namely that they bee like greate trees, which men stub vp so as there remayneth no print of them but they are plucked vp by the roote. But on the contrarie part we must (as Dauid sayeth) be like an Olif in the house of the Lord, which florisheth alwayes. Also this similitude is taken after the same sort bothe in the first Psalme and in Ieremie: [where it is lere.17.b.8. ment] that if we trust in God, and runne vnto him, and hang vpon him: we shal bee like a tree that is planted by the water or riuers side, so as wee shall alwayes haue good sappe to florish and bring foorth frute. Now seing it is so that God hauing drawne vs from the corruptions and vayne allurements of this world, offereth vs also this eueralasting happiness: must we not needs be out of our wittes if we go not to it?

Then let vs bethink vs wel, and lerne to bereue our selues of al the lusts of our flesh (which serue for nothing but to deceiue vs, yea, and too leade vs too destruction,) and lerne to knowe where our welfare lieth. Thus ye see what wee haue too beare in mynd. But alas: it is a hard thing thing as I sayd afore. VVe be streytwayes drawen too that which hath a fayre shewe, and therefore it standeth vs on hand too marke well the similitudes that Eliphas bringeth here. VVe see an Olistree that looketh fayre, but it is not of any continuaunce. And let vs also haue an eye too the Storme that isat hand vpon the wicked. For God holdeth them at that point, too beate them downe. And although we perceyue it not at the first dash: yet if we looke at Gods iustice with the eyesight of fayth: wee shal see, that all they which are not rooted in God cannot come to full ripenesse, nor never bring foorth good frute, but shall soone come to plucking vp. And why? For God hath sayd it. VVe shall see them drowned in their owne prude. And why? For Gods woord cannot lye. So then as oft as we be moued by our sensualitie and fooish imaginacions, let vs retyre too Gods woord, and looke for that which wee sawe not afore, specially for the thing that is hidden, that we may knowe it, and therupon turne away from all the wayne conceyts that deceyue vs. Lo what we haue too beare away in this streyne. And in the end it is sayd, that the houesold of the wicked shall bee desolate, and fyre shall consume the houe of Brybes. Vnder this terme Hypocrite, (according to the sense of it in other textes also) Eliphas comprehendeth all such as haue froward and disloyall harts to Godward, who (sayeth hee) must perish yea euen with all their house and retinue: And afterward he addeth, that the houe of Brybes shall bee consumed. VVhereas he speakest of the compayne of Hypocrites: it is to expresse the better, that although the wicked haue greate traynes and greate and long tayles: yet for all that, they shall not misse to bee consumed. Then shall ye see farre wickedder men than the comon simple sort are, and they shall carye great compaynes and bandes after them which make a greate shewe: they shall haue their alliances and assemblies, and so drawe long traynes after them. But Eliphas sayeth exprefly that such assemblyes shall come too nought: meining too shewe how it is true that the wicked maynteyne them selues for a tyme by those aliasances, and that they fortifie them selues of purpose too maynteyne their state, insomuch that every one of them thinketh himself strong ynochough to beare out all brunts: But the wrath of God is kindled to burne them vp all. Yea and we see how the Prophet speaketh of them when he likenneth them too fagots of thornes. If a man haue gathered Bryers and thornes, and made a fagot of them: they wil be so snarled as he wil be loth to put his hand to them, and he shall not knowe on what side too take holde of them: and specially if hee would drawe out a bough of them; hee cannot. But if hee put fyre too them: immediatly they kindle, and crackle, and cast a farre greater blaze than yf they were faste and substancyall wood.

Nahum. 1. c.10. Euen so is it with the wicked. They be like thornes and bryers, and when they bee plasshed one within another, a man cannot tell how to vndo them, nother can he well come at them. But as soone as God putteth fire to them, then must they needs cracke in peeces and vtterly consume out of hand. Ye see then what Eliphas ment in saying that the assemblies of Hypocrits shall perish. For his meining is that a wicked man may drawe a greate trayne and band of men after him, but it shall stand him in no sted to maynteyne him against Gods wrath.

This ought to assure vs, that when we see the wicked men so furnished, so allied, and so garded, yet shall they not therfore misse to be suddeynly cast downe and consumed, so as wee shall see that this was not spoken for nought. And hereby we be admonished too knit our selues togither in the right feare of God, and to haue none other band to hold vs linked tongither, but him, seruing him with a good conscience, and putting our whole trut in him, and helping one another: and finally too haue such agreement among our selues, as every of vs may set his mynd to walke faithfully before God and man. If we deale after this sort God will blisse our concord: otherwise, all must needs go to wrecke and hauocke. It is purposely sayd, that the house of Brybes or bryberie shall come too nought. For all buildings that haue ben set vp by pilling and polling, must needs perish and decay of them selues. I meene not only the houses that are builded of Stone or Timber, but I meene that when a man enricheth himself by bryberie and rewards, so as he draweth to him on the one side, and snacheth on the other side, and is giuen to scraping, deceyuing, and extortiō: what hath he doone? He gathereth woode, and then commeth therā little spark of Gods wrath and consumeth it euery whit. For if there be no woode, the fire can take no hold. But the wicked do pile vp such a stacke on all sides, that the wood of it serueth for woode too burne vp them and all their trayne. So then, this text ought to be wel borne in mind that we may walk soundly and purely.

Thus much for the first point. And seeing wee bee warned, that when the wicked sort haue enriched them selues by receyuing of gifthes and brybes, all of it shall in the end go to destruction: let not vs repine at them: but let every of vs looke too himself, and walk in his owne calling. Let those that be called to the state of Iustices, be ware to maynteyne them selues without bryberie, and remember how it is sayd, that gifts do blind the eyes of the wyse, and peruerct the vnderstanding of the rightuouse. Therefore let them absteyne from all corruptiō, to the intent they may continue cleere and sound. Marke this for a speciall point. Again, let those that be in private state walke vprightly also. Let every man be think himself: godo, I may aduaunce my selfe in this world by vsing of wicked trades: howbeeit forasmuche as they be things condemned of God; what shall I do but only kindle his wrath against mee?

Lo how all the faythfull ought to hold them selues in awe. And moreouer when we see the wicked lay baytes on euer side, and beare them selues in hand that they haue greatly gayned, when they haue gotten much riches by taking of brybes and gifthes: Let vs say, yet will God at length shewe how he hath not in wayne sayd that which we heare in this place, and w<sup>t</sup> ich the holie Ghost hath vttered by the mouthe of Eliphas. For God will not suffer his threatenings to be in vaine, but wil match the execution of them with them anon after. Ye see then how we must bee quiet, when wee see such as rap and rend, and pill and poll on all sides. Verely wee must assure our selues that the thinges shal not continue with them, and that God will take such order, as it had ben farre better for them to haue eaten bare breade, and too haue ben contented with a little, than too haue glutted them selues after that fashyon at other mennes cost, and to haue drawn all to them selues to make them selues richē: for every whit of it must goo too nought, and their houses must fall vpon their heads: that is too saye, the goods that they haue gathered, shal be to their ruine and destruction. True it is that for a tyme they shal haue such scope, as it may well seeme that their state shall last for euer. But let vs be pacient, and tarye Gods leyture (as I sayd afore) till hee finish out his woorke. And in the meane whyle let vs desire nothing but too stand in his his grace and fauoure. For truly that is the only meane not only to mainteine vs in our state all the time of our life, but also to giue vs a better life after our death, as he hath promised vs, in the kingdome of heauen.

Now let vs cast our selues downe in the presence of our good God with acknowledgement of our faultes, praying him too give vs such repentaunce, as wee may chaunge from our naughty life day by day, and not desire any thing but to renounce al our naughtie affectiōs, and all things that may turne vs from his seruice, and the great number of wicked lusts wherew̄to we be subiect and giuen: and that forso much as we be so full of infestation, it may please him to uphold vs by his mercie, and dayly to pardon vs our faultes, vntill he haue fully clothed vs againe with his righteousesse, at suche tyme as he shall haue taken vs out of this world, too make vs partakers of his heauenly glory. That it may please hym to graunt this grace not only to vs, but also, &c.

The. lxij. Sermon, which is the first vpon the. xvij. Chapter, with a little remnant of the last verse of the fifteenth Chapter.

Job ansvered and said.

- I haue often herd such things: you be all of you yrksome comforters.
- VVhen vvill there be an end of [your] vvindy vvords? And vvhervvith imboldenest thou thy selfe to ansver.
- I could speake as you do: If your soule vvere in my soules stead I could hold you company in talke, and I could nod my head at you.
- I could strengthen you vvith vvords, and my talke should be to receiuē grieſe.
- But if I speake, my sorrowe vvill not abate, and if I hold my peace vvhat releefe haue I?
- He hath loden me vvith anguish, he hath made all my congregation desolate.
- He hath parched me vvith vvrinckles for a vvitnesſe, and leanness is come vpon me vvhich vvitnesſeth it in my face.
- He hath torne mein his vvrath, he hath handled me furiously, he grindeth his teeth at me, and mine enimic sharpeneth me and stareth vvith his eyes against me.

After that Eliphias hath told vs, that the wicked and the despizers of God are cursed, and all their matters go against them: for a conclusion he addeth, that they conciue sorrow, and bring foorth peyne, and their bellie breedeth craft and deceite.

VVhereby hee doeth vs too witte, that all the outwarde shewes whiche wicked folkes haue, boote them not a whit, but God turneth them cleane contrarie to theire thinking, by meanes whereof they be disappoyned of their expectation. True it is that this sentence is expounded as though it were a reason that Eliphias rendreth: that is to witte, that Gods afflicting and cursing of the wicked and hypocrites, is not without cause. And why? For they do nothing but practise mischiefe to the whole world. Therefore after as they trouble their neighbors, so are they payed with like measure. And truly the holy Scripture doth oftentimes vse that manner of speaking, as in the seuenth Psalme. Esay also sayeth the same in his nine and fyfteenth Chapter. Therefore when the holy

Esa. 59. a. 4.*

Ghost meeneth to declare that men are giuen to naughtinesſe and sinne in all their intents, thoughts, and affectiōns: he vseth this similitude, that they bee as a woman with child. VVhen they haue conceiued peine (saith he) (that is too say, whereas they haue conceiued or devised mischiefe against their neighbours to trouble them or too oppresse them) they bring foorth iniquite, that is to say, they execute the mischiefe that they had devised. But this sense agreeth not with the text. For (as I haue said alredy) Eliphias hath alredy heretofore rendred sufficient reason why God should be so much against the wicked. And as now he meeneth to say no more, but that although they behight themselues good hope, and beare themselues in hande that they shall compasse all theiur matters by some meanes or other: yet in the ende they shall be confounded. And why? Because there is nothing but Gods blissing that maketh vs to prosper. Therefore they shall win nothing by foding themselues with any hope in their harte. For God shall turne all topsiterie. And it is not heere only that the scripture speaketh after that maner. In the sixe and twentith Chapter of the Prophet Esay it is sayde, Lord we haue traueled before thy face as a woman with child, and yet haue conceiued and brought foorth nothing but wind. Verely it is the faithfull that speake and complaine in that wise before god. Howbeit they acknowledge and confessē their sinnes.

For at that time when they said they trauelled as a woman with child, God did persecute them iustly for their offences. But they say they conceiued and brought foorth wind: that is to say, assoone as they looked for some ease of their miseries, it vanished altogether into aire and smoke, and after long lingering in peine, their miserie was never awhit amēnded. Here Eliphias passeth further, and saith that the wicked do but breede childe and bring foorth mischiefe to themselues, and that their bellie nurisheth deceite, that is to say, vaine and guilefull hopes which shall deceiue them in the end. And it is the same threatening which God vttereth in the three and thirtieth of Esay against the skornefull whiche haue made none Esa. 33. b. 11. account of his word, and specially which haue bin hardened. Behold (saith he) ye conceiue chaffe & bring foorth dung. As if hee should say, you be stubborne against my word, because ye cannot perceiue the euil that you haue committed, and how sore you haue prouoked my wrath against you: But your flattering of your selues shall not stand you in any stead: for notwithstanding all youre flatteries you shall perceiue that you haue conceiued nothing but chaffe and stubble, and that all shall vanishe away into aire, and you shall know that all your flatteries haue profited nothing at all. Now then we see in effecte that Eliphassis meening is that the wicked may for a time be well at their ease, and God will not presse them so hard, but that they shall sode themselues with some hope. But what for that? yet shall God (do the best and worst they can) so presse them that they shall haue a

worme to gnawe them within, their own consciences shal always pricke them, and they shall haue remorses and stings to torment them secretly: yea and in the end God shal send them so strong and excessive anguish, as they shall bee driuen of force too bring foorth that whiche they haue bred inwardly. And why? For their bellie conceiued nothing but guile: that is to saye, although they perceiued not their owne harmes at the first: yet dyd they nothing but woorke theyr owne decay, seeing they were not in the fauoure of God. They warranted <sup>10</sup> themselves this and that: and yet when all came to all, their cace was nothing but plaine deceit. But now let vs come to Iobs answer. He telleth them first, that hee had often heard the like things, and therefore that they bee but yrksome comforters, specially for setting vpon him with so troublesome words. In saying that he had often heard the like things, he meeneth that they should not have brought him ordinarie and common remedies seeing his miserie was so great and extreme, but they shouid rather haue broughte him some lousing comforte, and <sup>20</sup> such as myghte haue serued his turne, than haue hilde suche talke with him as men are woont to do after a slighte fashion with him that is but measurably afflicted.

Thus wee see what Iob meant in saying that hee had oftentimes hearde suche matters afore. But surely whensoeuer a manne bringeth vs a comforte that wee bee acquainted withall afore, wee must not holde skorne of it. And why? For though we be instructed concerning Gods goodnessse, and exhorted too pacience to day: it may escape oure remembraunce and <sup>30</sup> wee shall never thinke vpon it more.

True it is that the matter wil not be darke vnto vs. Neuerthelesse if we be afflited, and a man put vs in remembrance of that which hath bin told vs afore: let vs not thinke it a needelesse talke. And why? For the cace standeth vpon the practizing of that whiche wee haue heard and vnderstood, howbeit that we were not yett touched to the quicke, bycause occasion serued not. But if God nipp vs with any distresse or heauinessse, then dothe he make vs to tast of the comforts that men haue drawn out of his word, and brought vnto vs. And in good faith Iob was none of these nicelings which are alwayes longing for I wote not what nouelties, and cannot abide that a man shoulde tell them one tale twice. O(say they) I haue heard of this afore, I haue had mine eares cloyed with thistale. Yea but yet for all that, they haue neede to haue it beaten into them still: and when a man telleth vs one thing often, it is to our great profite and furtherance. But Iob was not at that poynt, it greeued him not to make account of a good lesson bycause it was common. Nother was hee curiose of his desires: but (as I saide afore) hee sheweth simply that his miserie was so excessive, as he had neede to be comforted after an extraordinaire manner: Like as when a man is sick of a common disease, folke will also vse a light remedie. But if the disease be sharpe, the Phisition must bee faine too proceede further. For if he should applie one medicine to all diseases, what a thing were it? In like cace is it with aduersities.

VV<sup>e</sup>e see a manne that is sorrowfull for the deaþe of his Father, or of his wife, or of his children, or else some losse is happened vnto him. VWell, one bringeth him some meane comforte, and such as God hath set foorth. But if there bee any that is not tormented after some one manner only, but whiche fceleth the hande of God persecuting him on all sides, so that as soone as one inconuenience is besafne him, there fo'low two or three mo in the necke of it, and he is not only afflicted in his body, in his person, in his goodes, and in his frends but also (as we haue seene in Iob) is pressed with spirituall temptations, as though God meant too drowne him vtterly: there wee must go to worke after a more exquisite fashion. For if ye vexe a poore man that is alredy hartbroken: too what purpose shall all that you can bring serue? It were muche better that a man hilde hys peace, that God myghte woorke too supple the defaulte of men.

Thus yee see what Iob meant. Behold Eliphias telleth Iob that God purishest wicked men too shewe himselfe the iudge of the worlde, and that they maye well fence themselves, but they cannot scape his handes but that hee will vtterly destroy them howe greate traynes and bandes of men soever they haue. But what? If a man shoulde applie this matter vnto Iob, it were as muche as too beare hym downe that God was hys enimie bycause hee was a wicked man, and also that there had bin nothing but hipocrisie in him. Beholde a matter misapplied. Therefore it is not withoute cause that hee sayth, Gotoo, I know these thinges, 2nd euē nowe coulde I serue myne owne turne with them if I had neede of them. But that was not the cace. For Iob had conceiued in his minde, that hee was not punisched for his sinnes sake, and that God had not any suche intente. Not that heee felte not himselfe faultie, and worthy to indure yet more, if God listed too examine him with rigoure: but bycause he knewe that God han-dled him not so for his sinnes sake, but had another intent.

Iob knowing this, reiecteth the talke that they hilde with him. And why? Bycause it was vreasonable. You are yrksome comforters to me sayth hee. And what is the reason? Bycause they broughte not conueniente remedies.

Heereby wee bee warned, that if wee minde too comforte our neighbours in their heuinessse and trou-bles, wee must not go too at randon as many men do, <sup>40</sup> whch haue no mo songs but one, and haue no regarde at all too whome they sing it. For some man must bee handled after one fashion, and some man after another. As for example if there be one that is stubborne against God: in that cace a man must speake with another maner of stile and tearmes, than too a poore creature that hathe walked alwayes in simplictie. And so according as the maladie is, it is needefull that a man bee warned too proceede thereafter. As for example, if men bee dullardes, they must bee cried vnto, and their negligence must bee rebuked, too the intente they maye feele the hande of God and humble themselves vnder the same. Therefore wee haue neede of greate wi-se-dome if we will comforte those whome God afflicteth as we ought to do.

Thus yee see what wee haue too beare in mynde concerning thys sentence where it is saide, that such as pretended too comforte Iob, were yrksome comforters, bycause they broughte not anye thing whereby hee myghte fare the better. And nowe Iob addeth,

W<sup>e</sup>ben will there bee an ende of youre wyndy woordes? Hee tearmeth those woordes wyndy, wherein there is no substaunce: that is to say, whiche are not able too edifye a manne, according as the holyc Scripture vseth the same similitude. For when it is required that a manne shoulde bee taught how too obtaine hys Saluation: It is sayde, hee is edifyed. Howe? Euen bycause hee is fyrite founded, and afterward buylded vpon, so as hec is confirmed in the

in the feare of God, hee is confirmed in his lawe, hee is confirmed in pacience to beare afflictions stedfastly, and afterward he is fully resoluued to pray vnto God, to prayse him, and to flee vnto him. Contrariwise if the woordes bee but too trouble ones brayne, and that a man do but trifle, and babble, so as the hearer receyueth no good instruction too applie too hys welfare: all are but wyndy woordes. And so let vs marke that if we will meddle with exhortation or doctrine: aboue all thinges, it behoueth vs too tende too the sayde substancialnesse: that is too witte, that such as heare vs may receyue some good instruction, so as they may bee inward too walke according to godlinesse, and bee grounded in the trut of his mercie, and frame themselues too call vpon him, not doubtingly and waueringly, but assuring them selues that they shall bee heard. Ye see then howe wee oughte too studie, too instructe oure neighbours substantially that the thing whiche we haue learned may not slip away lyke wind. And furthermore euery of vs must also bende too suche teaching, that wee couet not too bee filled with wind, as wee see many curiose folke are, who would fayne haue men too listen vnto them that they myghte feede their eares and satissye their fonde fancies. They imagin this and that, and woulde fayne haue men too listen too theyr complayntes, too dispute of matters that are too no edifying. And the mynde of man is ouermuche inclyned too thys vice, yea and wholly gyuen vnto it. For that if euery of vs shoulde follow hys owne appetite, it is certayne that there woulde bee none other question among vs but howe wee myghte holde vnprofitable talke of this and that, whyche shoulde spred into the aire, and haue no substaunce in it, nor aught at all but wind. And therefore learne too seeke that whyche is good and conuenient too edifye vs in the feare of God, and in fayth and pacience, and in all good and profitable thinges.

Thus ye see what wee haue too remember in thys sentence where Job maketh mention of wyndy words. Neuerthelesse wee must also take heede too ourselues, that wee refuse all talke that shall bee ministred vnto vs as though it were wyndy: but wee must learne to tast whether there be any vanitie or good instruction in it, that we may knowe it too applie it too oure owne vse. And therewithall lette vs pray G O D too bee so gracieuse to vs, that when any man ministreth any good doctrine vnto vs, it may not slippe away from vs nor vanishe into the aire through our owne heedlesnesse. For when a man commeth too informe vs of Gods worde, it behoueth vs to knowe that there is alwayes some good instruction towards. But many take no profite at all by it. And why? For they applice not their whole witte and mynde too it, but are fleeting too and fro, and Gods worde dothe as it were vanish into the wind: and that is bycause they haue no sure groundednesse in them. Neuerthelesse, for the better applying of thys lesson to our vse, euery one of vs (as I said afore) must looke narrowly to himselfe. For it followeth in Job, That if his friendes were in his case, bee could speake as they do, and holde them company in talke, and pleade with them, and nod his head at them. Truly some expound this sentence, that Job would not render the lyke vnto them if hee sawe them in like trouble, but woulde rather indeuer to asswage theyr miseries and too gyue them some releefe, than increase their sorrowe as they dyd towards hym, according as wee haue seene their vnmercifulnesse, howe there was none other talke among them but too dryue thys holy persone too despaire, if God hadde not hilfe hym vp.

They that take the sentence in that sense, are moued thereto by thys reason: namely that it were an vnseemely matter that Job woulde bee desyrous of reuengement when God had withdrawen hys hande from hym, and that hee woulde then mocke poore menne that were in like calamities, when hee were at hysease. For although there were none other cause but the affliction that hee himselfe indured, yet shoulde the same teach him too haue pitie and compassion vpon suche as had neede of it. But when all is well considered: Job meeneth not too shewe heere what hee woulde do, but what a man myghte doo if hee were in lyke plighte. Therefore hee meeneth not that hee woulde bee even with them that hadde troubled him wilfully, but only that hee coulde bee merrie, if hee were as they were. Then in effecte hee meeneth thus: you talke well at youre ease, yee shake youre heads at me, ye passe not of condemning me, no nor too plunge mee into the bottomlesse pitres.

And thus yee doo as folke that knowe not what it is too indure miserie. If I were in youre case, coulde I not do as muche? And howe woulde you take it if I shoulde come shake my head at youre calamities when I sawe the hands of God nippe you with extremitie? If I should say, O it is well bestowed, God must bee fayne too chastize you and too make you feele howe hee punisheth sinners. If you were overwhelmed with miserie, and I shoulde speake too you after that sorte, mighte ye not say I were a skorner and a cruell person. Then bethynke your selues well.

Lo in effecte what Jobs meening is. Nowe then we see hee was not sharpened vnto reuengement as those that haue no feare of God bee, who when any man disquieteth them, woulde fayne that it laye in their power to render twice as muche displeasure as hath bin done them. Job was not of that minde. And truely it standeth Gods children in hande too bridle themselues. Although me trouble and vexe vs, yet it is not for vs too runne vppon those that haue persecuted vs wrongfully. For God sendeth them vnto vs to meecken vs, and it behoueth vs too knowe that they bee roddes whyche come from his hande. Neuerthelesse, when men come too trouble vs withoute cause why, wee may well after the example of Job tell them that wee coulde doo the lyke too them. And why? for a man shall never knowe his faulfe well, vntill hee bee tolde it too his face. But when a man perceyueth that the mischiefe may retourne vpon his owne head, then hee restreyneth himselfe and faileth too saying, Howe nowe? VVhat do I? Beholde, God too bring vs too vprighte indifferencie, saythe: Thou shalte do none otherwise too thy neigbour than thou woldest bee done vnto thy selfe. Truely hee coulde haue sayde. VVhen yee haue too do with youre neighbours, see that ye deale indifferentlye and vprightlye with them, and that ye bee not gyuen too wicked couetousnesse, too spoyle other men of theyr goodes, looke that ye desire not too eniche yourselues by the losse of anye man.

And verely so saith hee in the Scripture. But for a conclusion hee setteth downe thys saying, do as yee woulde bee done vnto . For there is not that man but hee is a greate clerke, if the matter concerne hys owne profyte. Then wee lyke well too dispute and too saye, VVhat? Suche a man hathe done thys wrong. Is it a Christian mans parte too doo so? Is there no vprightenesse? Is it not the poynte of a lewde and cruell manne? Euery manne therefore can skill too dispute well of reason, equitie, and right, when the case concerneth hys owne profite. And it is the poynt wherinto Job sendeth hys friendes because they be blinde, saying, that if they were in such extremitie as hee is, they woulde bee glad that other men shoulde handle them more gently. Therefore hee coulde do no lesse but bring them backe too thys naturall equitie by making comparison betweene them and hymselfe. And so hee sayth to them, come on, If ye were in like pligte as ye see me, were it reason that I should minister suchē 10 talke vnto you as you do to me. If a man shoulde handle you after the fashion that you go to woorke with me, howe woulde you take it? Then oughte they too bee moued. And why? For (as I haue sayde alredy) so long as wee bee out of ourselues, (that is too saye, so long as the matter toucheth not vs, ne lighteth vpon vs) wee runne crossing in and out: but if the case touche our selues, then wee learne too bee better aduised. Thus yee see in effecte what Job meant to saye. Now may wee gather a good lesson heereof, according too 20 oure Lorde Iesus Christes forealledged sentence, that wee shoulde not do that to another man whyche wee would not haue done too our selues. For wee haue Godslaw printed in our hartes, wee haue generall principles that abide with vs. And what is the cause then that our judgement is so peruerited and corrupted, that we draw alwayes backward? God hath no sooner giuen vs a good rule, but we be staightwayes moued to ambition, hatred, pride, and couetousnesse. Lo how all is peruerited. Then if we be ambitious, and that to vaunt 30 our selues we fall to despising of our neighbours. If we be rashheaded, so as our tungs runne at rourers before wee well vnderstand the ground of the case: If we be led with pride, so as wee would aduaunce ourselues by plucking those backe whome wee see too go afore vs: If we be prouoked to hatred and malice, or if we be blynded with loue and partialtie: VVhat is to be done? Let vs enter into ourselues, and pray God too guide vs and to open our hartes that we may discerne arighte, saying: Go to, if the matter concerned thy selfe, what 40 woldest thou say then? Lo howe wee myghte become wise, discrete, and stayed: that is to witte, by applying the same thing to our selues, which we cast out against others. For we be so much giuen to selfeloue and selfe-profite (as I sayde) and nature holdeth vs so hard to it, that every man is in loue, yea and ouerfarre in loue with himselfe. Therefore we shall be the lesse excused of this vice when it is found in vs, seeing we be so often exhorted too followe vprightnesse and indifferencie. 50 But let vs pray God to woorke in suchē wise in vs, as this vice may be turned into vertue by his holy spirite. Letvs consider what is imputed in thys saying, Thou shalt loue thy neigboure as thy selfe. VVhat is the cause that every man steppeth out of his boundes, and 60 that wee loue our selues too muche, and despise oure neighbours, but because we be not diligent ynough in practicing that which is sayde vnto vs: namely that wee must not be so much gyuen too the loue of our selues, but that wee must loue our neighbours as our selues. For we ought to consider, that God hath created vs a'l after his owne image, and therewithall that wee bee all of one nature. Heerewithall also hee telletth vs, that we oughte to agree in true brotherhood with those that are linked vnto vs. Thus yee see what wee haue too remember in this sentence, where Job telletth them that had accused him vrifiably, that they would be loth that others should do the like to them: and therefore that it was not meete for them to abuse his pacience after that fashion.

Lo what we haue to gather in effecte. And by and by it is sayde, I will nowe bold my peace, but what shall that profit me? And if I speake, what ease shall I haue by it? Heere Job intendeth too preuent the obiection that mighte haue bin laid against him. For his friendes mighte haue sayde. Then comfort thy selfe seeing thou arte so well able to do it: and seeing that thou couldest woorke woonders if we were in case as thou arte, go too nowe and shewe thy cunning vpon thy selfe. But hee sayth, I see my selfe in as myserable case as may be. So then I knowe not what I may hope, for God pincheth me after so straunge a fashion, that if I speake, I do but increase my sorrowe, and if I hold my peace I am neuer the more eased. Beholde I am a man swallowed vp with aduersitie.

Thus yee see what Job meant to say in effect:namely that whither he spake, or whither hee held his peace, he was no way eased. Marke also how Dauid in the two and thirtith Psalmē complayneth, that his aduersitie did so pinch him and streyne him, that hee wist not where to become nor what shifte to make. VVhen I lamente (saith he) and thinke to haue some asswagement of my sorrowe by that meanes: the fyre is kindled more and more. If I keepe my mouth shut, and be minded to cast my selfe downe before God, my hart is vexed still, and as it were torne in peeces, and my griefe nippeth me so to the quicke, as it is neuer awhit restrayned thereby. And in another place he saith, that hee had determined with him selfe not too speake one worde but too haue bin dumb, so long as the wicked had their full scope. But what: I am not able (saith he) to keepe touch. For when I was mynded to bridle my selfe after that manner: in the ende my boylings were faine to burst out, lyke as when there is a greate fyre vnder a potte, although the potte bee covered yet must the skumme needes leape out on one side or other. And this is well worthy to be noted. For when God sendeth vs any sicknesse or pouertie, it seemeth to vs that there was neuer any manne handled so roughly as we be. And that is a cause that eyther driueth vs to despair, or else prouoketh vs to vtter impatiēce, so as we fall to lifting vp of our selues against God. Or else we beare ourselues in hand that although God afflicthe the faithfull that haue bin before vs, yet they were not so weake as wee bee, yea and that they were vtterly void of passions. And the same also is a cause of the increasing of our griefe. VVherefore lette vs remember howe it is saide heere, That God hath so pinched his seruantes, (I say euē them whome he loued, and whose welfare was deere and preciouſe in hys sight) and hathe oftentimes broughte them to such extremitie, as they were not able to looke vpon any more, neither wist they how to speake or how to hold their peace. Dauid made not such confession without cause, but for the instruction of all Gods children. For when wee see that a man indued with such vertue, and hauing suchē constancie of the holy Ghost, is neuertheleſſe throwen downe, so as he woteth not what to do, but is a man out of hys wittes: Let vs make our profite of it: and if God send vs so hard temptations, that we be driuen too the last cast, so as wee can no more: Let vs not thynke it straunge, for wee bee not the first [that haue bin so serued.] Dauid sheweth vs the way, hee waded out of the lyke mire, God reached him his hande, and when hee had humbled him too the vttermost, then hee holpe hym vp agayne. VVherefore lette vs not doubt but hee will still shewe vs mercie, after wee haue bin hilde downe for a time. See then howe good and needfull it is for vs too haue these examples before before our eyes, for surely it will make vs that our infirmitie shall not ouermayster vs. For if temptations bee fierce vpon vs, and wee knowe not where too become: wee will by and by bethinke vs, well, I see that the seruants of God which haue bene before vs, although they had very great giftes of grace, were fayne notwithstanding too grone vnder the hande of God, and wiste not where too become, and that by that meanes God ment too ridde them from all prude, and to teach them by experience, that they ought too stoupe vnder him. And if it please him too strike vs downe at this day by the same meane, condicionally that the ende also bee lyke, notwithstanding that wee smart in the meane whyle: lette not our mindes bee troublid for that, sith all things shall turne too our profite and welfare. Lo what wee haue too note concerning the doctrine that is contayned here. But Job addeth, that God pincheth him in suche wyse, as it shoulde seeme he intended too rend him i<sup>p</sup> peeces. In saying so he betokeneth that which wee haue seene heretofore: namely that he was not onely afflicted in his bodie, but also touched with the greatest and sorest temptations that could bee, yea and with very bitter ones: that is too wit, that he was tormented inwardly, bycause God was as it were his mortall enemie. Certes he sayeth that the leanness of his bodie was as a withering, and that in witnessse of Gods wrath, he was full of wrinckles, so as all his fleshe was as good as halfe rotten aheadie. And herein a man may see the tokens of a dreadfull affliction, and that God handleth him not as he is commonly wonte too handle those whom he chastizeth with his roddes, but that his Payne is excessiue. This therefore is in effect the matter that Job intended too expresse. And here wee haue too note, that God ment too giue vs lookingglasses in suche as haue had any excellent vertues, too the ende that in their persones we might learne too knowe that according as he dealeth foorth the giftes of his holy spirite, thereafter also doth he sende them greate afflictions in themselues, trying them and chastizing them too the vttermoste, to the intent too make them the more esteemed, and too bring

As much is too be sayde of Dauid. Behold, Dauid was not onely Gods Prophet, but also the King that gouerned his holie and chosen people, and had such vertues in him as were well woorthie of renowme and prayse, yea and cuen of wondermenr, and yet for all that, how did God turmoyle him? VVee see what complaints he maketh, not onely as a despized and offshaken persone, but also saying, that God hilde him heere on earth as vpon a rackinge, so as he was forced too shewe the extremitic that he was come vnto. For it is not without cause that he so often sayeth he had passed through fire and water, that he had bene plundged into the deepe gulfs, that he had felte all Gods darteres, that he had had all Gods arrowes shotte at him, that the hand of God had lyen heauy vpon him, that his verie bones had bene broken, and that there remayned nother marie nor substance in him. VVhen wee heare these kinde of speeches, they seeme too vs to bee but a mockerie. But God purposed too set vs forth a liuely picture, that (according too that whiche I haue sayd) wee might knowe that after as God giueth great vertues vnto menne, so doth he exercise them liueilie, too the intent that those vertues should not bee idle, but that they should bee knowne in due time and place. Besides this, let vs marke by the way, that the chieffest temptations that euer the faythfull indured, were these spirituall battels as wee terme them: that is too witte, when God summoned them in their cosciences, so as he made them too feele his wrath, by smyting them in such wise as they wiste not in what cace they stooode with him. And this plundged them in deeper distresse than all the bodily aduersities that coulde befall them. And here yee see also why Job vseth this similitude, that God grated his teeth at him. Also wee see howe Ezechias speaketh because he had passed through the same temptation. God (sayeth he) hath played the Lyon with mee. Likewyse he had vsed the same similitude afore which hee vseth here, namely that he wist not whither hee might speake or holde his peace. For I am (sayeth he) like a Swallowe, I chatter and chirpe, but I want woordes too vter the greefe of my miserie, I haue no toung too deliuere it. And herevpon he commeth afterwarde too shewe that God hath crasched and broken his bones as a Lyon that holdeth him in his pawes and teeth. But howe can God bee likened too a Lyon, which is so cruell a beast? No: Ezechias ment not too accuse God of crueltie: but hee speaketh of his owne feeling and of the terrible Payne that he indured when Gods wrath was vpon him. So then lette vs marke that when a poore creature entereth into doubting in what cace he is with God, and perceyuethe not that God will make him to feele his goodnesse: he muste needes bee in so greate distresse and so affligted, as if hee were betweene a woulues pawes. VVee must not imagine it too bee a small thing for a man too feele Gods wrath, and specially too conceyue that he is vtterly against vs: And therefore lette vs pray God too holde vs vp, and too spare vs, knowing that wee bee not able too beare suche a burthen, except he giue vs shoulders too do it withall. Besides this, lette vs pray him, not to vse such rigour agaynst vs as wee might feele him like a Lyon: but rather too shewe himselfe a continuall fater, and not punish vs after our deserthes, but make vs alwayes too feele his mercie by meanes of our Lord Iesus Christe, too the ende that when he hath guyded vs in this lyfe by his holy spirite, he may lift vs vp into the euerlasting glorie of his Angelles, which he hath purchaced so dearely for vs.

Nowe lette vs caste our selues flat before the face of our good God and fater with acknowledgement of our sinnes, praying him too make vs feel them in suche wise, that being touched with true repentance, wee may returne vnto him, knowing that he will bee fauourable too vs. And after wee haue desired him too forgiue vs our sinnes, lette vs also beseech him too ridde vs more and more of our fleshly vices, and that in correcting the sinfulnesse of our nature, he will bring vs too perfection of lyfe, that being guyded ir: this worlde by his holy spirite, wee may glorifie his name, and serue him with an earnest zele, dedicating our selues wholly vnto him, according as he hath prouoked vs by his goodnesse too do. That it may please him to graunt this grace, not only to vs, but also to all people and Nations, &c.

The

10. They open their mouth against me, they giue me buffets in way of reproch, and they gather them selues togither against me.
11. God hath put mee into the handes of the malicious, hee hathe dismayde me before the wicked.
12. I prospered and he threw me dovvne, he hath caught me by the necke, and set me as a butte before himselfe.
13. His Archers hem me in on all sides, he slitteth my reines, he spareth me not, he poureth my gallvpon the ground.
14. He hath broken me vwith breaking vpon breaking, and hee hathe runne ouer me as a Gyant.
15. I haue sovved sackcloth vpon my skinne, and loden my glory vwith dust.
16. My face is vexed blevv vwith weeping, and mine eylidds are couered vwith the shadovv of death.
17. Yet is there no guile in my hands, and my prayer is plure.

T is a very greeuous and hard thing to a mortall man when God setteth himselfe against him, and maketh him to feele that he is as it were his aduersarie. But no man can conceiue how great this miserie is, but onely by experience. And that is the cause

Esa.38.c.15. why Job vsed the similitude of a Lyon, (as we saw afore) and why he said, he was rent in peeces and deuoured of God, as of a Lyon. After the which manner King Eze-

Eze.37.d. chias also speaketh. And (as I haue saide alredy) this was not to accuse God of crueltie, but bycause the anguish that wretched sinners suffer when God pursueth them, cannot be expressed sufficiently. And it is requisite that we should be put in mind of these things, to the end that if God touch vs to the quicke, we may not be so dismayed with feare, but that we may consider, that the faythful which have liued before vs haue passed the same way, and that God hath deliuered them, too the intente wee cease not to call vpon him. For it is alwayes to be feared, least we should be plunged in such despaire, as we could

thelesse we must still flee vnto him in such distresse. For it is his propertie to draw men out of their graues, and to heale the woundes that he hath made, yea and euen to raile vs vp from death. But Job complaigneth heere of another temptation: which is, That the wicked haue opened their mouth to mocke at him, and that they haue buffeted him in way of reproch, and that they haue assembled togither. 50 VVhen men set them selues after that sort against vs, it renueth the miserie that we indure. VVhy so? For the Diuell serueth his owne turne by such as skoffe at vs, to spite vs, and to cuerthrowe and roote vp our faith vtterly, if it be possible. And Job speaketh heere expressly of the wicked for two considerations. For there is not an irksomer thing than when God doth after that manner giue bridle to the wicked, to persecute his children, and to trample them vnder their feete. True it is that good men ought not to thinke of that, but yet it seemeth an unreasonable thing that God should giue such libertie too the despisers of his maiestie, and too folke that are wholly giuen vnto euill, as that the fauchfull should bee so oppressed by them.

Thus yee see one reason why Job speaketh heere expressly of the malicious. The other is (saith he) that the selfesame people laboure alwayes to bring to passe that we may haue no trust in God, but giue our selues to all wickednesse and turne away quite from all goodnessse, as we see was done to oure Lorde Iesu Christe, the true mirroure and patterne of all the fauchfull. Verely Dauid indured the lyke. But when we see what is happened to the sonne of God, the same is a sure rule for vs, and it belongeth to vs all.

Now wee see whervnto this saying of Jobs is referred, that ouer and besides the terrible feare wherein we haue seene him, men also lifting themselues vp against him, haue labored to drive him to despaire, and reprochfully buffeted him, as though God had cast him vp too the spoyle, and made no more reckening of him. Lo what we haue to marke in effect. And this is written for our sakes, that whensoeuer God shall suffer the wicked too mocke at oure afflictions, and too aduaunce them selues with such rage, as it may seeme we shall bee vtterly ouerwhelmed: we may not be too greatly dismayed. And why Job hath indured the like battels, and yet we see his end was happie. God hath shewed vs in hys person, that when wee haue passed through many temptations, he is well able to helpe vs still. Therefore let vs trust in hym, and rest vpon his grace and goodnessse.

Lo what we haue too marke in this streyne. But Job sayeth expressly, That God bathe also delyuered hym into the handes of the wicked: whiche saying is well worthy to bee noted. For wee imagin that the wicked do what they list, and wee consider not that God gyueth them the bridle so farre foorth as hee himselfe listeth, and that they cannot passe any further than hee giueth them leaue from aboue.

Thys (as I said) deserueth well too bee noted. For if we bee forepossessed with the opinion, that the wicked are not in Gods hande, but may take as much scope as they list and God will not redresse it: what will come of it? Must wee not needs bee vtterly ouerthrowne? And whither shall wee flee for succoure? But if wee knowe that G O D holdeth Satan and all hys whelpes in a Lyam, and that they cannot onely not stirre one synger against vs, but also not intende or thinke anye thyng withoute Gods ordinance: Then will wee flee too hym boldly as ofte as wee bee so persecuted, assuring our selues that the remedye is in hys hande and at hys good disposition. Also wee haue too humble our selues before his face. For if the wicked myghte bestirre them of them selues and God shoulde not meddle with them: the wold it never come to our mind too acknowledge the corrections and chastyzementes of God, too bethinke vs of our sinnes, and too mourne before him that he might haue pitie of vs. But if wee knowe that the wickeddest of all are but roddes which he holdeth in his hande, too beate vs and too correct vs withall: And to bee short if we practyze well that which the Prophete sayeth, so as wee haue an eye to the hande [that stryketh vs,] and not too the stones, darteres, or strokes of cudgelles [that hitte vs:] it will be a very profitable consideration for vs. Beholde still what we haue too marke in that Job sayeth not simply, that the wicked ranne vpon him: but that it is God which hath besieged him, and that it is eten he himselfe that hath deliuered him. And he addeth that he was oppressed with extremitie. All the maner of speeches which he vseth here, tende to the ende that is vttered when he sayeth, that he had ben beaten downe, and astonished, and that God had caught him by the necke and rente him in peeces, and set him before him as a butte to shoothe at, and that his Archers had hemmed him in on all sides, that he had slitte him asunder, yea and that he had broken him and broken him againe.

Hereby Job sheweth, that he was come too suche extremitie of afflictions, as it was impossible too finde a creature that were more pressed or more miserable than he. For wee haue seene howe God afflicted him, as well in his bodie as in his goodes, and also by his owne wyfe. Yee see then that Job might well liken himselfe too a marke that menne shoothe at. For God sente him not some one kinde of aduersitie alone, but did as it were digge a pitte downe too hell too caste him the deeper into it. And afterwarde he loded him with such a weight as was impossible for any creature too beare, if he had not a greater strength than is in man. And soothly it was a maruell too haue suche a constancie, notwithstanding the infirmities that wee see in him. For when God strengtheneth his owne, it is not by making them vtterly insensible, nor yet by taking their feblenesse quite away: But they muste be fayne too acknowledge themselues suche as they bee, that is too witte, frayle creatures: and yet in the meane season God releueueth 40 their infirmite and setteth them vp againe when they be caste downe. Thus yee see what happened vnto Job. Nowe by the way he sayeth, that he clothed himselfe with sackeloth, and couered his head with duste, and that he did it not hy hypocrisie. Besides this, he sayeth that none of all these things befell him for his misdeedes. For there is no Robberie (sayeth he) too bee founde in my bandes, and my prayer is pure. VVhereby he meeneth that he thinketh his afflictions straunge, sith hee had not offended God in suche sorte as he might deserue too be so handled. This is the temptation that wee haue seene so often before, whiche Job calleth still too rememberance. But nowe lette vs lay foorth the matters particularly and apply them too our vse. The similitude that Job vseth, importeth a good Lesson: [which similitude is,] that God hath sette him as a whyte in a butte, and that he hath sette his Archers agaynst him, and besetted him rounde aboute, and that they haue after suche a sorte torned him in peeces, that his gall is tumbled out vpon the grounde, that is too say, that he was wounded too the very heart. By speaking so, Job ment too expresse that God afflicted him not after the common maner. But nowe lette vs looke too our selues: for if wee suffer never so little aduersitie, wee thinke it ouer great, and that God keepeth no measure. It is pitie too see howe nyce wee bee, and there needeth no more, to hold vs skirmish to the vitermost. So long as it were but a making of some moane, it might be thought too bee but a parte of feblenesse. But when menne make suche a stirre that they lift vp themselues agaynst God for any common aduersitie that they haue too abide: is it not an ouergreat impaciencie? Is it not a signe that wee were never in Gods schoole too learne what it is too suffer and too yelde obedience too his will? So then, too the ende wee may learne too bee more strong too indure the chastyzements that God sendeth vs: lette vs beare in minde what is shewed vs here: namely that Job who was of so excellent holinesse, and whom God loued so well, was neverthelesse sette vp as a whyte too shoothe at. And I tolde you that wee muste bee strong in our afflictions: not too harden our selues agaynst God and too chawe vpon our brydle as wee see many menne doo. For that maketh menne hardharted, and suffereth them not too bee brought too repenunce. Therefore wee muste bee tenderharted in this behalfe: that is too witte, assoone as God ticketh vs wee muste streyawayes awake too thinke vpon him, and not tarye till he drawe out his swoorde at vs and wounde vs, nor till he lette his arrowes flye at vs or thunder vpon vs. VVhat then? Assoone as he giueth vs but one stripe with his Rodde, although it be softly, we must be quiet.

And verely if wee were wise and well aduyfed, wee would not tarrie till he shoulde strike so muche as one stroke, but wee would bee warned by his threatenings, and hie vs a pace too come home too him before wee touched vs: Yee see then that it is expedient and profitable that the saythfull shoulde feele God, herte and not bee harde agaynst his strokes. For if a horse he dull vpon the spurre, wil menne lyke the better of him for that? wil menne thinke it a good propertie in him? No, it is a vyce. Euen so is it with vs. Though God strike vs not with the swoorde, but onely shew vs the shadowe of a rodde, yet muste wee bee moued. But yet neverthelesse wee muste therewithall bee strong, in such wise as I haue tolde you: whiche is, that wee muste not bee out of heart, nor so ouersorowfull as our grieve might not bee asswaged, nor wee haue any feeling of Gods gracious goodnesse. For they that are so prested, can not by any meanes reclayme themselues, because that if wee once take a conceyt that God is our aduersarie, and so haue no truste at all in his goodnesse; it is impossible that wee shoulde come neere him, but wee wil rather flee from him: and when wee bee once gone away, wee will still labour too drawe further and farther from him. Therefore wee muste plucke vp a good heart in our aduersities, that wee may call vpon God and not bee afraid to retorne vnto him, trusting that he wil bee ready too shewe vs mercie, if wee seeke it with a good, pure and rightmezening minde.

Yee see then wherevnto the woordes that I haue touched doo tende: namely that wee muste not bee too nyce in our afflictions, but rather seele them betimes, that wee may returne vnto God. Also if God hauing sente vs any aduersitie do double the same, and that wee bee gryped exceedingly bothe within and without: Yet lette vs assure our selues that we are not yet come where Job was, and therfore that if he continued too call vpon God, and too flee still vnto him for refuge, it is not for vs to turne away from him.

Thus yee see what wee haue too marke in this sentence. Now whereas here is mention made of Gods Archers: it is a very notable similitude. For wee see how menne are alwayes troubled, when they come to the afflictions of this present lyfe. For we cannot fater them vpon God as we ought too do, but wee imagine alwayes that they come by misfortune, or else by meanes of it en. Too bee short, wee judge disorderly, and cannot shay a our selues vnto God. For this cause, the holy Scripture (besides that it telleth vs that lyfe and death, light and darkenesse, good and euill are in Gods hande) vseth also familiar comparisons, too the ende that the matter may bee expressed too vs the better, according as it is sayd heere that God did set his Archers in aray agaynst Job. Speakes he heere of men? No: But of all the miseries that Job had too indure. These miseries are termed Gods Archers. And why? To the ende we should learne that when God afflieth vs, he commeth well furnished as if a judge shoulde haue his officers aboute him, and come with a strong companie too apprehende a malefactor. Yee see then that God vseth all the aduersities which wee feele in this present lyfe. And therefore lette vs not thinke it too be misfortune when some indure sickenesse and some pouertie. Like as the aduersities of this worlde are numberlesse: so lette vs assure our selues that God hath innumerable meanes too correct vs when he listeth, and howe he listeth. And that is it that Moyses meeneth when he sayeth, that all those things are locked vp in Gods Cofers. After hee hath spoken of all the miseries that can happen too man, he addeth: And are they not in my cofers? As if he should say, I haue my Treasures of good things when it pleaseth mee too shewe my fauour and loue towardes men: yea and I haue wherewith too do them good, not after the maner of the worlde, but by meanes incomprehensible. But on the contrarie parte also, when I liste too punishe menne, they shall feele howe I can doo more than they wiste of, and more than euer they knewe. Thus yee see howe God will haue his incomprehensible riches knowne vnto vs, as well by vouchsauing too poure out his benefites vpon vs, as also by the contrarie. VVherefore lette vs bee sure that whensoeuer it pleasest him too plague vs, he can do it, and that after a straunge maner. VWell, are wee scaped from one miserie? a second will followe, yea and innumerable will come one after another. Lo what wee haue to remember in this verse. Furthermore whereas Job addeth a newe, that his gall was poured out vpon the grounde, and that his kidneyes were opened and shredde in peeces: lette vs beare in minde that which I haue touched afore: that is too witte, that when God punisheth and pursueth vs with extremitie, and that his hande becommeth so grieuous and ouerheauie that wee can no more beare it: we muste not therefore bee too muche discouraged, and as it were dulled: but lette vs beethinke vs of that which Job knewe: whiche is, that for somuch as wee haue too do with God, lette vs sigh and grone with all humilitie, according also as he himselfe addeth, saying that his eyes and all his face were blubbered with weeping, that hee had sownd sackloth vpon his skinne, and that he had couered his head with duste. VVhat ledde Job too do so? Verely because he knewe that Gods hande was vpon him, and that of all the miseries that were light vpon him, none came of fortune, but all of Gods visitation. Had not Job bene perswaded of that, what had it booted him too haue put on sackloth vpon his backe next his skinne, and too haue caste duste vpon his head? True it is that they whiche thinke not at all vpon God, sayle not too make great complaunts and too weepe and howle: but too weare sackloth a right, they shall never do it except they haue an eye vnto God.

By the way, although the Hypocrites knowe not God aright, yet haue they some conceyt of him when they shewe suche signes of repentance. True it is that if wee sawe them within, wee shoulde finde nothing in them but faynednesse: neuerthelesse, the Ceremonie whereof

Iob speakeith, is a sure signe that men are inforced too confess that God is their iudge. And forasmuch as Iob did it vnfaynedly: we say he was not benummed as these vnbeleeuers are. If God handle them any thing roughly, they thinke with themselves, See the misfortune that is happened mee, and they looke no further: Iob did not so. But he knewe and was fully resolued, that it behoued him too impute those things vnto God. Had we learned this lesson, wee had profited well for one day: I meene if wee had learned to practise it throughly as wee ought to do. For mooste men can well ynochough confess, that diseases, dearthes, and other miseries, as warres, plagues, famine, and all suche things come of God: but if it come too the prooef, wee bee amazed, and notable to make that conclusion [& to say in our selues,] VWell, seeing that God visiteth vs, and commeth home vnto vs, it behoueth vs nowe too returne vnto him. Herefore wee haue playde the looce coltes, and wee haue wilfully runne astray from him: and now he rayneth vs with a rough bit, he shaketh his rod at vs, yea and he maketh vs to feele it: therefore wee muste learne to stoupe vnder his hande. But contrariwyse howe deale wee in that behalfe? If a man bee afflicted in any poynt, what will he doo else but chafe and grynde his teeth in grudging against God? And why? Surely if a man tell him he hath offended God, he will easily graunt it too bee true: but he hath no true rumorse to restreyne himselfe. And why? For (as I sayd) wee haue but a confused concyepte of it. Hereby a man may see there are few which haue this lesson well printed in their heart, that all afflictions are Gods Archers, and that hee is garded with them too shewe himselfe our iudge. As muche is too bee sayde of the ordinarie aduersities that happen comonly. If a people or a whole Countrie bee touched with warre, according too the pollings, extorcions, and other outrages that are done there: howe many menne are there that thinke vpon God? VVee see that all is on a rare: and yet wee consider not that God guydeth the sterne. VVhen wee see suche turmoylung wee are admonished too marke and note so muche the more the textes of holie Scripture, wherein God sheweth vs as in a looking glasse, or rather as in a liuely picture, that on what side so euer menne bee afflicted, it becommeth them too acknowledge the same too bee the hande of God: and specially if a whole countrie bee plagued, it muste bee acknowledged too bee Gods visitation.

VVherefore when any suche thing happeneth, lette vs followe the example of Iob: which is, that after we haue wept yea euen till our face bee formeyred with teares: we muste come and confess our faultes and desire God too pitie vs. I sayd afore, that the vnbeleeuers also do weepe: but it behoueth vs too set our selues vnto God, and then ~~no~~ doubt but hee will make account of our teares, according also as wee haere howe Dauid sayeth, that God putteth them all as it were into a bottle. VVhen wee bee scourged that wee can no more, lette vs flee for succour to our God. And if wee weepe before him, so it bee with true lowlinesse, surely there shall not one teare droppe from our eyes, whiche shall not come too bee accounted of in his presence. For they bee sacrifices euerychone of them, according also as it is sayde in the one and fistith Psalme, that a sorowfull hart, and a harte that is caste downe, is a pleasant sacrifice vnto God. If our teares tende too this ende, and bee as witnesses of our fleeing vnto God with all lowlinesse, acknowledging that in so much as his hande is agaynst vs, there is none other remedie but too beseeche him too bee mercifull too vs: it is certayne

(as I sayde) that he will make account of our teares. And specially when we be troubled by wicked men, if in steed of making two diuels for one as they say, that is to wit, if insteede of rendering euill for euill, we come and beseech God to asswage his hande, and to set order in the things that are confuzed: let vs assure oure selues, that lyke as hee put vp Davids teares intoo a bottell: so will he do ours too: And they shall not bee lost, though they fall too the grounde: God (I meene) will neuer forget them. Yf see then how we must applie this doctrine to our owne instruction: that is to wit, if we weepe when God afflieth vs, our teares must not bee as the teares of sillie witesse folke, who knowe not what they themselues meene by it, nor wherevnto they ought to direct themselues: but wee must direct our selues vnto God, and mourne before him. And this is confirmed by that Job sayth, that hee clothed himselfe with sackcloth, and couered his head with dust. Surely these things were signes of repentance, like as when a wretched offender will sue for grace, he will not cloth himselfe in wedding apparel, hee will not come combed and frisled and in a brauerie before his iudge: but he will rather come so as hee may moue him to compasision. I say hee will come with a sorrowfull and heauie countenance, he will come courstly appareled as a mourner. And so the faithful have had the outward signes of repentance when God afflieted them, & haue confessed their sinnes that they might obteyne forgiuenesse: their woont was too cloth themselues in hayre and sackcloth, and to cast dust vpon their heades, and their so doing was allowed of God. VVhy so? For first of all, men had neede to quicken vp themselues, bicause they be slowe and colde. Therefore when they take conuenient helpe too spurre themselues forwarde, it is not superfluous, sith we know that when it commeth to the humbling of our selues before God: we go so lazily to it, as it is not but for fashions sake. VVee can well say wee bee faultie, and we can well cast foorth some sighes. But in the meane season wee consider not our offences: the number of them is infinite, and they be excelsiuely great, as we ought of right to be dismayed with feare of death, when wee come before our iudge. Neuerthelesse to our seeming it is ynoch too cast forth a sigh or twaine, and away. Seeing then that there is such a coldenesse in vs, let vs assure our selues that wee haue neede to be spurred like Asses. Lo wherevnto the sackcloth and dust of the auncient fathers serued. For when they vsed this sayde ceremonie, it was not for nought. Also it behoueth vs too come vnto God when wee cast dust vpon our heades. For was not the bodie created by him? Then like as we must haue our hartes settled [vpon God] so must our bodies also bee answerable therewnto, and all the whole man must be dedicated vnto God and do him homage. Now then we see that these things were no sonde trifles, when the auncient fathers ware hayre and Sackcloth on their backes, and therewithall did also cast dust vpon their heades. And that is it which Job ment by speaking so. Neuerthelesse the Prophete Ioell sayth, Rende your hartes and not your garmentes. His meening there is not to reiect those outward signes: but he directeth his talke to the hypocrites, who thought themselues well discharged, when they had playde a few Apes toyes afore men, and made a goodly shewe, so as it might seeme that they were well seasoned with repentence. Yea (sayth he) your garments beare good recorde, and ye make many bragges to shewe your selues too bee good penitents. But what for that? Your hartes continue still stubborne in naughtinesse, they are as harde as Stithies, which is the thing that you ought too haue begon

at. Furthermore all this notwithstanding, he sayeth that the people take sackcloth and ashes, and cast themselves vpon the ground, and weepe before God, and that the gouerners and such as haue publike charge do begin, and all the rest of the people follow. Now then we see howe the auncient fathers vsed sackcloth and dust, when they came to the open witnessing of their repentance before God. True it is that nowe adayes wee bee not tyde nor bounde to such maner of doings. Neuerthelesse, if our repentance were such as it ought to be, we would not be so frozenharted as wee are. For all the necessities that I haue alledged, are to be founde in vs also. If the men of olde time were willing too spurre vp themselues too the knowledge of their owne sinnes, by putting sackcloth on their backes: I pray you what shall become of vs? Haue we such and so feruent a zeale to crawe pardon of God? Are wee so pulied downe, that wee millike of our offences, and are as sorie for them as were requisite? Alas no. It were much for our behoofe: but we bee dull in that behalfe. Then if the auncient fathers needed to humble themselues in acknowledging their sinnes: much more neede we to do it. But what? VVee thinke not on it a whit. And thereby it is seene that we can no skill, neyther of God, nor of his iudgement, nor of oure owne sinnes. True it is that our sinnes may perchaunce be well ynough knowne to vs. But to perceyue our owne filthinesse, and to be ashamed of it, and to bee greeued wyth our selues for it: that is no part of our care, wee hearken not after it. And yet notwithstanding, this was not written in vaine. Then let vs lerne, that if any of vs be afflieted, although he weare no sackcloth, ne cast dust vpon his heade: yet ought we (as much as we can) to stirre vp our selues by all the meanes that we see meete for vs. VVhen a man is by himselfe alone, let him bethinke himselfe thus: well, I pray not too God so hartily as I shoulde do. And let him aduise himselfe, such a meane were good for me, if I did cast my selfe vpon the earth, and lay there as it were with my mouth in the dust, being abashed and ashamed before God: that should touch me more neereley to the quicke, and I should bee prouoked to flee to my God for succour. Beholde (I say) howe euery man ought to prouoke himselfe particularly, specially when neede constreyng vs, as we see wee haue great neede presently. And also let all of vs stirre vp our selues togither. As soone as God sendeth any plague, or famine, thinke we it shoulde not be a pleasant sacrificize to him, if men made solemne protestation, and that both great and small confessed their sinnes before him, and euerie man stirred vp his neighbours too doo the same? Contrariwise when we come bolt vpright, and it seemeth that we perceyue not Gods chastizements, but giue him the slip: do we wonder if he double his blowes, yea and punishe vs seuen folde more, as it is sayde in his lawe? VVee haue skill ynough to chafe and to demaunde wherfore he presseth vs so sore: yea but we consider not, that when he went about to meeken vs, we did beate backe his blowes with such pride and sturdinessse, as he is faine of necessitie to double them. So then let vs bethinke vs too practize better this lesson that is shewed vs heire by Job. And furthermore let vs marke well what hee sayeth for a conclusion: that is to wit, that there was no extortion or robbery in his bandes, and that his prayer had beeene pure. Job addeth this (as I sayde) to signifie that such manner of affliction was straunge too him: For so hath hee spoken heereto fore. And surely whien so euer God afflieth vs, beholde what we must do, we must enter into our selues and examine our owne liues, and therupon according as we haue offended, so must we lament T.v. before before God, and say, Alas Lorde thou affliest mee sore in deede, but if I compare my faults, and wey them in the ballance with the aduersitie that I indure, Alas Lord I knowe I haue offended thee so many wayes, that if thou shouldest plundge me euen in heil, I were well worthie of it. Lo what we haue to doo. But if we perceyue not that God afflicteth vs for our sinnes, that is a verie sore temptation to vs. [And we fall to reasoning in our selues,] howe now? VVhat haue I trespassed? VVherefore doth God handle me so rigorously? I see hee sparingeth the wicked: I haue indeuered to serue him with a good and vpright conscience: In deed I come farre short of discharging my dutie throughly: But yet haue I euer kept on forward: and yet notwithstanding I am vsed as the vnhappiest and cursed creature that the earth beareth. And what is ment by this geare? Ye see heere a great temptation, and such a one as is able too dismaye vs, according as befell too Job. But what is too bee done in this behalfe? First let vs bee well advised that we may bee like too Job, so as wee may say that there is not extortio[n] in our handes. For it is an easie matter for a man to vaunte and bragge of his soundnesse, as we see that the wickeddest sort are not ashamed too doo. And nowe adayes if a man admonish them of their misdoings, O there is nothing but perfection in them, and the diuelishest of them all woulde bee esteemed as halfe Angelles. So then (as I sayde) let vs for out part serch throughly what is in vs without flatterie, and let vs not protest that wee haue cleane handes, except wee bee throughly like vntoo Job: and for perfourmance of that, 30 wee must not bee our owne iudges too iudge after oure owne fancies. After what maner is it that men ought to examine their liues, or in what fourme shoulde they frame their indytement? It must not bee with saying, I weene, I suppose, I take it so, or I weene not. All this stiffe must bee layde away. VVhat then? Let vs come too Gods lawe, and pray him too infligthen vs with hys holie spirite, that wee may throughly serche oure owne darkenesse, for the sinnes that are in vs are terrible lurkingholes. God therefore must be fayne to light vs vp a Cresset, and too giue vs wisedome and discretion to knowe and vnderstande our faultes in such wyse as wee may confessē them. Thus yee see what wee haue to doo. But let vs put the case that Gods handling of vs so is not for our sinnes, as in good sooth he ment no such thing towardes Job as too punish him for his deserthes. VVherefore did hee it then? Hee intended too tric his pacience. God then may afflict the good men more than the euill: according as wee see that Ezechie ll indured much more than the wickeddest that were in Ierusalem. 50 VVherein God had not a speciall eie to his sinnes. Howbeit although God punishe vs not according too oure sinnes, yet is not that as much too say as he may not doo it if hee list. If wee shoulde bee scourged a hundred tymes more than Job was, and that God woulde sende vs sorē aduersities than he sent him: Yet shoulde he not doo vs any wrong at all. Thus we see what wee haue to marke: ar.d therewithall it behoueth vs too knowe, that in so dooing God executeth his iudgements, which are concealed and kept from vs for a time. Beholde sometimes when hee chastizeth vs, it seemeth that hee were minded to destroy vs: and yet he doth it for our welfare. True it is that we knowe it not presently. But we shall knowe it when he discouereth that whiche is nowe hidēn. Againe, if Job were handled so roughly, notwithstanding that he had pure and cleane handes, as will appeare by the protestations that wee shall heare him make hereafter: I pray you ought we to woonder nowe adayes if God afflict vs: I say, vs that haue rebelled agaynst him so many wayes? Let every of vs a little be thinke himselfe: and we shall finde we haue committed so many iniquities and offences, as it is horrible. God afflicteth vs: but after what maner? Not as he did Job: he beareth with vs a great deale more. For hee giueth vs but a strype or twaine with a rodde. But put the case hee strake vs with great blowes of his swoorde: yet are not his strokes deadly. Then seeing it is sayde that Job was handled so rigorously, notwithstanding that hys handes were cleare, and his prayer right before God: let vs learne that if all the worlde were plagued after the same sort, there were no cause why they should woonder. VVhy so? For we are sure that iniquitie is as a water stound, and that as euery man feeleth it particularly in himselfe, so are weel of vs infected with vices in common. For who is hee that can say hee hath walked so vprigly, as hee may truly protest, that his handes bee cleare before God? Alas, hee commeth farre short. Then seeing it is so, let vs bee sure that whensoeuer wee indure any afflictions, the same is Gods punishment for our sinnes: and therefore, that wee may beare them patiently, let vs assure oure selues wee haue deserued much more. Neuerthelesse let vs bee bolde to flee vntoo our God, praying him too vouchsafe too clenze vs from all oure vnrightuousnesse, which is the cause of the miseries that wee endure in this present lyfe: and that it may please him to beare with our infirmities, and make vs feele his goodnessse, to the ende we may alwayes haue occasion to gloriſe him, euen vntill he haue dispached vs out of this flightfull life, too make vs partakers of his euerlasting glorie.

Nowe let vs fall downe before the presence of oure good God with acknowledgement of our faultes, praying him to make vs know them in such wise (so fare foorth as is expedient for vs) as that therewithall hee comfort vs by hys goodnessse, and so reforme vs by his holy spirite, as wee may not neede too bee persecuted roughly at his hand, but that assone as he giueth any inckling, we may bee throughly moued too humble our selues vnder him. And that it may please him to accept our prayers, not onely for our selues, but also for all those that haue neede in these dayes, according as we see howe sore the whole wretched worlde is plagued. VVherefore let vs beseech our good God too looke vpon it with the eye of pitie, that by reason of the spreading oute of his mercie vpon vs, and vpon all Nations of the earth, we may haue occasion too sounde foorth hys prayses euerie where. And so let vs say, Almighty God our heauenly father.&c.

19. For even now is my vvitnesse in heauen, and he that vvarranteth me is in the highest places, 20. My Frendes are Rhetoricians agaynst me, and mine eies poure out teares vnto God.

 22. Behold the short yeares slide avvay, and I enter into the vvay by the vwhich I shall not come backe againc.

Ob intending too make protestation of his owne vprightnesse, setteth downe heere twoo things. that is to wit, that he hath not delt amisse towardes men, and that hee hath called vpon God purely. And 10 that was by referring his life too the lawe, bicause that there our Lorde sheweth both how wee must serue him, and howe wee must be conuersant among men : insomuch that we bee often spoken to of it, and not without cause. For it is no small matter too be able too guide our life in such wise as it may please God. VVe see then what Iobs intent was : namely, [too shew that he had indeuered to serue God, and to walke with his neighbours without hurting or annoying of a ny bodie.] True it is that heere he setteth downe but two particulars. Howbeit his meening is to comprehend the whole. For when hee sayth there is no outrage nor excesse in his handes : it importeth as much as that he had liued withoute giuing any man cause too complaine of him, as who shoulde say, hee had not procured them any harme or losse. True it is that we may do some wrong and iniurie without any shewe of violence. But forasmuch as when men giue themselues too harmefulnesse, they start out of their boundes, and streyne themselues too rache one, too pill another, and too deuoure the 30 thirde : therefore Job purposly sayeth, that there had beeene no rauening in his handes. As much is ment by the seconde saying. For the seruing of God consisteth not onely in the exercise of prayer: But forsomuch as that is the cheefe poynt : vnder that particular, Job hath comprehended the whole. Nowe then wee see after what sorte oure life may bee allowable afore God : that is too witte, when it is duely referred too his lawe. For God will not haue men to liue after their owne swinge, nor too delight in this or that, as they thikke best themselues, nor too bee their owne iudges. But hee himselfe will haue the whole authoritie ouer vs, and that wee shoulde bee gouerned according too his worde. So then to the end that we labour not in vaine, let vs learne to walke according to Gods commaundement. Marke that for one poynt. Verely this is oftentimes shewed vs : but yet for all that wee see howe the worlde doth alwayes runne astraye, and men delight too muche in theyr owne fancies. Therefore it is not without cause that the holy Scripture dooth so often sende vs too this 40 poynt, that wee shoulde liue, not after our owne liking, but according as God hath commaunded. Againe, whereas vnder the woerde Prayer, heere is mention made of the whole seruice of God : wee ought too wey the same throughly. For the most part of men thinke not at all of praying vntoo God, and wee see howe the worlde dischargeth it selfe of it verie lightly. Neuerthelesse, when the Scripture speaketh of the honouring of God, the cheefest poynt of it which it setteth downe too vs, is prayer : and had this beeene obserued as it ought to be : the maner of praying had bene much more esteemed among men, so as they woulde not haue swarued one waye nor other, but haue followed that which the holy Scripture sheweth. But now clean contrarywise, it is come too passe that men haue taken such a scope in praying vntoo God, as there is no reckoning made of knowing what is good and profitable too bee prayed for, or in what maner : but every man steppes to it like blinde Bayarde , and commes not dutifullly vntoo God. And whence proceedeth this ouerweening ? Because wee take not prayer to bee a thing of so great estimation as it is. For if wee tooke it for the cheefe poynt of Gods Seruice , it is certaine that wee woulde go too it with farre greater hartinesse than we do. Againe wee see, that in steade of praying vntoo God , men are giuen to praying too Saincts deceased : and the worlde, which yeeldeth that thing to creatures which is peculiar vnto God, thinketh not the same to be otherwyse than good.

If a man aske the Papistes why they terme the Virgin Marie their hope of saluation, why they flee too her, and why every one of them hath his severall Sainct too bee his patron : if a man tell them it is blasphemie agaynst God : it is verie harde too make them beleue so. And why ? Because they never knewe nor tasted of that which the holy Scripture vittereth so diligently : that is too witte, that too serue God aright, it behoueth vs too pray vntoo him. Surely the greatest and honourablest seruice that hee requireth of vs, and the greatest and souerainest woorship that hee alloweth , is for vs to haue our recourse vntoo him. Nowe had the Papistes considered this : woulde it not haue yrked them to haue gone too a deade creature, and too say, I woorship God, or rather I yeelde him his due ? Prayer is the principall seruice that he requireth at our handes, and yet they will conuey the same ouer to a creature. Is not this a peruerting of the order of nature ? So much the better therefore ought we too marke throughly what is conteyned heere : that is too witte, that by this woerde prayer, Job ment to shew that he had serued God purely. And so if men wil now giue prooefe of their vprightnesse : let them not alledge their Gewgawes , as the hypocrites are wont too do, saying, Haue wee not fasted ? haue we not done this or that ? But wee muste vnderstande , that oure Lorde will haue vs ruled after his lawe , and hee wyl haue the whole authoritie ouer vs. Marke that for one poynt.

Furthermore wee haue also too note, that oure prayer shall neuer bee pure before God , nor acceptable vntoo him , vnlesse oure handes bee cleere from violence. And why ? If wee bee cruell and wrangling with our neigbours, God putteth vs backe, and wee haue no accessse vnto him. True it is that many doo giue the aduenture to pray vntoo God . and although they bee full of rauening, and haue troubled one, and tormented another: yet ceasse they not to bee hardie ynough too call vpon God. But surely their prayers are abominable, because theyr handes are stayned with bloud, that is to say, with wicked doings. And heere ye see also why God complayneth by his Prophete Esay, that the Iewes came to weare the pauement of his Temple : And so he mocketh them, meening that hee lyketh not of their coming too hys Temple, and of their making of resemblance as though theyment too woorshippe him. Fot (sayth he) your handes are full of bloud: that is to say, ye haue not ceased to annoy & to hurt your neighbors. Now thinke you that I will giue you accessse to mee, or that I will haue any acquaintance with you ? Thus yee see in effecte what wee haue too consider in this sentence. And nowe Job addeth, O earth, hyde not my bloud, neyther let my teares take place. Some haue misinterpretid this sentence, that the earth hydeth not the bloud. For

For they vnderstoode it that Job shoulde wishe too haue his miseries knowne, and that forasmuch as hee was afflited after so excessiue a fashion, hee desired that hys bloud might not be hidden, but that the earth might crie for vengeance of it. But too what purpose were that? He was not plagued by men. And ment hee that the earth shoulde aske vengeance agaynst God? Againe on the other side, the text declareth it selfe anon after: And needes must a man shet his owne eies if he wil be ouerseene in so easie a matter. For Job heere toucheth two poynts. 10 The one is in these wordes, O earth, bide not my bloud, and the other is in these, neyther let my cries take place. VVhat meeneth hee by wishing that his cries shoulde not take place? It is as much to say, as when hee hath overlaboured himselfe in crying and turmoylng, it shall bee but labour lost, because God refuseth it. And that if hee come to men, he shall gaine nothing by it. Sith the cace standeth so, wee may easily conclude, that in saying, O earth, bide not my bloud, he graunteth that if he haue done amisse, the matter shall come to account and iudgement, 20 and all his whole lyfe shall be layde afore him, and hys indytment shall bee framed with extremitie, and God will handle him according to his deserts. And doubtlesse, in the holy Scripture the worde Bloud, is oftentimes taken for all horrible crimes. [As for example.] Lorde deliuer me from bloud: that is too say, Lorde deliuer mee from all the deadly sinnes that I haue committed. VVherefore wee see that Job in this place termeth all the transgressions and crymes that he might haue committed, by the name of his Bloud. And that is according to his matter. For he had sayde that his handes were cleare from rauin. And for a confirmation thereof he addeth, that if God finde him guiltie in any thing whatsoeuer it bee, he is contented that the same shall come to light and to account, and that his sinnes should bee no longer concealed, but that God shoulde bring them abrode: and that when he is throughly examined, if he be found faultie, he is contented that God shoulde shewe him no fauour nor mercie. And afterwarde he sayth, that although hee sige and shreeke, yet notwithstanding let it not boote him, but let all his outries be lost, so as it may seeme that Gods eares are stopped. Now we see what Jobs meening is. And heere we haue to call to minde a thing that hath beene treated of afore: that Jobs raging is bicause hee looketh not at Gods soueraine iustice, which is so perfect and exquisite, as no creature is able to stande wyth it, no not even the Angelles, as hath beene sayde heretofore. For had Job looked well vpon that, it woulde haue hilde him in awe, so as he shoulde never haue made such protestations. Moreouer we must call to remembrance that Jobs intent is not to iustifie himself, as though he were vtterly innocent: but he looketh at the respect why God shoulde punishe him: which was not that hee had deserued it, as men are commonly punished for their misdeedes. Also God had another respect: that is to wit, he ment to set him forth as a mirrour to all men, and to trie his pacience. Job then meeneth not too declare heere that his life was wholly pure, and that he had never done amisse: but his meening is that God punishest him as rigorously as if he were a wicked eaytif, and had led a more licencious life than all other men. Lo heere in effect what we haue to beare away. But as for vs, let vs assure our selues that if God plague vs, it is for our sinnes. And although our conscience witnessed that we desire to serue and honour him, yea even without hypocrisie: yet notwithstanding wee shall come farre short of being so cleare as wee ought to bee, and wee shoulde bee founde indaungered a hundred thousande wayes.

Therefore let euerie man looke neerely to himselfe, and when we knowe our faultes best, let vs be sure that God knoweth a hundred times more by vs than wee our selues doo. For if wee knowe some one fault, is not God more sharpe fighted, as sayth Saint John in his Cononiall Epistle? So then, let vs learne to humble our selues and to beseech God to hide our faultes. For it behoueth vs to come backe to that which is sayde in the two and thirtie Psalme: namely, Blessed is the man whose sinnes the Lorde couereth, and whose iniquities hee calleth not to remembrance. If God discouer our faultes, we must all ofvs perish, yea euen the perfectest. So then the onely refuge of our welfare, is to pray vnto God too hide all our transgressions, that they may not come too account before him. For if hee intende to iudge them, there is no shifft but hel must be prepared for vs. Furthermore, let vs desire God to hearken to our cries, ynworthishough they bee. For if God delay the graunting of our requestes till wee haue serued him in all perfc&tion: alas, what shall become of vs? There shall not bee any one but the gate shall be shetagaynst him, so as hee shall haue no entrance vnto God. Our cries therefore muste be receyued, notwithstanding that we haue deserued too be shaken of. Neuerthelesse, it behoueth vs to do our indeuer, to liue quietly with our neighbours, that wee may haue Gods fauour, and finde him such a one towardes vs as we desire. VVhy so? For it is written, iudgement Iam. 2.c. 13. without mercie shall hee haue, that hath beene mercilesse. Ye see how Saint James tellet vs that God will deale rigorously with vs, if wee haue no pitie and compassion vpon oure neighbours heere. VVhat thing can betide vs so dreadfull, as when God handleth vs rigorously? And contrariwise where is there any hope for vs to conceyue, but in Gods vsing of his infinite goodnesse, which he sheweth in not imputing our sinnes to vs? A- Pro. 21.b.13. gaine Salomon sayth, that he which stoppeth his eare at the crying of the poore, shall crie himselfe and not bee hearde. Then if our neighbours be in aduersitie, and desire our ayde, and yet notwithstanding we be deafe, so as we shake them of, yea and (which worse is) we also torment them: needes must we feele this vengeance, that God shall make vs to crie, yea and bring vs to such an after deale as we wote not where to become, and yet for all that shall not hearken to vs. Therefore (as I haue sayd alreadie) if we will haue God mercifull to vs, let vs beware that we haue compassion of such as are in aduersitie, and that we succour them: and let vs keepe our selues from all crueltie and outrage, least the thing that is written be performed vpon vs: which is, that the same measure shal be moten to vs which we mote to our neighbours. Thus ye see in effect what we haue to marke in this sentenee. Nowe there followeth immediately after. Also now I see my witnessē in heauen, and bee that warranteth mee is in the highest places. My friendes play the oratours agaynst mee, and mine eyes gush out teares vnto God. Heere Job appealeth vnto God as the onely competent iudge, because he had beene wrongfully condemned by men. And he doubteth not to appeale vnto God, forasmuch as hee knowes his cace is good. True it is (as I haue sayde alreadie) that he misshandleth his cace: howbeit in so doing he had iust cause to mainteync his owne soundnesse. Yee see then that the cause why he is not afrayd to appeale vnto God, is for that hee seeth that men do persecute him wrongfully. But let vs consider what a one Job was, too the intent wee vse not such rashe boldnesse as most men do. VVhen the matter cometh to calling of god to witnesse, I pray you who is hee that maketh any cursie or conscience at it? The world nowe adayes is full of forswearing, and

and there is no faylfulnesse in it. VVhereof commes this: It is because we haue no feeling of Gods iustice, but wee come rushing agaynst his seate like wilde beastes. For what is periurie or forswearing? It is a spiting of God, as though he had neyther might nor authoritie to punishe vs. VVee cannot denie but it is so when wee call God to bee our witnesse and iudge. Hee therefore that swareth falsely, dooth mocke Gods maiestie too his face: and yet for all that wee see that men make not much account of it. Then is it apparant heereby, that 10 wee beare small reuerence too the Maiestie of God. VVherefore so muche the more ought wee too marke that which I sayde: namely, that wee muste not bee so bolde in protesting before God, and in calling him too recorde: but wee muste go too it as if wee were at the poynt to yelde an account before him. After the same maner was Job sommoned, as wee haue seene heeretoo fore, and shall see more yet fully hereafter. Nowadayeys if a man bee accused of any crime, althoughe hee bee taken tardie, yea and vterly conuincid: yet will hee 20 make no conscience too say, God is my witnesse that I am wronged, and falsely accused. And howe happeneth it that Gods name is so ryfe in mens mouthes? Also when the hypocrites will magnifie themselues, they will alwayes say; God is priuie too my hart, he knoweth what I am, I referte my case too him. And howhappeneth this? Doo we thinke, that bycause God wynketh at men, when they call him so to recorde, as it were too false standarde larum, and punisheth not those at the first dashe which doo so dallie with him: therefore hee 30 will not at length shewe that which hee hath vttered in his lawe, that is too witte, that hee will not suffer hys name too bee taken so in vaine, but will reuendge the wrong that is done him in offering him so great reproch as too scorne his Maiestie after that sort? Then let vs marke well that as oft as wee muste come before God, it behoueth vs too haue examined oure life after the example of Job, and that wee bee not so rashe as to stepp soorth too say, God is my witnesse: but that wee haue throughly searched oure consciences, and that God answere within vs, that hee alloweth them. Marke that for one poynt.

And heerewithall wee haue further to marke, that if all the worlde beare vs recorde, it is nothing till God haue allowed it. And heereby we bee warned not too dispose oure lyfe too any fayre outwarde shewe, as we see howe there is nothing but vaingloriousnesse alwayes in the worlde. If men clappe their handes at vs, and wee bee in good estimation among them: it is y-nough for vs, and wee woulde sayne that God shoulde 50 content himselfe with it too. Yea but hee is not lyke mortall men, as the holie Scripture sheweth. And why? VVee see the outwarde appearance: but God searcheth that which is hidden within, and hath an eie too truth and vprightnesse, as hee speaketh by his Prophete Ieremie, accordingly too the other text in Samuell. Seeing it is so, let vs learne too knowe that it behoueth vs not only to haue our handes, our eyes and feete cleane, neither must wee thinke oure selues too haue done much, when our sinnes are not manifest. And why? For the 60 cheefe poynt is to haue our recorde in heauen: that is to say, that God allowe of oure doings, as I haue declared alreadie. VVhat maner of allowance must we haue before God? Verely that wee haue walked in purenesse of harte, that there hath not beeene any hypocrise in vs, and that wee haue not only had some outwarde shewe so as wee might say the worlde cannot charge mee with this or that: but that wee haue had a right meening minde, that wee haue continued in good doeing, and that wee haue indeuered so to behauie our selues, as if God marked not onely all oure woorkes, but also oure thoughtes too. Marke yet further what we haue to beare away in this sentence. Bebolde (sayth Job) euen now is my record in heauen. Under this worde Euen or Also, he comprehendeth, that he may well take men to witnesse with him, but hee passeth yet further, and commeth euen unto God. And that ought too bee weyed. For where as hypocrites call God too witnesse, they dare not put themselues too the tryall of men. If there bee a wicked perfone that is notoriously knowne too bee such a one, so hee be not cast in prison, or so hee bee not a drawing too the Gallowes, hee will bring of his honestie too the vttermoste: and yet in the meane whyle euerie man will condemne him, yea and in steade of three or foure Judges, hee shall haue a hundred or a thousande. For euerie man will say, marke mee yonder naughtipacke, marke mee yonder Theefe, marke mee yonder murtherer, marke mee yonder extortioner, yonder swearer, yonder despizer of God. And yet for all this, suchemaner of men are so shamelesse, that they make no bones too take God too recorde of their honestie, and too protest that hee knoweth them, and that they bee readie too answere before him, whereas if the matter come but to the tryall of men, they should haue a thousande voyces too condemne them, as I haue touched alreadie. And howe dare they then presente themselues before God? Bycause they conceyue not hys Maiestie. Lo why wee ought too wey well thys woerde Euen, sayth Job. For hee presupposeth that he may call men to recorde, and that euerie man will beare witnesse with him, that hee had so behaued himselfe as that hee had beeene an eye too the blinde, a gardian too the fatherlesse, a defender of the widdowes, that hee had serued in steade of legges to the Cripplles, and that his hande had never beeene shette too the poore, as wee see hee maketh his protestations afterwarde. For Job had walked in suche wise afore men, as hee sayeth hee might come euen before God also, whiche is a greate Chapt. 29. 6. thing. Also wee see howe hee magnifieth heere the witnesse of heauen. And by this it is well to be coniectured, 12. Ch. 31. b. 17. Ch. 21. that hee flung not out at aduenture too iustifie himselfe with vnbredled libertie as these mockers doo, who protest with their mouth that God knoweth them, and yet their life is so vil anous as the verie ayre stinketh of it, and the verie babes can skill to speake of it. Thus ye see what we haue to marke in this text. Afterwarde hee addeth, that his frendes playde the Orators agaynst him: and that in the meane whyle his eyes poured out teares afore God. Heere Job sheweth why hee is faine to referte himselfe to Gods iudgement: namely, bycause he findeth no reason nor vprightnesse among men. Surely it is a verie great temptation when wee bee plagued, and that the worlde taketh vs to bee forsaken of God: for it is a policie of the devils to drive vs to dispayre. VVhen a poore man is smitten with Gods roddes, the miserie that he indureth is heauie ynough of it selfe: nowe if one come and lay a double loade vpon his backe, by calting him in the teeth howe it appeareth plainly that hee is vterly forsaken of God: it is ynough to overwhelme him. For I speake not of the wicked stubborne sort whome God plagues for their sinnes: but I speake of such as haue walked vprightly, and yet notwithstanding God hath not missed to affil them. True it is that they haue wel deserued it: but hee hath not alwayes an eye vntoo that. Nowe and then hee intendeth to mortifie them for the time to come. Bicause they be not yet suffisiently tamed,

be is fa[n]ce to cut away all the lewde affections that are in them. And furthermore he will haue them learne that it is needfull for them to pray vnto him and too put their whole trust in him: and finally hee will haue their pacience shewed. Thus ye see that a good man, which tendeth to Godwarde and walketh plainly, shall notwithstanding haue great plagues. Nowe is that a proofe that God taketh him to bee a greater sinner than other men. No surely. And yet if a man shoulde threape that vpon him, it were ynough to cast him into dispayre. But so 10 was Job deelt with. Then let vs marke well, that the sayd temptation is hard and burthenosome, and therefore let vs resort to the remedie that we must vse, that is to wit, that we present our selues before God, without tying of our selues ouermuch vntoo men, according as Job hath discoursed heere afore. My frendes (sayth he) play the O[r]ators agaynst mee. Hee meeneth that they which ought to haue comforted him, and partly to haue asswaged his greefe, haue taken pleasure to mocke at him. For this Rhetoricke whereof he speaketh, is nothing else but that they had fyled their tongues to mocke at him, too vexe him, and too put him besides himselfe. This happened vnto Job, to the ende it shoulde bee an example vnto vs. Therefore whensoeuer it shall please God too affi[n]ct vs; if the worlde iudge amisse of vs, and diuerse take occasion too condemne vs, as though oure minde had neuer beene rightly disposed: let vs take all paciently, assuring our selues that when our Lorde stirreth vp men after that sort agaynst vs, and Satan practyzeth too cast vs quite downe, the same is a part of oure Crosse, and 20 we muste seeke too remedie the mischeefe in such wise as Job sheweth vs. And how is that? Oure eyes muste poure out teares vnto God. VVhy so? VVee see men come too vexe vs after that sort; and therefore wee woulde encounter them too drive them backe. And howe? O, they doo mee great wrong, and it is a greate cruetie too handle me after this maner. True it is that wee maye well make such protestation: but wee muste not stande too muche vpon that poynt, wee muste but glaunce at it, yea and it must bee done to another ende: 30 namely, as sorie that men shoulde take occasion of stumbling at vs. But to the intent wee be not an example of euill, let vs say thus. Beholde, although men iudge euill of mee, yet haue I endeuered too serue G[od]. Neuerthelesse, this conceyte muste glyde away lightly, for wee neuer bethinke vs of Gods iudgements, neyther doo wee enter intooure owne consciences, so long as we pleade after that sort with men. VVe see this vice to bee ouer common. Therefore let vs remember this lesson that is shewed vs heere: that is to wit, that our eyes must shew out teares before God. And how? By lifting vp our eyes aloft. For when we see men so malicious towardes vs, that wee can drawe no reason ouute of them, though it be easie for them to iudge of our life, and that wee haue not done any thing worthie of blame: let vs learne to resort vnto God, and to be content to haue him for our warrant. Thus yee see wherevnto Job leadeth vs when wee followe his example duly. And hereby also it is shewed vs more plainly, wherefore he made the protestations which we haue heard not long since. And so 40 his complaing in this sentence, is because men condemned him wrongfully. But let vs nowe proceed further. He wisheth that it were lawfull for him to plead with God as a mortall man doth with bis equal. But (sayth he) the short dayes shal dearray, and I enter into the way by which I shal not come backe againe. VVhen Job wisheth that it were lawfull for him to plead with God, it is according to that which we haue scene alreadie. For hereby he sheweth that his chafing is because the miserie that hee endured was so greeuous as he coulde not beare it any more. But in so doing hee did amisse. It is not for vs to accuse Job in all poynts: but let vs haue an eye to that which I haue sayde, namely, that whereas he had a good matter, yet he was caryed away and overshot himselfe [in the handling of it.] And why was that? For had hee knowne his owne transgresions, and the faultes that hee had committed, he had submitted himselfe quietly to Gods will, and not entered into any pleading or faultfinding. Hee had sayde afore, howe hee knewe that the Angelles were Chapt. 6.4.2 not cleare before God: and that there was suche a perfect rightuousnesse in God, as that all that euer the creatures can bring, must of necessarie bee nought woorth: insomuch that if the brightness of the Sunne do dimme the Starres, muche rather muste Gods rightuousnesse swallowe vp all the rightuousnesse that wee suppose our selues too haue. Job therefore spake after that maner. But if hee had well remembred the sayde consideration [of Goddes rightuousnesse:] hee woulde not haue so overshotte himselfe as too say, I woulde it were lawfull for mee too go too lawe with God. But (as I haue touched alreadie) albeeit that hee knewe this doctrine: yet was his passion so vehement, as hee forgate himselfe. And hereby wee bee warned, so too beare awaie the things which we reade in the holy Scripture, as we may learne too brydle oure passions when wee bee tempted too impaciencie or any other vice: and as the thing that wee haue learned by Gods woerde, may bee sufficient too drawe vs from the trouble that rizeth vp agaynst vs. Saint Paule sayeth that the Gospell is of power to subdue all things that lift vp themselues agaynst God. Be-

holde our wittes, beholde our fleshly affections, and see howe they lift vp themselues agaynst God, and bid him battell. VVhat is too bee done? They must bee hilde in captiuitie, that is too say, whatsoeuer it bee that wee finde in vs, and in our nature too bee agaynst God and his doctrine, wee muste subdue it by force. Thus yee see a perfect constancie wherein it behoueth vs to continue. Therefore when wee fall to disputing of this and that, and specially when wee come too encountering: let vs shrinke downe meekely like sillie sheepe, and let vs alwayes conclude: God is my iudge, and there is nothing to bee founde fault withall in him: though I had libertie too pleade, yet shoulde my case quayle: for I coulde not alledge one poynt for my selfe, but he would alledge a thousande agaynst mee. Yee see then that wee must glorifie God without standing in contention with him, yea even although it were lawfull for vs to pleade for our selues. And heere yee see also why our Lorde (of purpose too conuince men the more) dooth nowe and then say, Go to, let vs go to lawe together: as hee dooth cheefely by his Prophete Esay. I am content (sayth he) Esay. 1.6.18. to go to lawe with you, let vs haue a iudge or an vmp[er], and let it bee tryed who hath wrong, or who hath right. VVherof can ye accuse me? VVhat harme haue I done you? But contrarywise, I can accuse you of such points and such. It is out of all doubt, that there is no iudge betweene God and vs. VVhy then vseth hee such maner of speach? Hee letteth himselfe downe from his Majestie and highnesse, and sheweth that if he were a creature, and that there were an vmp[er] or dayesman appoyneted, so as he should bee fayne too abide another bodyes iudgement: yet could not men cleare themselues of that which hee had to alledge agaynst them. VVee see then that Gods vsing of this maner of speech, as though hee were a mortall man, or were clad with our person: is to shew vs that he plagueth vs not like a Tyrant, ne dealeth with

Psa. 51. a. 6. with vs by absolute authoritie, as the Popishe diuines haue fumized, which is a diuelish doctrine. God vseth no such absolute power, that is to say, no lawlesse power (as they terme it) which shoulde bee separated front hys rightfulness. But he vseth all vprightnesse, insomuch that all mouthes muste bee stopped before him. Hath hee condemned vs? Hee will bee founde righteous in iudging, as it is sayde in the one and fiftie Psalme. True it is that wee will haue false and wrongfull verdites, and make many allegations agaynst it: but in the ende 10 God shall bee founde righteous, yea euen too oure confuzion. VVhat remayneth then? VVee muste humble and meeken oure selues, too acknowledge that all Gods iudgements are rightfull, notwithstanding that vntoo vs they seeme contrarie. Furthermore let vs not go aboue too diminishe his Maiestie, neyther let vs say, I woulde that God were a mortall man as I am, and that I had too deale with my matche. But let Gods Maiestie bee continued still in full state: for lyeth it in vs too imbace it? And is it not a cursed blasphemie too 20 attempt it? Surely Iobs intent was not to blaspheme: for had hee beeene of that minde: Satan had caryed him quite and cleane away. But (as I sayde) he bewrayeth his owne passions, wherevntoo hee consented not. Then had hee the first moouing too it, and by and by hee did cutte it off. And so when it commeth in oure mynde too lift vp our selues agaynst God, because hys hande seemeth too lye too heauie vpon vs: let vs by and by turne backe and restreyne the vnruley affections, affuring oure selues that God hath iust cause too punishe vs a hundred tymes more roughly than hee doorth, if hee listed. Yee see then in what wise it behoueth men too humble themselues, and too acknowledge God too bee their soueraine iudge: and therewithall not to faile too take holde of his mercie, assuring themselues that inasmuch as hee is the wellspring of all goodnesse: hys Maiestie wyll not bee to terrible too vs, but that hee will looke vpon vs with pitie, and knowing oure infirmities, will beare with them. And in very deede we know hee hath giuen vs a good pawne, and a good assurance of it in oure Lorde Iesus Christ, whome hee hath made oure judge, too the intent wee might finde mercie in him, as in the partie that sheweth himselfe oure redeemer and aduocate.

Nowe let vs cast our selues downe in the presence of our good God with acknowledgement of oure sinnes, praying him to make vs feele them in such wise, that being ashamed of the, we may flee no whither else for succor but to his mercie, and that we may know how needful the same is for vs, and therupon imbrace it. And therewithall also let vs learne to be displeased with our selues for our sinnes, so as we flatter not our selues in them, as we haue beeene woont to do: but that we may bee more and more clenched from all our owne filthiness, and bee clothed ouer with his righteousnesse, which is as yet but a little begonne in vs. That it may please him to graunt this grace, not onely to vs, but also to all people and Nations of the earth, &c.

The lxv. Sermon, which is the first vpon the xvij. Chapter,

This Sermon is yet still vpon the last verse of the xvij. Chapter, and then vpon the text that followeth.

- MY breath is vnsauerie, my dayes are at an ende, and the graues are vpon mee.
 2. There are dallyers vwith me, and mine eye abydeth in their bitterness.
 3. I pray thee lay downe a guage, giue a pledge for thec: vwho is he that vvil touch in my hande?
 4. Because thou hast couered their hart, that they can haue no vnderstanding, thou vvilt not exalt them.
 5. Verely as for those that speake flatteries to their freends, the eies of their children shall fayle.

After that Job had made protestation of his innocencie (as we haue seene:) hee addeth that the same booteth him not, and that hee seeth himselfe in maner forlorne. I go (sayth hee) into the path wherby I shall neuer returne againe. And anon he addeth a complaint of the shortnesse of our life, mearning thereby that God ought to handle men lesse rigorously, seeing they do but passe away ouer the earth. Afterward he confirmeth his matter newe againe, saying, that his breath is vnsauerie or his breath is quite spent, and bee bath no more lustiness in him, so that there remaineth nothing for him but the graue: on which side soever he turn him he seeth present death, and hee is hemmed in rounde about, so as he cannot scape the graue that is prepared for him. Ye see in effect what Job meeneth. Surely as in respect of his motherwitte, hee could not perceiue but that God was minded to dispatch him quite and cleane. But hee might haue looked higher, according as wee knowe that euen in the extremitie of death, the faythfull must still hope for life, and so comfort themselues in their tribulations, as they may not doubt but God will giue them a good ende. Moreouer God not onely giueth vs wherwith to comfort oure selues in our tribulations, but also whereof to glorie and triumph, assuring our selues that the same shall turne to our saluation. Job then speaketh not here throughly like a faithful man: no, but (as I haue sayde alreadie) hee vittereth his passions, as euery one of vs findeth by experiance in himselfe that although hee rest vpon Gods promises, and comfort himselfe wyth them: yet notwithstanding he ceaseth not to be disquieted and troubled in himselfe. VVe shall not ouercome temptations at the first push: but wee must bee fayne to fight with great force and difficultie. VVhen wee haue suche a battell, wee maye well say with Job, that we see nothing but the Graue, that our breath is forespent, that oure lyueliness is cutaway, and that there is no more recouerie. VVe may then say so: yea for ought that we see: howbeit assoone as we haue espyed out our miseries and felt them, wee must lift vp our selues higher vntoo Godwarde, and not doubt but hee will delyuer vs, yea and make that thing turne too oure profite, whiche wee thinke to bee too our harme. Yee see then in effect, after what sort wee muste practize thys sentence: that is to wit, first of all when any of vs is in suche distresse as hee woteth not what too say, ne seeth any ende of hys case: well, wee muste not therefore beeastonied, though according too the fleshe wee dreade present death, and God seeme too haue forsaken vs, and will helpe vs no more. And why? VVe see that Job came too the like distresse, and yet notwithstanding he ceassed not to beleue that God woulde haue pitie of him in the ende, after hee had fought a good while, neither doubted hee of the victorie. Yee see then that our owne feblenesse ought not too bee any discomfort vnto vs. But assoone as we feele such impedimentes, let vs cast our eye vpon God, and say: well, wee must bee fayne to passe heere through the pathe whereby neuer man returneth againe, according to the course of kinde. Yea but hath not God promised his seruantes too holde them by the hande in the middes of death? Yes: then 10

lyfe intoo his handes, too the ende wee may bee sure of it. Seeing then that it pleaseth God too be the keeper of oure lyfe, let vs walke on our course wythoute ouermuch carefulnesse. Againe, though there were a thousande deathes readie too swallowe vs vp: God is strongynough too piucke vs out of them, as it is sayde in the Psalme, that it is hee that hath the issues or outgoings of death in his hande: that is too say, hee hath the meanes whereby too deliuers vs, yea euen although the same bee incomprehensible too vs. Neuerthelesse, let vs heereby take warning too bee always readie too depart oute of the worlde, and not be to much wedded to our beeinge here belowe. For what shoulde wee gaine by it? So then let vs alwayes haue the one foote lifted vp as if wee shoulde enter intoo oure grave, and let vs go lustily too it, making this conclusion with our selues, that wee go not thither too taie there for euer, but that oure Lorde hath shewed vs in the persone of our Lorde Iesus Christ, that hee will not haue vs too perishe in death nor too abide in rottennesse for euer: But let vs proceede further. It is sayde, Of a trutb, there bee Dalliers with mee, and mine eye continueth in their bitternesse.

Heere Iob findeth fault with those that came too comforthe him, and did nothing else but put him too more trouble. He termeth them Dallyers, that scoffe at folke in aduersitie, because they came not too iudge of hys affliction with compassion ar d humanitie as they ought too haue done: and so he addeth that they coulde bring nothing but vexation too greeue him the more, and that hee was fayne too beholde still the miserie and bitternesse that they had procured him. And heereby we be aduertised, that if wee will comfort the sorrowfull and afflited aright: wee muste not come with an vnkindely harte as it were of steele or of yron, but wee must be pitifull. Then must not a man thinke himselfe meete too comfort such as are in trouble and incomberance, except hee cloth himselfe with their passions: that is to say, except hee do as it were put himselfe intoo their case. It is true. For suche as too their owne seeming are stoute

40 good, if they come but with tongue and with brauerie of gay woordes. They may well discourse of matters: but it shal bee to no purpose. For it is impossible for vs too vse the doctrine that shall bee fitt to asswage the greeves of our neighbours, vnlesse wee feele them, and bee touched with them oure selues. Therefore let vs marke well by the woerde Dallyers, that all suche as are churlishe or vnkinde, can by no meane comforthe those that are encumbered with tribulation. Marke that for one poynt.

Againe, seeing wee knowe that it behoueth vs to bee pitifull towarde suche as suffer any miserie: let vs be thinke vs howe it is sayde in the Psalme. Blessed is the man that hathe consideration of the poore, God will deliuers him in the day of his aduersitie. For it is to doo vs towit that it behoueth vs to haue a singular discretion too iudge aright of the aduersities of oure neighbours, and that wee muste followe the same discrete dealing whiche God sheweth vs and giueth vntoo vs. For wythout that, wee shall go cleane contrarie too woorke, and if a man bee plagued, wee shall holde talke with him ouerthwartly without any discretion. Then must God giue vs vnderstanding too deeme aright of other folkes afflictions.

And herevpon when we come to comfort such as indure any aduersitie, specially if it bee to shew them their faultes: let vs not go to it sharply as it were to set oure foote vpon their throte when they be downe, but rather

Againe, haue wee not Iesus Christ for oure guyde? Then let vs go to death. Doo wee not knowe howe it is the entrie whereby too come too the glorie of heauen? Seeing that the resurrection was ioyned too the death of Gods sonne, was not that also too assure vs that God will not suffer vs too continue in rottennesse? Knowe wee not that that which is written in the sixteenth Psalm was fulfilled in him: namely that God preserued him from rotting, too the ende that wee shoulde bee made free from it, and drawne quite oute of it at length? Seeing then that wee haue such promises at Goddes hande, and suche assurance in the persone of oure Lorde Iesus Christ, wee ought too fight [manfully] agaynst the dreadfulness of death. Lo in effect what we haue to remember in this streyne. Heerewithall wee bee also put in mynde of the brittleness of oure lyfe. My breth is forspent sayth Iob. And in good sooth what is the lustiness of all men? It is but a blast. Againe, were oure life as long as we would wishe: yet were it but a little start. Then are the yeares but fewe in number, as in respect of mannes life. All the lustiness that wee haue in it is but as a thing that is so wythered as it fadeth away. Seeing it is so, let vs learne, not too oversleepe oure selues here, knowing that God in shewing vs howe fayrely wee bee in this worlde, giueth vs occasion too thinke vppon him, and too seeke for the heauenly life, and not too torment oure selues out of measure, sith wee see that oure life goeth too decay, and by little and little fadeth vitterly. Therefore let vs not bee greeued at it. And why? Assoone as God settelth vs in this worlde, hee telijeth vs it is too the entent wee shoulde passe swifly away, and as it were too make but a turne heere. Is it meete then that we should settle heere as though it seemed that our life were very strong, and in no wise to be misliked? This is the thing which wee haue yet too remember in this sentence. Also it is to be noted vpon this worde Graues, that wee bee besiegged, not with any one kinde of death, but with many. VVe haue but one life, 50 yea and the same is verye flightfull, consisting in one blast which is nothing. But if we looke neerely about vs, whole hundreds of deathes beset vs rounde aboute. And so yee see why Icb vseth the plurall number Graues. It had beenynough for him too haue sayde the graue is prepared for mee, I cannot escape: but hee sayeth The graues are prepared for mee. And needeth one man any more than one pitte? No: but Iob meeneth, that assone as hee were neuer so little passed oute of one death, another shoulde wayte for him, yea and another after that, and too bee short, hee shoulde bee fayne too perishe, thoughe hee had passed neuer so many daungers. True it is that wee come not all intoo suche extremities as Iob was at. But yet is there none of vs that findeth not himselfe in the same case: that is too say, that hee hath but one lyfe among a number of deathes that are readie for vs. VVhat is too bee done then? VVe muste learne too pray vntoo God, and too betake oure let vs haue a mind and desire to releue them and help them vp. But aboue all things we must beseeche God to giue vs the spirit of vnderstanding as I sayd. Moreover this thing must also be practized : that is to wit, when any of vs is in trouble, he must haue a care to apply the holie scripture to such vse as he may bee comforted by it. VVhyso? For we bee offended if a man commeth to stinge vs, and to heape vp yet more trouble vpon vs when we be in aduersitie already : and wee will soone say it is a greate cruetie, and that there is no honestie and good dealing in men, when they handle vs after that sort: and yet for all that, every one of vs will do the like too himself. As how? If I bee in any heauiness and take the holie scripture to comfort me with, I bethink mee not to take the texts that shuld do it : but rather if I meete with any threatening, in stead that the scripture should make mee feele some taste of Gods goodnesse to my cōfort in him, and assuge all my sorrowes: I set my self on fire, and increase my greef more and more. See then how we overshotel ourselues because we haue not the skill to cōfort our selues as we ought to do, and as God would we shold do. And therfore not only let vs haue pitie & cōpassion of our neyghbours when they be in aduersitie: but also let every of vs looke to himself, to comfort and assuge his owne sorrowes aright, when he lighteth into such extremitie. Now it foloweth that Job desyreteth God to lay downe a gage, and to giue a pledge, or to put in a suretie. VVho is he (layeth Job) that wil touch [me] in my hand? He returneth too the matter that was declared yesterday, which is that he would faine go too lawe with God, yea 30 and do it as with his fellowe or his equall. For why demaundeth he a gage? why demaundeth he a suretie or warrantize? It is bycause he would haue God too abace himself from his majestie: as if he should say, Surely so long as thou continuest in thy greatnessse, I dare not come to dispute against thee, for thou art ouermightie to confound mee. But giue mee leaue to talk with thee, lay me downe a gage, bynd thy self to abyde tryall, and submit thyself too the auuthorite of a iudge, in case as if a man that is no dweller in a place, should hyre a house and put 40 in sureties for it. VVhat Job meeneth by saying, VVho is he that wil touch mee in the hand? It is as much too say, as who is he that will vndertake too bee suretie for thee? For men vsed that ceremonie: and like as now adayes men signe a paper in the hand of a iudge or of a notarie: so in those dayes the parties touched one another in the hand, too giue their fayth and too bynd them selues. Ye see then what Iobs meening was. But yee would knowe whither this demaund of his were to bee excused, in that he desired God that he might please against him? It is verie certain that it was not too bee excused. For (as I touched glaucingly yesterday) we ought too desire, nothing more, than too come before God, and too haue him too be our iudge, yea and that he should handle vs as he listeth him self. True it is that if he should vtter his rigour against vs, there were no shifft but we should be confounded. VVo be too those wretched creatures that come too bee judged rigorously, and without mercy. But forasmuchas God loueth vs, too receyue vs through the forgiuenesse of our 60 sinnes which he offereth vs, and sheweth himself too be at one with vs in our Lord Iesus Chryst, and pronoun- ceth all them blissted whose sinnes are forgiuen: when we heare of these things, can we wish a better case than to come before the face of him that taketh away our sinnes, and casteth them behynd his backe, and intoo the bottom of the Sea as it is sayd? And specially let vs looke vpon our Lord Iesus Christ, too whom all power of judgement is giuen, which serueth too maynteyne our case; and he is our aduocate. Think wee not that he will make the bitter death auayable which hee indured for vs? So then, if men were as well aduyzed as they ought to be: there were nothing too bee more wished, than too be iudged at Gods hand, at leastwise so they had recourse to his mercye, and yeelded them selues intoo the hands of our Lord Iesus Christ, who will not judge vs to our condemnacion, but rather acquit vs. And why? For in that behalf wee may say with Sanct Paule, It is God that acquitteth vs, who shall condemne vs? VVho shall accuse vs seing, that Iesus Christ is our aduocate that defendeth our case, and the partie that answereth for vs before God his father? Shall wee now feare too bee accused or condemned? But what? Job hath vttered himself heere, in such wise as hee found himself turmoyled with his owne passions and tormēts: and hereby wee be taught to reppresse our owne naughtiness. VVhyso? For we see what the inordinatenesse of our nature is. If we giue our affections head, where too must wee come? Job desyreteth too go to lawe with God. Alas, and can he preuayle in his fute? No, he desireth to be vtterly ouerwhelmed. As much would we doo, were it not that God restreyneth vs by giuing vs the grace to subdue our passions. Then let vs marke well, first that when men suffer themselues too be carried away by their fleshly affections, they overshotel themselues so farre, and become so hardharted, as they make no bones to rush against God: and that is a horrible thing. For there is not that man of vs which abhorreth not to aduaunce himself after that sort against God: but yet for all that, we do so, and it is an ordinarie vyce among vs. VVhat is to be done herepon? VVe must lerne to brydle our affections, seing they be so furiose and do arme vs after that maner against God. For this example is set afore vs, to the end that euery of vs shuld indeuer to reppress them as much as in vs lyeth. Marke that for one point. Again, let vs not desyre to diminish the majestie of God for the easing of our selues. For if his hand be ouerstrong and ouerheauye vpon vs when he afflieteth vs: let vs assure our selues that he vpholdeþ vs by a farre stronger and mightyer puissance. VVhen our Lord visiteth vs and sendeth vs any affliction, well, we may then say, here is a burthen to heauie for mee too beare, I can no more indure it. But when we be so feeble, let vs consider a little by what meanes we hold out but one minute of an houre. How are we able to resist? Is it of our owne manfulness? Is it for that we of our selues can warde Gods blowes when he striketh vs, or for that we are able too outstand his force? No no. But it is bycause that when he striketh vs with the one hand, he holdeth vs vp with the other. For else it is certaine we should bee vndoone at every blowe. God shoulde neede no more but to giue vs one fillup as they say, or but to make countenance too strike vs, and we were dispatched out of hand. Seing it is so with vs that we cannot hold out when God afflieteth vs, but by his power: were it not a greate follye in vs, to desyre therepon, that his myghiness should be abated? VVherefore (as I haue sayd erewhyle). Let vs lerne not to desire that his glorie should bee diminished for the easing of vs. For that were the cleane wrong way, and we should be vtterly disappointed of our desire, if we thought too be eased by the weakening and effebling of Gods hand. For that were the next way too send vs packing, bycause there is none other meane to preferue vs, but only Gods vttering of his strength in vs, as I haue sayd afore. That is an other poynþ let us haue a mind and desire to releue them and help them vp. But aboue all things we must beseeche God to giue vs the spirit of vnderstanding as I sayd. Moreover this thing must also be practized : that is to wit, when any of vs is in trouble, he must haue a care to apply the holie scripture to such vse as he may bee comforted by it. VVhyso? For we bee offended if a man commeth to stinge vs, and to heape vp yet more trouble vpon vs when we be in aduersitie already : and wee will soone say it is a greate cruetie, and that there is no honestie and good dealing in men, when they handle vs after that sort: and yet for all that, every one of vs will do the like too himself. As how? If I bee in any heauiness and take the holie scripture to comfort me with, I bethink mee not to take the texts that shuld do it : but rather if I meete with any threatening, in stead that the scripture should make mee feele some taste of Gods goodnesse to my cōfort in him, and assuge all my sorrowes: I set my self on fire, and increase my greef more and more. See then how we overshotel ourselues because we haue not the skill to cōfort our selues as we ought to do, and as God would we shold do. And therfore not only let vs haue pitie & cōpassion of our neyghbours when they be in aduersitie: but also let every of vs looke to himself, to comfort and assuge his owne sorrowes aright, when he lighteth into such extremitie. Now it foloweth that Job desyreteth God to lay downe a gage, and to giue a pledge, or to put in a suretie. VVho is he (layeth Job) that wil touch [me] in my hand? He returneth too the matter that was declared yesterday, which is that he would faine go too lawe with God, yea 30 and do it as with his fellowe or his equall. For why demaundeth he a gage? why demaundeth he a suretie or warrantize? It is bycause he would haue God too abace himself from his majestie: as if he should say, Surely so long as thou continuest in thy greatnessse, I dare not come to dispute against thee, for thou art ouermightie to confound mee. But giue mee leaue to talk with thee, lay me downe a gage, bynd thy self to abyde tryall, and submit thyself too the auuthorite of a iudge, in case as if a man that is no dweller in a place, should hyre a house and put 40 in sureties for it. VVhat Job meeneth by saying, VVho is he that wil touch mee in the hand? It is as much too say, as who is he that will vndertake too bee suretie for thee? For men vsed that ceremonie: and like as now adayes men signe a paper in the hand of a iudge or of a notarie: so in those dayes the parties touched one another in the hand, too giue their fayth and too bynd them selues. Ye see then what Iobs meening was. But yee would knowe whither this demaund of his were to bee excused, in that he desired God that he might please against him? It is verie certain that it was not too bee excused. For (as I touched glaucingly yesterday) we ought too desire, nothing more, than too come before God, and too haue him too be our iudge, yea and that he should handle vs as he listeth him self. True it is that if he should vtter his rigour against vs, there were no shifft but we should be confounded. VVo be too those wretched creatures that come too bee judged rigorously, and without mercy. But forasmuchas God loueth vs, too receyue vs through the forgiuenesse of our 60 sinnes which he offereth vs, and sheweth himself too be at one with vs in our Lord Iesus Chryst, and pronoun- ceth all them blissted whose sinnes are forgiuen: when we heare of these things, can we wish a better case than to come before the face of him that taketh away our sinnes, and casteth them behynd his backe, and intoo the bottom of the Sea as it is sayd? And specially let vs looke vpon our Lord Iesus Christ, too whom all which we haue to consider in this text. And therwithall let vs marke also that it is an horrible blasphemie to require God to lay vs downe a gage, and too put vs in a pledge or suretie. And why? For it is a likelyhod that we trust not to his faythfuienesse. True it is that Job vsseth these words to declare that there is an ouerhygh power in God, and that no mortall man durst encounter it, except God would releasē his owne right: and yet neuerthelesse, that God giueth vs other assurances too come vnto him. VVhich are they? It is that he will haue to men content themselues with his single word, as good reason is they should. VVill we then bee assured? Let vs give eare to Gods promises, let vs imbrace them, and let vs beleue that he ment not to feede vs with leasinges, nor to foade vs with vayne and frutelssē hope, but that he is faythfull to perorme all that he hath promised. Thus ye see to what point it behoueth vs to come. And besids this, we haue a good gage in our Lord Iesus Christ. For we see that all that euer God promised was warratēd at such tyme as he gaue his only sonne to death, and rayzed him vp againe. Do we not then see a gage that ought to allure vs suffisently? Besides this, God sealeth his promises in our harts by his holie Ghoste. Marke then what a godly record this is: namely to haue our Lord himselfe speake, to the end we might not doubt of his trusthe, but might boalit to our selues, that whatsoeuer is conteyned in his word, is altogether sure and deceytesse vnto vs. Ma. ke (I say) marke the assurances which God giueth vs, and the goodes that he purteth into our hands to warrant vs. Other pledge and assurance he wil not haue vs to demand: and therfore let vs lerne to content our selues with that. This in effect is all that we haue to consider vpon this verse. But yet for all that, it behoueth vs to turne backe to that which I haue touched: that is to wit, that seeing our Lord voutsafeth to handle vs so sweetly, and telleth vs that we must not be afrayd to come before his face: so much the more vnthankfulness is in vs, if we desire to go to lawe with him. For must not a man be toto foward, when he refuzeth to be iudged by God? Yes: & sith that God promiseth that euen when he vsseth greatest rigour, yet will he not forget his goodnessse, too releeue and maynteyne vs continually as he shall see needfull, and to give a good and desirable end to all our afflictions: must not we needs be toto vrkynd if wee refuze such a benefite and priuiledge? So then there is no way for vs but to humble and present our selues at the iudgement seate of God, that we may be vphild by his grace. Now Job addeth: Because thou hast couered their hart that they can haue no understanding, thou wilt not exalt them. Here Job strengtheneth himself against those that vexed him vnder the colour of comforting him. But we haue to remember what hath ben sayd: namely that Job bewrayeth all his affections, and so it is no woonder though he continue not all in one tale, but shiftest eft into one matter and eft into another, and so shewe himselfe variable. And vherfore is that: Because he speaketh as in his combatte. VVe knowe that when a man is fighting of a combatte, he keepeth not alwayes one countenance, but is fayne to trauerse his ground, to fet a compasse about, to shifft hands, to retire, and to avaunce forward, after as his enimie preaceth vppon him or as he himself espyeth his owne aduauntage. Euen so is it with vs when we fail to resisting of our temptations. Sometymes we stoupe to saue our selues, and sometymes wee giue backe too awyld a blowe. After as God giueth vs respit, so take wee hart again, and are releued when it was likely we should haue ben ouerthrown. The thing therfore that we see here in Job, is that now he taketh courage and sayth: Lord it is true that it is a corrie to mee to see my freendes become dalyers, and to doo nothing else but vex mee: but yet must I not discomfort my self for all that. And why? For I see well they haue none vnderstanding, and therefore I must not take hold of them, seing there is no reason in them. If a beast came running vpon mee, or if a dogge hild mee at a bay: I myght wel vse fayre woords to appeaze them, but it could not preuayle, for they vnderstant them not. So then, ô Lord, I must not take it to hart when I heare the wandering talk of these men here. VVhyso: Because thou hast couered their hart that they can haue no vnderstanding. And this is it that I haue touched already: namely that if we will comfort wretched folk in their afflictions: we must desire God to give vs his spirit and wisdome to doo it withall. For our talk shall be vaine and vnprofitable, sauing so farre forth as he reacheth vs his hand: like as on the contrarie part, we shal speake to edifying it he guyde vs. It is sayd that he couereth their hart, that they myght haue none vnderstanding: as if a man should say, he blyndfoldeth their eyes. For in the scripture, this word Hart is sometymes taken for the mynde. In deede it is not taken so continually, for it is sometymes taken for a truenesse, and for a pure conscience. But whereas it is sayd by Moyses, God hath not giuen you a hart too vnderstand, no not euen vnto this day: wee see that the word Hart is taken there for the mynde. Euen so is it also in this sentence. Job therefore meeneth that God hath as it were blyndfolded the eyes of these men here which thought themselues verye wize, and that thereby they became as good as beastes. Now let vs marke what maner of men these freendes of Job were. It is evident by their talk that they were excellent men, and no foolies: For wee see they were men of experiance, and men of greate wit, yea and it is sayd that God had sent them: And how then shall they do that scartly haue one iote of wisdome? what shall become of them when it pleaseth God to blynd them? Again, if God do so blynd the wyse: let those that think them selues skilful, and trust too their owne sharp witte, and presume much vpon their owne policie, lerne too humble themselues, knowing that God can so blynd their eyes, as they shall not see a whit at hygh nonedaye. Thus see ye a profitable iesson for such as take pridy in theyr owne wisdome, and think that nothing ought too passe but by their aduyce. VVhat shall become of them when God shall haue blynded them? Thus, the blynd wretches haue theyre eyes sealed vp that they can discerne nothing, and what shal the end of them be? God will not exalt them: that is to say, he will put them to shame in the end. Now if this be verified of worldly things: what is to be sayd of the secretes of the heauenly kingdome, which do farre surmount al the wit of man? Behold, God blyndeth the eyes of the wyse euen in worldly affayres and in the things that concerne this present life, insomuch that euen these that are moste craftie, and of greatest wit, become like little babes, and doo fond deedes and are redye to fall downe at every blowe. Men see this, And what is the cause? It is for that God hath couered their eyefight. And how shall we then doo when wee must be faine to mount vp hygher to the wonderfull secretes which cannot be knowne, vnlesse God haue enlightened vs by his holy spirit. Hereby wee bee warned not to take offence, when we see the wyse men of the world haue no taste of the Gospell, nor of any poynct of the doctrine of Saluation. And why? It is not a dishe whereof euery man may be his owne caruer: God must be fayne to woork there by his holie spirite. And that is a thing well worthie to be noted. For wee see manic manie wretched weaklings at this day which rest themselves vpon this, that the wise men of the world cannot frame themselues to the Gospell. How is it (say they) that such a man, being a man of so greate reputation, sauorth not of the Gospell? Yea and there needeth no alledging of some one man, but of whole Nations. For men will say, what? In such a Nation where there are so manie wyse heads, we see the Gospell is not receyued. As who should say, that the receyuing of the Gospell came of our owne towardnesse, and that we by our owne mother wit were able too comprehend what soever God sheweth vs in the holie Scripture. No. But cleane contrariwise it is sayd, that we be blinded in that behalf, and that all the wisdome of God is foolishnesse to mannes reason. Seing then that the eace standeth so, let vs not think it straunge, though such as presume too knowe themselues, be blynded after that sorte. And why? For God forsaketh them by reason of their prude. And further he is no scholemaister, but for the humble and litle ones. But these men wil be greate ones: and are they then 20 able to take any profit at all in Gods schoole? No So then seing we perceiue that God blindest men after that sort, let vs for our part lerne not to trust in our selues, but to desire him to guyde vs by his holie Ghoste, and so too gouerne vs, as wee may see cleerly in the middes of the darknessse of this world. Yea: for his woord is the cresset that must serue too that purpose, as Sainct Peter discourses. Although then that there bee nothing but darknessse in the world: yet shall wee be well guyded, if wee followe the doctrine of the holie scripture. But yet 30 aboue all things God must bee fayne too inlyghten vs. with his holie spirit, he must take away the kerchiefs wherewith Satan hath blyndfolded vs, and he must open our eyes. Seing then that it lieth in him only to do that, let vs craue that grace with all lowlinessse, vterly distrusting in our selues. And more ouer let vs marke the saying that is added: Lorde, seeing thou hast couered their eyes: thou wilt not exalte them. For when Job sayeth that the blynd folk of whom he speaketh, shall not be exalted, he meeneth (as I haue told you before) that 40 they shall bee confounded, and God shall laugh them to skorne, and make them a ieslingstocke. Therefore let vs bee affrayd, least when we be destitute of Gods spirit and of the lyght which wee shoulde receyue thereby, we be confounded in the end, and our Lord cause vs to be driven forth headlong like wretched beastes, and so we fall into so manye irksome thinges, as every man be ashamed of vs, and yet in the meane whyle we our selues perceyue not our owne shame. For behold how the world goeth with all those whom God hath giuen 50 Ro. 1.d. 18. vp too a lewde mynd? how that (as Sainct Paule sayeth in the first chapter too the Romanes,) when God hath bereft men of witte and reason, they shall no more discerne aught at all. And in good fayth, wee see how the wretched idolaters cast them selues downe before a pece of wood to woorship it: and is not that a beastly thing? Yes verely. Howbeit when God hath blynded men after that sort, they must needs become stark beastes, and fall from euill too euill, and finally give themselues ouer to so shamefull deedes, as they forgo all countenance [of 60 honestie], and fall too woorking against nature, and to dooing of things which men would abhorre. If we would but looke vpon drunkards, which are as swyne, if we would looke vpon whorehunters which are so chased with the fire of their owne lust, as they haue no more modestie nor honestie in them: ought we not to tremble at the sight thereof, knowing that all of them are the frutes of Gods vengeance, when he blyndeth men and sletheth vp their eyes in such sorte, as they be not able to see or discerne aught any more? And yet is not this the last part of their confuzion. VVe must come to that which the prophet Esay sayeth. VVhen God hath spoken of his Esa.6.d.11. punishing and of his blynding of men: and vntill when (sayeth the prophet): vntill their Cities be beaten downe, theyr people destroyed, and nothing left vncounfounded. See what the frute is of this blynding of men. And therefore we must walk aduyedly in feare, and pray God that he will neuer suffer vs too haue our eyes so blyndfolded. Thus much concerning this sentence. Now Job addeth, That he which telleth his frend flattering tales, shall haue the eyes of his children too fayle. Heere Job speaketh according to the circumstance of the place. For we haue seene heretofore of what opinion his frendes were: namely that it myght be perceyued and iudged in this world, which be Gods chosen, and which be the reprobates. But that were as much to say, as there were no last judgement whervnto any thing shuld be reserued. For if we will esteeme of men according to Gods present handling of them here: what a thing were it? Ye see then it were a verye vntoward doctrine to judge so. But Job vseth this word Flatterie of set purpose: as if he shuld say, he that preacheth prosperitie too his frend, that is to say, he that shal say to a man, Gotoo, thou art happie, thou art beloued of God, for thou prosperest, thou liuest at thine ease, thou art riche, and in the fauour of the world: he (I say) that talketh after this sort, is cursed, so as the eyes of his children shall fall out: that is too say, he shall bee accursed, not only in his owne perlone, but also in his off spring. And hereby we be warned first not to rest our selues vpon the prosperitie of this transitorie lyfe: for that will bring nothing but flatterie. Marke that for one point. And this lesson will greatly auantage vs, if we can practyse it throughly. It is sayd to be a flatterie when men rest wholly vpon the prosperitie of this transitorie and worldly life. And why? For they beare themselues in hand that they be beloued of God. And this was the cause of the ruine and destruction of the Sodomites. Lived they not in pleasure and ease, whyle their arraignement was a making in heauen? Verely that was the sentence that was giuen and pronounced against them in the persone of Abraham. Sixscore yeeres before the Flud, the world did so exceede in delig hts and pleasures, as it seemed that God shoulde no more haue any charge of men, and they were sore abashed at their suddayne surpryzing when they doubted it not. So then it were a playne falsehood to esteeme Gods fauour by the present prosperitie. And therefore let vs not take occasion to flatter our selues for it, nor to say, O, God loueth and sauorth vs, for he prospereth vs. I say let vs beware we begyle not ourselues after that sort: for that will be but our confuzion. Thus ye see what this woord Flatterie importeth. And therewithall we haue to note, that it is to wretched a dealing, bothe for our selues and for our neyghbours, when we vse the sayd flattery. And why? For every man dazeleth his owne eyes, and seeketh to lift vp himself against God, whē he is in prosperitie. And again we deceiue our frendes also. For we make them that are at their ease, to beleue that they bee as god as in Gods lap, and yet for al that, they be as it were in the gulf of hell, or verie neare it. Therfore it is not without cause that Job doeth here pronounce such greeuous punishment against those that preache prosperitie after that sort to their neighbours. VVhat is to be done in effect: VVhe we be in prosperitie, let vs cheere vp one another too serue God, & to busie ourselues in yeelding him thanks for the goodnes that he sheweth vs. And whē we be in aduersitie,

*Eze.10.f.49
Gen.18.6.19*

let vs take the promises that are giuen vs to comfort vs withal, and make them to serue our purpose. And therewithal let vs be alwayes redye to receiue aduersitie, notwithstanding that God do shew himselfe gentle and louing towards vs, I say let vs not cease to prepare our selues to chastizement, but let vs be willing too receyue the stripes of his hand, if it please him to handle vs rigorously. Furthermore let not our mynd be troubled too say, that God doeth handle men here according to their deserts. But whensoeuer he affliccteth vs, let vs vnderstand that he chastizeth vs for our sinnes. And if he spare vs: let vs vnderstand that his meening is to drawe vs to him by getlenesse. And so whatsoeuer betyde vs, Let nothing hinder vs to lift vp our heads cōtinually, to seekc our life and contentation in heauen and in the happie rest that tarieth for vs: And let it not greue vs to be afflicted here, seeing our God calleth vs to the triumph that is purchased for vs by the death of our Lord Iesus Christ.

But let vs cast our selues flat before the face of our good God with acknowledgement of our faults, praying him to make vs feele what his wrath is, in such wise by our aduersities, as we may not ceasse to taste alwayes his fatherly mercie, and too haue recourse too the same, so grounding and settling our selues therpon, as wee may neuer swarue from it, not douting but he will deliuer vs from all our afflictions in conuenient time, and ease vs of all our miseries: and that although we be pinched too the vttermoste as now, yet we shall bee fully dispatched of them when he hath bereft vs of this flesh, to make vs partakers of all the benefits which he hath prepared for vs aloft in his heauenly glorie, where we shall triumph with our Lord Iesus Christ, according as he hath gone afore vs in the glorie of his resurrection. That it may please him too graunt this grace not only too vs but also too all people and Nacions of the earth, &c.

The lxvj. Sermon, which is the second vpon the xvij. Chapter.

6. He hath made mee a common byvvoord, and set mee to be an open gazing stocke.
7. Myne eye is dimmed vwith sorrowe, and all my limbes are as a shadovve.
8. Therightuouse vwill bee astonished at this, and the innocent shall lift vp himself against the hypocrite.
9. Therightuouse vwill hold his vvay, and he that hath cleane hands shall be strengthened.
10. All of you returne, turne ye againe, for there is not one vwise man among you.
11. My dayes are glyded avvay, myne enterprizes are past, and the thoughts of my hart, 12. Haueturned day into night, they haue offered mee darknesse for light that approached.
13. If I tarric, the graue is my house, I shall make my bed in the dark.
14. I vvill lay too the dust thou art my father, and to corruption thou art my mother and my sister.
15. VVhere is then myne expectation? and vwhat is it that my hope must looke for?
16. They shall go dovne intoo the bottom of the graue: therewe shall bee layed in the earth, or oure bed shall be in the dust.

Ob following the matter that he entered intoo afore, intendeth too shewe breckly, that as in respect of his present state he is vtterly forlorne, and there is no remedie for his miseries. Seing the case is such, he must be faine to conclude, that if the talk of those that spake afore him be true, (that is to wit, that me are delt with in this world according to their deserts, and that we must esteeme Gods grace or his loue or hatred according too the state of this present life) it shall not boote him at all to flee vnto God. Ye see then in effect what we haue to marke. And first of al it is sayd, that God hath made him as it were a mockingstocke, & that he was set to be a Gazing stock, and for men too make tales of. For the second woord which he vseth (which I haue translated Gazing stocke) signifieth a Timbrell. And marke here how some men haue thought that Job ment to compare heere his prosperitie with his aduersitie so greate and extreme as it was at that tyme, as if he had sayd, Heretofore I haue ben in greate triumph, and now God hath handled mee in such wise, as I see my self too bee a bywoord and a gazingstocke. True it is that in sted of Gazing stocke, some translate it Hel: and whereas I haue translated Open, it is before them, or in their sight. And so their opinion is that Job ment too say, that men had damned him as a wretched creature before the tyme. But whenall is well considered, the playne meening is that which I haue touched. For it is but a repeting of one matter twyce, for the greater confirmation of it, according too the common custome of the holie Scripture. And therefore the thing that hee intendeth to set downe, is that inasmuch as God hath made him as a mirrour of aduersitie, if we should esteeme men in Gods fauour or displeasure by the state of this present life: we shold hold him for a forlorne persone. But yet for al that, he takes himself for none such, howbeit that he were not vtterly without feeling: but what infirmities soever he had in him, yet did he fight against them, and was sure & fully resolued, that God would at length pitie him, & therfore held his mouth as it were shet, vntill he sawe some end of his miseries. And in this respect he addeth, That the rightuouse shalbe astonished at it, but yet neuerthelesse the innocent shall lift vp himself against the hypocrite, & the rightuouse shall bold on their wayes, and such as haue cleane bandes shall gather new strength too bee the more stedfast. In saying that the ryghtuouse shall bee astonished, Job meeneth that when wee see the aduersities that God sendeth too such as haue serued him and walked in his feare with a pure conscience: we think it straunge and are abashed at it. And in good soothe, we see it runnes in our mynd, that if God doo gouerne the world, it is good reason that he should spare good men and such as haue indeuered to walk purely before him, and that he should handle them as a father doeth his children. And if we see them afflicted extremely at Gods had: we imagin eyther that he hath turned his backe & wil not think vpō earthly things: or else that he passeth not how me lieue, nor how they behaue theselues. This then is the cause why we be oftētimes astonished at the aduersitie of rightuouse me, when when God seemeth to shewe himself their enimie and they see nothing but signes of crueltie . And that is the cause why Job speakeþ of astonishment . Howbeit he sayeth, that yet neuerthelesse the innocentes shall auaunce themselves above the hypocrites: that is to say, they shall not be so sore astonished, but they shal make a good winding vp . And there is not a sentence which we ought to mark better thā this . VVhy so? For we know by experiece how hard it is for men to iudge a right of Gods dooings, as in respect of that which we see presently . For (as hath ben declared more fully already) god executes not his iudgements after such sort in this world, as that all things shuld be well ruled and nothing out of square . But contrariwyse things are confounded, and if we see a wicked man punished, a ryghtuouse man is punished much more : and if wee see a good man prosper, a wicked man shall prosper double . VVhere are we whē we see such things? VVe be astonished, we be at our wits end, and (as they say) we knowe not which way to turne vs . So then if we iudge of present things by our naturall reason, we must needs be as it were rauished, and the holie scripture telleth vs we shall be so . And although God suffer vs too haue experiece of it, yet hath he also voutsafed to warne vs by his woord, that our wits shall be troubled and as it were dazeled if we looke vpon things as they seeme too be now, and go no further . Therefore let vs mark well this sentence, where it is sayd that the ryghtuouse shall be astonished, when they see God afflicteþ his children after that sorte . And in verie deede there is this point al-so, that the crosse misliketh vs, according also as we terme all such things aduersities, as mislike vs, or are hard and combersome . Now inasmuchas wee shunne afflictions after that sorte, needes must we be as it were caryed away with astonishment by reason of this gaynstryuing that is in our nature, when we se that God afflicteþ his children after that maner, and layeth vpon them with great strokes . For whē we see that our Lord spareth not those whom he hath chosen to himself, and to whom he hath giuen the grace to walk purely in his feare and seruice : we doubt of our selues . I say that when we see that , we 40 are inforced to be astonished . But what a thing were it if we had not lerned this lesson? VVe might be ouertaken with such a feare, as we should never returne into the ryght way again . VVherfore let vs take warning before the blow come . And whē we see good mē haled roughly at Gods hād: let vs not therfore be offended and set all at randō . But let vs keepe our selues from tarying in that myre, and let vs vnderstand that it behoueth vs to passe further, and to come to that which Job sayeth, and to fol lowe it: that is to wit, what soever come of it wee must 50 not ceasse to lift vp our selues against the despizers of God . And hereby ye see wherin the faythful differ from the faythlesse . For they may seeme too bee bothe in like case to the worldwarde . But what? Some there bee that are vterly plundged ouer head and eares in this imagination, that God gouerneth not the world when he sheweth not himself as a judge, but winketh at things, and specially when his children are oppressed without relief, wheras in the meane whyle the wicked haue their full scope, and the bridle layd looce vpon their necke, without any redresse of things . There are that rest vpon that point, and cannot rid their hands of that trouble and temptation . VVhat behoueth it vs to do then? As a man that is in the myre must be fayne to wade out by force till he come to firme ground (as it is sayd in the forthith Psalme): Euen so when we feele that the diuell goeth about to make vs sink into the deepest of the bottomlesse pit, and by that meanes would drive vs to despaire:

let vs streyne our selues, I say, let vs inforce our selues till we be come to the point that we haue wonne so much as to be able to say: yet will God never forsake his seruants, though they seeme to be oppressed (for so wil it seeme in deede) and that he sheweth not himself too be strong ynochough to susteyne the continually with his hand, and to make them feele at length that they be deliuered, and that after a woondershfull rashyon . Marke I say what our exercizes are: mark in what battells God intendeth to employ vs . That is to say, when we see things confuz/d in this world, and are greued ar it for a time, we must labour to releeue our selues, vntill wee haue gotten the viistorie of such temptations . And now Job expresseth more at full, that whien he had touched breefly, saying, that the ryghtuouse shall hold on his way, and that he which bath cleane handes shall be strengthened . Behold a verie profitable lesson . For what causeth many men to step out of square, but because they would be recōpenced at the first day? And if God contēt the not after owne their appetite: 20 they think it labour lost to serue him, & that they ought not to take so much peynes, seeing there is not more wages for the good than for the bad . So then, impacience causeth many men to be greeued and turne backe, yea & lose their corage though they haue begon wel to folowe God . VVherfore let vs marke how it is sayd here, that the ryghtuouse may take some conceyt to disquiet them selues, seeing that good men ceasse not to be persecuted, insomuch that God seemeth eyther too haue forgotten the, or else to be become their aduersarie, seeing he persecuteth them after that sort . But although the good men feele theselues greeued for a time, yet must they strengthen themselues again, vntill they haue cōcluded to hold on their way, that is to say, to continue throughout, and although they see the way wherthrough they must passe, to be full of thornes and bryers, so as they must be fayne to leape ouer hedges Rocks and Diches, yet must they not ceasse to continue in Gods seruice . For if that were not, what tryall and examination of our faith shuld there be? VVere we as it were in a faire medow, that we might runne along the riuers side in the shadowe, & that there might be nothing but pleasure and ioy in in al our whole life: who could vaunt that he had serued God with good affection? But when God sendeth vs things cleane contrarie to our desire, and that we must be fayne one whyle to enter into a quamyre, another whyle to marche vpon rugged stones, and anotherwyle too be combered with bryers and thornes: whē we must be fayne to meeete with hedges and diches, and to leape ouer them . and when we shall haue traueled a greate whyle, it shall still seeme that we haue gone verie little or no:thing forward, & yet we see no end of our iourney: behold, it is a troublesome temptatiō to vs that couet to walk according to Gods wil . And whyso? Because we haue not vtterly renouced our selues . He that hath not yet lerned to tame his affections, and to subdue his will to the seruing of God, notwithstanding that it be hard for him to doo: knoweth not yet in good earnest what it is to liue well and faythfully . So the let vs practice that which is spoken here of holding on our wayes, that is to say, of knowing that if we be desirous to rule our life according to Gods lawe, the way is verie difficult, & it wil not be doone without many lets and hinderances: and yet we must be firme and constant to hold on our way still . Now sith that God sendeth his children such tryall, that is to wit, that he suffreth them to be in much vexation, and yet neuerthelesse they must hold still to their tackling: what shal be become of such as forsake the right way without vexing or troubling at al, as we see many mē doo? Behold our Lord is so gracieuse vnto some, as to beare with thei respect of their weaknesse: well, he handleth them after their owne nature, so as he sendeth them not any ouerstrong temptations: and yet they sayle not too go awrye as though they tooke pleasure in forsaking god wilfully. I pray you what would they doo if they were assayled with like temptation as Job speaketh of here? Then would the vnthankfulnesse that is in most men appeere. For how many are there that repine at God without any maner of distresse? If a man aske them why they doo it, or what temptation 10 hath moued them to it: there is none other matter but bycause they be of so malicious and froward a nature, as they wil needes be vtterly accursed. But let vs for our part be well aduized, that although the way wherby God will haue vs to passe, be full of greate hardnesse, and that we shall haue much a doo too steppe foorth the one pace, but we shall meete with some hard encounter: yet notwithstanding we must keepe on our way still, according to that which is shewed here. Howbeit forasmuch as that canot be done, without gathering of new strength. Therefore Job addeth, that b̄ w̄b: th̄ bathc b̄d̄es shall gather new strength. Now herby let vs note, first that there is in vs such feblenesse, that if wee flatter our selues and become werie so soone as we know our selues to be weake, all that would serue God were quite vndone, and there should be no constancie nor stedfastnes in vs. And why? Let vs consider a little how frayle wee be, I meene euen those too whom God hath given some goode zele. Job speaketh not here of such as sticke onli to their naturall reason. He treateth of such as haue the spirit of God 20 dweling in thei, which haue already receyued such vertue from above, as they be dispozed to welldoing. Yet nevertheless euen such maner of men are frayle still, and find themselues so voyd of all strength, that if God presse thei, they knowe not where they be whē they shuld withstand any temptatiō. And therfore we haue neede to gather new strength, and we must not shrink though wee feele such weakness in our selues. And why? for when it is sayd that Gods childe shall be strēghthened therby, we see that although we be weake, God beareth with vs and 40 shaks vs not off for that. No verely, so we flatter not our selues through hypocrisie as a number deo which fode themselues in their owne vices, saying, ô I am a man, and what are we able too doo, when notwithstanding, they knowe they haue so many fleshly infirmities in thei. They beare themselues in hand that they are well discharged, by alledging the common and ordinarie vice that is in al men. But contrariwise it is sayd, that as oft as God maketh vs to feele our owne weaknesse, it is a warning too make vs lerne to seeke the remedie. Vherfore let vs beware of nurrising our owne vices by selfflatterie, and let vs beware we seeke not fond excuses, wherwith many folk beguile themselues, weening that God will forgiue our faults, though we labour not to amend thei: but contrariwise letvs looke to gather strength. And where shall we get it? Certainly it is not to be found elswhere than in God. Doo men then find themselues weake? Let them go seeke strength where the holie scripture telleteth them that it is. It is sayd that God hath the spirit of strength and stedfastnesse in him. Do we then feare too be borne downe by temptations? are we afrayd of swatting? Let vs desire God to strengthen vs. Lo how the saythfull strengthen themselues, not with a vayne overweening as they doo which trust in their owne free will, chalenging woonderfull things to themselues, and bearing themselues in hand that they be come to the compassing of their intent, whereas in the end they step aside, & it is well seene that there was nothing but vanitie in them. Will we then be well strengthened? Let vs not presume vpon our owne ryghtuousenesse, but let vs returne vnto God beseeching him too strengthen vs in such wyse by his holie Ghoste, as the diuell may not be able to fell vs downe though he assayle vs with never so many battells. Lo what the lyfe of the faythfull is in effect: that is to wit, that they shall never bee without manye temptations: and specially that we be subject to so manye miseries during the tyme that we be in this earthly wayfaring, that such as indeuer too serue God best, ceasse not to be often ouerpessed with many inconueniences, and manye afflictions. But what for that? VVhe we be astonished, (as it cannot be but wee must think it straunge at the first brunt) let vs fight against such temptations, and let vs holde on in the right way without starting out of it. And although we fine much hardnesse in ourselues, let vs pray God to giue vs such an invincible strength, as we may continue in his seruice euen to the end, notwithstanding that Satan labour too thrust vs out of it. Job speaketh purposely heere of such as haue cleane hands. Surely the true purenesse consisteth in the hart, or at least wise the hart is the place where it taketh his roote. For it were nothing woorth though our life were more perfect and more Angellyke than a man could wish, except we had a pure and rightmening mynd to serue God. A man may well withhold himself from woorking euill, he may forbear to do any bodie wrong or harme, he may refreyne from giuing folk cause too complayne of him, or too cast any thing in his teethe. But if his hart bee inflamed with vaynglorie, if he bee atteyned with hypocrisie, if he be selfwilled, or if he be infected with any other vice secretly: all his whole state is but filthinesse, yea though it bee never so hyghly commended of men. Thus ye see why I sayd that wee must begin at our mynd, as hath ben shewed heretofore not only in this chapter but also in diuers other places. But now Job hauing spoken of the rightuouse and of the innocent or soundmeening man which is matched against the hypocrite, addeth the partie that hath cleane handes. So then it standeth vs in hand too haue this inward soundnesse before God: but yet moreouer, we must also shewe by our deeds that wee bee such as we seeme. And why? For wee see that such as are full of naughtinesse and vtter despyzers of God, are more bold to brag of themselues, than those that are the best Christians, with whom no man can find fault. Too bee short, now adayes if a man will haue faire protestations, he must seeke out the wickedest sort, for those are they that are puffed vp with self estimacion, insomuch that they come foorth like shamelesse harlotts of the Stewes, with, who am I? who cā find any fault in me? And yet the verie babes can deserue of their life, for it is so abominable that the verie ayre stinks of it. By reason herof it is purposely sayd, that if we intend to shewe that we be found afor God: our hands must also be pure and cleane: that is too say, wee must liue after such a sort among men, as our doings may shewe the feare of God that is within vs. Too be short, ye see in what wise it behoueth vs to yeeld record of the goodnessse of the roote. For if a man should say vnto vs. This is a good tree: and yet it appered not that the frute which it beareth is good, where were the goodnessse of it? Verely the frute that comes of it shal never be good except the roote & the nature of the tree be good. But yet must we yeeld frute (as I sayd) if we intend to shewe truly that we haue the sayd right & sound meening in our harts, & that we studie to serue God. Thus ye see in effect what we haue to remēber in this sentence. And now Job addeth, turne ye, turne ye (say-ye (sayeth he) for there is not a wise man among you. His speaking so, is to disprove the talk that had bē ministred by those thre that had discoursed with him, (as we haue herd heretofore) to shewe that he was a man forsaken of God, and that there was nothing but cursidnesse in him, bycause they sawe him so persecuted. Job hath shewed, that iudgement must not be giue by the aduersities that are seene in this present life, to say that a man is forsake of God. Marke well that point. Afterward he sayth again, that God doeth not alwayes punish men for their sinnes, 10 and that the good men are sometimes afflicted and no man knowes why: the reason therof appereth not. Inquire a man never so much, & trauell he never so much, yet shal he be never the neerer, bycause Gods iudgements are secret and incōprehensible. Now forasmuch as lobs freeds conceiued no such thing, he sayth there is no wisdome in them. And certesse (as we haue sayd afore) it is no small point of wisdome to discerne aright of the afflictions that God sendeth vpon men. I say, when a man in his owne case is visited by the hand of God, it is a greate wisdome in him, if he haue skill to know his owne sinnes, and can enter into himself, and huble himself, and acknowledge, Behold here is a right profitable medicine for mee, God knew such a vice in me, and he hath doone me the grace that I know it, and therfore must I now apply it wholly to myne owne vse. By this meanes he shal knowe how too profit himself greatly by Gods corrections: & besids this, although he know not precisely why he is afflicted, nor be able to lay his finger vpon it: yet it shal be wisdome for him to conclude, VVell Lord, thou knowest priuie diseases in me, though I haue done amisse and perceiue it not my self, thou Lord knowest it. For thou art the true physician: giue me the grace that when I am smitten by thy hand, I may alwayes take good by thy correction and discipline. Yea and albeeit a man perceyue that God doeth not in any wise punish his sinnes: yet must he neverthelesse humble himself so farre as to say, Alas Lord I know not wherfore thou doest it, but sure I am that thou art ryghtuouse, and it is ynoch enough for mee though thou doo it but to make mee to forget the world, to drawe mee the more to thyself, to make mee taste of the heauenly life, and to restreyne me that I be not giuen to any worldly delights. Then if a man be so skilfull as to know how to apply Gods chastyzings to his owne instruction, surely it is a point of greate wisdome: and we shall haue profited greatly all the time of our life, when wee once come to that point. As much is to be sayd of the corrections that God sendeth to our neyghbours. VVhen we see a man so smittē, we may suppose that he is chastized for his sinnes. Yea truly if we haue knowne him too be a despicer of God, or a disordered persone: then is it good too think that God punishment him for the same cause. But we must not iudge our neyghbours, least the same come home by vs again immediatly. After what sort? now my God, if thou punish such a one, shalnot thou much more punish mee? And wheras thou haste giuen me the grace to haue some desire to serue thee, Lord I am so much the more bound vnto thee. But if thou list to chastize mee I must endure yet more, for I am worse than he. All this geere must come to our remembrance. Againe: when we see him punish one manes whoredome, another manes drūkenesse, a third mannes blasphemie, and some other manes robberies, guilefulnes, or periurie: well, we must alwayes profit our selues by all such things, according also as S. Paule sayeth that they be peyned tables wherin God sheweth vs how sore he hateth and abhorreth all vnrightuousnesse, and how it behoueth vs to make our owne gayne by other manes losses, as it is sayd in the proverb. And furthermore let vs not be ouer rigorous, whē we see God smite such folk as haue not ben detected of any such greate and vnmeasurable misdoing, as we might say, behold yonder naughtypacks, behold yonder despizers of God. But if there be a man that hath had some infirmities, and yet shall haue shewed some signes of uprightness, if we see him in greate aduersitie, we must say, well, God knoweth why he afflicteth his poore creature, but yet must we haue pitie and compassion on him. And here ye see why David sayeth, Blissed is the man that cā Psal. 41.4.1. iudge aright of him that is in aduersitie: that is too wit, when we can beare with Gods seruants and chiliden whē we see them oppressed with aduersitie: and can pitie thē, and be gentle to them, and not cōdemne them by hooke or by crooke, assuring our selues that men may condēne vs double, if the like rigour should bee v̄led against vs. Then is it not without cause that Job doeth here rep̄ oue his freends, of finding no wisdome in them, bycause they judged at random of his aduersities. Herby we be warned, that to be well taught in Gods schoole, and to get a true wisdome that may be to our welfare: it behoueth vs too apply our mindes to the considering of Gods iudgements in this world, as well vpon ourselues as vpon our neyghbours, and to beate vpon that point early and late. For when a man indeuererth himself to put that in vre, surely the time is well employed. And why? For the cheef point of the doctrine that God bringeth vs, is that wee should apply his iudgements to our owne vse, and be edified by them in his feare. Therfore when we procede after that maner, surely there is perfect wisdome in vs. But without that, we may haue all the shewe of wisdome that can be deuised, we may discourse curiously vpon the holie scripture, we may bring many faire allegacions: but yetal shall be but vanitie till we be come to the point that wee can iudge aright of that which our Lord requireth of vs, when he sendeth vs chastizements and afflictions. And hervpon, to conclude his matter, Job sayeth, that his dayes are passed, his thoughts vniſhed, and all his enterprizes broken of and disappointed, and that he had had darknesse insted of the light, and when he thought that the day sprang, he bad nyght. To be short, he sheweth vs that there was no end at all of his miseries, and that there was no hope that euer he should continue as touching the present life. And for this cause he addeth, Then sayd I to rottemesse thou art my father, and vnto the dust, thou art my moother and my sister. As if he should say, It is not for me to regard eyther kin-folk or freendes any more here bylowe. For God hath hidden me from them, and cut me off from the rank and cōpanie of the liuing. I am like a wretched carion, and I must not looke to returne again, to say that any creature can ease me. That matter is out of all question, & so am I vt̄erly dispatched, there is no more remedie in my case. VVhat is mine expectation? I haue no more (sayeth he): when I haue looked vp and downe, I must go downe into the pit, and my bed must be bylowe: that is to say, in deathe, whatsoeuer I hope for, or howsoeuer I build: for the hebrew woord that Job v̄seth may come of building. And it is a verie fit similitude when he speaketh of hope or expectation, and yet neuerthelesse hath an eye to this building. There was a doubtfulnesse in the woord as in respect of the signification. Therefore it is all one as if he had sayd, Although I bee patient and prolong my miserie continually: yet remayneth there nothing for mee but the graue. And he likeneth this expectation of his to a building. I may well build (sayeth he) in thinking there is still some hope left for me: but shal I speede ever the better? No (says he). VVhen I haue builded my best, I shall haue none other house but my graue. It seemeth V.iii. that that Job speaks here as a man that had no more taste of the heauenly lyfe, nor wist what Gods mercie ment. But it bchoueth vs too consider too whom he telleteth his tale. True it is that heretofore when he was in his fittes, and disputed against God, he shewed wel that he had terrible conceits, which notwithstanding he resisted. But after he hath treated of the fittes that he felt, he sheweth what the folie of them is, which would haue Gods fauor to vtter it self [vnchaungeably] in this present life, vpō the good and faithful, and that if God shewe not himself merciful here in the open face of the world towards those that are his, it ought to be concluded that he hath forsaken them, and they be vtterly past hope of recouerie. Job mocketh at this geere. So then, he telleteth his tale to such as would see mennes full payment in this transitorie and decaying life. But it were an ouerfoward doctrine to judge so, (as I haue declared alredy,) VVherfore let vs mark that Job is not here as a man in despaire: but he reproacheth the folie of such as sayd they were his frendes, and yet wou'd make him beleue that euē here in this world wee shall surely perceiue whither we be in Gods fauour & grace, or whither we be forsaken of him. For the better cōprehending hereof, let vs looke vpon the argument that S. Paule maketh, when he intendeth to assure vs of the last

1. Cor. 15. c. 19. resurrection. VVe are (sayeth he) the wretchedest of al men on the earth. Let a man compare the Christias with the despizers of God, with the heathen folk, with the hypocrits, and with all them that spye God to the full, & see which of thē are best intreated. It is certaine, that take one with another, a man shall see more prosperitie in thē 30 that are giuen to all euill, than he shall doo in them that walk in the feare of God. And why? For as our Lord is neare vnto vs and watcheth ouer vs, so if we do amisse he amēdeth it: as a man will haue more care to correct his children thā his neyghbours. God therfore, to shewe the loue that he beareth vs, chastizeth vs whē he seeth vs do amisse. Again he intendeth too proue our obedience as good reason is he shoulde: and he intendeth too ratifie our fayth For fayth is so preciouſe a thing, that it deserueth to be tried as gold and siluer, or rather more, as S. Peter tel- 40 leth vs. And moreouer we knowe that the diuell ceaseth not to practize all that is possible against vs: and after as he seeth vs heedfull in the seruice of God, so much the more is his rage set on fire. Also looke how many wicked foli: there are, so manie enimies haue we, and Satan serueth his turne by them to trouble vs. Therfore we must no: maruell though Gods children be most miserable in this world. And S. Paule vseth the selfsame argument to shewe that we looke for a better state. Sith that me shake vs of (sayeth he) sith they treade vs vnder their feete, sith we be a reproche and laughingstocke to the whole world: in what case were we if we hoped not for the resurrectiō that is promised vs, that our Lord Iesus Christ must come and that thē we shall perceiue we haue not serued God inayne. If we had not this, there were no more God in heaven, there were no more Justice, there were no more prouidence. Ye see then how S. Paules argument must scruie vs as a keye to open this text. Ye see mee (sayth Job here) as a man past hope. VVhen I haue made all my windlasses, I must be fayne to come to the graue, there is 60 my lodging, I see nothing but rotteness round about mee. Sith it is so, will yee make mee beleue that God doeth handle men here beneathe therafter as he doeth loue them or hate them? For as for mee, I knowe I haue indeuored too serue God, and I am not disappointed of myne expectatiō. Yet do I see my self handled asroughly as may be, every man lookes a skew at mee, I am as a gazingstocke and a cōmon byword. VVhat remaineth thē?

Eyther I must burie all the benefits and priuiledge that God hath giuen mee, and cast them quite away: or else I must conclude that God mocketh and abuseth his seruants, and that it is in vaine for thē to trust vnto his promises. And would ye haue me to fall into such a wickednesse? Then sith the eace standeth so, let vs vnderſtād that we must not iudge of Gods loue or hatred by the things that we see now. But let vs procede further, and consider that God loueth those whom he scourgeth, and keepeth the taste of his goodnesse in store for them, though it bee hidden from thē for a time, whē he sheweth nothing but vtter rigour against them. Therfore let vs confort ourſelues in it and say, yet will I hold still this hope cōtinually, that my God will at length pitie mee, and that I shal perceiue him to be my father. And although I haue happe ned to lift vp my ſelf againſt him for a tyme, yet wil I ſtil retorne to the ſayd conclusion. VVe ſee thē what maner of doctrine we haue to gather of this ſentēce for our better edifying: that is to wit, that we muſt take all the miſeries of this preſent life (and ſpecially all thoſe which we ourſelues feele and which we ſee in al Gods children) as an opē declaratiō that God reſerueth much better things for vs: and the ſame muſt be a cauſe to conſirme vs in the hope of the heauenly life as we now ſee that Paule ſpea keth in the ſecond to the Thessalonians. For in rehersing 2. Thess. 1. b. that they had ſuffered many things, and had ben vexed 5. 6. 7. by the wicked: It is (ſayeth he) an evident tokē of Gods iuft judgement, for it is a reasonable thing and agreeable to his nature, to giue you releef when ye haue ben ſo opprefſed. [and therfore] affirme yourſelues that ſeing you haue not had your refi vpon earthe, God preparesh it for you in heauē. Again on the other ſide if it be a thing that standeth vpon Gods Iuſtiſe, that the wicked ſhuld be pu niſhed according to their deſerts, and yet notwithstanding we ſee it not doone in this world: affirme yourſelues, that in your aduersities, troubles and miſeries, God doeth as it were in a glaſſe shewe you, that you ſhall oneday come vnto him: and that alſo is the verie thing whervnto your hope muſt be referred. So then as long as wee be in this world, if God ſend vs neuer ſo much pouertie and tribulation, let vs lerne to be drawen to the hope of the heauenly life. VVhen we ſee good folk and Gods ſillie chil dren roughly handled, laughed to ſcorne, their pacience abuſed, and themſelues left ſuccorleſſe: I ſay whē we ſee al this, let vs vnderſtād that God declareth, that altho: things be confuzed in this earthly life: yet muſt wee not therfore runne out of ſquare, but looke further afore vs, how wee muſte not neſtle ourſelues in this world, nor in these corruptible things, but only paſſe through thē, and right ſwiftly and as it were a full gallop. Furthermore if god ſpare vs, let vs acknowledge that he pitieſt vs, & that his intercyeing of vs in refi, is to giue vs ſome taſt of his goodnesſe. But ſpecially he will haue the ſame too ſerue for the time to come, to the intent we ſhould lerne to be the bolder to truſt in him, not doubting but he will deli uer vs from all the battells and auſtaſts of this world, too make vs partakers of all the benefits which he hath prepared for ſuch as come willingly to ſhroude themſelues vnder the ſhadowe of our Lord Iefu Christe.

Now let vs cast ourſelues downe before the face of our good god with acknowledgement of our ſinnes, pray ing him to make vs ſo to feele them, as we may returne to him vnfainedly, & in returning come with true fayth and repentaunce, diſtrouſe to be rid of all the vices & cor ruptions of our fleſh, not douting for all that, but that our Lord will alwayes behoue vs with pitie, and receive us to mercie, for his ſake whom he hath giuen vs to be our me diator. And ſo let vs all ſay, Almighty God, &c.

The

The lxvij. Sermon, which is the first vpon the. xvij. Chapter.

THEN Bildad the Suite ansyvered, saying:

2. VVhen vvill yee make an ende of your vvoordes? Herken and let vs speake.
3. VVherefore are vvee counted as beasts, and (in your opinion)are dullardes and of no value?
4. This man teareth his ovne soule in a rage: shall the earth bee forsaken for thy sake? Shall the Rockes bee remoued out of their places?
5. Verely the light of the vvicked shall bee quenched, and the sparke of their fire shall not shine.
6. His light shall bee dimmed in his tent, and his lampe that shyneth vpon him shall be put out.
7. His steppes shall bee restreyned, and his ovne deuice shall cast him dovvne.
8. For a net is spred out vnder his feete, and he shall vvalke vpon Snares.
9. The Grinnes shall catch him by the heele, and the Theeues shall come vpon him.
10. His pitfall is hidden in the earth, and his trappe in his vvay.
11. Fearfulnesse shall make him afryd on euery side, & drieue him too his feete, and vvhich vvay soever he go they shall make him to fall.

Haue tolde you heretofore howe it is a true & very profitable doctrine, 20 that God punisheth mens faults too shewe himselfe to be our iudge: so the same be vnderstood and handled skilfully. And hereby wee see how it is not ynoch too take some poynt of holy Scripture in generall: but that we must so apply it to our vse, as wee may fare the better by it. Also experience sheweth what a number there are that abuse the holy Scripture by tossing things too and fro and by taking them at all aduenture. That which they speake is 30 true, so it were well applied. But what? They turne it cleane contrarie too the meening of the holy Ghost: and so is the truth vterly corrupted. The selfe same thing doth Bildad here a new. For he vndertaketh that which he had spoken afore: namely that although the wicked prosper for a time, yet shall they be confounded in the ende, and God will not suffer their prosperitie to last for euer. This is true: But therewithall he passeth measure, by vpholding that the punishments which God sendeth vpon the wicked, are alwayes so full and apparent, as men may finally discerne by eyysight that God iudgeth them in this present life: whereas contrarywise, that is not alwayes seene, nother must wee make a generall rule of it. Lo wherein Bildad is ouerseene, yea notwithstanding that the doctrine of it self be good and holie. And so although that at the first blush there seeme to be no harme in it: yet if wee be once throughly perswaded of it, (that is too wit, that God punisheth all wicked men: so as it is seene too the eye:) greate daunger will infue of it. For prooef thereof, if things fal out contrarie to our expecta- 50 tion, it will seeme vnto vs that God is no more the iudge of the worlde, that he hath giuen vp his office, and that things are ruled here by fortune. And that is a cursed blasphemie. Herevpon wee shall bee tempted with such impatiēcie, that we shall stomacke when we see that God setteth not a stay in things disordered. And finally wee shall be prouoked to give our selues to all naughtinesse.
For wee shall thinke it but lost time that is spent in doing good, seeing that God hath no regard of men, to guide them, but leaueth them as it were at randon. To be short, so little shall wee be able to call vpon him, that we shall be utterly estrangued from him. And so vnder the shadowe of a good doctrine, Bildad turneth all Religion and all feare of God vpside downe, and setteth men in state of despayre. Thus yee see why I sayde that it standeth vs greatly on hand to desire God to give vs skill to apply to our owne profit and edifying the things that wee reade in the holie Scripture, and what soever els is shewed vs at all times concerning his iudgements. First of all Bildad is greeued that he was not herkened too, and for that his sayings were not receyued. Verely if he had taught faithfully and to purpose, he had had iust cause to be displeased. And why? For if wee be appoyned to beare abrode Gods woerde and doctrine of saluation, and see that the men which heare vs are hardened, or else hold scorne of the thing that we tell them: surely if wee haue any zele to Godward, and reuerence his woerde, we must needes be grieved and sorie [at the hart.] And why? For that despyte toucheth not vs, but the living God whose messengers wee be. Therfore he that serueth God faithfully in caryng abrode his woerde, must be sorie if his labour profite not, sith that men do wrong vnto God in not receyuing his woerde. And on the other side we must (as much as in vs lieth) procure the health of mennes soules.

For wee see that men go to destruciō because they give not eare vnto God. And when they beso headstrong against good counsell, beholde they are vtterly vndone.
Ought not this (say I) to vexe vs at the hart? Then if Bildad had taught as he ought to haue done: he had had iust cause to complayne of men for not hearing his tale. But for as much as he corrupted the truth, and turned it into a lie: there is no reason he should be grieved. Notwithstanding, whensoeuer any man offereth vs any doctrine, we bee warned hereby to discerne what is in it, and not to reiect the thing that wee knowe not, as wee see some do, which make no great matter to reiect all, if a man go about to shewe them that which is for the health of their soule. Therefore lette vs not haue any such pridy in vs.
For wee shall not onely greeue the men that seeke our 1. Thes. 4. b. 8 welfare and are willing to do vs seruice: but wee shal also grieve the spirite of God that dwelleth in them and giueth them the loue to edifie vs and to offer vs that which is good and conuenient for vs. Yee see then how we haue neede to beware of despising that which is offered vs, till we know what is in it. Furthermore when Bildad doth here vprerayde Job, that he teareth his soule as in a rage: thereby we be warned (as I haue touched afore) that whē men martyr themselues in their passions, they gayne nothing by it but that they plundge themselues still more and more in their miserie, which shall also returne vpon their owne head. True it is that the man which is in ad-uersitie thinkes himselfe well eased by his murmuring, by his storming, and by his stomacking, specially if he belike out some blasphemie against God. Lo (I say) how men woulde fayne wreake themselues when God holdeth them in aduersitie. But what? Do they further their cace by it in the ende? No: Cleane contrariwyze they do nothing else but rende their owne soules, yea euen furiously, as it is sayd in this streyne. The very Heathen me had skill ynoch too say, that a mans choler is a burning and headie furiousnesse. Now when a man cannot submit himselfe to God in his aduersitie, but sharpeneth himselfe still more and more: I pray you is it not all one as if he were starke madde? Is it not al one as if he would stande against God? I say not that wee should be vterly without passions when God sendeth vs any aduersities. But if our affections be vntrydled and vnruley, and serue to kindle vs and to spurre vs forward against God, so as we be full of bitterness: then muste it needes followe that we be possessed with furie, (as I haue sayd alreadie) seeing we come to iustle after that sort against God. And durst the creature do so if he were not bereft of his right wittes and reason? No surely durst he not. Then see ye a text which we ought to marke well. For although Bildad do misapply it to the persone of Job: yet is the sentence true in it selfe, and ought to serue our turne inasmuch as we see that impaciencie is a kinde of madnesse in a man. And what is ment by Impaciencie? It is not simply a greef conceyued of the mislyking of our aduersities when wee be werie of them: but it is an excessiue hartburning or stomaking against the, when we canot submit our selues simply vnto God to dispose of vs at his pleasure. Therefore if our passions be so vnruley as we can not keepe any measure in our aduersities: then doth impaciencie ouermaster vs. And if we haue no hold nor stay of our selues, we must needes conclude that we are no better than frenlike folke against God, yea and vterly out of our wittes. True it is that we will not confess it to be so: but for so much as the holie Ghost hath auouched it, would wee haue a more competent judge? And if we looke well into our selues, there is nothing in this text, which very experiece sheweth not to be tootoo true. So then let vs assure our selues that he which hath the power to brydle his affections and to hold them short, hath gotten great wisdome. And vndoubtedly, to the self same purpose also S.

Lanes. 1. a. 2. 5. James sayeth that if any man want wisdome, let him aske it of God. And why? For he had spoken afore of patiece) my friends sayeth he, whensoeuer God afflieteth you, & 40 that you light into temptations, assure your selues it is for your profit and welfare. Yet foloweth it not but that the same may seeme straunge, and few men shall agree therunto: But if a man haue neede of wisdome lethim resort vnto God. As if he should say. It is true that mans minde will never think that al temptations and aduersities are benefits of Gods procuremet towards vs: & the fault is because we be misadvised & know not what is expediet for vs. What is to be done then? For asmuch as we want wisdome, specially when our passioes ouermaister vs, & trouble our mindes: let vs repaire vnto God: for he can well skill how to supplie our wants. Thus ye see what we haue to gather vpō this sentence: namely, that we must applie our indeuer to bridle our affectioes, that wee bee not in to great a choler when God afflieth vs: assuring ourselues that if we take it paciently, God wil turne al to our profit and welfare. Contrarywise if we stomacke matters, and wil not asswage our miseries with the comfort that God giueth vs: what will be the end of the? Euē such as Bildad sheweth here: that is to wit, wee shall but teare our owne soules, as we see a wretched madman do: he flings himselfe into the fire, he leapes out of windowes, and he hurteth one whyle himselfe and another whyle othermē, when the fit of his frenzie taketh him. Euē so shal we do when we be caried away by our choler. For we wil make no bones to rush out of square against God, not remembiring a whit, that all shall turne to our owne confusion. Therfore we haue neede to wey well this doctrine: that is to wit, that we teare not our owne soules, but learne to referre our selues wholly to Gods good will, that he may do to vs what it pleaseth him. Thus ye see in effect what wee haue to beare in minde. By and by after, it is sayde: Shall the world be chaunged for thy sake? Shall the Rockes be remoued out of their place? Some expound this sentence very curiously, thus: Shall the world, that is to say, shall the order that God hath set and stablished, be chaunged? And shall the Rocke, that is too say, shall God whiche is the strength of the world, [bee remoued out of his place]? But these are things to much racked. Bildad ment too speake more simplicie: namely that Job in his talke peruertered the order of nature. That in effect was the thing that he ment. And why? For Bildad had set downe, that assoone as God had made heauen and earth, and settled the naturall order that wee see, it behoued also that his iustice should haue his course. This is very true. Howbeit he mistaketh it, in that he would haue Gods iustice to be altogether apparant, so as men might know it and behold it with their eyes and as it were touche it with their finger: wherein he beguyleth himselfe. Neuerthelesse it is good to vnderstand his meening, that wee may gather the instruction which is conteyned in it. His saying is, Shall the world bee chaunged for thy sake? That is too say, How vnderstadest thou it? For thou reasonest that God doth not so execute his iustice here bylowe, as it may be knowne. And would not God haue his iudgements knowne forthwith frō the time that he had stablished this order in the heauen, the ayre, and the earth? when wee behold Gods workes both aboue and beneath, is it not to the end that his goodnesse, his wisdome, his righfulnesse, and all his vertues should be knowne? Yes out of all question. To what end hath God set out so fayre a lookingglasse in all his creatures? Is it not to the ende too be glorified at our hand? Now sith it is so, like as God vtereth his vertues in all the rest, so also wil he haue vs priuie to his iudgements. This is true in some respect: that is too wit, so it be vnderstood as it ought to be. But Bildad stretcheth it out to generally. What is to be donē then? As oft as any man speaketh to vs of God, let his workes which he sheweth vs & are neerest vnto vs, leade vs continually higher vnto him. As for example. The Scripture speaks oftentimes Psal. 104. b. to vs of that which we see dayly: that is to wit, that God sendeth rayne & fayre wether, maketh the earth to yeeld fruite, and causeth it to nurrishe vs. Now it is not ynoch enough for vs to know that rayne & fayre wether come of God, and that when the earth yeeldeth vs foode, it is through his grace. True it is that those are the fundacions: but yet must we go further, and mount vp higher: that is to wit, that if God give such power to the earth, it muste much rather needes follow that we receyue our strēgh of him: for we be much nobler creatures. Is not the life that is in vs a far greater & excellenter thing, than the power that the earth hath to yeeld fruite? Yes certenly is it. Then behoueth it vs to acknowledge, that the same is one of gods workes, and that it proceedeth from him. Againe of God haue a care to feede men in this world: thinke we that he which is a father in that behalf, and vouchsaugh to haue regarde of our bodies which are but wretched carkases, doth not make much more account of our soules? Also, if after the casting of seede into the earth and the rotting of it there, he cause it to spyre againe and to beare fruyte anew: can he not restore vs to a better lyfe though wee go to corruptiō, seeing he sheweth such power in the order of nature? Besides this, God keepeth a stedie hande in Psal. 104. c. making the Sunne to ryze & go downe euery day. More- 19. 20. 22. ouer the moone finisheth hir circuite euery moneth, and the sunne euery yeere, and we see the orderliness of the starres and the planets. Now then, as oft as wee beholde these things, we must conclude that God is throughsted fast in his truth, and that he giueth vs some instructions and signes therof here. VVhen we see such a constancie settled in the order of nature: what shal we thinke of the promises that belong to our saluatiō, which is no corruptible thing nor subiect to the alteracions and chaunges of the world? Lo how the holy Scripture trayneth vs higher and higher by those workes of God that are neerest and most familiar to vs. Neuerthelesse it behoueth vs also to haue skill to discerne betwene Gods workes as neede requireth. As how? Ye see how Bildad is vtterly cōfounded in his owne matter. For he sayeth that because God hath created the world in settled order, and maynteyneth it in the same: therfore it foloweth that his iudgements are al certeyne, & that men may see them and know them. But that is an ill cōsequēce. VVhy? Gods wil is that the sunne should rize and go downe, and therby we be assertayned that he wil giue vs al things necessary for the preseruatiō of our life, euen to the worldes ende. VVhen we see the vines, the trees, & the earth yelde fruite, well, God sheweth vs that he hath a care of this present life, notwithstanding that it be flightful & drooping. But his so doing is as it were to take vs by the hand to lift vs vp to heauē vnto himself. God the wil haue vs to know this most certenly, & so cōmaundeth vs: but as touching his judgements, that is another case. For it is his minde, that wee should haue but only a tast of the in this life, & that we should wayte with pacience till he shew the to the ful in the latter day. For then shall the things be set in order which are nowe out of order: & vntil then, God wil not execute his iudgements but in part. And so the cōclusiō that Bildad maketh here, is not good nor conuenient. For he mingleth twoo thingstogither, betwene the which there is great diuersitie. VVherfore it behoueth vs to vse discretiō in this behalfe. Now we vnderstād how this sentence is true, & yet misapplied. This sentēce is true, inasmuch as the order of nature teacheth and couiseleth vs to seeke the things that are higher, that is to wit, to knowe the wisedome, rightuosness, goodnesse, and truenesse of God: not only in things that cocerne this transitorie life, but also in things that pertayne to the euerlastinge kingdome of heauē. And if we do it not, our vnthākfulness is too heynous & shal not be excused. For ought not the vynes to put out our eyes: ought not the riuers, the fields, & al other like things to do the same, wherin God sheweth & representeth him self vnto vs? If we cōcyeue not that: must not our blindnesse, (that is to say, our perishing in our owne ignorāce) needs be wilfull? But now let vs come to that which is spoken here. Verely the light of the wicked shall be quenched, and the lampe that shyneth vpon his head shall be dimmed: there shall not remayne one sparkē of his fire. By such similitudes Bildad ment to signifie in effect, that God wil not suffer the wicked to prosper for euer. Howbeit we must marke well that it is very true, that God will giue the wicked leue to liue at ease for a time, and to triūph and ruffle it out, as though they had fortune in their hande. If Bildad had bene ware of this poynt: he would not haue locked vp himself so streytly as he doth afterward. And why? He graunteth here that the wicked may sometimes prosper. VVherein is it then that he ouershooteth himselfe? It is in that he foreseth the time and in maner the day that their prosperitie should take an end, & God should turne their laughter into weeping. But it is not for vs too appoynt that. And why? God may sometimes leade forth the wicked in prosperitie euē to his graue so as the world shall see it, as I haue partly touched: that is too wit, they shall go downe into the graue without trouble in the turning of a hand, according also as it is sayd in the Psalme. Beholde (sayeth Dauid) Gods children drag their lynes Psal. 73.4. and cordes, they do but pyne away here bylowe, it seemeth that death pursueth them, and yet notwithstanding will not take them away. But how fare the wicked? They be lustie and strong, and die ere they be aware. Sith it is so, let vs marke well, that it is not for vs to set God any terme, to say that he shoulde quenche the light of the wicked in this world, & thrust them into darknesse, that is to say, into confusion. VVe cannot do so without controlling of our God. Besides this, we be aduertized that his pleasure is it should be so. For he intendeth to reserue some iudgement to the latter day. VVhat is to be done then? First let vs marke as it is sayd here, that the despisers of God or the hypocrites shall haue as it were a lampe burning in their house. Surely he expresseth the matter by the diuers termes of light, lampe and shyning: but Bildads speaking here is after the ordinarie maner of the holy Scripture. Neuerthelesse this light betokenerh nothing else but that the wicked liue at their ease and in pleasure, and that God seemeth to fauour them, like as on the contrarie parte it is a very common thing to haue our tribulations and anguish likened to night and darkenesse. But nowe let vs come backe againe to the matter. The despisers of God, and folke of looce life, or els such as haue nothing in them but hypocrisy, may wel prosper for a time, and we see it yea and it standeth vs in hand to be well acquaynted & inured with it: for if we finde it no ueltie to vs, we shalbe troubled and vexed, and we shalbe forced to giue ouer Gods seruice. Therfore it behoueth vs to be at this poynt, that if God suffer the wicked too liue merily, and to reioyce, and to take their pleasure here bylowe: we must not be astonied at it. Marke that for one poynt. And it is an exercise that is very needefull for vs. No doubt but it will seeme hard to vs: howbeit it behoueth vs too accustome ourselues too it as I sayd afore. Moreouer lette vs marke secondly, that our Lorde will quench all the sayd light, & when the wicked haue spent themselues a whyle, all their pleasures and pastymes which they haue taken vp must be deereley payd for. And why? It cannot misse but that their light shalbe quēched. Also this is it that Dauid standeth vpon in the 37. Psalme. Psal. 37. b. For how exhorteth he vs, not too repine at the vngodly 10. g. 35. 36. when we see them triumph after that maner, and it seemeth that all the world is theirs, and that their life may be esteemed happie, and they iemselues also do glory in it, as though no mē were beloued of God but they? VVhat reason doth Dauid alledge to assure vs: for he sayeth that al this shal passe away. Let vs tarie (sayeth he) and we shal see that all the happiness which the wicked furnishe the selues to haue, is but cursednesse. True it is that they shal be sure ynough of their good fortune as they terme it, & they shall like of it too too well: but in the end God will throw them downe. Then if we wil not be misprouoked by being in companie with the wicked, we must learne to passe beyōd the world, & to vnderstād that God wil shew howe it is nothing worth too haue had the ease of this world, & that it is a ioy of no cōtinuance. True it is that God doth sometimes beare vp his seruants in their infirmitie, so long till he cut of the edge of the wicked mens prosperitie, according also as it is sayd in the Psalme, that Psal. 125.4.3 if we shoulde be alwaies in aduersitie without any releasē, wee might reache out our hande too do euill: that is too say, wee bee so frayle, that although wee called vpon God, and were desirous too serue him: yet might wee be tempted too breake square, if God did not both moderate our afflictions and also reppresse the wicked by giuing the such blowes as shoulde beate them downe to the ground.

God

God then may well execute some of his iudgements euen in this transitorie life, to the intent to support vs after a sort : but that is not alwayes, nother must we make a generall rule of it as Baldad did. For if we say that God w<sup>t</sup>l quenche the light of the wicked, and being demaunded when, do answere, to day, or to morrowe : [ I say] if we set God a terme after that sorte : he will giue vs leaue to be disapoynted of our hope. Therefore lette vs put that into his hande : he knowes the time and season wherein the wicked shoud be rooted out. Sometimes he fetteth them as men do oxen and swyne, according as it is sayd in the prophet. Now if a man fat an oxe or a swyne it is not to trauell them when they be full fedde, it is not to put them to colde and heate, it is not to set them to labour as other beastes: but it is to snetch the Oxe and to cut the Swynes throte. Euen so doth God fat the wicked till they come to the brimme of their graue. And therefore let vs marke well what I haue sayd afore, namely that to rest our selues vpon Gods iudgements, we must mount aboue the worlde, and wee muste looke vnto the things that as yet are hidden from our eyes. Thus yee see what we haue to marke. And so when we see the wicked aduaunced and all things fall out as they would wifh : well, must we thinke it straunge? Hath it not bene so from the beginning of the world: Haue not the fathers of old time bene assaulted with the same temptation, and resisted it? Then let vs leaue that to God. Only let vs know that al the pleasures which the wicked doo take in this worlde, shal turne to their confuzion, and it were much better for them that God had dealt niggardly with them, than to haue giuen them so liberally of his benefites. And why? For according as they haue abused his goodnesse, so must they also be fayne to be punished so much the more grieuously for their vnthankefulnesse. Also lette vs tarie till God worke in doing his office, that is to say, till he quench the light of the wicked. And herewithall we haue to mark well the maner of speeches that are set downe here: as when Bildad sayeth, That nettes are layde vnder the feete of the wicked, that they cannot passe but through straits, that when they rise vp they shall be caught as in a pitfull, and that snares are pitched vnder their feete, howbeit that those snares bee couered and are not to be perceyued. According herevnto David also sayeth: that the wicked shall walke alwayes vpon yce. True it is that their way glistereth, and is fayre to the eye: but there is no sure footing for them, & God will make them tred a step awrie to breake their necke before it was once thought of. All these similitudes agree in one: that is to wit, to shewe that although the wicked do prosper, and their happinesse is wondered at, and had in estimation, yea and coueted of all the whole worlde: yet notwithstanding they go to destruction. Every man will say, I would I were in such a mans case: but we see not the snares that are couered in the earth. It will seeme that God beareth vp the wicked, and that they haue wings to flie with. But what for that? If they sticke high, it is but to tumble downe the more vnhandsomely: and if their feete be vpon the earth, there are snares vnder them. True it is that we see them not: but when wee be warned of them by Gods woerde, we muste looke vpon them by fayth. Notwithstanding if Bildad had vnderstood well what he sayd, he had not bene so hampered in the snares of contrarietie. VVhy so? For in saying that the snares are couered vnder the wicked mens feete, he should haue remembred that it is not in vs to espie them, vntill God shewe them. And when shall that be? Surely it is not for vs to appoynt him any time. Then must men submit themselues too Gods prouidence, and not sette downe a generall rule or Lawe, to say, God will do so or

so. But let vs on our side looke to applie the sayde doctrine to his right vse. Seing it is sayd that there be snares vnder wicked mens feete: well, let vs pray God to leade vs by the hand, assuring our selues that snares are layde in this worlde for men. For Satan not onely assayleth vs with open warre: but also layeth ambushes for vs, and practizeth our destruction priuily as much as is possible for him. VVee therefore should not know how to step one pace in this present life, but wee shoulde bee in daunger to be caught in his snares. But what for that? VVhen Satan hath layde his snares and grinnes for vs, and is euen ready to catch vs: our Lorde preserueth vs. Our way is made afore vs, yea and wee be hilde vp and guided by the very Angels, as it is sayde in the 91. Psalm. Psalm. 91. As for the wicked, they haue their snares alwaies pitched. b.11.12. True it is that they sooth themselues, and other men also do thinke them to be exceeding happy. But that is because they know not what is prepared for them. For it is not ynochough to knowe that snares are layde too catch the wicked: but wee muste note also that they bee couered. Therfore when we see a fayre and pleasant way, and the wicked frisking & scoterloping, and it seemeth that God ca no more hold them backe: Yet let not vs ceasse therfore to conclude, that a horrible destruction is prepared for them. And why? For wee muste not judge after our owne conceyt and seeming: for such as do so, falsifie the holy Scripture. If wee be desirous to see the snares: it is sayd that they be hidden in the earth: and therefore lette vs bee contented to bee ignorant, till God discouer his iudgements vnto vs: I meane his secrete iudgements which cannot bee conceyued but by fayth. For if wee would haue experiance of them after our owne fancies, that were naught. Ye see then how the faythfull ought to brydle themselues as oft as God shall seeme to fauour the wicked, and not to be minded to punish them, nor to bring them to account. VVherefore let all good menne stande alwayes vpon this conclusion. VVel, I know not what these mens ende will be: but yet is God the iudge of the worlde: I will wayte paciently, till I see the falling out of the matter: and when I shal haue once perceyued that the wicked are caught, I doubt not but God accomplitieth that which he sayeth, though the meane how he doth it be not knowne to me. Therfore will I not mount aboue my boundes, it suffiseth mee too giue glorie vnto God in all things that he doth, and therewithall too pray him that I may profite my selfe thereby: for it is not for mee to put him too his stint. And here is mention made of the Heele purposely. For although Bildad had an eye to that which he had spoken, that is, that the snares were vnder the grounde, so as the wicked were caught with them: yet notwithstanding, vnder that woerde Heele, he sheweth that we must not marvel though God make not the wicked to stumble at the first blowe, but suffer them to runne a long race. For when it seemeth that they bee come to the vttermost, to triumph more than euer they did: then he heareth them downe, and giueth them such a counterbuffe as maketh them too breake their necke. Therefore we must not wonder at it. Then let vs suffer God to wayte vpon the wicked, and in the ende to take them by the heele to throw them downe headlong. Thus yee see to what purpose the woerde Heele ought to seruo vs. Now Bildad addeth immediatly, that fearfulness shal dismay him on all sides, and make them to fall everywhere. He had sayd that they should marche in narrowe places, & that whither soever they went they should not escape the ambushes. True it is that the wicked shall haue roume long and large ynochough to sporte in, according as we see how they leape about to and fro: and therefore it seemeth seemeth not that they walke alwayes in streys. In deede we see it not: but they themselves feele it much better than wee can imagine. Againe, albeit that we see it not continually: yet doth God at length performe that which is sayd here, euen according as Bildad vtereth it: namely that feare shall dismay them. But he mistaketh the woerde feare, as though Gods enemies shoulde needes knowe and conceyue their sinnes too be afryde and to repent them: and that is not so. And why? These two things, namely that the wicked should be amazed with feare, and yet be merry and triumphhe, cannot stande together. For when the despizers of God would be merrie, they overshoote themselves, they forget themselves, they become beasts, they beleue they be able to worke wonders, and they thinke themselves the happiest men in the worlde that they can anger God. Lo what the ioy of the wicked sorte is: that is too witte, a furious ioy, and a ioy that so bereeuers them of their wittes and reason, as it leaues no modestie at all in them. But yet in the meane whyle God doth now and then call them to account, and 20 he summoneth them within, so as they be constreynd to perceyue, that they must be fayne to come before him: And yet for all this they burie that knowledge as muchie as they can, and are contented to abyde deafe and blind, and nother to see nor yet to heare what God sheweth & telleth them. Now wee see how wee ought to set foorth this lesson, that wee may practise it too our profite. It is in effect, that although the wicked haue the worlde at will: that is not as much to say as their lyfe is therefore happie. And why? VVhat is the chiefe welfare of man? 30 To bee sure that his conscience is quiet and at reste, so as he may go on in true cōstancie through life and through death, yea and euen be merrie. But doth that befall to the wicked? No: for althoough they steyne themselves to set light by God, and to be voyde of sadnesse: yet are they fayne to be sorie & out of quiet spise of their teeth. Hereby wee see that their life is vnhappy, for all the goodes that they can haue. And so if we vnderstād that God will be merciful to vs, although we be vexed on all sides: yet is it a comfort to vs in the middes of all our sorrowes, that we are sure that God wil end them to our profit and welfare, & to the cōfusion of our enimies. Thus ye see how we must practyze this lesson. Verely it deserueth to bee discoursed more at length, and so it shall bee by Gods leaue at the next Lecture. But as nowe the present time will not suffer vs to go any further.

Nowe lette vs fail downe before the face of our good God with acknowledgment of our faultes, praying him that when he hath made vs perceyue our selues well woorthis too bee bereft of all light, and too bee caste into horrible darkenesse for reiecting the grace of his holy spirite which hee had offered vs: it may neuerthelesse please him to pitie vs, and like as he hath once inlichtened vs by his woerde and holie Ghoste, so too increace the same light more and more in vs, and specially too make vs too prosper in that which hee knoweth too bee fit for vs. And yet in the meane whyle that hee suffer vs not too be tyed to the corruptible goodes of this world, too restre our selues too much vpon them: but that wee may alwayes go forewarde too the euerlasting heritage prepared for vs in heauen, so as wee may not bee vanquished by the temptations that may befall vs, but get the vpper hand in al battelles wherwith we be assayled, waiting till our God haue deliuered vs from all miseries of this worlde, and taken vs vp into the blissednesse that is prepared for vs in heauen, where wee shall haue our full contentation. That it may please him to graunt this grace not onely to vs, but also to, &c.

The lxvij. Sermon, which is the second vpon the xvij. Chapter.

12. His strength shalbee in famine, and breaking of anguish shalbee at his side.
13. The first borne of death shall eate vp his braunches or the members of his skinne, yea it shall eate vp his members.
14. His hope shall bee rooted out of his tent, and the king offear shall make him come.
15. He that is none of his shall dwell in his tent, and brimstone shall bee povvred vpon his dwelling place.
16. His rootes shall vvirther bylovve, and his boughes shall bee cut off aloft.
17. His name shall perish from of the earth, and he shall haue no more rēoume any vvhile.
18. He shall be cast out of light into darkenesse, and driuen quite out of the vworld.
19. He shall haue nother Sonnes nor graundchildren among the people, nor any ouerliuer in his dvellings.
20. They that liue after him shall bee astonied at his day, and they that go afore him shall bee caught vvithe feare.
21. Surely such are the Tents of the vwickid, and the place of him that knovveth not God.

Ee haue too go forwarde with the matter that was begunne yesterday. For here Bildad sheweth that God suffereth not the wicked too scape vnpunished, howsoever the worlde go. This saying is very true (as I sayd afore) if it bee rightly vnderstood: that is too wit, prouided that wee minde not too bide God in such wise as wee haue bene wont too do, to punish the wicked after this maner or that maner, but giue him leaue too execute his owne iudgements. And nowe lette vs looke vpon that which followeth. Here Bildad sayeth first of all, that famine shall bee the strength of the wicked, and that breaking shall be readie [or iust by him] at his side. VVhen he speakest of strength, no doubt but he meeneth not all abilitie: as if he should say, that the wicked mans nurrishtement shall be turned into hunger? 60 And herevnto agreeth the secōd part of the streyne where he addeth, that his sides [or ribbes] shall do nothing else but burst asunder. For the ribbes betoken strength, according as wee knowe that the fleshe alone were not able to beare vp a man vunless he had ribbes which are of a harder substance, wherein cōsisteth all the force of him. Then in effect we vnderstād that God wil so curse the wicked, that although they seeme strong, and well furnished of all that belongs to them, yet shal not that keepe them from b:oozing broozing and breaking. And that we may fare the better by this sentence, wee haue to marke, firsfe that according

Deut. 8.4.3. & to the Scripture, Man is not nurrisched by only bread but Math. 4. 4. by euery woordē that proceedeth out of the mouth of & Luke 4.4. God. VVherein Moyses doth vs to wit, that the abundance which wee haue is not able to susteyne vs. VVhat then? nothing els but the grace of God. If it please our Lord, we shall be fedde though there want bread, drinke and meate, according as he fayeth, he wil feede those that and if there be any scarcitie of it, God will well supply it. Againe if Gods blisſing bee not vpon vs, nothing can do vs good, wee must needs wexe leane, wee muste needs starue and pine away with our abundance. Then is this 30 sentence of Bildads very true, and we see there are many other textes of Scripture that agree with it. VVherefore let vs learne to profite our selues by it, & let vs vnderſtād that we haue nother strength nor sustenance but by the spreading out of Gods goodnessse vpon vs, which is the thing from whence we drawe lyfe, and the meane wherby wee be preserued and maynteyned in our state: and therfore let vs settle our whole trust vpon that. Furthermore when we see the wicked to be strong: lette vs assure our selues that it shall not last euer. True it is that 30 wee muste not imagine as Bildad did, namely that God sheweth to our eyelight the thing that is spoken here: but wee muste tarie paciently, and give God leaue to execute his iudgements when he shall thinke good. Thus yee see what we haue to marke in this streyne. And now he addeth immediatly, that the first borne of death shall eate his braunches, or the members of his skinne, yea, it shall eate his members, for that parcell is repeir'd. VVhereas mention is made here of the firstborne of death, it behoueth vs to vnderſtād some exquisite kinde of death. For when some 40 me die, we see they passe away easily, & God spareth the. Othersome are tormented in such wise as they pine away by peecemeale, and are worne away too the harde bones: and othersome go away without any feeling. Then let vs marke here, that this woord, The firstborne of death, carieth in it a great force, when a man is hilde as it were vpon the racke, and that God dismeyeth him and frayeth him, and wrappes him in anguish on all sides, in somuch that he feeth nothing but a bottomlesse pitte of horrible feare. Bildad therefore sayeth it shall happen af- 50 ter that maner to the wicked. True it is that all of vs are mortall, and that God hath put vs into this worlde with condition to take vs hence againe. Surely we canot come to the heauy life, except the corruptible that is in vs be

Psalm 33. d.19. are his, euen in the time of famine. But contrarywise a Psal. 37. d.19. man may haue his garners full and well stored, and hee may be so full till he burst: and yet shall he not be sustenanced ever a whit the more for it. To bee shorte, God shewed once in the Manna, howe it is he onely that susteyneth vs by his power. If the foode that wee eate bee blisſed of God, it will serue our turne as the Manna did:

1. Cor. 15. g.53. first put away as S. Pāule speaketh. VVhat must be done then? Let every man dispose himself to die, assuring our selues that God doth vs an inestimable grace in vouchsafing too deliuere vs from corruption by the meanes of death: and that although this transitorie lodging of our bodye bee destroyed, yet will he reare vp a new buylding in vs which shall bee much more excellent, in asmuch as wee shall bee clothed with glorie and immortalitie. But on the contrarie parte lette vs assure our selues that our Lord will sende the firstborne of death vpon the wicked, so as theyr death muste bee full of terror, without any comfort, and vnasswaged of the miserie that is in it. And here yee see that the thing wherein wee differ from the vnbeleuers is, that although bothe of vs muste bee fayne too passe through death togither, and that the same bee common too all menne without exception: yet notwithstanding God reacheth vs his hande when we come too the poyn̄t of death, so as wee go to him with a quiet minde, and are able too commende our soules vnto him with a true and rightordered trust, that hee may receyue them as a good and faythfull keeper. But as for the wicked, they muste bee fayne too go hence with great violence, and to bee troubled and dismayed, and too striue with God, and to storme, and to haue nothing that may comfort them. Neuerthelesse let vs bethinke vs of that which hath bene sayde: namely, that this thing shall not be alwayes apparant. For sometime God sendeth a violent death too his children. But although their bodye be payned, yet is not their soule therefore in the worse case. And this is it wherein Bildad was deceyued, according as wee haue alwayes too beare in minde, that wee muste not judge by eyelight: but for asmuch as Gods iudgements are hidden from vs, and wee know not how God executeth them: we must not vse our owne wit and imagination in that behalfe. Howbeit if God execute his iudgements after a visible maner: let vs marke them, that wee may take good by them. If wee see them not: well, let vs vnderſtād that he hath reserued the vterance of them till the last day, for the triall of our fayth. But yet in the meane whyle wee must be fully resolued, that although death be common too all men, yet are the faythfull so comforted and strengthened by Gods goodnessse, as they come willingly vnto him, knowing that he will receyue them, according also as they be sure that he will keepe their soules well and safely vnto the latter day: in so much that they cannot perish, because he hath comittēd the into the hād of our Lord Iesus Christ, and he hath taken them into his protec̄tiō. The faythal therefore wil go willingly vnto death. Contrarywise there lighteth an exquisite and dreadfull death vpon the wicked, because that first they knowe not whither they go, and secondly Gods iustice pursueth them in such wise, as they can cōceyue nothing but feare and dismayednesse. VVhen we heare that the sayde priuiledge is giuen too vs, wee haue good cause to thanke our good God, and to prepare our selues to live or die at his pleasure. Then lette vs not bee stubborne when he goeth about too take vs out of this worlde, sith such comfort is prepared for vs. Nowe it inſueth immediatly, that his hope shall bee rooted out of his tent, and that he shall bee brought too the king of death. VVhen he sayeth that the hope of the vngodly shall bee rooted out of his tent: thereby it is done vs to vnderſtād, that God will for a time lodge such as are vnworthie of it, so as they shall haue ease at will, yea and dwell in palaces, whyle in the meane season the poore faythfull ones shall scarſly haue a little cotage too retyre vnto. Thus the despizers of God, which are giuen too all naughtinesse, shall dwell in this worlde as though the Lordship thereof belonged too none but them. They shall haue wide & large houses, they shall haue goodly long walkes, and therewithall their trust shall bee in their pleasures: that is to say, they shall thinke themselves so well settled, as they may never be shaken, according also as it is sayde in the Psalme, that they shal repine at the order of nature: and if a man looke vpon the buildings that they make here by owe, it seemeth that they bee so highly aduaunced, as the hand of God cannot touche them. Thus yee see the twoo things that are shewed vs in this sentence. And therefore when wee see the despizers of God in their brauerie, and in their iollitie, let vs not be abashed at it. VVhy so? For it is not of late dayes that such trade began. Our Lorde will haue vs to behold these things, too to the end we may know that we be not yet come to our heritage, but our saluatiō is yet hiddē. Thus must we not be troubled nor offended whē we see the wicked to prosper, & to haue their ful scope, & to haue fayre dwelling-places, yea & to trust in their good fortune, and to be puffed vp with pride, and to haue so suregrounded hope (to their owne seeming) as may be. VVhen we see this, well, it is no newe thing. But what? Let vs marke how it is sayd, that hope is rooted out of their dwelling place: that is to say, that although the world see thē in such pōpe now adaiies, & so fenced & furnished as they seeme to be rāpird on all sides, and that no harme may come neere thē to incōber thē: & although the world see them well at their ease, and that the same is like to cōtinue with thē euer after: yet wil God performe that which he hath sayde. And it is not for naught that he hath spoken both of theyr dwellingplaces & of their hope. For therein it is shewed vs, that God wil not be letted to execute his vengeance vpō thē, notwithstanding that they be so highly aduaanced for a time, and as it were exempted from all the miseries of this worlde. And in the ende it is sayd, that they shall come too the king of feare. Like as before, mencion was made of the firstborne of death, to betoken a violent dēath, & a death that is more terrible than common death: So likewise when Bildad speaketh here of the king of feare, he betokeneth a royll and exquisite feare, that is to say, the greatest feare that is to be found. True it is that by this similitude wee may take the Diuell for the king of feare: but the natural meening is that which I haue touched afore. And surely the firstborne of death, and the king of feare, are all one maner of speeche. So then let vs marke briefly, that here the wicked are threatened to be driuen into such a terrible and excesiue feare, that all the feares in the worlde which the godly do conceyue, are nothing to it. And wee muste marke this sentence well. For if God sende vs any occasion of care and feare, wee be grieved at it: and truly the chiefe benefitte that we can wish in this lyfe, is peace, so as wee be set free and exempted from all misdoubting and carefulnesse. Yet notwithstanding if God will haue vs to care, wee muste not therefore be out of quiet. And why? For when we be ouertake with feare, although the same be great, yet is it the mearie whereby God prouoketh vs to resort vnto him. For we would never come to hyde our selues vnder the shadowe of his wings, if wee were safe and sure on all sides: It is with vs as it is with little children: for as long as they be not afrayd they sport and play, and runne everywhere. But if they bee scared with any feare, a man shall not get them out of their mothers lap. The little chickens would never gather them-selues so hastily vnder their dāmes wings, as when they 50 be scared and put in feare. VVee bee so wittesse, that if wee knowe there is no daunger for vs, wee play the stray beasts. And therefore our Lorde to drawe vs home too him, sendeth vs such feare, as wee be fayne spite of our teeth too acknowledge that our lyfe is vnsure, if it be not garded by God. Thus ye see whereto the cares and feares that God sendeth to his children, do tende. Againe they be a meane too make them distrust their owne strength. For wee can never trust throughly in God, except we bee discouraged in our selues so as wee know not where too become. Therefore it is good for vs to bee put in feare. Howbeit when wee see the wicked in sure state, lette vs bee of good cheere, for the restē that they injoy as now, muste in the ende be deereley payde for. And why? They shall go too the king of feare: that is too say, they shall haue such flichtinges as nothing may deliuer them from them, but they shall liue in extreme torment and anguish: in somuch that if a man would bring them backe againē to God, he should not preuayle: and if he should tell them that they ought too humble themselues vnto God that they might rest vpō his goodnessse, they should not understand a whit what he ment, nor be able to taste thereof. Behold(I say)what the astonish'ments of the wickedare, which dally nowadayes with God. Thus ye see in effect what we haue to remēber in this streyne. And consequently it is sayd, that one which is none of bis shall dwell in his tent, and brimstone shall bee poured out vpon his house. Some men set it downe, that he shall dwell in his tente: howbeit bycause it is none of his owne, brimstone shalbe cast downe vpon it. But that is hardē and streyned. Let vs marke then that Bildad ment rather, that the dwelling-places of the wicked shal perish, or else be conuayed ouer vnto straungers. This is the effect of his meining here; like as in other textes the like is sayd of vineyardes and landes. And it is the same curse that Moyses pronouceth against such as obey not God, nor haue not serued him, but haue bene vnthankfull and rebellious towradess him. Thou shalt plant vines (sayeth he) and anotherman shall gather the grapes: thou shalt sowe and another shal reape thy haruest: thou shalt builde houses, and strangers shall dwell in them. Then if this curse be performed, we must acknowledge it to be the hand of God. And(as Bildad sayeth)they that possesse great houses for a tyme, shal be cast out of them at length, and others shall come into them. Yea and euen while they theselues dwell in them, God wil ouerthrow thē. There shal neede no extortioneer to thrust thē out, nor any other enimie to inuade them & to spoyle them of their possessiōs. For brimstone shal fall vpō them frō aboue, that is to say, God will finde meanes vnkowne to mē & extraordinarie, wherby he wil make the wicked to perish; notwithstanding that they be set vp aloft in their shrynes & no man put them out of thē. Yee see in effect what is cōteyned here. And this is a true and very notable sentence, so we hold vs to the prouiso that hath bene set downe by me. I say we muste beare in mind, that Gods iudgements go not all after one rate in this world, nor are executed after one visible maner, that our senses may perceyue them. Sometimes God causeth his childre to be tossed frō post to piller, as we see: nother is it of the present time only that S.Paul sayd, we be without restē. Meeneth he that it is a curse layd vpon Gods children, that they should bee alwayes wandering in this world? No: For therby they be taught, to seeke their heritage & rest that is prepared for them aboue. Therefore whereas the faithfull are as birdes vpon a bough (as men say) so as they wote not where to abide, but are remoued to & fro: it is not executed vpon them as a curse, but rather it is turned wholly to their welfare & saluatiō. Howbeit as oft as we see our Lord leaue the wicked & the despizers of his woord: it behoueth vs too understand that he giueth a taste of his curse in that case. Againe, when they dwell quietly in their houses and noman troubleth them: God hath thunder and brimstone in his hand, and can soone destroy them. For although all men fauour them, and that the worlde maynteyne them and holde them vp so as they be throughly fenced en all sides: yet can not al that shet the gate against God, but that he may reuendge on his side when he listeth. Immediatly there followeth, that his roote shall wither beneath, and his boughes bee cut of aboue. Here nowe againe Bildad doth vs too understand that the wicked shall be cōfounded, notwithstanding that their state see me as happy as any may bee. For therevnto dothe this similitude leade vs. Certessee he likeneth them too a tree that is rooted in the ground. Marke me a tree that is well planted, & afterward spreādeth out aboue as wel in trūke as in boughes, which beare leaves,

leaves, flowres and frute : and euen such is the outward shew of the wicked, and of the despizers of God: & such similitudes are well woorthise to be noted. For (as I haue declared alreadie) we must not be greeued at all when we see that God doth not at the first dashe punish those that steppe out vnto euill, but rather seemeth to beare them good will and to heare their petitions. This troubleth vs, and our desires boyle within vs, so as we would sayne that God should take vengeance out of hande. So much the more then behoueth it vs too marke well how it is sayde here, that the wicked may wel be like vnto fayre trees, according as it is sayde in the 37. Psalme, I haue seene the vngodly aduaunced so high, as he seemed like a Cedre of Libanus. For like as Ceders are higher than other trees : euen so are the wicked among men, in somuch as it seemeth that all men els should stoupe vnder the. But what for that ? I went by, (sayeth David) and kept on my way, and when I came backe againe I sawe there was no print of them remayning. VVhereas he sayeth he went by, he meeneth that he taried paciently till God had accoplished his worke, and that the full time was come. Euen so must we do : when we see the wicked in prosperitie, the same must not hinder vs from following our course, till we be come thither as God calleth vs. Thus yee see what wee haue to marke in this text, for the first poynt. Secondly it behoueth vs too marke this threatening : that when the wicked shal haue taken deepe roote, and be come to such prosperitie as there is no likelihood that euer any winde or storme shall shake them : then shall their roote wither beneath : that is to say, then will God worke after such a sorte, as they shall be throwne downe and consumed : and theyr braunches shal be cut off aboue: that is to say, God will persecute them by all meanes. Now when wee see this, let vs resort to the promises that are giuen to Gods children : according as it is sayd, that the man which feareth God shal be like a tree planted by a riuers side, which always draweth moysture and nurrishtment too it, and that such as are of a perfect beleefe in God, are like thereto, as it is sayd in Ieremie. Therefore let vs pray God that we may drawe moysture frō him, and that the thing which is spoken in another place of the Psalmes, may bee fulfilled in vs : namely that the righteous shall florise as the palme tree, & prosper euen in the house of the Lord: Also let vs pray our Lorde to nurrisht our roote beneath, that although we carie no outward shewe before men, yet we may not cease to haue our life hidden in Christe. And that if it please him too giue vs any countenance, the same may be to the magnifying of his blissing, so as wee may bee an example and recorde of his goodnessse : & that if it please him at any time to cut off our boughes, he will also make that too turne to our profitte, as when a man cutteth or shreddeth a vine, it is too make it bear good fruyte afterwarde, whereas if it were lette alone it would growe wilde. Then lette vs be sure that if it please God to cut off our boughes, it is too make vs yelde the more fruyte in him by taking away that which is superfluous in vs, that all things may turne too our benefite. Besides this, it will serue also to restrayne vs from being tempted too pray God too make vs like the wicked, that is too wit, to make vs prosper as they do. Thus muche concerning this similitude. And it is also sayd, that their memoriall shall perish in earth, and that they shall haue no more renowme any where. True it is that wee muste not put our trust in this worlde, too seeke renowme and glorie here. For the holy Scripture mocketh such kinde of vanitie, saying that suche as doo settle their names in earth, knowe not what God and his kingdome meene.

Therefore we must not be desirous too make our selues renowned in this worlde. Yet is it not in vayne also that God hath promised it as a blissing too his children, that their name shall continue for euer, and that it shall bee Psal.112.b.9 blissed. And how is that ? It is bycause our Lorde (spye of the churlishnesse of the worlde) will notwithstanding make his seruants honorable and in good estimation. Prover. 10. b.7. They may bee despized for a tyme, yea and subiect too many flaunders and reproches. But God will deliuere them at length, and bring too passe that their rightuousnesse shall be knowne. Yee see then that the memoriall of good men and Gods children shall bee blissed. True it is, that this is not alwayes accomplished in the world, but yet it falleth out so oftentimes. Againe whereas God speaketh of renowme or memoriall, he meeneth it in respect of such as haue discretion too iudge. For the vnbelineuers are blinde and ignorat in discerning Gods children aright : but yet doth not that diminish any thing of the promise that God maketh vs. But nowe lette vs come too Bildads saying, that the memoriall of the wicked shall perish. Lette vs marke that his so saying is a curse peculiarly belonging too the despizers of God, according too that which I haue touched alreadie. For they bee drunken in their foolish ambitio, so as they beare themselues in hande that their name shall neuer fade in the worlde but men shall haue it in remembrance for euer. But wee see howe it goeth cleane contrarie with them. For what is the cause that they turmoyle themselues after that sort ? It is too haue men to talke of them. VWell then, are the despizers of God desirous too make themselues renowned in the mouths of men ? God will turne it quyte and cleane to the contrarie. For if their remembrance continue : it shall bee in reproche, and men shall not speake of them but in skorne and mockage. And as for them that haue bene caried away with this sayd vayne desire, do wee not see that God hath buried them, so as menne coulde no more tell what was become of them ? VVhereas it seemed that they shold be talked of whyle the world indured, and whereas they themselues surmyzed that euery of them shoulde become greatest, (for althoough they sawe many go before them, yet did euery of them thinke with himselfe, I shall bee chiefest:) yet hath God buried them as I sayde afore, and if men speake of them, after what maner is it ? Euery man is made priuie too their naughtiness and shame. And doth not this come of the sayd curse of God ? Therefore let vs marke that Bildad hath expressed here the chiefe thing that those kinde of men seeke which are giuen to the world. And that ought too bee well marked. For if God make our name too perish too the worldward : what loze wee by it : what harme haue wee by it ? For wee knowe our names are written in the booke of lyfe. Be glad (sayeth Luke.10. d. our Lord Iesus Christ too his Disciples) for your names are written in Gods registers to your everlasting saluation. Is not this ynough to content vs ? VVee be not like these fooles that haue none other immortalitie than too make themselues too bee spoken of. For that were ouer-great fondnesse. But wee know that God hath written our names in his booke, and ingroced the recorde with his owne hande, that is too say, in his owne everlasting determination, (for Gods hande is the vnchangeable ordinance that hee hath appoynted) and afterwarde ratified the whole with the bloud of our Lorde Iesus Christ, and finally sealed it by the working of his holy spirite. Seing then that we haue our memoriall there among the Angelles of heauen, and among the Patriarkes, Prophets and Apostles : haue wee not cause too bee contented ? And so albeit that our remembrance bee razed out of the worlde : yet shall wee looze nothing by it. But wee see that

that God maketh the memoriall of his seruants too bee blessed, (as I sayde afore) notwithstanding that they bee despized for a time, and counted in the worlde to be dirt and dung, as Saint Paule speaketh: for he likeneth them to guttes full of filthinesse that are cast away. Thus then the faythfull are exercyzed for a tyme, yea and they are vnder the curse of men, as though they bare all the sinnes of the worlde: but in the ende God maketh their righteousnesse too shine foorth as the breake of the day, and they are had in blessed remembrance. VVe see that Abraham in his tyme was despized and shaken off. VVhat may a man thinke of Iacob? and yet wee see that their memoriall is blessed. Euerie man ranne vpon Dauid, they cursed him, they spyted him, he became as a worme of the grounde, hee was made a skorne and mockingstocke too the veryest rascalles, and every man did as it were lothe him: and yet notwithstanding, wee see that his remembrance is blissted, yea euен in Gods Churche. For as for the vnbeleeuers, a man must not seeke too haue any renowme or remembrance among them, because they bee wretched blinde soules that cannot iudge nor are able too discerne betweene white and blacke. Thus yee see what wee haue too marke in this sentence. And consequently heere is added, That they shall bee cast oute of light intoo darkenesse, that they shall bee drien oute of the worlde, that they shall haue neyther children nor Graundchildren among the people, and that they shall haue no ouerluer or heyre in the lande where they dwelle. Heere Bildad confirmeth the matter that hee had treated of: which is, that if God make the wicked too prosper, that is not alwayes. And that is verie true. For what happinesse is there in their state, seing that all their laughter muste bee turned intoo sorow. So then let vs assure our selues that the present light of the wicked serues but too leade them intoo the way of darkenesse. VVhen wee heare this: if wee bee in darkenesse (that is too say in aduersitie, according also as the worde importeth) so as wee wote not on which syde too turne vs, bycause wee be besette with so many miseries round aboure, as wee see no way oute of them: well, let vs for oure parte assure our selues, that the same darkenesse bee it never so greate, shall bee a pathe too leade vs too Gods light. For hee hath woorderfull meanes too leade his children too saluation, yea euен when hee seemeth fully mynded to destroy them. Are we then as it were vndone? Let vs assure our selues, that bythat meanes God draweth vs to saluation. Are we in thick darkenesse, let vs assure our selues that he can well bring vs to light. Thus yee see what wee haue to gather vpon this text. Contrariwyse, doo wee see the wicked puffed vp with their nobilitie, and make greate braueryes, and spreade oute their wings? VVell, it is true that they are in greate brightnesse: but let vs tarie till God perfourme that whiche is sayde heere: that is too witte, till hee bring darkenesse vppon them. Thus (as wee see) heere is a verie profitable thing for vs too knowe: which is, that although God make the wicked too prosper for a tyme: their case is never the better for it, for alwayes the ende muste bee looked vntoo. And contrariwyse, though the poore faythfull ones bee distressed heere, so as they wote not where too become: theyr state is never the worse for all that. And why? Let vs looke vpon the ende: whiche is, that by this darkenesse God meeneth too bring them light. Againe, whereas it is sayde that the wicked shall haue neyther children nor offspring, nor leaue any heyres in their dwellings: Deu. 28.6.11 that is according too the curse of the lawe. For it is sayde that issue is a blessing of God. And althoughe

our Lorde would that all the benefites of this life should be dedicated vntoo him, and that men shoulde acknowledge him too bee the authour of them, and yelde him prayse for them: yet notwithstanding hee auoucheth it too bee a speciaall benefite when hee giueth men issue.

Now although the law were not yet written in Bildads time: yet had hee the same doctrine printed in his hart by God: that is too witte, that our Lorde will roote out the wicked, so as hee will not leaue one of their race, but all shall bee brought too naught. If any man alledge, that our Lorde doth often suffer eu'en his owne children too bee barraine: the answere herevnto is, that such manner of cursings are oftentimes turned into blessings vntoo Gods children. Neyther must wee make a generall and indifferent rule too say, that God doorth in all caces woorke his sayings visibly too the eye. For wee muste leaue the choyce of that too himselfe to dispoze thereof in tyme and place as hee shall think good. VWe maye see then that sometymes a faythfull man and one that feareth God shall haue no issue in the worlde: and yet is it not too bee sayde therefore, that hee is cursed of God. For beholde the firste iightuous man: what Abel. Gen. issue left hee behinde him? Yea and when the promise 6.b.8. was made too Abraham, that his offspring shoulde bee Gen. 13.d 16 as the sande of the Sea, and as the starres of the Skye. Gen. 15.a.5. Had hee a great number of children? Howe many chil- & 13.b.16. dren left hee after his death? True it is that hee had di- uerse other children besydes Isaac: but God did cutte Gen. 25.a.2. them off, according also as they were not woorthie too bee Abrahams children. True it is also that after him Ge. 25.a.24 his sonne Isaac had but twoo children: and one of them Ge. 27f.41. was a murtherer in his hart, by meanes whereof he was faine too put awaye the other, and too banishe him hys Gen. 28.a.2. house. VWe see then that although the godly leaue no children after their deceasse: yet are they not there- fore the lesse blessed of God. For they haue an euer- lasting fatherhooде in heauen, in that it pleaseth God too ioyne them not onely with all the Saincts and faith- ful ones: but with the Angelles also. But as for the wicked, it is too bee knowne that the want of issue is a curse of God vntoo them. For too their seeming, all were forlorne with them, if they might not haue an heyre to succeeide them. And God disappoyneth them of it by his rightfull vengeance, and as by a punishment meete for them, bycause it is altoogither agaynst their lyking. This is it that wee haue too marke in this streyne. Nowe furthermore Bildad concludeth in the ende, that such as come after them shall bee amazed at it, and suche as go before them shall bee afrynde, and that suche is the dwelling of the wicked, and of those that feare not God. This serueth too confirme this matter: that is too witte, that God will punishe the wicked in suche wise, as the worlde shall bee astonished at the sight of their state, it shall bee so vnhappye. This saying is verie true, and wee ought too aduauntage our selues greatly by it, and beare it well in minde, prouided that we follow not Bildad in inclosing Job and all such as are afflited, within the sayde cursed- nesse. And why? For (as I haue sayde) aduersities light vpon Gods children, as well as vpon the wicked. VWe must alwayes beware that we let God alone with the guyding of all things, as vnto whome it belongeth. So then if wee bee poore and afflited, so as the worlde esteemeth vs as wretches: let vs not therefore ceasse to rest vpon the goodnessse of oure God, and too wayte his leysure till he deliuer vs for a full adoo, from all oure necessities and afflictions, [which thing he will doo.] if wee referre all vnto him.

Nowe let vs fall downe before the face of our good God with acknowledgement of oure faultes , praying him too make vs feele them in such wise, as wee maye humble our selues and be sorie for them , and learne too take more profit of the miseries and aduersities that are sent vs in this worlde , than wee haue done hither-to : that vpon the knowledge of our faultes and sinnes, wee may enter intoo examination of our lyfe, too mis-

like of our vices to the ende that being receyued to mercie by the meane of our Lorde Iesus Christ we may haue the more matter and occasion too trust too his goodnessse for the time to come, so that whereas wee haue to walke through many miseries and aduersities in this worlde, we may not therefore ceasse to obey him alwayes to the end.
That it may please him too graunt this grace , not onely to vs, but also, &c.

The.lxix.Sermon,which is the first vpon the.xix.Chapter.

I Obansvvered and sayde.

2. Hovv long vvill ye greeue my hart, and vndermine me vvith your vvordes?
3. Yee haue alreadie ten times put me to confusion, and are not ashamed, and yee are hardened agaynst mee.
4. If I haucedone amisse, my sinne shall abide vvith mee.
5. But you magnifie your selues, and vaunt your selues at my miserie, 6. Knovv ye that God hath beseeched mevvith his povver, & beset me roūd about vvith his nets:
7. If I crie out by reason of violence, he ansvvereth me not : If I shreeke out yet haue I no right.
8. He hath shet vp my vvay , so as there is no passage out, and hee hath put darknesse in my path.
9. He hath bereft me of my glorie, he hath taken the etoyvne avvay from my heade.
10. He hath destroyed mee on all sides, and I am vanished avvay: he hath taken avvay my hope as the hope of a tree.
11. His anger is kindled agaynst me, and he counteth me as his enemie.
12. His armies are come, they haue inclosed me, & they haue pitched their camp about my tent.

Ee haue seene what Bildads intent was in rebuking Job. He tooke this 30 for a generall grounde , that God leaueth not the wicked vnpunished. And therewpon hee concluded, that Job must needs bee of that number , sith that God afflicted him so greeuously. But Job disproueth him,because it is not for men too deeme of his lyfe by the aduersities that hee endured, forsomuch as God punisheth him not for his offences , but executeth some other determination that is secrete and vnkowne too men. Howbe- 40 it before he come to that poynt, hee complayneth of hys freendes, for beeing so hardharted towardes him. Ye are not ashamed(sayth he) to put me too confusion so often times alreadie: you haue bardned your selues agaynst me, or you haue made your selues straungers too mee : for the Hebrew worde may import the one as wel as the other. But the fittest is, that they had bardned themselues,in not having pitie nor compassion vpon his miseries. Now then wee see whereto this plaint tendeth. Howbeit whereas he sayth that if hee haue done amisse, his sinne shall abyde 50 in him: therein he sheweth himselfe too haue beeine ouerpionate. For if he had done amisse, it was for him to receyue correction peaceably. But to say let me alone, I shall beare mine owne punishment : no man shall take harme by my sin but my selfe, is a maner of speaking that agreeth to an vnreclaymable and desperate person,rather than to a childe of God. Neuerthelesse, Job was tempted therewnto , when he sawe he coulde haue no reason at his freendes handes. But yet he returneth to the princi-pall and standeth not vpon the other poynt , because he 60 had an euill eace. And he sayth, I thinke ye to preuayle agaynst me by vaunting your selues because ye see mee in such plight: or thinke you that my eace is past recouerie, and that I shall bee damned, because ye see mee too bee as miserable a creature as may bee? Knowe ye (sayth he) that God hath ouerthrowne mee in judgement (that is to say, yee must not dispute heere by reason : for Godrul-eth not himselfe according to mans capacicie) I can haue no right at his hande. I may well contende, but yet must I stande too my harmes, I must be oppressed , and yet if I crie, or if I make moane, my miserie is neuer the more assuaged. It booteth mee not, for bee hath shewed himselfe too bee mine enimie, hee hath sent mee innumerable miseries, like an armie to besiege me. I am tormented, and which worse is, I see no issue in all my way,and it seemeth that he bath inclosed mee, and locked mee vp, and that there is no maner of meane to scape the miseries that presse me and torment mee . This were verie straunge talke at the first sight , if wee had not alreadie vnderstoode partly wherewpon Job groundeth himselfe , and that the same were not nowe newly agayne brought to remembrance, as it shall bee shewed anon by Gods leaue. But let vs go forwarde with Jobs talke . This complaint which hee maketh too his freendes is iust : that is to witte , that it was a pleasure too them too put him too confusion. Nowe (as I haue sayde heeretoefore) if a man bee smitten with Gods roddes, although there be iust cause to finde fault with him , yet must the same be done with a milde spirit, that the medicine be not to sharpe, considering that the hand of God hath rigour enough in it selfe, without adding any more to it. If a man beare himselfe stoully a-gaynst God, and seeme not to feel any miserie, but playeth the madman , and is not by any meanes reformatio-nall: there we haue to vse greater sharpnesse. For when men abuse Gods pacience and goodnessse , such statelinesse must be tamed. And if God handle them not at the first as they deserue so as they become more hardharted and wilfull because he beareth with them: then ye see wherin he ought to vse greater rigor. For it is not to be borne that men should outface god after that sort, & turn his goodnesse and gentlenesse into such poison, therby to inuenim themselues more and more agaynst him. Let a man handle them mildely and they runne riot in their delights, so as they become as it were bewitched, and a man cannot wring any reason out of them, nor draw them to repentance. But if a man be hartbroken, and it is to be sene that God hath wrought with him in such wise alreadie, as we ought to bee moued too compassion : what a matter were it too set vpon him with rigour? VVee shoulde shewe

shewe our selues too haue no manhood in vs. True it is that if a man were afflicted as much as were posseible, yet if we see him still hardharted against God, & that all the corrections which he hath receyued haue not amended him, there it behoueth to vsé rigour. But yet neuerthelesse we muste still haue pitie of the miserie that wee see him in, and if wee bee kindeharted, there will be some mitigation and gentlenesse, and wee will vse him after some quiet fashion. Now as for Iobs friends, there was no suche dealing in them. For had they taken things as <sup>10</sup> they ought, they had founde that he humbled himselfe vnder the hand of God. And surely although it seemed straunge too him too bee handled so : Yet notwithstanding he ceasst not too confess that God was his iudge, and had all power ouer him. Therevpon they fall too rayling at him, and beare him in hande cleane contrarie to the truthe, that he was a wicked man, that there was nothing but hypocrisie in him, that he had neuer serued God hartily, and that they whiche were not afflicted as hee was, were mucche better and rightuoser <sup>20</sup> than hee. If Iob woulde haue agreed with them, hee muste haue renounced God, and spoken agaynst his owne conscience. Yee see then wherevpon hee standest. And hereby we bee taught, that when God affliccteth any of oure neighbours, wee muste not by and by conclude that they bee the worste men alive. But wee muste haue regarde too iudge vprightly, as wee woulde haue other men too doo by vs, and too say : It may bee <sup>30</sup> that Gods meening is but too trie their pacience. Althoughe they haue walked vprightly before him, and with a good zeale : yet notwithstanding hee intendeth that wee shoulde haue mirrours. And if it please him too conceale the cause from vs, or if they haue done amisse, and God doo punishe them: yet muste wee not measure their sinnes by the punishment that we see. And why? For hee behaueth himselfe more hardly towarde the righteous than towarde the woorser sort, because he reserueth the wickeddest till the ende: and that is too make them the more vnxexcusable. For they do nothing else but heape vp store of his wrath, and horrible vengeance vpon their owne heade. Yee see then howe it becommeth vs too bee wize and modest when wee see poore men in aduersitie, too the ende that wee go not the wrong way too worke. Againe, although God shew vs as it were with his finger, that there is iust cause when hee sendeth such miseries vpon any man : let vs learne too make oure owne profite of it. And that wee may so doo, let vs haue an eye to our selues. For when God maketh vs too perceyue his iudgements after that sort, his intent istoo instruct vs at another mans cost. Therefore it is too no purpose for vs too condemne suche as are in aduersitie, without hauing regarde too our selues. But it behoueth euerie of vs too enter intoo himselfe, and too bethinke him, Alas, in that my God hath preserued mee, I am bounde vnto him for it: yea and I also may bee chastized some one way or other. VVherefore I muste acknowledge, that my God spareth me: and that wheras I am not scourged with extremitie, and specially for that I am at mine ease and rest, the same commeth of his meere mercie. I say, let vs acknowledge <sup>50</sup> these things, that wee may haue occasion too bee oure owne judges, and not too condemne otherfolkes without looking to our selues. And by the way we see what a temptation it is, when men giue an vntowarde and wrongfull judgement of vs, and that it is verie hard too keepe measure in that case, sith that Iob (who had suche a pacientnesse as we haue seene, and as the Scripture reporteth of him) hath notwithstanding ouerleaped hiw boundes, and was not able so too bridle himselfe, as no euill worde might scape from him. True it is that he hath good right too complaine : but yet for all that, it is the saying of an vnreclaymable person, to say, if I haue done amisse, my fault shall abide with mee. For althoughe men be so vnkinde too vs when wee haue done amisse, (as wee see some that haue too firie a zeale, or at leastwize not so milde a harte as were requisite :) yet muste Gods children alwayes humble theniselues. For what knowe wee whither God bee priuie too mo faultes in vs, than wee oure selues wote of? And surely wee perceyue not the tenth part of oure sinnes. God therefore dooth nowe and then sende vs some harder chastyment than wee thinke conuenient: but that is bycause wee knowe not oure owne disease. VVee see that Dauid had the selfe same consideration towardes Semei. He <sup>2.S.m. 16.6</sup> knewe verie well that Semei was a lewde fellowe, and <sup>10</sup> that hee was not ledde agaynst him but of a cankerde and bitter minde: and yet notwithstanding hee sayeth, who can tell whither God hath commaunded him too rayle so vpon mee or no? Yee see howe David considereth that God hilde him in his handes, and that it was his will too haue him delt withall so rudely. Nowe if the wicked mens persecuting of vs bee too bee fathered vpon God, bycause he serueth his turne with them as with whippes to strike vs iustly withall: what shall we thinke when wee see that men doo of a good zeale labour too resourme vs, and are desirous of our welfare? If they come not too vs with such suche gentlenesse as were requisite, shall wee therefore play the looce Coltes, and reiect all that is spoken? VVhat discretion were that? VVee shewe well thereby, that wee bee not gouerned by Gods spirite in any wise. But wee see that Iob was tempted after the same maner, and therefore wee must bee the water. For if it befell so too a man that was as an Angell of heauen : I pray you what will become of vs, if wee keepe not good watche agaynst Satan? VVill he not soone haue put vs too a foyle? And surely if hee once get an entrie intoo vs, wee knowe not well on <sup>40</sup> whiche syde too turne vs, too come againe too our right way when wee bee oure of it. So then, let this sentence serue vs too suche instruction as I haue spoken of: that is too witte, that if men lifte vp themselues in that wise agaynst vs, and bee too feerce vpon vs, and bee not so modest as were requisite: yet notwithstanding, it behoueth vs to vnderstande, that it will bee alwayes for our welfare to receiuie the corrections that are laid vpon vs. And for the humbling of our selues, let vs learne too enter intoo our selues, and let vs neyther fret nor repine when men rebuke vs somewhat sharply, and discouer our lewdnesse. VVherefore is it that men (as we see) doo oftentimes storme without rule and modestie? It is bycause they haue not an eye vnto God. For if the partie that is appeached woulde consider, Verely I haue done amisse, I finde my selfe blame worthie, I may well excuse my selfe afore men, but let mee iustifie my selfe, let me bleare the eies both of my selfe and of my neighbors, and let mee imagine that I haue great wrong done me: alas yet can I not scape the hande of God: VVhat shall I gayne then by seeking many krinkes, and by excusing my selfe too the worldward? For lo, God will condemn me. And moreouer the matter standeth not simply vpon being cyted before the heauenly iudge: but behold mine own conscience doth so crie out vpon me, as I carie both my judge & my hangman with me. The sith it is so, were it not better for me to yeld my selfe guiltie, and to cast down my head, & to consider that God seeth all thing, & that in asmuch as he handleth me so, I should <sup>60</sup> acknowledgacknowledge that the same is a fit medicine for me , and that although it seeme bitter too mee, and I could find in my hart too refuze it if it were possible , yet it is for my behoofe to yeelede too it ? Yee see then what wee haue too marke in this sentence . Furthermore let vs learne too bee quickesighted in espying our owne faultes when God visiteth vs , assuring our selues that in so dooing he sheweth vs singular fauour . For we see howe we be inclyned of nature too hypocrisie : and therevpon euerie of vs dooth so flatter and foade himselfe in hys owne sinnes , that if wee were not preuented on the other syde , there were none of vs all but hee woulde welter in his owne filthinesse . And what woulde become of it in the ende ? VVee shall runne on from euill too worse till Satan get the full possession of vs , and then shall we bee so caryed awaye , that there shall remayne nothing but blockishnesse in vs , according as it is sayde in the Proverbes , and as Saint Paule speakest also . For be-

Prou.28. b. holde, the extreemest of all miseries is, when men haue 14. no more remorse , but are so caryed away and giuen vp Rom.1.d.28 intoo the handes of Satan , as they are no more woun-Eph.4.e.14 ded too feele their sinnes , and too bewayle them before

God . And surely wee shoulde all of vs come too that poynt , if God withhilde vs not by stirring vp men now and then too inforce vs too feele oure sinnes by discouering them when wee haue forgotten them , and thinke them too bee well hidden , and by putting vs in minde , that whereas wee haue turned oure backes vpon oure iudge , it behoueth vs too come before him . Therefor (as I sayde ) yee see heere a benefite that is not too bee despized . For if wee refuzed the corrections that are put too vs : it is all one as if wee laboured to quench the light of Gods spirite . VVee bee in darkenesse so long as oure sinnes are hidden : and God commeth too light vs vp his Cresset , too giue vs light to see our owne wantes : but yet had wee leuer too haue kercheefes too blindefolde our selues withall , and cannot finde in oure hartes too haue them taken awaye : wee refuze the light , and like better of darkenesse . I praye you what an vnthankefulnesse is this ? I pray you is it not a detestable sacrilege when wee resist Gods spirite after that sort , who reacheth vs his hande , and is willing too bring vs backe into the way of saluation ? Yee see then that the speciaall poynt which we haue too marke in this sentence , is that wee muste not say , If I haue done amisse , I shall beare mine owne burthen , other men shall not suffer punishment for mee , I say let vs not stryue after that fashion , but let vs consider that God giueth his gifte too others too communicate them vntoo vs : and when hee sendeth vs any man too shewe vs oure faultes , it is a recorde of his goodnesse , that hee hathe still a care of vs , and is desirous too reserue vs too himselfe . And in verie deede if wee bee restie and kicke agaynst the spure , refiecting the corrections offered vs by men : that maner of vnthankefulnesse shooteth at God himselfe , it is hee to whome the wrong is done , and it is i.e also that shall reuenge it .

Therefore let vs keepe our selues from falling intoo such pryme , and let vs bethinke vs , that whensoeuer we haue done amisse , it is high tyme for vs to come home to our selues , and too consider oure owne euill , that it may bee remedied . But nowe let vs come too the seconde poynt which is the cheefe . For (as hath beene declared heeretoofore ) Job did not vtterly refuze correction : but did cast foorth these woordes as a blast of winde . And it hath beene noted heeretoofore , that in this booke Job speaketh not onely what bee was ful- ly resolued of in himselfe : but also vitereth the fittes of his affections after as hee was mooued inwardely , howbeit that hee withstoode them and restryned them so as hee was sorie for them afterwarde . Nowe therefore hee giueth ouer that which hee had sayde , and passing not for it , commeth too the principall poynt . For hee knewe that the other was but wandering talke , and not grounded eyther vpon reason or truth . So returneth hee too the defence of his case : which is , that hys freendes vnder colour of comforting him , doo vaunt themselues agaynst him , yea and that their vaunting of themselues is without alledging of any thing but hys reproove too put him too confuzion , and came thither with such harde and shamelesse hartes , as there was neither manhoode nor modestie in them . Thus yee see Iobs meining .

And further hee concludeth alwayes that God doth not punishe him for his sinnes , but that hee handleth him after a straunge fashion , suche as men are not acquainted with . And surely heere hee complayneth that if bee cry out , there is no reason for him , because tb.t God is as it were bis enemie . Heereby wee be taught , first that if we will doo oure neighbours good in rebuking them of their faultes : it behoueth vs too bee well sure , that they haue done amisse , and that wee finde fault with them iustly , and not vpon single conjectures : for it was an euill maner of proceeding of Iobs freendes , to condemne him because God scourged him . VVee muste bee of another mynde , as I haue sayde alreadie . For God keepeth not alwayes one rate , too punishe none but suche as haue done amisse : nay rather , oftentymes the righ- tuousest are troubled muche more than the others , as wee see : for according as God hath delt of his power vnto them , so doth he also trie them too the vttermost .

It behoueth vs to beare this well in minde , to the ende we bee not greeued when wee see wee must walke in the selfe same way that they doo . For ought it to mis- lyke vs , that God spareth vs no more than those whome hee loued more than all other men ? VVould bee bee more priuiledged than the holy fathers that haue had so excellent witnessesse of the holie Ghost ? So then if wee shoulde condemne or acquitte euerie man according to Gods handling of him : all the poore folke in the world , all the sickle folke , all despized folke , and all folke that are out of credite or estimation , should be wicked men . And what a dealing were that ? For those are they whom God chooseth too bee his , thos e are they whom he acknowledgeth and auoucheth to be his children . And contrariwise , as for them that are placed in honour and dignitic , God aduaunceth them after that fashion , to the intent their fall should be the deadlier , specially if they abuse his gift . Such as haue riches are so swallowed vp into them , as they be as it were an entring into hell : and they become so drunken in their prosperitie , and doo so vaunt theselues against God , that the goodes which they possesse do cry out for vengeance against them . VVee see that such as are strongest , are like stubburne horses that cannot be broken nor brought to handsonnesse , and to be short , there seemeth to be nothing else in the but rage agaynst God . Thus yee see an ouerspitfull and frowarde judgement . And therefore let vs learne too holde suche an euene hande as wee condemne not men but by Gods lawe , nor before such time as we bee sure of their faults , so as we may discerne them . As for the persons let vs alwayes reserue them to Gods hand , vntill there appearre some certaine marke that God hath reiecteth them . Then let vs not of oure parte bee hastie too take vpon vs the thing that is not lawefull . Thus yee see what wee haue too sticke too in this sentence . Neuerthelesse I haue haue sayde alreadie that Iobs meening is verye true: that is too wittē, that hee is not punished for his sinnes: but yet it followeth not therfore but that hee ouershote himselfe in his passions. And that ought always too humble vs the more. For when wee see suche a man that was indued with so greate graces, was not able too holde himselfe from swaruing aside , what shall become of vs? Nowe according heerevntoo hee sayeth, That God bad ouertbrowne him: that is too say, that hee commeth agaynst him after such a disordered maner, as 10 is altoogither oute of square , and hath no indifferencie in it. This may bee spoken in suche a sense as shall not bee euill. For I haue declared heeretoofore , that there is in God a double righteousnesse. The one is, that which hee hath set foorth in his lawe: and that righteousnesse is well knowne and apparent too vs : it is oure rule [too liue by.] But there is yet another higher righteousnesse in God which is secrete and hidden from vs. For when wee shall haue fulfilled the whole lawe, (which is impossible too doo, but we will put the 20 cace it were done) yet haue wee not satisfied God according to his perfect righteousnesse: but we shall haue contented him according too the seruice that hee requireth of vs, and according too the abilitie of our humaine nature. I meane not suche abilitie as wee haue had since Adam sinned : but suche as wee had by oure creation from God. Put the cace then that wee were Angelles: go too, wee might fulfill the lawe of God: but that were not answerable too his soueraine rightfulness, for that is farre higher than all oure vnderstanding is able too reache vntoo, there is no proportionablenesse betwixt them. So then, our Lorde dooth nowe and then punishe men for their sinnes, euen according to the curses that hee hath set foorth in his law. Otherwhiles hee hath no such respect in punishing them, but referueth the intent of it in his owne secrete purpose, as wee see in his afflicting of Job. For if it be demaunded why hee did it: when wee haue sought the vttermost, wee shall not finde it too bee for his sinnes, and therefore there muste needs bee some other cause. 30

VVee see what troubles Jacob indured : and yet for all that hee had serued God purely . And what say yee to his fathers, Abraham, and Isaac? It shoule seeme that God had conspired agaynst them, too make them passe through all the aduersities and miseries that coulde bee deuized. As muche is too bee sayde of Dauid. VWas it for that they were more disordered than other men, and for that they had deserued more rigorous punishment? No. But yee see that God hath secrete iudgements whiche are hidden from vs for a tyme. Therefor Iobs meening heere, is that the affliction which he endureth muste not be taken as one of the common punishments that are imployed in the threatnings that God hathe published in his lawe : but that thereis a higher cause which cannot bee knowne of men. Surely if Job had simply had that respect with him, hee had had good reason in his so dooing. But when he sayth that God bad ouertbrowne him, and all was oute of order: he sheweth himselfe too bee ouermaystred of his affections. True it is that he alwayes knewe God too bee righteous: according as wee see that although hee were shaken , and that such woordes had escaped him, yet hee returneth home againe , and acknowledgeth that hee ought too holde his mouth sherte. Neuerthelesse hee ceaseth not too haue his skumme, as a boyling pot that seetheth vp into great wallops muste needs spirt ouer on one side or other. Euen so dooth Job. And it behoueth vs too knowe that hee stormeth too much agaynst God ; which thing is greatly for our profite , if we can applie it to our instruction. Fortouching the first place, wee shall haue profited greatly, if wee beare away this lesson, that God dooth sometimes punishe men not in respect of their sinnes, but too humble them, bicause his intent is too shewe that hee hath full authoritie ouer his creatures, and hath ordyned them as mirrours of pacience , because hee will make them too feele their owne infirmities, that they maye knowe themselues the better when they perceyue that there be couert vices in them which are discouered by afflictions , and that they haue not had such constancie in them, as were requisite, but haue swarued asyde : and that when they shall haue seene themselues so stumbled, they maye bee the more prouoked to call vpon God, knowing that if hee had not reached them his hande, they had bene vtterly vndone. And surely whensoeuer we indure anye affliction: the best remedie is for vs to enter into the knowing of our sinnes, and euery man to accuse himselfe, saying: Alas, I haue offended my God so manye wayes , that if hee shoulde punishe me a hundred folde, I haue deserued it, and much more. Againe, if wee see not alwayes wherefore God scourgeth vs : let vs saye, VVel Lorde, thou art righteous. Although I bee not able to attayne to the reason of thyne intent : it ought to suffysē mee too knowe that thou doest not anye thing , but rightly and indifferently. Then let vs assure our selues, that wee haue true wisedome, if wee can so glorifie GOD, notwithstanding thathee holde our eyes closed vp and leade vs as poore blynde soules. Let vs bee contented to walke whithersoeuer hee leadeth and directeth vs, assuring oure selues that his onely will muste bee too vs the infallible rule of right : whereas wee see Job so ouermaystred of his affections , let vs vnderstande that it is a right harde thing for vs too submit our selues to the singel will of God , without asking a reason of his woorkes , and speciallye of those woorkes that surmount our wytte and capacite . And thys is it that I sayde afore : namely, that it is a perfect and more than 40 Angelicall wisedome , too haue the skill to yeelde so much honour vntoo God, as to rest merely and simply vpon hys pleasure, that although wee fynde the matterstrange, and (to our seeming) vtterly contrarie too all right and reason : yet wee boowe downe our heades, and saye, Lorde, although thy iudgements bee as a deepe gulfe: yet will not wee presume to encounter them. And trulye Job was fully disposed so too dooe. Yea , and althoughe hee had had roughe assaultes and temptations: yet in the ende hee got the victorie . Neuerthelesse , wee see that hee swarued in saying, God bath ouertbrowen my iudgement : that is too saye , hee handleth mee not lyke a iudge , but steppeth too mee with extraordinarie rigour as though hee had no compassion of mee . Seeing that Job was tempted so farre; what shall become of vs ? Therefore let vs applye all our wytte and all our indeuour too this lesson, nameley to rest simply and merely vpon the good will of our God, and not too tarie vpon temptations, although they carie vs sometimes away, but to hold our selues short and 50 to rein our selues with that bridle when we see that God playeth the iudge with vs, and that mortall men auance themselues agaynst their maker, and cannot find in their hartes to subn*i*: themselues to that which he sendeth. For althoughe they protest the cleane contrarie: yet in their doings they shewe that they blame God of crueltie, and woule fayne go to lawe with him. Thus yee see what we haue to beare in minde. And Job must serue vs for such example, sith we see the exceſſe of his panges. Howbeit

it wee compare him with those that rush intoo diuelish boldenesse : wee ought yet too bee better warned too humble our selues. As howe ? VVee shall see manie that are not like vntoo Job. For they not onely haue a pang or twaine in chasing : but they also continue from euill too worse . And when any matter falleth not ute too their minde , first they fall too murmuring agaynst God , and afterwarde take libertie too chafe at him : and then if they meeete with any vneasie saying , theyr headinesse is suche as they make no bones to auante themselues agaynst God , yea and too bee wilfull too the vttermost , as wee see these selfewyze folke doo , insomuch that if there bee anie thing in the holie Scripture that agreeeth not with their witte and foolishhe braine , it muste bee condemned at the first dashe , without scanning from whence the same proceedeth . And afterwarde althouge they bee conuinced : yet ceasse they not too bee so shamelesse as too lift vp themselves agaynst God and agaynst his secrete and incomprehensible iudgements , and too say , Tushe it is impossible for this to enter intoo my heade . VVell my freend , if you bee blinde , is the Sunne therefore darke , and shineth it not ? If a blinde man say I see no light , is that as muche too say as the Sunne dooth but darken men ? That were well too the matter . Therefore sith wee see the diuell caryeth awaye men in suche a rage , that they conclude their reasons agaynst God , so much the more standeth it vs in hande too indeuer to bridle our selues short . And if our impaciencie doo erewhiles prouoke vs , and pricke vs forwarde to be angrie with God , and to fret with our selues : at leastwise yet when we haue well stormed , let vs come home againe , (for it is better to turne late than neuer) and let vs say , Lorde what would become of me , if thou hilde mee not backe ? Euen so my God , it behouethe mee too bee gouerned by thy spirite , that thou giue mee the wisedome too bee wholly subiect too thy good will , whatsoeuer may betide mee . Lo what what wee haue to marke . Moreouer let vs also compare our miseries with Iobs . For if wee consider well the afflictions that hee indured : they bee so straunge as he might well say , I knowe not howe I may take them , for God oppresseth mee ouer sore . And for prooife heereof , if God touche vs but with his little finger : wee be so tender that by and by we are angrie , [and fall too saying ,] Howe goes this geere ? If God sende vs any common disease , wee beare our selues in hande that he ought rather to haue spared vs . If hee afflxit vs in any wise : that willmake vs too storme . Too bee short , let him giue vs but one lashe with his rodde : and wee will say hee hath thundred vpon vs . Seeing wee be so impacient , let vs consider what Iob indured , and what woulde become of vs if wee shoulde come too the same poynt . VVould wee doo no more but cast vp some skumme and assuage againe ? No . It were the next way too set vs quite ouer our shooes , sith wee bee so inclyned therenvnto vpon euery small occasion . So much the more therefore behoueth it vs too knowe that wee haue not profited in Gods schoole , till wee haue learned too take paciently all corrections that hee sendeth vs , seeing that they tend to our welfare . Thus ye see what we had more to note vpon this sentence . Howebeit among other things , let vs marke that it is a harde and verie daungerous temptation when God heareth not oure cries and complaints .

Pro.18.b.10 And why ? For it is sayde that Gods name is a strong and sure holde for all such as flee vntoo it . VVhosoeuer calleth vpon the name of the Lorde shall bee sauued .

Act.2.c.21 Yea and although that heauen and earth were meddled

Ro.10.c.15 toogither , and the whole order of nature confounded :

yet shoulde wee still bee preferued by calling vpon the name of God as Iuell sayth . God hath promised that he Ro.10.c.13 will heare vs before we open our mouth : and reach out Esa.61.d.23 his hande to helpe vs before we speake . Ye see then that God sheweth himselfe so bountifull as yee woulde maruell , assuring vs that hee will succour our necessitie : and yet for all that , when wee shall haue called vpon him , more than once or twice , and when wee shall haue persisted in praying him too haue pitie vpon vs , wee shall continue still in one state , and (which worse is) it shall seeme too vs that God sharpeneth himselfe agaynst vs , too torment vs the more when wee haue called vpon him :

And what a temptation is that ? It is sayde to me that Pro.18.b.10 the name of God is my refuge , and that God is neere vnto all them that call vpon him faythfully : I haue assayed Psal.145.d. what those promises meane , and I feele no commoditie by them : but rather my miserie is increased the more . And what a thing is that ? Yet notwithstanding Iob came too that poynt , and not Iob onely , but also David and the rest of the faythfull . And specially it behoued the same thing too bee fulfilled in oure Lorde Iesus Christ , according also as it is hee on whome this sentence is verified : namely , I cry vntoo thee daye and night , and yet thou easest mee not of my miseries . Thou seemest too haue forsaken mee : when our fathers resorted too thee , they alwayes perceyued that it was not Psal.22.a.2 in vaine , but thou puttest mee heere too confusion . But heereby wee note , that although God haue promised too bee neere vntoo all them that call vpon hym , and too succour them before they open their mouthes too desire him : yet dooth not that import that he sheweth it alwayes too the eye . Howe then ? After his owne maner .

It is certaine that before wee call vpon God , hee is willing and readie too helpe vs . And for prooife hereof , whence commeth the affection of praying ? Commeth it not of the holy Ghost ? For a man would nevere of his owne minde resort vnto God . Then is it because God looketh vnto vs with pitie , when we thinke he hath turned his backe vpon vs . Againe , if we haue stode vp any time : it muste needes bee that it was through the power which hee gaue vs , and that his succouring of vs with his hande , made vs to bee patient and lowly in our aduersities . And true it is that wee may haue suche a conceypte as it maye seeme too vs for a time that God hath giuen no eare too vs . VVee see howe it was so with Iob , and with David , yea and that Iesus Christe also was faine too come to that poynt : not that he was tempted after our maner , that is to say , with impacience : but yet notwithstanding because hee had to fight against his owne humaine nature , hee was sayne too suffer anguish of minde . And forasmuch as God had left him destitute of all helpe , hee was inforced to cry out : My Psal.22.a.2 God , my God why hast thou forsaken mee ? Therefore when wee haue suche temptations , and are grieved by reason of the infirmities and great store of vices Mat.2.c.47 that are in vs , according as wee are full of distrust , stubburnesse , prude , and other like things : let vs haue recourse vntoo this poynte , that wee bee not the fyrt whome God hath mynded too succour , and haue in the ende felt the profite of theyr prayers , notwithstanding that they languished vnder his hande for a tyme . So then let vs holde oute , and suffer God too keepe vs in languishing as long as it please him , euen till hee haue delyuered vs and shewed himselfe oure Sauioure [ too the full ] according as hee hath gyuen vs some taste of it alreadie in this worlde .

Nowe let vs fall downe before the face of oure good God wyth the acknowledgement of oure sinnes, praying him so too clense vs of them, as there may bee nothing in vs too hynder vs from comming right foorth vntoo him, and that in oure comming wee may finde him readie too receyue vs for oure Lorde Iesu Christes sake. And so let vs all say : Almighty God our heauenly father.&c.

The lxx. Sermon, which is the second vpon the xix. Chapter,

This Sermon conteyneth the exposition of the 7. 8. 9. 10. 11. & 12. verses that haue bene touched alreadie, and then vpon the text that followeth beere.

13. Hee hath made my brethren too shrinke avvaye from mee , and mine acquaintance become straungers to mee.
14. My neighbors haue forsaken me, and my father and my mother haue forgotten mee.
15. Mine ovne houshalde, and my maydescruants haue disdeyned mee , and I haue beene as a straunger in their sight.
16. If I call my seruant he ansvereth me not, though I pray him with mine ovne mouth.

T behoueth vs to go throughwith the matter that we beganne in the last Sermon : which is , that it is a harde and burdensome temptation when our prayers bee not heard at the first. For verely the onely thing that remayneth for vs when we be in aduersitie, is that God receyue vs if wee desire him, that he haue pitie vpon vs , and that wee may feele that oure resorting too him for succour hath not beene in vaine. This (say I) is the welfare and comfort of all the faythfull. But if it seeme that we haue lost our time in running too our God too bee ayded at his hande : what will become of it? Shall wee not bee as good as in despayre? Yet is it Gods pleasure too exercize his children after that maner by hyding himselfe from them , and by making no countenance of hearing them, or of regarding the miseries that they indure. True it is that he hath promised too bee readie too helpe vs as soone as we desire him : yea and that hee will not tarie too bee sued vntoo, but will preuent our requestes. And that is it that maketh the temptation much greeuouser,namely when God seemeth too haue dallied with vs , and too haue giuen vs a vaine and frutelesse hope. But let vs vnderstande,that seeing he hath exercised his children so heretofore : we must not maruell though he do the like to vs nowadayes. VVherfore let vs wait paciently, and we shal see by the ende,that he hath not forgotten vs,ne ceaseth too heare vs , although he shewe not oute of hande in the open sight of the worlde, that hee hath his hande stretched out ouer vs. And out of doubt, if wee bee patient, and able too continue in prayer : it is a token that God hath heard vs alreadie. For if he had not preserued vs after that maner, were it possible for vs to haue continued one minute of an houre, as hath beene declared? But it behoueth vs to come to the euill that is in vs. For the cause why God delayeth his helpe , and dryueth off the time, is for that we pray not to him so hartily as were requisite. Euerie man will say he passeth not for praying : and in deede if men bee asked whither they haue done their indeuer too pray God too haue mercie vpon them : euerie one will answe, I haue prayed as muche as is possible. But all they that speake after that maner knowe not what prayer meaneth. VVe go as coldly to it as to any thing. And do we thinke that God ought to receyue such requests as are made but for fashion sake, and ceremoniously only? Then let vs marke , that God seeing our coldenesse and negligence , aydeth vs not so soone as wee desire, too the intent too quicken vs , and too enflame vs with greater desire, that by the same meanes oure fayth may bee the better tryed . Or else if we pray to God after a sort, and that there be no negligence in our prayers,yet wil there be some rebelliousnesse hidden in vs, as we see heere in Job. True it is that Job prayed : but was it with suche mildenesse as was meete? No :but hee was rather too impacient . After what sort then must wee go vnto God ? Saint Paule gi- Phil.4.4.6. ueh vs a rule of it , saying that wee muste pray too hym 1.Thef.5.c. incessantly with giuing of thankes. And although we be 17. tormented and ouerpressed with aduersities, yet must we not cease too sigh and grone: yea and therewithall also continually blisse the name of God in oure prayers, and submit our selues vntoo him. If this bee wanting: it is no praying , it is rather a defying of God as if a man shoulde go summon his enimie and defie hym. Yee see then that our prayers are sometymes like vntoo summonings, according as wee make them vntoo God. And howe is that? The greatest honour that God requireth at our hands, is that we should call vpon him in all our aduersities. Nowe, in steede of dooing that homage too him, wee come to spyte him. Therefore we must not thinke it straunge that hee shoulde stoppe hys eares agaynst our prayers, and make no countenance too helpe vs, when wee crye vpon him. So then, let vs haue these two things: that is to wit, let vs pray to God with an earnest minde, so as it may not bee onely with liplabour, or with casting foorth some sighes at aduenture : but with beseeching him from the bottome of our hart. And secondly let there be no pride in vs, too be desirous too make God subiect too vs, so as he shoulde do whatsoeuer commeth in our heade, and in our fancie : but let vs pray vnto him with al lowlinesse,magnifying him and praysing him, although he affliet vs.

VVhen wee haue these twoo things , it is certaine that wee shall bee hearde so muche the ratter. For the contrarie vices are the cause why God doth so much delay his helping of vs. But let vs put the case that God succour vs not when wee haue prayed duerifully , and with suche hartinesse as he himselfe requyreteth: Yet must wee still bee patient , till the conuenient tyme be come, whiche is in his hande. It is for him onely too iudge of that. Then if wee knowe not too day what our prayers haue auayled vs : God will make vs too perceyue it too morrowe . VVherefore let vs stande dumbe in that behalfe, and wayte for suche oportunitie , and ende as God shall list too sende vs : and then shall the same bee good and luckie for oure welfare . Thus yee see what wee haue too marke in this sentence where Job sayeth, that hee bid cryed cut, but yet was not heard. For the adding of : ll this, is but too complaine that his afflictions are so extreame, as it is no wonder though he be exceedingly sore grecued, and that his freendes ought not to stand checking agaynst him. For it is a follie (sayth hee) too deeme by the ordinarie custome what I ought too doo. If a man bee affiected, and it bee tolde him that he ought to pray vntoo God: as for mee (sayth hee) if I pray vntoo him: I am not heard. If a man replie againe, my freende, you muste not storne so sore, (and peraduenture the aduersitie that he indureth is but some common thing:) no (sayeth hee:) but I feele such and so excessiue paine, and the hande of God presseth mee after so straunge and rigorous a maner: as it is no maruel though there bee neyther witte nor reason in mee. Lo what Iobs meening is. But I haue tolde you heeretooefore, howe it behoueth vs too knowe, that God doth sometimes execute his rigour vpon men after an vnknowne maner, as in respect of oure mother witte. And therefore muste wee at suche tymes praye vntoo God, and say, Lorde make mee perceyue continually that thou art at hande with mee, and althoughe I finde it not by experience, but rather am as it were forsaken of thee too outwarde seeming: yet giue mee power alwayes to settle my hope vpon thy goodnesse and succour. Job shoulde haue spoken so. Howebeit forasmuch as hee dooth it not: Therefore hee roueth ouer all the feeldē (as they say) in making suche complaintes as wee heare in this text. But too the intent to do oure selues good by that whiche is conteyned heere, let vs marke that in Iobs persone the holy Ghoste ment too set vs ute as it were a glasse of mens affections, when they be not brideled vnder Gods obeysance. Marke that for one poynt. Another poynt is, that God ment heere too shewe vs his iudgements howe terrible they bee, and that when hee listeth too hyde his louing countenance from vs, and too shewe himselfe an enemie too men, it is so dreadfull a thing, as were ynough too ouerwhelme the whole worlde. That is the seconde poynt. The thirde is, that although Job were in such pangues: yet notwithstanding he resisted the temptations, howebeit that hee came no sooner too the brunt, but many euill woordes escaped from him, so as infirmitie was mingled with hys strength. Thus yee see the three things that wee haue too marke heere. First of all wee note that God will haue men too beholde themselues in the person of Job. For wee shoulde not knowe what wee bee, if God inforsyd vs not to perceyue our owne weakenesse. Euerie man thinkes himselfe too bee mightie and strong: wee imagine oure owne power too bee woorderfull, and that wee shall never swarue, yea, so long as wee bee farre from blowes. But assoone as God presseth vs, we be so cast downe, as we may well see (if we bee not tootoo dull) that it was but a vaine and foolish ouerweening in vs, when we thought wee had any strength in our selues, whereas wee haue none at all. Forasmuch therefore, as men are so blinded, and as it were sotted in that foolish perswasion: the holy ghost presenteth here vnto vs the person of Job, too make vs perceyue howe men shrinke vnder Gods hande when they be affiected, and that they cannot stande out, but must needs bee vtterly ouerthowne. Nowe, if this happened to Job, who was constant aboue others: alas, what shall become of vs? But wee must come to the seconde poynt which is the chiefest. For whereof commeth it that wee bee not teachable too humble oure selues before God, and too walke in awe without without trusting in oure selues, or in any thing that wee can doo? It is because wee feele not howe heauie and vntolerable Gods hande is. The matter then that God decla-rath vnto vs, is that it is a terrible case when he listeth to vtter his power vpon mortall men in punishing them: and that they must needes melt away at it as snow against the Sunne, and be vtterly confounded. Yea verely (as the Scripture sayeth) God needeth not too vtter his rigour vpon vs: let him but onely withdraw his spirite, (that is to say, the liueliness wherewith he quikeneth vs) and beholde, we be gone. And when he sayth that not onely he will bereuee vs of his power, but also become contrarie to vs, and fall vpon vs as a thunder and tempest to ouerwhelme vs: alas what can we do? True it is that wee confessit too bee impossible for mortall men too holde tache when God assayleth them: but yet for all that wee conceyue not as were requisite howe dreadfull Gods hande ought to bee to vs. Thus ye see what example is shewed vs heere in Iobs persone. But by the way (as I haue touched afore) wee must not suppose that Job delighted or foaded himselfe in suche passions as were euill and damnable. Howe then? Hee strived to withstand them: But yet did he so fayle, that he was as good as shaken downe with them: and God intended too shewe that men are neuer so vertuous but there is somewhat too bee mislyked in them, and that euer they shew themselves verie weake in some sort or other. And that is greatly for oure profite. For it is to the ende wee shoulde not bee disououred when wee bee tempted, though it seeme that wee shall bee vtterly ouerwhelmed.

Then if wee finde oure selues in that case, lette vs passe further, and pray God too holde vs vp, and let vs not doubt but hee will doo it, sith wee see that although Job had infirmities of fleshe in him, yet notwithstanding hee fayled not of the victorie. I say let vs not not doubt, but God will so woorke as hee will make vs too overcome all oure temptations. Yea but that shall not bee without making vs too limpe, and without giuing vs some blowes, and without making of our woundes to bleede. Let it suffice vs, that the strokēs which we receyue are not deadly, but that God will step before vs for a buckler. Nowe let vs come too the complaints that Job maketh heere, Hee sayeth that God bath so besieged his wayes, as bee knoweth not howe too get out, and that bee bath put darkenesse in his path. Though wee bee affiected, yet is it a great assuagement of our greefe, when wee see that the mishappe muste passe awaie apace, and not continue still, as if wee finde some meanes too scape it, or shift it off by other mennes counsell. But if all this bee taken from vs, there remayneth nothing but dispayre. This is it that Job meeñeth heere. Hee sayeth that God hath clozed vp all his wayes: which is all one as if he had sayd. Alas where shall I become? For if a wretched man bee tormented with many miseries, hee will looke which way too get out, if not by one way, yet by another, and hee will seeke meanes and aske counsell. But the case standeth not so with mee. For God hath shet mee vp heere, I see no waye out, I may well reason of obteyning this or that: but there is no releefe at all for me. And why? There is nothing but darkenesse through oute: that is too say, I see 'neyther way nor path, and God hath so inclozed mee, that at a worde there is no remedie at all. This is the summe of all that is spoken heere. And it behoueth vs to marke it well, to the ende that if the like happen vnto vs, we may not leaue to call vpon God. What is the cause that mē shet the dore before the blow come, and are not able too pray, but are vtterly amazed? It is because they beare themselues in hande that the like neuer hapned to any man afore. And truly we haue seene alredy,

Chap. 5. c. 1. alredy, that Job was assaulted with such temptations as thys: Looke vpon all the faithfull that haue bin before thee, if euer God handled any of them after this fashon. This was a plaine concluding that Job was forlorne and vterly cast away. So then ye see a texte that is well worthy to be marked. And why? For if at any time it seeme vnto vs that the miseries whiche wee indure are endlesse, and that we can neuer be rid of them, but that when we haue sought all the wayes to the wood, it seemeth impossible that euer we should be set free againe: 10 Let vs say, very well, God knoweth how to drawe vs out of this perplexitie: and therefore let vs stand vpon that pointe. Yea but is it likely that God shoulde pitie vs? We see the like hath happened to Job. Let vs looke vnto the end (as Saint James saith) and seeing that God deliuered that man from the miseries that he indured, why should he not succoure vs also at this day? For nother is hys might abated nor his goodnesse. Ye see then to what vse it behoueth vs to applie this sentece of Iobs, when hee saith, that God had shut vp his wayes. Furthermore let vs mark that God doth erewhiles for a tyme bereue the

Nian. 11. c. 2. faithfull of the benefytes that he hath promised them, to 23. the intent they shoulde be prouoked to pray to him, and also when he intendeth to humble them, or when hee Esa. 50. 4. 2. chastiseth them for their sinnes. As for Job, it is certayne & 59. 4. 1. that he suffered not for the offences that hee had committed. Not that God found not ynough in him wherefore to punish him: but (as I haue declared heeretofore), bycause he had not that respect only, but rather meant to trike his pacience. But as for vs, if he deprive vs of the 30 blisssings that he hath promised vs: it is for that we haue offendid him, and are not worthy to enjoy them: or else it is a dash with the spurre which hee giueth vsto make vs spray vnto him the more earnestly. Thus dothe

Psa. 34. b. 8. God promise his faithfull that hee will guide them in C. 91. c. 11. their wayes, yea and that he will lend them his Angels to bee their guides, so as they shall not step one pace awry, nor be encountered with any euill. This is a goodly promise. But yet notwithstanding it will seeme vnto vs that our way is shut vp, that there is nothing but brambles and bushes afore vs, and that there is nothing but 40 mountaines and rocks round about vs: thus are we inclosed and no likelihood of possibilite to get out. What haue we to do in this case, but only to say, alas I am not worthy that God shuld perfourme the goodnesse that he hath promised to his children. I shoulde haue my way playne and leuell, and I know not on which side to step: now therfore it behoueth me to acknowledge my faults. Truly God hath promised to send his Angels to guide his faithfull ones. But what for that? It seemeth cleane otherwise in me. Therefore it behoueth me to pray him to voursafe too shewe the performance of the promise towards me. Thus are we by such meanes stirred vp to call vpon God. Heerewithall let vs vnderstand that hee will not bereue vs of skill and discretion vnto the end, but will make vs too finde way where none is, and hys woorking shall be so much the better knowne vnto vs, whereby wee shall haue the greater occasion to glorify him, whē he shal haue wrought after such a maner as we looked not for. For when God hath gone beyond oure 50 witte and hope: we haue so much the more cause to glorify him. Thus ye see in effect what wee haue to marke in this sentence. Now Job addeth, that God bad bereft him of his glory, and plucked the crowne from his head, that he had consumed him, destroyed him, and bereft him of his hope as a tree [that is cut vp.] Heere Job betokeneth two thinges the one is that God scourgeth him so roughly, that if he were compared with other men, he shoulde be found too indure much more than they. And seconde he saith that he is not as other that are in aduersitie, who though they suffer very great miserie, yet notwithstanding are as a tree that is plucked vp, but yet hath some little roote or string lefte behind, so as there is yet still some hope for them. But as for me (saith he) I am plucked vp after such a sort, as there remaineth no piece of me, but God seemeth to haue stubbed me vp quite and cleane. For although he were not yet rooted out of the world: yet was his life like a death. Yea and God had giuen him so many woundes, as there had lighted miseries and calamities vpon him: his children had bin crushed to death before him, all his goodes had bin taken away and destroyed, and his body was become a rotten carcasse. Therefore it is not causelesse that he saith that God had cut him vp and bereft him of his hope, like as if a tree were plucked vp quite and cleane out of the ground, so as there remained nothing of it, the strength thereof fadeth away, and it is not to be hoped that it will spring any more vpon the earth to bring foorth any frute, bycause it hath lost al his freshnesse. Job then sayth that hee was dealt with in like wise. Now when we haire these things, we must not maruell that he was so sore greeued as it seemed that nothing might comfort him any more. For whiche of vs wold not be more impacient, if he indured but the hundredth part of that which he indured? But yet we perceiue that God stood by him. Then must we hope that he will do as much towards vs. What is the caufe of the impaciencie that is oftentimes in vs? Like as when we desyre to be pacient in our aduersities, it behoueth vs too take comfort in the fauoure of our God: so also on the contrarie part, when we cannot abide that God shoulde smite vs, but are so testie that (to our seeming) there is nother order nor reason in his doing: then goes our hope too wrecke. Even so happened it to Job. He not only displeased God by ouershooting himselfe in such wise as wee haue seene: but also it was not long of himselfe that he was not cast downe headlong into despaire: and he deserued well that God shoulde haue rooted him out, and bereft him of all hope, and made him as a tree plucked vp roote and rind. For in speaking after such sort as wee see, Job was so bereft of Gods grace, as he had bin vtterly vndone, and as it were plunged into hell, if God had not reached him his hand a fare off. So then let vs assure ourselues it was Gods singular goodnesse that he suffered not his seruaunt too fall even into the bottomlesse pitte: and that thereby we be admonished that God had neede to mainteine vs, yea and to lift vs vp againe when we be falne. For God worketh after two sortes towards vs, to the end we shoulde call vpon him. Sometimes hee preserueth vs in such wise by his power, as we fall not at all, and sometimes he suffereth vs to fall, to the ende too lift vs vp againe afterward. Yet notwithstanding it is true that we must not tempt God too giue vs the bridle lyke frantike folke, vnder coloure that he hath wel holpen vp such as haue falne: for then shoulde wee abuse his grace. Ageyne it becommeth vs to magnify his gracious goodnesse towards Job, assuring ourselues that when we bee as good as quite quailed, he commeth to vs and seekes vs out: and very needful it is that hee shoulde worke after that sort, for otherwise we shoulde be vndone at euery blow as we see heere in a faire lookingglaſſe. Thus much concerning that saying. And furthermore, that we may withstand such temptations, let vs marke that oure life must bee hidden as Sainte Paule also speakeſt of it. True it is that we be like a tree that is pulled vp: but yet doth not God ceaſe to giue vs ſecret ſtrength, and wee ſhall haue continuall freshness, notwithstanding that we ſeem:

seeme to be perished. Then let vs not esteeme our life nor our welfare by that which we behold, and may bee discerned by eyefight, or by our motherwite: but let vs vnderstād that God intendeth to preserue vs by a meane which we are not able to comprehend. Our life (sayth Saint Paul'e) is hidden with our Lord Iesus Christ. And therefore let vs waite vpon that good God, and pray him to giue vs the grace to looke alwayes vnto him, till the time come that he discouer that which is now vnknown For it behoueth vs to be like dead men, vntill such tyme as God quicken vs. VVe may well feele heere beneath some rāf of his grace and hee may well giue vs experiance of it: but yet if we feele it not at times, we must pray him to waken vs, and to make vs know the loue that he beareth vs. And although we haue not past one drop of Gods grace: yet must we call to mind what Saint Paul'e saith to the Romans, that if Gods spirit liue in vs, although there be but a very little portion of it: yet is it sufficient to put away all that euer is in vs of our owne wicked nature. VWell then, it is true that we shall not always feele it, nother shall we perceiue the woorking of Gods spirite when it is in vs: but let vs pray God that he suffer not such dulnesse and blockishnesse to dwell alwayes in vs, as we should not feele his grace to applie it to such vse as he would haue vs and to profite our selues by it. Lo what we haue to marke in the second place vpon thy streyne. Now Job saith afterward, tbat God hath inflamed his wrath against him, and is become his enimie. True it is that as oft as God scourgeth vs, the holy scripture saith that he is angrie with vs. Not that hee is subiect to our passions, nother is it for that he casteth vs away, or that hee hateth vs in deed. VVhat the? It is because he makes vs feele his displeasure by our afflictions. VVhy so? For afflictions are Gods chastizements which he sendeth vnto men for their sinnes. True it is (as I haue said alredy) that sometimes he chastiseth his seruants for some other purpose. But yet must we alwayes first call to mind that wee bee sinners and detters vnto God, and therefore that he punishmenteth the sinnes which we haue committed. Howbeit, there is in Jobs saying a particular consideration beyond the ordinarie woont. He complayneth that Gods anger was kindled against him. And oughte that to be any noueltie? For throughout all the holy scripture God declarereth and auoweth himselfe to bee angrie with those whome he chastizeth. Yea: but Job intended to expresse more: that this wrath of God is not a common and accustomed wrath, as though God counted him for an vter castaway. For like as generally God will haue vs to feele his anger when he punishmenteth vs, and to enter into the knowledge of our owne sinnes: so also will hee haue vs to knowe that the same wrath of his lasteth but for a while, and that it passeth and fadeth away, as it is saide in the Prophet Esay, It is but for the turning of a hand that I will make thee feele my displeasure: but my mercie I will make thee feele from generation too generation: it shall indure towards thee euerlastingly. Ye see then that euen in the middes of afflictions, it behoueth vs on the one side to know that God is angrie, bycause wee haue offended him with our sinnes: and on the other side not to doubt but that he loueth vs, and is desyrouse to be at one with vs. But Job declarereth heere, that God hild him as his enimie: that is to say, that this anger is not Gods ordinarie anger, as when he sheweth himselfe angrie with sinners and giueth them some token of his vengeance: but that he was excessive. This is the sence of that saying. Now what would become of vs if wee were in the same case as he was? For without comfort (as I haue declared afore) it were impossible for vs to be pacient. It could not be but we should needes rebell against God, if we knew not his goodnessse. To the ende thou mayst be feared (saith David) thou Lord arte louing. Thē if me <sup>Psa. 130. a. 4.</sup> cannot find in their harts to beleue that God will be pitifull towards them: much lesse will they humble themselves: nay rather they will grinde their teeth againte him.

Now it may seeme that Job was not cōforted, but that he beleueed that God would destroy him, and that hee had vtterly throwne him downe alredy. In what plighe might he be then? As I haue shewed heeretofore, he declarereth heere his former pangs, wherein he passed measure, howbeit that he withstood them in the ende. Now whē we see this, what shift haue we but to pray god that he will in such wise ingraue in oure hartes the promise that he hath made to his whole Church, as it may neuer escape vs? The saide promise is this, That whensoeuer we shall haue sinned, and whensoeuer we shall haue swarued from his commāndements: he will chastize vs: but that shall be with the rodde of man, that is to say, he will chastize vs gently, and after a mylde fashion, and his mercy shall neuer be withdrawnen from vs, according also as he saith in another text of his Prophet Abacucke. Sith <sup>Abac. 3. a. 2.</sup> it is so, let vs (saith he) pray him that in all our afflictions he suffer vs not to surmize that he taketh vs for his enimies: but that we may understand that we deserue well to haue warre at his had, and to find him to be our mortall enimie, bycause we haue prouoked him: and yet notwithstanding, that he ceaseth not to be oure father, but will go forward with his goodnessse towards vs, howe much soeuer we haue deserued the contrarie. And herewithal although wee be tempted after that manner too thinke that God taketh vs for his enimies: yet let vs not cease too fyghte still against it, saying: behold I am sure that if I looke vpon mine owne state, it may well seeme that god holdeth me for his enimy, that he hath as it were raced me out of the number of his seruants: and that he will no more thinke vpon me to succoure me: but yet for all this, I will do him so much honoure as to rest vpon him, and to haue none other recourse but to hym. Thus ye see how we haue to withstand the temptation wherewich Job was sore laidat, albeit that he were not vtterly ouercome of it. Now he addeth immediatly, for the armie of God is come, and his bands are incamped round about my bouse. He termeth all the aduersities that he indured, by the name of Gods armie or scouldiers. This similitude, (namely that all the aduersities whereto we be subiect, are Gods scourges, darts, erours, swords and (to be short) men of warre that haue vs in the chace) hath bin seene heeretofore in another sentence. And it is right <sup>Job. 6. a. 4.</sup> necessarie to be knowne. For although we confesse it in generall speech: yet are we not so fully perswaded of it as were requisite. And surely when men suffer any aduersitie, they cannot withhold themselues from thinking that it happened by some misfortune. If there fall any hayle, or if there come any frost to feare the vines and to marr the corne: straightwayes it is euill fortune. And this manner of speech proceedeth of that wee looke euer at that which is neerest hand, and can mount no higher to know that all thinges are of Gods disposing. That (say I) is the cause why men runne continually into grosse blockishnesse. And so when the Scripture speaketh of afflictions, telling vs that God holdeth them in his hande, that they be his men of warre, that they bee his scouldiers, that they bee too serue his turne, that hee sendeth them, and that he disposeth them at his good pleasure: Let vs marke well everywhit of it, to the end that whensoeuer our turne commeth to be afflicte in any maner wife, wife, we may alwayes looke vp to Gods hand, and assure ourselues that it is the same that striketh vs, and thereby let vs lerne to humble ourselues, saying : well Lord, I see that men trouble me, I see these lower causes, and I see wherefore such a thing is befalne me. But in the meane while Lord, thou art aboue all, and therefore it behoueth me to looke vp vnto thee, and to acknowledge that the strokes come frō thine hand. Furthermore let vs marke also, that God hath not only one armie, one sword , or one cudgel to smite vs with: but he hath bandes, he hath whole hostis, redy to besiege vs on all sides, as Job speakeſt heere. Therefore whensoeuer we be scaped out of one miserie, God can well plucke vs backe againe by and by. And this point is very profitable. For although men be conuincid that Gods hand persecuteth them : yet conceiue they alwayes some vaine hope to get out, and they thinke thus : VVell , I will dispatch this wely-nough: there is yet ſuch a ſhift. Behold(I pray you) how that whereas men ought to humble themſelues vnder the hande of God: they become more stubbornne againſt it, and beare themſelues in hand, that if they do but dash at him with their horne, they ſhall drive him a great way off. And ſpecially we ſee what stubbornnesſe is in vs, in that when God ſmiteth vs with his rod, wee be puffed vp with pride and presumption, and thinke he dothe vs great wrong, not conſidering at all that he might pinch vs an hundred fold more. Thus ye ſee what we haue to marke. Finally Job complaineth that his frends were againſt him, and euen in that poyn̄t he declareth that hee knew it was Gods hand. This ſentence doth yet better 30 confirme that which I haue ſaid alredy, to the end wee might know how farre this leſſon extendeth. Are diſeaſes Gods men of warre? yea, and they are alſo his ſcourges and ſwords. For the ſcripture vſeth all theſe ſimilitudes, to the intent that according to our rudenesſe, wee mighte the better conceiue the things that otherwiſe could not well enter into our head. Yet notwithstanding, this will ſomewhaſt agree with our capacitiſe. But when me chaunge vpon the ſuddaine, and become our aduerſaries, and when they that ought to be our frends and 40 acquaintance increase our miserie : it ſeemeth not that that commeth of God. And in very deede whereof come ſuch conceits, but of mens owne corruption ? Neuertheleſſe it is God that ſmiteth vs ſtill, and his prouidence guideth it. Also as long as we looke but vpon the things, we would neuer haue thought that men ſhoule haue chaunged after that ſort, nor haue vſed ſuſh ſpite : and therefore we conclude that ſuſh chaunges come of God. True it is that if any deede be faultie or done 50 amiffe, and it be told vs that it is of Gods doing: it ſeemeth to vs that the euill and faultineſſe is of God. But it behoueth vs to conſider how this doctrine is to be vnderſtood. So then it is certaine, that when men be maliciouſe and cruell towards vs: the naughtineſſe is of themſelues. But yet is it not therefore to be ſaid but that God leadeth them therevnto by bereeuing them of all good and kindly affection, and is willing to haue vs perſecuted by them. Yet notwithstanding God in ſo doing doth not euill. For he hath good and iuft cauſes, and dothe

all things vprightly. But men cannot ſay that their doing of euill hath bin to the intent to obey him. For their owne conſciences and his commaundementes do ſufficiently conuince them of the contrarie. VVe ſee then that Job hath in al caces and all reſpects graunted ſuſh power vnto God, as he may do what he will with hys creatures, and ſerue his owne turne with them to puniſh vs when he thinks good. If he ſend vs any ſickneſſe, well, it is he from whome they come. If he ſend vs any other calamities, ſo as we be deſtitute of all good things : it is God that doth all, as Job hath ſaid afore. For although the theeuſe had taken away his goode: yet ſaith he, The Job. 1. d. 21. Lord hath giuen, and the Lord hath taken away, bliſſed be the name of the Lord. So then let vs wey well what Job ſheweth heere: that is to witte, that when his friends were againſt him, and came to ſting him, yea and were as it were imbattailed againſt him, minding fully to tread him vnder foote: he knewe how it was God that had ſo hardened their harts, and was not willing that they ſhuld vſe any courtesie towards him. Job therefore imputed al thys vnto God as if he ſhould ſay, Lord, thou perſecutest me after ſuſh an excesſive rate, as I wote not what to ſay, but that thou haſt ſent me as a butte to ſhoote al thy vegeaſce at me. VVhere am I now then? Seemeth it not that thou haſt ſent me to hell? Lo wherevnto Jobs tale tendeth. True it is that he had good discretiō in knowing how it was God that had withdrawen his friendes from him: but yet for all that, his infirmtie ſheweth it ſelfe, in that he quieted not himſelfe when he ſaw the temptation. For he ought to haue ſaid, VVell Lord, it is true that thou haſt armed me againſt me, thou haſt ſent the to bid me battell: but yet for al that, I will waite for ſuccoure at thy hād: and ſeing it pleafeth thee to ſerue thy turne with me in ſcourging me, I will retire vnto thee, affiuring my ſelfe that thou canſt well change their hart when it ſhall please thee. Lo to what point Job ought to haue come. He came not to it at the firſt blow: but yet he went forward vnto it. And therfore let vs looke to ourſelues, that whensoeuer me practise our deſtructiō, and perſecute vs, we may not ſtay at the to ſtik there: but we muſt know that we haue to do with God. And therefore let vs runne vnto him, that we may truſt in his goodneſſe when wee be chaſtised by his creatures.

Now let vs fal downe before the face of our good god with acknowledgement of our faultes, praying him too graūt vs the grace to profit in ſuſh wife by the affliſtiōs & chaſtizemēt: that he ſendeth vs, as we may be humbled and meekened by t̄ īē, & not come to aduance ourſelues, nor to checke againſt him, but that being ſtrēngthened by his power, we may ſtād out ſtedſtaſtly in obeying him, & yet notwithstanding not ceafe to ſigh and grone, ſeeling the daūger wherin we be, vntill he reach out his hād to vs: & that aboue all things we may looke vp to our Lord Iesuſ Christ, affiuring ourſelues that if we be made like to him in our affliſtiōs, we ſhall haue wherewith to reioyce of our ſorrows in him, waiting for the day of the fulneſſe of our ioy, when he ſhall gather vs into the glory of hys reſurrecſtion, whereinto he is gone afore vs. That it may please him to graunt this grace not only to vs, &c.

The lxxj. Sermon, which is the third vpon the nintenth Chapter.

17. My breath is lothesome to my wife, though I intreat her for the childrēs ſake of mine owne body.
18. Euen the little ones do ſhunne me, and vwhen I riſe vp, they cast out ſkoffes againſt me.
19. My frends haue abhorred me, and they vvheme I loued are turned againſt me.
20. My bone cleaſeth to my ſkinne, & to my fleſhe, and I am ſcaped vwith the ſkinne of my teeth.

21. Haue pitie vpon me, haue pitie vpon me, O my frends: for the hand of God hath smitte me.
 22. VVhy persecute you me as God doth, and are not satisfied vwith my flesh?
 23. O that my vwords vvere vritten, O that they vvere registered in a booke, 24. VVith a pen of yron in leade or stone for euer.
 25. I am sure that my redeemer liueth, and he shall at the last rise vp vpon the earth.

Orasmuch as God hath knitte mes together to the end that one of the should beare vp another, and each man indeuoure to helpe his neigbour, and when wee can doo no more, then wee shoulde haue pitie and compassion one of another: if we happen to be deititute of all helpe, so as we be troubled on all sides, and no man sheweth vs any kindnesse, but euery man is cruel to vs: that temptation is very sore.
And that is the cause why Job complayneth in this sentence, that there was nother wife, nor frende, nor any of his houesold that pitied him, but all the world had forsaken him. Now when we heare these things, wee must applie them to ourselues. (For (as it was declared yesterday) God suffereth men to fayle vs, and every body too shrinke from vs, to the end we might the better resorte vnto him. And indeede so long as we haue any stay in the world, we trust not in God as we ought to do, but rather we are hild heere bylowe, for oure nature inclineth too much, and is too much giuen thitherward. Therefore God intending nowe and then to plucke vs backe too himselfe, maketh vs vitterly destitute of all worldly help.
Or else he doth it to humble vs, for it seemeth to vs that he ought of reason to haue regard of vs, and that we be woorthy of it, and euery of vs blindeth himselfe with such presumption. Our Lord therefore mindeth to teach vs now and then some lowlinesse by this meane when euery man despiseth vs, and we become as outcasts both to great and small. And so we haue to consider that wee be not the same that we haue taken ourselues to be. But whatsoeuer we be, if this come to passe, let vs be sure that God hath not therefore forsaken vs. For we see that Job hath his recourse still vnto him and is not disappointed of his hope. God then reached him his hand, notwithstanding that men had shaken him off: and when they imagined him to be past all hope of recoverie, then had God an eye to him to shew him mercie. Therefore let vs trust in him. Besides this, let vs learne to do our duetic towards such as are afflicted, according as I haue tolde you that God hath knitte and vnted vs together, to the end we should haue communitie one with another. For men must not separate themselues vterly asunder. True it is that our Lord hath ordeneid common policie, that euery man should haue his house, his meinie, his wyfe, his children, and euery man be knowne in his degree: but yet must not any man exempt himselfe from the communitie, to say I will liue alone. For that were too liue worse than the brute beast. VVhat then? Let vs assure our selues that God hath bound vs one to another, to the end we should help one another. And that when wee see any man in necessitic, although wee cannot do him so much good as we would, yet at leastwise we must be pi-tifull towards him. If that be not in vs: let vs marke that here in the person of Job, the holy Ghost asketh vengeance against vs. For no doubt but that although Job were tossed with his hideouse and exceissive passions: yet was he alwayes gouerned by Gods spirit, and specially in re-spekte of these generall grounds, that is to say, in respecte of the sentences that hee setteth downe, according as I haue told you that they import right profitable doctrine.

VVherefore let vs marke how our Lord telleteth vs heere that it is an ouergreat crueltie in vs, when we see a poore man affiested, and indeuoure not to succoure him, but rather shrinke away from him. Also let vs marke that sometimes the same is said eu'en of thinges in the holy scripture by occasion (wherby we may gather a good lesson) which is said here by Job of his owne wife. He saith, she was not able to abide his breath, though he prayed her for the childrens sake of her owne wombe. Heereby he sheweth that children ought to be an increasement of the loue betweene man and wife. For when God blisseth a mariage with issuw, it ought to increase their mutuall affection to liue in greater concord. The very Painims knewe that welynough. But it is ill perfourmed of those that ought to see much clearer. And what a condemnation shal it be to the beleeuers, which boast themselues to haue bin instructed in the worde of God, if they knowe not that which nature sheweth to the sillie ignorant sort that are as good as blind? Then looke vpon the Painims, who haue acknowledged that children are as it were gages to confirme better the loue of man and wife, and to holde them in peace and vnitie. According heervnto Job saith, that he intreated his wife for the childrens sake that hee had begot of hir. But that moued not hir at all. Then sheweth he how it is a thing against nature, in which behalfe his wife had shewed hir selfe to bee worse than a wild beast. So let vs marke that all such as cannot follow that order, are heere rebuked by the way, as if the holy Ghost had pronounced their condemnation in expresse termes. Yet notwithstanding we see many men that haue no discretion when God is so graciuose to them as too giue them children. Looke vpon a married man. True it is that the marriage is alredie of it selfe, so holy a thing, that this only saying ought to suffice when it is said, that they shall be two in one flesh, and that a man shall make more account of the vnitie which he ought to haue with his wife, than of the vnitie which hee hathe with his father and mother. But when as God yet for further confirmation of the said grace, addeth increase of children in mariage: if men and women be so beastly, as not to be prouoked and led thereby, to loue one another the better: certainly their vnkindnesse is to too grosse. Howbeit (as I haue said alredy) it is a thing that is euill practised among Christians. Neuerthelesse it behoueth vs to take profite of that saying, though it be not touched heere but by occasion. To increase the euill, Job sayth that both his friends and also the men of his counsell, that is to saye, those with whome he was woont to communicate all hys secrets turned themselues against him, or else skorned him, so as they made none accouit of him: and that not only they which were in some credite and authoritie, but also eu'en the meanest sort, and the very rascals despised him. In effect his meening is, that he found himselfe destitute of all help, seeing that his friends had failed him: and secōdly that he had bin a skorningstocke, in somuch as eu'en the bacest sort in the world voutsafed not to looke vpon him to take him as one of their retinew. It must needes bee saide that his affliction was greate, seeing there was none that wold acknowledge him to be as it were of the companie of men: but tooke him alredy for more than an out cast. Lo in effect what Job meant to say. But (as I haue

Mat. 19.4.5*

haue touched alredy) Gods wil in exercising him so, was to make him a mirroure vnto vs. Then if it happen that those which are neerest about vs become our deadly enemies and persecute vs, let vs learne to flee vnto God, and to beare it patiently, seeing it happened so vnto Job before vs. And specially (forasmuch as the same perteyneth

Psa. 41.b.10 to all the members of his Church) let vs beare in minde Iobn. 13.c.18 this saying of our Lord Iesus Christ: he that eateth bread at my table, hath listed vp his heele againte me. This must needs be fulfilled in all the faithfull: and therefore 10 hath our Lord Iesus shewed vs the way, to the intent we should not be too loth to become conformable too his image. VVe see then continually, that the faithfull shall be betrayed and persecuted by such as they trust most, and are priuiest with them of their doings. Very well, that is a right hard case, it cannot bee denied, and when wee feele the mischiefe, it is ynough too discourage vs.

Howbeit forasmuch as oure Lorde hath tolde vs that it must be so, & hath giue vs record of it in his only sonne: let vs passe the same way, and submit our selues too the same condition. Thus ye see againe what we haue too marke in this text. And now let vs come to that whiche Job addeth: Hauie pitie vpon me, hauie pitie vpon me O my freends, for the hande of the Lorde bathe touched me already. True it is that when we see God punish men, we ought of duetie to glorify him, saying: Lord thou art righteous Howbeit, there was a speciall consideration in Job, howe that his punishment was not for any fault that hee had committed, but for some other end. And againe, put the case that he had bin chastised for his deserts: yet notwithstanding,

30 standing, when wee see a poore offender whome God hath put to execution, we must be touched in ourselues, and that for two causes. The one is that if euery of vs looke into himselfe, we shall finde that God ought too punish vs as roughly or roughlier, if it pleased him too visit vs according to our deserts. Therefore whosoever bethinks himselfe well, shall find himselfe worthy too be punished as greeuously as those whome he seeth sore distressed: and therefore wee ought to looke vpon them with pitie and compassion, and so must oure vices and sinnes cause vs to humble our selues. Beholde a poore wretch, I see that God persecuteth him: it is a terrible thing. But what? There is good cause why God shoulde punish me in likewise. Then behoueth it me to humble my selfe and to behold my selfe as in a glasse in the person of this man. That is one poynt. Againe, when we see a man scourged at Gods hande as sore as may be: let vs consider not only that he was created after the image of God: but also that he is our neighbour and in manner all one with vs. VVe be all of one nature, all one flesh, all 50 one mankind, so as it may be said that we be issued all out of one selfesame spring. Sith it is so, oughte wee not to haue consideration one of another? I see moreouer a poore soule that is going to destruction: ought I not too pitie him and to helpe him if it lie in my power? And although I be not able: yet ought I to be sorie for it. This (say I) are the two reasons which oughte to moue vs too pitie when we see that God affilcteth such as are worthy of it. Then if we bethinke ourselues, surely eyther

60 we must needs be too hardharted and dulwitted, or else we shall pitie them that are like ourselues, as when wee consider thus, behold a man that is formed after the image of God, hee is of the selfesame nature that I am, and againe, behold a soule that was purchased with the bloud of the sonne of God: if the same perish ought not we to be greeued? This is the cause why Job saith now; Hauie pitie vpon me my freends, because the hand of God bath smitten me. For the better vnderstanding heereof, we must take this ground, That it is a dreadfull thing to fall into the hands of the living God. Therefore when we see God send any punishment, it behoueth vs to bee moued with feare, yea euen althogh he spare vs. I my self am at rest, and God maketh no countenance to touche me, but I see how he smiteth one and punisheth another: is not this a matter to be astonished at? Must wee tarie till God fall vpon our heads with many blowes? That were ouer grosse dealing. But when we see he is minded to teach vs at another mans cost, it behoueth vs to haue an eye to the cause why he punisheth men so, according as Saint Paule teileth vs. He saith not, be afraid, for the Ephes. 5.b.6. wrath of god shal come vpō you: but he saith, my frends, ye see howe God punisheth the vnbeleeuers while hee sparingh you Yet must you vnderstand that it is for your instructiō whē he sheweth any token of his wrath vpon men.

Then lette vs marke well this sentence of the Apostle, that it is a dreadfull thing to fall into the handes of the living God: and therefore as oft as there is any punishment, let vs be moued at it. And thereby we shall out of hand be taught to pitie such as are in distresse, and to say, Alas this is a poore creature, if it were some mortall wight that afflicted him, a man might give him some releefe. But God is against him: and ought not we to be sorie when we see that? If any man aliedge, were it not a resisting of God if we should be sorie for those that are punished for their faults? were it not as much as to striue against Gods iustice? No: for we may well haue such affections in vs, as to allow of Gods iustice, yeelding hym praise and glory for that which he doth: and yet neuerthelesse be sorie for them that are punished, because we ourselues may haue deserued as muche or more, and ought to seeke the welfare of all men, specially of those that are neerest to vs, and where God hath put any band betwixt them and vs, according as we may allow of ciuill iustice whiche is nothing else but as it were a little glasse of Gods iustice, and yet not ceasse too haue pitie vpon the offender. VVhen a transgreſſor is punished, 40 men will not say that he hath wrong done vnto him, nor that there is any crueltie in the iudge. But they will say, that such as are set in place of iustice, discharge their due-tie, and offer an acceptable sacrifice vnto God whē they put an offender to death. But yet in the meane while we will not ceasse to pitie the poore creature that shall suffer for his ciuill doings. If we be not moued therat, ther is no manhood in vs. If we graunt this in worldly iustice, which is but as a little spake of Gods iustice: I pray you when wee come too the soueraine seate [of iustice] on high, ought wee not first too gloriſfy God for all that hee doth, assuring our selues that he is iust and vpright in all points and in all respects: And yet notwithstanding (as I said afore) the same shall not hinder vs to pitie suche as suffer punishment, to comforte them and too succoure them, and when we can do them no more good, to wish their saluation, praying God to make their corrections profitable in drawing them home to him, and not too suffer them to become hardharted, and to striue against his hand.

Behold(I say) wherevnto Job groundeth him selfe when he desyreth and beseecheth his friends to haue pitie vpon him. And he speakeſ purposely to those that were next about him. For although God haue generally ſet an vnitie among all men, that is too ſay, although hee haue knitte them altogether (as I haue ſayde afore) and that they oughte not too ſeparate them ſelues one from another: yet notwithstanding he byndeth vs dublie when there is eyther kinred or any other alliance betwixt vs, and we know that neighbours ought to be moued to yeid a more priuate frenship one to another. For in that behalfe God hath (as ye wold say) put vs vnder one yoke, as men might put beasts: and the brute beasts ought so teach vs what we haue to do. VVhen two Oxen are yoked togither, if any of them both be stubborne, they trouble one another: and if they agree not to lat oure willingly togither and also too drinke togither and too sleepe togither, they must needes be as it wee their owne tormetours in that case. Euen so is it with men. VVhen God matcheth them togither, after what maner so euer it be, it is as if hee wold cupple them vnder one yoke to aide and support each other. Now if they be sturdy and worse than brute beasts: what condemnation bring they vpon their owne head? So then let vs marke well, that after as god linketh vs togither, and giueth vs the meane to communicate togither, so doth he bind vs one to another. For a friend is more bound to his friend than to another man: and although it behoue our charitie to bee generall, and vs to loue all those whiche God commendeth vnto vs, yea though they were our mortal enemies: yet shall the husband be more bound to his wife, the father to his children, the children to their father, and the kinsfolke also one to another: and it behoueth vs to knowe generally all the degrees of frenship that God hath set in this world. Now Job addeth, VVhy do you persecute me as God doth? It shoulde seeme that this saying hath

Psa. 58. b. ii. no great reason in it. For (as I haue touched alredy) it is said, that the righteous man shall wash his hands in the bloud of the vngodly. Then ought we to be glad when we see God punish the wicked: but Job alledgedh heere, that men ought not to persecute those whome God afflieth. This question hath bin dissolued alredy, when I saide that wee may well agree to Gods iustice, and yet notwithstanding not ceasse to pitie and comfort those that suffer, if it lie in vs: at leastwise we must haue the affection to wish their saluation. Then were it a ciuell matter if we shoulde persecute men as well as God doth. And why? For when God punishment sinners, (I meane not the righteous sort, such as Job was, but such as haue liued amisse and led a wicked life:) it is not to the ende that wee should looke big vpon them, and vexe them more and more: but first that every of vs should learne to condemne himselfe in another mans person [and say] I see that this man is smitten with Gods roddes. And why? For his sinnes. And is not God iudge of the whole world? Yes: then doth this matter concerne me also: for am I giltlesse? Is there nothing in me that God may find fault with? Alas there is nothing but sinfullnesse in me; yea and too grosse sinfullnesse. Ye see the how me ought to condemne themselues in other folks persons as oft as we see that God sendeth punishments vpon them: and therewithall also God mindeth to inure vs to pitifulnesse and compassion. If we follow this order, we can not do amisse. But if wee fall to greeuing of those that haue too much greefe alredy, without hauing respect to our own faults: is it not a crueltie? we wold vsurp Gods office to be iudges, whereas we ought rather to bethinke vs how it is said, that all of vs must appeere before the judgement seate of God. True it is (as I haue saide) that

Rom. 24. b. God ought of right too bee glorifyed in all the punishments that he sendeth vpō me. But that is not as much to say, as bycause we know that God must be the iudge of all men, therefore each man ought not to condemne him selfe, and to hold himselfe within the compasse of some humanitie. And thus ye see that Job hath iust cause to reproove his frēds for persecuting him as God did. Then let vs marke wel, that if God vtter his vengeance vpō such as

haue offendēd, his meening is not to arme vs with vnnaturalnesse, &c to set vs in a rage against the poore paciēts that are vtterly cast downe: but rather he wold that we should rue them. Ageine Job blameth the crueltie of his frēds, saying that they cannot be satisfied with his flesh. VVherefore (saith he) can ye not satisfie yourselves with my flesh? It is certaine that the thing whiche he taketh is a similitude. For when we be (as ye wold say) so flesht vpon our neighbours: it is all one as if we would eatē them alyle: And we also do often vse suche manner of speeches in our common talke. So then like as a man taketh pleasure at his repast in eating and drinking: so it seemeth that they which are cruel against their neighbours, could find in their harts to feede vpon them and to eatē them vp or to swallow them quicke. Ye see the why Job saith, VVhy do you not satisfie yourselves with my flesh? For when wee see oure neighbours haue aduersitie ynoch and more than ynoch, and yet are not satisfied with it, but increase their miseries further: it is to great a crueltie, it is all one as if we wold eatē them vp. Therefore this circumstance is too bee noted well when Job saith, that at leastwise his friends ought to haue bin satisfied too see him so overthrown. VVhat would ye more saith he? I am at the last cast so as I can holde out no longer. If wee haue hated a man and wished his harme, and sought all meanes to be reuenged of him, yet if he happen to fall into extreme miserie, behold it is a naturall thing for our anger to be appeased. Yet say I not that such an affection ought to be counted a vertue. For although the heathen men were wicked, and thought it lawfull for them too revenge: yet notwithstanding they were of that minde, that they wold be appeased when they saw their enimies so sore afflieted, as that they needed not to put too theyr hand. As how? Admit a man haue done some other man harme. VVel, he that is offended wold reuege himselfe if it were possible. Now in the meane while God preuenteth him, and sendeth some great misfortune vpon the offender. The man that erewhile was full of rancor and desyred nothing but to destroy him whome he had, will say, yea, and what shall I do more to him? He is so oppressed as it is pitie to see, he hath ynoch alredy. Thus then the fyre doth naturally quench of it selfe, if we see a man in aduersitie, thogh we were never so much moued against him before. This (as I said) is no vertue, nother deserueth it to be counted for Gods seruice or for charitie. But yet for all that, if there were such a naturall inclination euē among the painims: what shall become of those which now adaiers are not satisfied whē they see their enimies persecuted with extremitie: but are so vn-satisfiable as they could find in their harts euē to eatē the vp? And if it be damnable when it is done to a mans enimies, so as hee is not contented with the miseries that God sendeth vpon them: what a thing were it too bee done to a mans friends? Therefore let such as are so cruel assue themselves that they bee not worthy to bee counted in the number of men. Then whosoeuer mindeth to discharge him selfe of his duetie, must not only appease himselfe at the miserie and affliction of his enimies: but hee must also bee moued too pitie: and instead of seeking reuenge, hee must rather bee ready too succoure them as much as hee can. For no doubt but that when God sendeth any aduersitie too our enimies and vnto suche as haue offended vs, his intente is too asswage the malice and rancoure that is in vs, and too shifte away the cause that made vs to bee so ill mynded towrades oure neighbours. Nowe if God call vs too gentlenesse, and wee go cleane from it: is it not a manifest fyghting againste him? Then let vs marke well, that if God if God scourge them that haue done vs any wrong or iniurie, it is to asswage the bitterness of our stomacks: and if we haue bin angrie or displeased before, or if we haue coueted reuengement: God intendeth to meeken all those lewd affections in vs, and to leade vs to compassion and kindnesse. Lo what we haue to marke in this streyne. Now Job addeth no new complaints of his miseries, saying that his bone cleaved to his skinne, and that bee was escaped with the skinne betwixt his teeth. This serueth to expresse the matter better which we come to touch: that is to witte, that his friends ought of right to haue bin satisfied though they had bin very beasts and had sought but to deuoure him. And why? For (saith hee) ye see in what state I am. VVhat desire ye more? Can a man wish any more miserie in one person than God hath sent vpon me? Now when he saith that his skinne cleave to his bones: it is as muche as if hee had saide, that he is vtterly withered away, that hee is become the right image of a dead man, and that there is no more moyture nor substance in him. And when hee saith he is scraped with the skinne of his teeth: it is to do vs to vnderstand, that there was no whole part in him, but his gummes, or that hys skinne was become like his gummes. For if a woorme do breedie in a mans body, the skinne will be no more drie: but it will be like the skinne of his gummes, that is to say, when rottennesse hath gotten the vpper hand and all is woormeaten, a man shall see the flesh bloudy, and there will ooze out halfe bloud and halfe water as out of a wound, like as we see how a wound will resemble the skinne of a mans gummes. Thus then Job declareth that he was so disfigured, as the phisnomie of man could no more be discerned in him. Now seeing he was come to such extremitie, had it not bin reason that his friends should haue bin contented? Then are we warned heere to looke better vpon our neighbours aduersities than we haue done, and when God sendeth them any miseries, to pray him to giue vs the grace to haue our eyes better open to consider and marke them well, so as the same may moue vs to pitie: and euery of vs do his indeuer to remedie it as muche as they can, and finally to hope that when God hath so laide his hand vpon them hee will shew himselfe mercifull towards them. And for somuch as Job's friends had accused him of blasphemie agaynst God, and of iustifying himselfe without cause, and of blinding himselfe in his owne vices for want of acknowledging them: he saith, O that my wordes were written, O that they were ingrau'd with a pen of yron, O that they were ingrau'd in lead or stone for euer, and for an endlesse memoriall. In saying so, Job declareth that he had not mainteyned his innocencie in vaine, nother feared to be blamed for it before God, for he knew he had iust cause so to do. Thus ye see in effect whereat he ameth. Neuerthelesse it is certaine that in respect of Job's words, there was excesse and much bytalke. For hee kept not measure, and how good and reasonable ground soever hee had, and that his case were allowable before God: yet did he misconuey it (as I haue declared heretofore) and many wordes escaped him that were blameworthy. VVhy then saith hee still, that he would faine that hys wordes were written? Is it not ynoch enough to bring dubble condemnation vpon his owne head? Let vs marke that Job hathe an eye to the principall pointe, and tieth not himselfe to euery word that he had vttered: but taketh his sayings heere for the defence of his case. Now that defence was iust. And although it were missehandled & often leapt out of, now at one side and now at other: yet notwithstanding hee stiil mainteyned rightly that hee was not punished for his sinnes, nor was to be counted the wickedest man in the world bycause God shewed himselfe so rigorous to him. Job then hath set downe this thing vpon good reason: but yet hath he done amisse in that hee acknowledged not his sinnes in suche wise as hee mighte feele himselfe alwayes faultie before God.

Heereby we be warned to be very well aduised what wee say. It is said in the Psalme, I determined with my selfe to hold my peace and too bridle my selfe so long as the wicked bare sway and had their full scope: but in the ende I could not refraine. Dauid knew well, that when Gods children are tempted, by seeing themselues oppressed with afflictions, while the wicked sorte triumph and haue winde and wether at will: it is so sore a cace, as we can very hardly refrayne ourselues frō murmuring against God. For this cause it is saide, I determined to bryde my selfe, I did put on a snaffle, and I coped vp my lippes, to the intent I might not speake a word. But in the end all these letts were broken, and all the determination that I purposed vpon, could not hold me from vttering the desyre that I had conceyued within, but that fynally the fyre kindled and brake out. Hereby Dauid sheweth that it is a very great and rare vertue to be patient with silence and to holde oure tung when miseries oppresse vs, and specially when we see the wicked mens mouthes open to boast themselues and to scoffe at vs. So then, by ioyning this saying of Dauids with the example of Job, wee must learne to keepe our mouth shut when God afflideth vs. And why? For our affectiōs are so headie, that although we haue learned to speake simply, and to praise and blisse God as we ought to do: yet can we not be so well aduised, nor so well stayed, but something will escape vs, and some bubbles will burst out, so as wee shall alwayes be faultie in our talke. Then although we haue no intent to blasphemie God, or to speake any thing that may not be to his honoure: yet can it not be auoided but we shall be ouerhardie in our talke, like as when Job desyred to haue all his sayings registered and ingrauēd for an euerlasting rememb'rance, and printed in stone or leade, too the intente it might never be blotted out. But let vs rather advise our selues to pray God to forgive vs the faultes [that wee make] euen in those words which we thinke to be puerest. For (as saith Saint Iames) he that can refraine his tung hath a singular vertue. And why? For wee bee as swift to speake euill as can be: and when we thinke we haue spoken very soundly, God can stil find somewhat amisse in it. Thus ye see what we haue to marke in thys streyne. Now in the end Job addeth, that he knoweth that his redeemer liuetb. Verely this cannot be wholly expounded as now: but yet must I touch the intent for whiche Job said so. His meening is that he deit not after the manner of hypocrits in smoothing his cace before men too justify himselfe, but knew that he had to do with God. This is a thing that we ought to know. For if these sentences heere shoulde bee taken as broken of [from the matter:] they would haue no great edifying, nother shoulde we knowe what Job ment. VVherefore let vs remember what I haue touched afore. VVhat is it that Job pretendeth? VVee knowe that men will labou're all that they can too excuse themselues, and that is, bycause they thinke not vpon God, it is ynoch for them that the worlde likes well of them, and that they bee taken for honest men. Thus then do: he hypocrisie ingender an vnshamefastnesse. For if I knowe not God too bee my iudge, it will suffice me that men clap theyr handes at me, and haue me in good reputation. And what gayne I by that?

Nothing

Nothing at al. Is it not an exceeding great shamelesnesse, when although mine owne conscience accuse me, and I be conuicted to haue done amisse, yet for all that I will perke vp with my neb, and saye, whereof can any man accuse me? VVhat haue I done? Haue I not a good cace? I will take faire colours to couer my skinne, and if I can bleare mens eyes, fush, my cace shall then speede well y-nough. And this is it that I spake of: namely that hipocrisie engendreth shamelesnesse, so as men become bold to mainteine their cace for good, bycause they haue no regard of God. But Job contrariwise faith, I know that my God is alme, and that in the end he will rise vp vpon the dust. And if he shold say, I am taken for a wicked man and desperate persone as though I had blasphemed God in laboring to iustify my selfe against him. No no, I desire nothing but to humble my selfe vnto him, and to repose my selfe wholly in his grace: but yet for all that I must be faine to maintaine mine vprightnesse against you. For I see you go to worke with nothing but slauders. My defence then is after such a sort, as in the meane while <sup>20</sup> I looke vnto God and haue mine eyes fastned vpon him. Heereof we both may and ought to gather a good lesson: which is, that we must not be so popeholie as too couer our faults afore men, and to make countenance of maintaining a good cace, and to beare a face of honest men: and yet all the while to be reproved of our owne conscience. Rather let vs learne to enter into our selues, to examine our owne sinnes, and too cite our selues before God: let vs (I saye) begin at this point, to say, howe now: what intend I? True it is that I may well excuse my selfe afore men: but in the meane time what shall that boote me before God? VVill he accept it? No. Therfore according to this, let vs all come before the heauenly iudge both great and small, and let euery one of vs present himselfe there to craue pardon of his offences, and let vs not doubt but that if we come vnseynedly, he wil acquit vs, not for any woorthinesse of our owne, but of his owne grace and mercie.

Now let vs fall downe before the face of oure good God, with acknowledgement of our sinnes, praying him to make vs so to feele them, as being right cast downe as we ought to be, we may repaire to the souercine refuge of his infinite goodnessse which he hath promised vs in our Lord Iesus Christ, and there take so sure foundation, as we may not doubt of his fauoure towards vs: yea and that although wee do not alwayes feele the same after that sort in this world by the outward woorking, but rather that he sheweth vs some tokens of rigoure: yet we may not ceasse to call vpon him in all our aduersities, not doubting but that in the end he will shew him selfe a louing and mercifull father towards vs, and make vs feele it by proofe also in time conuenient. That it may please him to graunt this grace not only to vs, but also to all people, &c.

The lxxij. Sermon, which is the fourth vpon the ninth Chapter.

This Sermon conteyneth still the exposition of the fift and twentith verse, and then the text following.

26. Although after my skinne, the [vvormes] destroy this [body: yet] I shal see God in my flesh.
27. I shall behold him in me, mine eyes shall see him, and none other: my kidneys are vvasted in my bosome.
28. And you haue said, vwherein is he persecuted? and the roote of the matter is found in me.
29. Beye afraid of the presence of the syword: for the vvrath of affliction is vvith the syword, to the intent ye should knovv that there is a iudgement.

Esterday we saw what protestati- 40 on Job made: which was, that hee had his eye vpon God and was not tied too men, bycause that they whiche rest themselues heere bylow, are not willing tob enter into their owne consciences, too condemne themselues as they oughte too do, and to feele their owne sinnes, that they might confess themselves too haue done amisse, and craue forgiuenesse at Gods hand. For wee see that assoone as we be flesht among men, we desire no more but to ouercome them be it by truth or by vntruh. Lo heere the cause why we thinke not rightly vpon God, and consequently indeuer not to mend our misdoings as we ought to do, and to be short that there is nothing but hipocrisie. And therfore Job saith, that he knoweth that his redeemer is alme: as if he shuld say that his pleading hitherto had not bin to iustify himselfe in suche wise afore men as though that were the marke he shot at: for hee knew he shoulde faine too come before God and there to be iudged and to render an account of all his life. And afterward he addeth, that God shall stand vp fast vpon the dust: as if hee had saide, VVhen men faile (as the worlde must needes perish) yet doth God continue for euer: and therefore it were a great follie in me to desire to excuse my selfe afore men, when in the meane while God should condemn me. For they that are my judges as nowe, whither they bee willing too bee so, or whither I cast that honoure vpon them, must perish with me, but God must continue for euer. So then it suffiseth me to yeeld my selfe vnto him, and to heare what it shall please him to determine. Now whereas he faith, that God shall stand vp vpon the dust: hee mecneth that he is not like men. For seeing we must all of vs fade away euen till we come to nothing, and we knowe we must returne from whence we came, euen into corruption and rottenessse. But God (saith he) can never decay as men do: he will continue in his state euclistically. Ageine let vs marke, that Job meant to do vs to vnderstand, that God will spred out the same power that is in him, vpon the dust, that is too fayse vpon men who are nothing, ne haue any power or strength at all in them.

But this title whyche hee yeeldeth vnto God, importeth yet more: namely that he is his maker, and the partie by whome hee is maynteyned. If God listeth, he could continue in his full state, and in the meane whyle we should perish: but he intendeth to make vs partakers of his strength, and to cause vs to feele it. And so he standeth vp after such a sort vpon the dust, as he maketh the dust to awake out of hand, and setteth it vp agayne. For were it not so: in vaine were he named the redeemer and maker. Therefore let vs marke wel that Job intended to declare that God holdeth not the saide power inclosed only in his owne Beinge, but also spreadeth it out vpon men. Heere is a good lesson for vs. For firste of all we be wee bee warned what a fondnesse it is to be desirous to please men only, and to be allowed of them. What gaine we by it? For every whit of it muste fall to the grounde. Therefore let vs learne to haue our eyes fastened vpon God, that he may like of vs, & allow of vs. Marke wher-vnto wee must apply all our indeuer. And herewithall, to the intent we be not hilde backe by this world, nor wrapped in hypocrisie which is ouersurely rooted in vs by nature: lette vs assure our selues that God is our warrant: that it belongeth to him only to maynteyne mens soundnesse, when they shall haue walked with a pure conscience before him: that he shall one day be their iudge, & stand vp vpon the duste: and that albeit that all things which wee see aboue vs bee frayle and transitorie: yet is not God like them but hath a hygher state, not only for himselfe, but also to set all creatures in their state when they bee disordered. And it is an inestimable comforte for the godly, that when they see themselves borne downe with slauders in the world, and although they haue indeuered to walke aright, yet men ceasse not to heau at them, and to backebite them falsly: they can still referre themselves to God, and call him to be their witnesse and rest vpon this assurance, that he will stand out when men shall be brought to nothing. Well then, They that presume as now to condemne vs, and to rayle vpon vs, must tumble downe, and their chaunce must be quite turned. For God will at length hee our redeemer. As nowe through rashnesse men vsurpe Gods power, and vnder-take that which is not lawfull: but in the end God muste shew himselfe as he is, and he must be exalted, that wee 30 may knowe howe it belongeth to him to maynteyne vs. Beholde what wee ought to call to minde as oft as men do falsely misserreport vs and wee haue good record before God: namely, that it is ynough for vs to be vphilde by him, and that he alloweth of vs, though all the world beside do reiect vs. But now lette vs come to that which Job sayeth. He sayeth that the woormes (for although the woerde woormes bee not set downe in the Hebrew text, yet it is well seene that he meeneth all vermine and corruption) hauing eaten his skinne, will also gnawe and fiet away the rest of him, and yet for all that, hee sayeth that he trusteth too see God, yea and to see him in his fleshe, that is to say, by being restored againe, Yea (sayeth he) I shall see him, and none other, notwithstanding that my kidneys be consumed in me, that is to say, that all my strength be weakened and taken away. It is a protestation woorthise to be noted, when Job sayeth that he will haue his looke fastened vpon God and none other, yea euen though he be vterly consumed. As if he should say, he would not measure the hope that he had in God, by that which he might see: but euen when nothing appeareth, yet will hee not therefore ceasse to looke vnto God. As howe? If a man finde himselfe forsaken of God, so as he perceyue nothing but matter of despaire; and death manace him on all sides, yea and is readie to swallow him vp, & yet neuerthelesse he holdes his owne still, and is stedfast in fayth to say, yet will I call vpon my God, and I shall yet feele his helpe, his mightinesse is ynough of it selfe too giue vs courage, yea and that shall bee euen when I shall seeme to be forlorne: That is the man that ouerpasseth all worldly things. The shewing of his fayth and hope which he hath in God, is not in the things that may be seene and comprehended by naturall reason: but it passeth out of the worlde, according as it sayde that wee muste hope beyonde hope, and that hope is of things that are hidden. Nowe wee see Iobs meening. True it is that he speakest not here expressely of the Resurrection. But yet these woordes cannot be expounded, but it muste be perceyued that Job men to attribute such a power vnto God, as is not to be seene as now in the common order of nature. Therefore it is all one as if he had sayd, that God will haue vs to knowe him, not onely whyle he doth vs good, and whyle he preserueth and nurrisheth vs: but also althoough he fayle vs to our seeming, and we see nothing but death before vs: yet muste wee be fully resolued, that our Lorde will not leave to be our keeper, and that if we be his we shall bee maynteyned by his protection. Howbeit the better to profite our selues by this sentence, lette vs wey throughly what Job sayeth. Although that the remant of me (sayeth he) be eaten away vnder my skin: yet shall I see my God. This is more than to beleue in God bycause he maketh the earth too bring forth corne and wine: as wee see a number of brutish folke which haue none other taste or feeling that there is a God in heauen, but for that he feedeth them and filleth their bellies, and if a man aske them which is that God: they answere, it is he that nurrisheth vs. True it is that wee ought to conceyue the goodnessse and power of our God in all the benefites that hee bestoweth vpon vs: but yet must we not stay there: for (as I sayde) wee muste mount by fayth aboue all things that can bee seene in the worlde. And therefore lette vs not say, I beleue in God bycause he maynteyneth mee, because he giueth mee health, and bycause he nurrisheth me: but I beleue in God bicarste he hath giuen me heretofore some taste of his goodnesse and power in hauing a care of this bodie, which is but rottennesse, so as I see he sheweth himselfe a father in that I haue a being through the power of his spirite: I beleue in him alone, bycause he calleth mee too heauen, and hath not created mee as an Oxe or an Asse to liue here a little whyle, but hath formed mee after his owne image, to the intent I should hope for the inheritance of his kingdome and be partaker of the glorie of his Sonne. I beleue that he allureth mee dayly thither, to the intent I shoulde not doubte but that when my bodie is layde in the graue, and there consumed as it were to nothing: yet notwithstanding it shall bee restored againe at the laste day, and in the meane whyle my soule shall bee in safe and sure keeping, bycause that when I am dead God will haue it in his protection, and then shall I beholde much better than I do now, the lyfe that our Lorde Iesus Christ hath purchaced for vs by his bloud. Thus yee see what our belief muste bee if it be well ruled. And if wee bee once so well disposed: wee may say with Job, well, verely I see my bodie muste go to decay: looke what freshnesse soever was in it, it diminisheth day by day, and I neede not to go farre too seeke death. For I see not so small an infirmite in my fleshe, but the same is to mee a messenger of death: but yet for all that, I shall see my God. If wee coulde speake so when wee see that our strength drouperth and vanisheth away by little and litte: that although it pleased God to smite vs in such wise as wee shoulde in maner rotte aboue the grounde, as Job did, (for he sayeth that his skinne was worme eaten and consumed, and he was as good as dead, and yet he protesteth that he will not ceasse looking vnto his God) yet should wee not ceasse too trust in God still after the example of Job. Thus yee see that the greatnessse of the afflictions that God sendeth vs shall not astonissh vs, so wee haue learned too knowe him to bee such a one towardes vs as he is in deede, that is too say, if wee consider well to what ende he hath created vs, and still maynteyneth vs in the worlde. Furthermore when Job sayeth, that he shall see his redeemer in his fleshe: his meening is (as I sayd afore) that hee shall bee restored to a newe state, though his skinne were so eaten as it was. For he sayeth expressly that his bones shall be consumed, and nothing of him shall remayne whole : and afterwarde he addeth, I shall see God in my flesh. And howe shall he see him in his flesh? That is to say, I shall be set in my former state, and see my God yet againe. And so he confesseth that God is able ynoch to let him vp againe, although he were vtterly consumed, and plundged into a bottomlesse pitte. Thus ye see that the condicion wherevpon we must trust in God, is that when he shall haue layd vs in our graues, we should assure our selues, that he will reach vs his hand to lift vs out againe. Therfore let vs say, I trust in God because I see he assytest mee and fayleth mee not in any thing. But when God fayleth vs, and is as it were estranged from vs, let vs euthen say with Job, I shall see him in my fleshe, as nowe I am nothing, I seeme to bee but a shadowe, and my life vanishest away out of hande: but yet for all that, my God will shewe himselfe mightie in my behalfe, so as I shall see him. If Job spake thus in the tyme when there was not yet any great learning, nor perchaunce the Lawe was yet written: (but admit it were) nother were there yet any Prophets, (at leastwyse not many mo than Moyses, for the Prophets make mention of Job as of a man of old time:) I say if Job hauing but only a little sparke of light, was so strengthened in his afflictions: and that not onely when he saw some one kinde of death, but also when God seemed too haue set him as a spectacle among men, (adreadfull and terrible thing) he was able to say, yet shall I see my God: what excuse is there for vs in these dayes when God sheweth vs the resurrection so nearely and expressly, and giueth vs so many goodly promises of it? And specially considering how we see the mirrour and substance thereof in our Lorde Iesus Christe, whom he hath rayzed againe to the intent to put vs out of doubt that we shall one day be partakers of the same immortall glorie. Then if after so much assurance, we cannot be brought to be of the same beliefe that Job was of: must we not needes be charged with vnthankfulness? For if we could imbrace Gods promises with true fayth, wold they not be of sufficient power to make vs to mount ouer all the temptations that do so reigne ouer vs? So then let vs marke well this text, that wee may say

2.Cor.5.4.1 with S.Paule, That if this cotage of our bodie were gone (for he termeth it a cotage as a thing made of leaues, or as a shed that is nothing woorth) we haue a much better and excellenter buylding prepared for vs in heauen. If

1.Cor.15.46.36. this outward man, that is to say, if all that pertayneth to this present life and all that is seene, were done away: yet would God renew vs againe, yea and he maketh vs alreadie to beholde our resurrection after a sort, in that we see our bodies waste away after that maner: according also as in another texte the same S.Paule sendeth vs too the seede that is cast into the earth, saying that the same can not grow to haue a liuely roote, and to yeeld good fruite, except it first rotte. Do we then see that death hath dominion ouer vs? Lette vs marke that God is minded to give vs a true life, that is to say the heauenly life which is purchased for vs by the precious bloud of his Sonne. If that were not, the least temptation in the worlde would ouercome vs. For (as I haue sayd alreadie) all the miseries that wee haue too suffer, are as many messages of death. Nowe if wee sawe death and thought it should make cleane riddance of vs: must we not needes vtterly quayle? Then is there none other meane to comforte vs in our afflictions, but onely this doctrine, that when all that euer is in vs, is consumed, yet shall we not cease too see our God, yea and too see him in our fleshe. Afterward it is sayd, Mine eyes shall beholde him, and none other.

Job addeth this as continuing the matter that he maynteyned: that is to wit, Seing that my God hath assured mee that he will make me strong againe: I will holde me wholly vnto him, I neede not too stray any further, nor to be haled one way or other: for it behoueth me to hold my selfe too him alone. Mine eyes then shall behold him and none other.

Behold here one goodly lesson more. That which he spake crewhile, (that is to wit, that be should see God in his flesh,) hath a relation to experience that God should set him vp againe vpon his feete. But that which he speakest now, is spoken in another respect, that is to witte, in respect of hope. For God is seene of vs in two maners. WWee see him when he sheweth himselfe a father and Sauour in effect, by giuing vs open proofe and experience of it. Beholde, my God hath deliuered mee from such a sickenesse, which was as it were a raysing from death: the same is a recordre that he hath layde his hande vpon me too succour mee: thus do I see him, yea and I see him effectually. Howbeit euuen while I am sicke and when there is no more likelyhood of recouerie, I ceasse not to see God still. For I put my trust in him. Againe, I wayte paciently for the ende that he shall giue mee, and I doubt not but I am his still although he take me out of the worlde. Thus yee see yet another maner of beholding God. Job then meeneth that he shall see God in effect by being setagayn in his former state. And secodly he addeth, that he will not ceasse to behold him although he be ouerwhelmed with miseries, that he can no more. Mine eyes (sayeth he) shall bee fastened vpon him, and I will not looke aside from him. Here wee see what is the nature of fayth: namely to gather it self in such wise vnto God, as it wander not abrode, nor bee drawne away as wee commonly bee. I pray you what is the cause that wee cannot repose our selues vpon God as it were meete wee should? It is because wee parte Gods office, and all his power into so manie peeces and goblettes, as wee leaue him little or nothing. WWee can well ynoch say, it is God to whom it belongeth too maynteyne vs: but yet for all that, wee ceasse not to trudge vp and downe, and forewarde and backward too seeke meanes to liue by: not as giuen of God and proceeding from him: but wee attribute the very power of God too the meanes themselues, whereby we make them as idolles. Thus ye see how we cannot looke vpon God with a pure eye, nor settle our trust and contentation in him. Therefore let vs marke well the wordes that Job vseth here: which are, that his eyes shall behold God and none other: as if hee had sayde, I will holde me there, I will not bee fleeting as men are, but I will put my selfe wholly to my God, and say, It is thou Lord, yea it is thou onely of whom I holde my lyfe, and when I am gone hence, thou shalte restore mee againe as thou haeste promised. And lette vs make this comparison betweene Job and our selues, that if Job hauing not had such assurance of Gods goodnesse, nor so familiar teaching by the hundreth parte as wee haue, do notwithstanding say that hee shall and will beholde God: are wee to bee excused when wee fleete too and fro, specially seing that our Lorde Iesus Christe offereth

Coloſſ.2.6.9 himselfe vnto vs, in whom dwellereth the whole fulnesse & Rom.1.1a of the glorie of the Godhead, and in whom the ful power 4.6.2.Cor.3.d.18. of the holy Ghoste was shewed at suche time as hee was rayzed from the dead? And surely wee neede not too streyne our eye sight to looke far for him: for the Gospel is the cleere looking glasse wherein we see him face to face. Sith it is so (as I haue touched) let vs beware wee bee not guiltie of such vnthankfulness, as too disdayne to looke vnto him, that offereth himselfe so familiarly vnto vs. This is it in effect which wee haue too marke in this streyne. Job addeth further, Although my kidneyes bee wasted in my boosome: that is too say, although there be no more strength nor courage in mee. To be short (following the matter that hee had entred intoo alreadie) he sheweth that his looking vnto God is not because he had liued at his ease, because God had sente him all his hartes desire, or because he had bene preserued in his afflictions: but cleane contrarywise. Although I be in such distresse (sayeth he) as God seemeth to thunder vpon me, and there is no more strength and courage in mee: yet will I looke vnto my God with mine eyes, and holde me wholly vnto him, and I know I shall see him againe as my redeemer and keeper, euen after he shall haue so consumed me. And for a conclusion he sayeth to his frendes: You haue sayd, wherefore is he persecuted, or wherefore doo wee persecute him? for the roote of the cace [or matter] is founde in mee. This sentence is somewhat darke, because the woordes may bee taken two wayes. VVherefore is he persecuted? or wherefore doo wee persecute him? If we take wherefore is he persecuted, the meening is that Iobs frendes marueled why God had handled him so roughly: and therefore they concluded that it was to bee sayd that he was a man utterly forsaken of God. But if yee translate it, How doo wee persecute him? the meening will be that they are come of prepensed malice to take him in a trap, and to byte at him. Although there bee diuersitie as touching the woordes: yet doth the meening come all to one ende. Lette vs consider the doctrine that wee haue togather of it: for that is the principall yea and the whole matter. Job then chargeth his friends that they had judged amisse of his afflictions. And why? For euen at the firste dash they fell to saying, o, needes muste this man be sayde to be a wicked doer, for had he walked with a good conscience, he shold not be so punished as he is. But contrarywise Job sayeth, that the roote of the matter is found in him. True it is that the Hebrew woerde signifieth sometime a Thing, or matter, and sometime a woerde, speache, or saying. But here Job meeneth that he had a good and sure fundation, and that when men haue well fifted him, they shal finde that his cace is not such as other men haue falsely surmyzed. Now let vs see to what purpose this geere tendeth, and what profit we may reape by it. VVhen Job telleth his friends that they had sayd, wherefore is he persecuted? He sheweth that it is a greate crueltie for men to seeke out other mens sinnes when they see one beaten with Gods roddes: and to say, needes must this be a wicked man, therefore let vs sift his lyfe, for that is the poynt which we must begin at. True it is (as hath bene sayd more at large heretofore) that in al the corrections and chastygements which God sendeth, we must alwayes behold his iustice vpō mens sinnes: but that must be to condemne our selues. VVec muste not judge other men, and let our selues slip. Lette vs begin, I say let vs begin at our selues. Thus we see that the vise of this doctrine is, that when any mā is pressed with aduerstie, we must not be hastic to condēne him, and specially we must not wrinch aside to spie out faults in him: but rather we must looke vnto God, who sheweth himself to be the judge both of vs and of him, and compelleth vs to know that it behoueth vs to haue pitie and compassion vpon him that suffereth, and that we muste not go to it at aduēture, although we know him to be faultie, but rather aduise our selues to bring him some medicine too heale him. Let vs beware we set not the cart before the horses, that is to say, that we judge not before we know the cace, as we are comonly wont to do. It hath bene already oftentimes sayd, that Gods afflicting of men is not alwayes for one self same end. For sometimes he punisheth them for their sinnes, and sometimes for the triall of their paciēce, or els for some other respect. Therefore let vs not be ouerhastie nor rashe to judge before wee knowe the cace throughly: for we see what is happened to Iobs friends. Because they see him afflicted, therfore at the first dash he must needs be a wicked man say they. But happie is the, Psalme.41. a.1. mā that iudgeth discretely of the afflicted, as it is sayd in the Psalme. VWas not Dauid pinched as smartly by gods hand as euer any man was? And yet notwithstanding God sayeth, I haue found Dauid my seruant after mine owne 1.Sam.13.c.14. hart, and I haue anoynted him with the oyle of gladnesse. Psal.89.d.20. Thus doth God holde Dauid as it were in his lappe, and 21.c.22. yet we see how he was handled. If we be rash in judging, Act.13.d.22. we shall condemne both Dauid and Abraham, and al the holie Patriarkes. And doth not such maner of judging redounde to the dishonoring of God? Yes surely. So then let vs be sober and modest when wee see our neighbours afflicted, and let vs acknowledge the hand of God, least it happen vnto vs as it did vnto Iobs friendes. But he sayeth precisely, that the roote of /be cace (or the roote of the matter, or the effect and substance of it) is in him. Hereby he meeneth, that men must trie before they iudge. And in good sothe, euery man will graunt that if we should step to it at all aduenture, it were a foolish presumption and querweening in vs: and it is a very common Proverbe among vs to say, A fooles bolte is soone shot. But yet for all this, we cease not to hazard our selues still, without any searching or examining how the cace stādeth. VVherefore let vs marke well, that we must first go to the roote, before we sitte downe to giue judgement. And let vs not iudge swifly for feare least wee might seeme ignorant. For certes the thing that inforseth men to be to swift, is for that they bee ashamed least they shoulde not seeme sharpwitted ynochough too iudge at the firste sight: for if I blab not out my prattleprattle, men will make none acount of mee. But God laugheth at such vayne gloriouſnesse. Therefore let vs keepe our selues in sobernesse and modestie, vntill God haue shewed vs wherefore he puniſheth one man more than another: let vs not runne before that. True it is that when we shall haue searched the matter throughly, and when wee shall haue come too the roote of it: then we may iudge freely. For the judgement shall not come of our selues, but it shall be fetched from God, because it is grounded vpon his woerde and governed by his holie Spirite. Howbeit before all things, it behoueth vs to go to the roote whereof mention is made here. Afterward Job sayeth, Bee yee afraiſde of the presence of the ſword: for the wrath of iniquitie or of the affliction of the ſwoorde is at hande, too the ende yee ſhould knowe that there is a iudgement. This present saying is somewhat darke ynochough, because the woordes are cut of: but the effect of Jobs intent in saying, Bee yee afraiſde before the ſwoorde, is all one as if he had sayd, yee speake here as in the shadowe, yee discourse at your pleasure as they that haue nothing to do and are at their owne leysure. Such folkes may dispute at will: like as there bee none that make better battelles than they that are furthest of from blowes. For they giue the onſet, they besiege townes, they flea, they forray, and they sacke Cities, so as it is a wonder to see them. But when they haue wel discoursed, & come to marching ſwareward in deede: they do no sooner heare the ſounde of the drum, but their courage is quite quayled. Job therfore blameth his friends for reasoning ſo of his cace at leysure, & telletth the that they must take holde of Gods iustice and hee afraiſde of the ſwoorde, as if he shewed it the alreadie. And againe he sayeth, the wrath of iniquitie. This saying pointeth at the cruelty whiche he had vpbrayed vpbrayded them with before. The wrath then is as much to say, as you chafe against mee, and that is too greeue mee. For the Hebrew woerde may signifie both Iniquitie and Affliction. But here Job declareth that his friendes are not come vnto him for any compassion of his miserie, but rather to chafe, yea and to grieue him and vexe him the more. And what is imported in that? The swoorde (sayeth he). That is to say, God will not suffer such outrage vnpunished. For although I had offended you, yet ought you to be more courteous towardes mee. But nowe in condemning mee without cause, yee shewe nothing but rigorousnesse against mee. Therefore muste Gods swoorde bee drawn out against you, verely to the ende yee may knowe that there is a iudgement. Behold a notable and very profitable sentence. For in rebuking his friends after that sort, Job is as a Prophet of God, that speaketh generally to all men in common. The thing then that he tellet vs, is that if wee bee malicious to judge euill of the thing that is good, and churllishe in tormenting and vexing them that are miserable ynough alreadie: 20 wee haue the swoord of God to be afryde of. It is sayd, Cursed are you that call good euill, and euill good: and yet notwithstanding wee see that this vycie hath reigned at all times, and reygneth still at this day. As for them that are caried by thir affections, what conscience make they too spise God openly? They haue skill ynough too say, I see the cace is good ynough of it self: and yet notwithstanding they go quite and cleane against it. Such a man is desirous to serue God: but I will stop him. Such a thing might bee too the buylding vp of the Churche, 30 and serue to the maynteyning of fellowship among men, and to the furtherance of the common weale: but I will ouerthrow it euery whit. For yee shall see some even of those that sitte in the seate of Iustice, who are as good as Diuels incarnate in spiting of God and in ouerthrowing of all equitie and right, and are full of corruptiō and outrage. Now sith we see this, what is to be sayd, but that we be come to the toppe of all wickednesse? As much is to bee sayde of other men. For it is to bee seene that there are nother greate nor small, but they worke spite against God. So then, is it not to bee sayde that the Diuell possessteth men, sith they giue themselues so to ouerthrowe all goodnessse, and to maynteyne euill, specially seeing that so horrible a curse is pronounced by the mouth of the Prophet, against all such as shall say that euill is good, and good is euill. And that is it that Job ment here, in saying, Pee yee afryde of the swoorde. Too whom speaketh he? To such as are puffed vp against God and against all right. For against whom do wee make warre but against God, when wee go aboue too turne light into darkenesse and woulde oppresse a good cace? Beholde it is God whom wee assayle. So then wee haue good cause too bee afryde, yea though wee trouble but some one poore man, by heaping some newe vexacion vpon him. For God setteth himselfe against vs: he sayeth that hee cannot away with such violence and extorsion. VVhen menne go aboue too do any outrage or wrong to poore folkes, God steppeth before them and sheweth himselfe too bee their defender. Therefore whensoeuer wee bee tempted too grieue and to trouble poore folkes and such as are in aduersitie alreadie: ought not these woordes too make vs tremble, when it shall come too our minde that Gods swoorde is drawne against all suche as will increace the miserie of those that are in to mucche miserie alreadie? Beholde then howe God despiseth all those that are giuen too do wrong, violence, extorsion, and such other lyke things, and see howe he summoneth them too fire and bloud. Also when wee see any poore man vn-derfoote, and nobodie supporteth him, lette vs be afryde to treade vpon him or to do him any wrong or reproch. And why? For God auoucheth that he hath his swoord drawn at all suche as shall vexe good and innocent folke after that sorte. And that is it that Job speaketh for a conclusion, saying, that the wrath of iniquitie shall bring the swoorde: as if hee shoulde say, true it is that as nowe when menne ouerleape their boundes too trouble good folkes, it seemeth to themselues that they shall scape vnpunished, and so they nother feare God nor his judgement. No (sayeth he) but the swoorde is readie for them. Therefore lette vs stande so much in our owne conceyrt, as too beare our selues in hande that God cannot come at vs when we haue so tormēted poore folke, which seeke nothing but to liue in quiet, and haue not offendid vs in any thing. For when wee fall to stinging of them and to shewing of our selues bitter towards them, God will be a hundred thousandfold bitterer vnto vs, and we shall feele him to be so when wee come before him as before our judge. VVere this well weyed, surely things would go far otherwise in the world thā they do. VVe see how Princes for their ambition sake, fall to wacking of Countries, to burning of houses, to destroying of townes, too robbing, rauishing, and spoyleing of all things, so as it is horrible to be seene. And wherfore? All this is lawfull for them vnder the name of warre. But first and formost they should consider, whither they be cōpelled to stirre such broyles, and to make warre after that maner through the whole world. Howbeit forasimuch as there is none other thing than their own ambition that inflameth them therewith, and al those mischieues must spring of the rage wherwith they be moued: thinke they that the swoorde is not readie for them? Againe, as touching those, that serue their lustes and feede their humours: thinke they that God ought not to draw out his sword vpon them too? But let vs not looke vpon them onely. For we see those that are nother Kings nor Princes, nor of abilitie to make hauock of countries, or to enter vpon them with force, which notwithstanding ceasse not to be as full of malice as they, or rather fuller. For they play the little Scorpions, which (when they cannot hurt otherwyse,) do caste out their poysen at their tayles: and wee see howe euery man seeketh to annoy and trouble other. Therefore muste not men needes seele that which is sayd here: that is to wit, that the swoorde is drawne out against all such maner of folke? And so yee see why Job doth purposely say, too the intent yee shoulde knowe. True it is that these men were no doltes, such as knewe not that there is a God in heauen who is iudge of the worlde: No, they were men of skill and experiance, as wee haue seene by their talke, and shall see hereafter by Gods leaue. VVhy then doth Job say vnto them, too the intent yee shoulde knowe? It is bycause men beyng blinded by their naughtie affections, know not God, but beleue that when they haue once drawne a curtayne betweene God and themselues, God shoulde not see them any more, nor bee able too punishe them as they deserue. Then lette vs looke vpon the swoorde, although wee see it not yet with our eyes: that is to say, Although God do not yet shewe vs any signes that he is minded too punishe vs, and to make vs knowe that hee is the iudge of the worlde: and lette vs thinke that he is desirous to drawe vs to him, and to shewe that hee will not vse any excessiue rigour towardes vs, specially if wee bee not rigorous towardes our neighbours. Furthermore lette vs vnderstand, that it is not ynough for vs to absteyne from all euill: but it behoueth also too helpe all suche as are in aduersitie. For though a man coulde protest, that he hath absteyned from from all injurie and doing of wrong : yet shall he not therefore be discharged before God . And why ? For he ought to help and succour those that haue neede of succour . Now if they that haue absteyned from euill doing are not quit before God , but are hild as offenders : I pray you what shall wee say of those which do nothing els but practise mischiefe day and night , and are alwayes deuising howe they may trouble and vexe now this man and now that man ? When wicked men do so sharpen their wittes of set purpose to hurt their neighbours : is it not reason that Gods sworde should by and by be sharpened against them ? Then let vs bethinke our selues , and not only be readie to relieue such as are in necessitie : but also (forasmuch as there is so much miserie and wretchednesse through the whole world) let vs haue pitie and compassion of them that are farre of , and let our sight extend euen thither to them , (accordingly as charitie ought too inflame all mankinde) and let vs pray God to vouchsafe to pitie them that are so distressed , & that when he hath chastized them with roddes , he will bring them home to himselfe , and make all that to turne to their saluation , in somuch that whereas wee haue now occasion to sigh , we may then reioyce together , and prayse his name with one common accord .

Nowe let vs cast our selues downe in the presence of our good God with acknowledgement of our faults , praying him to make vs feele them in suche wise , as wee may haue regard to amend them : and that therewithall euery one of vs may haue a minde to humble himselfe vnder Gods mightie hand , and in steade of cōdermning others , learne to feele the euilles that are in our selues , so as wee may seeke to him to purge and cleane vs , till he haue clothed vs fully with his owne righteousnesse . And so let vs say Almighty God our heauenly father , thou hast , &c .

3. I haue heard the correction of my reproche , and the spirite of mine vnderstanding inforceth mee to ansvere .
4. Hast thou not knowne the time of old , since God placed man vpon the earth ,
5. That the aduauncement of the vvicked is but of shott tyme , and that the ioy of hypocrites shall not indure ?
6. Though they bee lifted vp to heauen , and haue rayfed their head aboue the cloudes :
7. Yet shall they perish as their ovvne dung : and they that haue scene them shall say , vvhile are they ?

Hat wee may the better profit by this doctrine , wee haue to beare in minde , howe it hath bene declared before , that suche as encountered with Job , saying that God leaueth not the wicked vnpunished , haue taken a ground that it is true in it selfe , but they applied it amisse too the persone of Job . And this is a cause why wee ought to pray alwayes vnto God to giue vs skill and discretion too know how to apply that things rightly which we shall haue learned out of Gods woerde . For wee may turne that thing too euill , which might bee too our profit , according as wee see how a number abuse the holie Scripture crossely and ouerthwartly . Therefore it standeth vs in hand to marke this poynt : and then shall wee see that here are good and very profitable instructions . Now the effect of that which Sophar sayeth here , is that although the wicked and the despyzers of God bee scene too prosper here for a while : yet must they perish , and the ende of them must bee miserable , according as it hath always bene scene and put in vre , and God will execute his iudgements too the worldes end as he hath done afore . But ere he come too that poynt : he vseth a preface , that is too wit , that he is inforced too ansvere , and compelled so too do , as well by the spirit of his vnderstanding , as also bycause he was ashamed too bee so checked at Jobs hande , specially sith he knewe (as lie himselfe sayeth) that his owne sayings were true , and that Job reasoned too the contrarie . Now if it were so : then had Sophar good reason . For first of all when God giueth vs any grace , it is not too the intent the same should serue for our selues alone : but we ought too make our neighbours partakers of it . Then if God giue more vnderstanding too one man than to another : ought he too keepe it to himselfe alone ? No . But looke what giftes God bestoweth vpon vs , wee must labour to communicate them , that our neighbours may bee edified by them as well as our selues , and God be honored with one common consent .

S.Paule also sheweth the same , namely that if a man haue receyued any gift of God , he hath not receyued it for himselfe , but he muste apply it wholly too the common vse . Behold also how God will haue our charitie exercysed . It is not that euery man should like well of himselfe and despzyze his neighbours : for at what poynct should wee bee then ? Should there be any more bodie of the Churche ? Is it not meete that the members should hee knit togither ? Is it not meete that all should be referred to the head ? Then lette vs marke well that whereas Sophar sayeth , that the spirite of his vnsderstanding inforced him too ansvere : if it were so that God gouerned it , and that this saying were rightly placed : then had he reason too say so . For (as I sayd) when God shall haue disclosed any good thing vnto vs , the same must not be drowned by vs , but rather wee muste bring it to light . And here ye see why it is sayd , that when wee haue beleeuē then must wee speake . So then fayth muste not bee a dead thing , but shew must vtter his selfe .

Psalms. 116.
b.10.

And S.Paule dothe well verifie the sayd sentence of the Psalme . For he sheweth that it is not lawfull for him to do it , bycause God had giuen him understanding , which ought to serue the whole worlde : and therefore that he vittereth the treasure which was committed to him , knowing well that it was not a particular thing for any one man , but for the profitte and instruction of the whole Church . And verely euery one of vs muste apply this lesson too himselfe . For we shall see many that will say , it is ynochough if euery man beleeuē in his owne hart , as who would say that the thing which God hath ioyned together , might be separated by men . But wee haue scene alreadie the record of Dauid : which is , that suche as beleeuē ought to

speake

speake by and by. For except they do so : they shewe that they by their malice doo burie that thing which God woulde haue published abroade : according as it is sayde that men light not a candle too put it vnder a busshell, or too hide it : but too set it vpon a candelsticke that it may shyne all aboue. Furthermore nowe and then when a man hath receyued any gift, he thinketh it is too winne himselfe credite and estimation aboue other men. But contrarywise, in so doing wee disgrace Gods giftes by making them too serue too any vayne glorie. It is not for that purpose that God dealeth his giftes more to one than to another, but too the ende wee shoulde do menne good with them. Therefore let euery of vs haue a care to aduaunce and too spred abroade that which God hath committed vnto him : and as for them that haue not receyued so much, let them neuerthelesse bee brought by that meanes to saluation, whervnto God calleth vs too the ende he might be glorified among vs. Marke that for one poynt. But yet must the other poynt presse vs more, when Sophar sayeth, that he had heard the correction of his reproch. He speaketh not this in respect of his owne persone onely : but according too the matter that hee had dealt with before, he is angrie too see Gods truth troden by that meanes vnder foote. Job had no such intent, (as I haue declared alreadie) and therefore Sophar did him great wrong. Neuerthelesse this doctrine continueth in it selfe always good and true, and wee muste holde it so, for the holy Ghost also ment to teache vs by a man that was blinded in his owne imagination, who not withstandinge ceased not too haue good groundes: So then 30 this doctrine being taken as it is, may stande vs in steade, notwithstanding that we see it reprove the good, and fight against Gods truth, resisting it by cauels and things misapplyed. And therefore when the like befalleth vs, wee must withstand it as much as wee can. I say, whensoeuer wee see a man striue against Gods truth, wee muste set our selues against him as aduersarie parties. VVhy so? For if God giue vs wherwith too make our selues as his proctours and witnessses, he will haue his case maynteyned by vs. And the honour is greate that is done vs in 40 that behalfe. God seeth that wee bee full of vanitie, and that there is nothing but vntruth in vs: and yet neuerthelesse he calleth vs to bee his proctours. And ought he to do so? Is he bound to do it? No: but his minde is to honour vs so far forth. VVhat remayneth then? That euery of vs streyne himselfe to the vttermost [to do his dutie.] VVhen we see men so malicious and wicked as to lift vp themselfes against God, and to seeke al meanes possible to peruert & corrupt the truth: is it meete for vs to be slouthful then? No. VVee see at this day howe the 50 Pope hath many seducers whiche seeke nothing but to slander all good doctrine, and to falsifie all that euer we alledge in the name of God. Yea and we neede not to go so farre, for we see malicious heades everywhere and vnderlings of Satan, which turkin things and desire nothing but to turne all vpside downe. Now when we see the Diuell working after that sorte to ouerthrow the things that are good to edifie the Church, and that men are so impoysoned agaynst them: ought wee to hold our peace? Should we not resist them stoutly as much as in vs lieth? Yes certenly. Else should we be cowardes, yea and it shoulde bee imputed too vs for highe treason, if wee shoulde suffer Gods truthe too bee so defaced, and wee not maynteyne it. Some there are of opinion that it were better for them too holde their peace, and not too speake at all agaynst the Papistes and their superstitions. Yea, but in the meane whyle wee see howe the Diuell would abuse our silence, too vtter foorth his lies and tirannies continually. If poore soules perish, and wee in the meane whyle holde our tungen: what shall become of it? If a sheepeheard doo his duetie, will hee suffer woolues and theeuers to enter into his flocke, and to scare them, byte them and deuour them, and yet say never a woerde too them? But God hath appoynted vs too bee as sheephearde of his Churche. Now like as we muste haue a sweete and amiable voyce too guide our flocke withall, and too leade such too saluation as are teachable and obedient: so also on the contrarie parte, when wee see Theeuers and VVoolues, wee muste criue out aloude too scare them away. Yee see then that such as perceyue men to periuerte Godstruth, ought not to dessemble, but rather to be earnest and zelous in resisting them to the vttermost of their power. Againe, if we ought to haue such courage & constancie in maynteyning good causes against the trumperies and suttleties of the wicked: I pray you ought we not to speake still in the like behalfe when we see Gods name blasphemed in deede, & al good doctrine scorned and rayled vpon by the lewde lyfe, by the malapertnesse, and by all that euer the wicked folke take in hande? VVould God that necessitie constreyned vs not so muche as it dothe. But what? VVhen a man hath preached the woerde of God, lette him go abroade in the streates, and marke what hee seeth eche man do openly, and it will be seene that every man hath conspired against God, and that fyre and water are not more contrarie, than the common lyfe that wee leade, and the doctrine that is preached. I will not say howe reachlesse men are to heare: But although they set a face vpon the matter, and very ceremoniously pretende that God shall bee honored and his woerde receyued: yet it appeereth that it is but a playing of little children, and men do throughly mocke God in their common lyfe, and do nothing else but despzye his woerde. VVee neede not too decyfer things by peecemeale what they bee: menne see well ynough what they are, and wee were too dulheaded if it grieved vs not too see God so ill obeyed among vs, and so smally reuerenced at all mens handes: specially seeing things are come too the shamefulness that Sophar speakeith of, namely that not onely God is dishonored by whoredome, by loocenesse of lyfe, by blasphemie, by robberies, and by other such things, which reigne and are not punished as they ought to bee: but also euen when punishment is extended, men can finde in their harts too mocke God, and his Justice. I speake of that whiche I sawe yesterday with mine eyes. If a strumpet bee put in prison, shee must haue tartes caried her to feast her withall: she must be locked vp for a countenance, and in the meane whyle shee must be presented with great Tartes: And I pray you what a dealing is that? If it had but onely bene tolde me, or if it had but only bene bouldt out: yet could I not haue hild my peace at it. But I saw it my selfe with mine owne eyes, in somuch that it may seeme that God brought me to it, and that the Diuell ment to make his triuphes on the other side. So then no maruell though such as haue charge of the Lordes flocke to preache his woerde do speake so roughly, sith they see things so farre out of square, that there is nother modestie nor honestie at all, nor any ho: and yet are we blameable before God, for that we speake not the hudreth part which we ought too do, considering that the disorder is so outrageous as we see. VVherefore lette vs marke well this sentece of Sophrs, where it is sayde, that he coulde not holde his peace but was inforced too speake because he was chased with his reproch. And why? For we must not suffer euil to haue suche scope without setting our selues against it, and without shewing of our selues to haue some zele of God for the maynteyning of his glorie and truth. But nowe let vs come to the generall matter that is layde foorth here. Haste not thou knowne the tyme of olde (sayeth Sophar) euen since God did set man vpon the earth? how that the hygnesse of the wicked is but of shorte tyme, and that the ioy of hypocrites or transgressors shall not indure? He taketh here a principle that is good and true: which is, that if wee take the lyfe of the despyzers of God too bee happie, wee bee deceyued. And why? For their happiness is but a dreame, as he will adde in the similitude anon after. True it is that moste menne will say that the wicked are vnhappy. But what for that? wee ouershoot our selues: for if wee see a man liue easily, or in honour, although his lyfe bee not ruled according to Gods woerde: yet notwithstanding wee bee rauished at it, wee thinke his state too bee as good as can bee wissched, and every man will spye him. Yea but in the meane whyle wee knowe not that such as are so aduanced, are but Snayles as it is sayd in the Psalme. And it is a comparison well woorthie too bee noted. For David sayeth that such as bee aduaunced in this world, and haue no liuely roote settled in God, are as Snayles. They come creeping vp in one night, and vanishe away out of hande. Beholde here Snayles for all porridge. But wee haue no consideration of that: wee leaue the principall poynt which is too looke vnto the end: we haue not the pacience too say, well, God aduaunceth whom he will, but that is to breake the neckes of them with a greater and fowler fall. VVe can good skill of the wheele of fortune, but wee cannot referre all things too Gods prouidence, to beholde his workes and yelde him all prayse. So much the more therfore haue we neede to marke wel this sentence, that euer since God did set man vpon the earth, it hath bene founde by continuall experience that the highnesse of hypocrites is of late time, and that their ioy shall indure for euer. VVhen Sophar sayeth, that this thing is too be knowne by long experiance, and that it hath bene so euer since God created the worlde: it is a saying of great weight. For if we see but twoo or three examples of Gods Justice, ought wee not too bee touched yniough? But here is much more: it is not in three or fourte personnes only that God sheweth that hee will not leaue the wicked vnpunished: hee sheweth it euery day, he hath shewed it before wee were borne, and if we pursue from age too age since the creation of the world, wee shall see that God hath alwayes kepte the same rate. Seing then that wee haue suche examples and so greate and of so long continuance, that God hath alwayes shewed himselfe a iudger of the wicked mens prosperite, and made all things too turne to their confusion and decay: is it reason that wee shoulde yet stiil doubt of it? VVherefore lette vs marke well this saying howe it importeth much truthe: that is to say, that at all times since men dwelt vpon the earth, it hath bene Gods will that there should alwayes be some recordes of his iudgements, and therefore that wee must not bee so dull and blockish as not to consider the things that God hath done for our instruction. Herevpon wee ought too gather further, that it is not yniough for vs too haue our eyes open too marke and vewe well the things that God dothe in our owne lyfe time: but we must also profite in auncient histories. And verely here we see why our Lordes will was that wee should haue some notable iudgements lefte vs in wryting, namely to the ende that the remembrance of them should remayne for euer. Yea and wee muste not onely profite our selues by the things that are conteyned in the holy Scripture: but also when we heare the stories rehearsed that were written by the Heathen men, wee must haue the skill too apply Gods doings to our selues. For there wee see how he hath executed his vengeance vpon all such as were giuen to crueltie, robberye, and other extorcions: and therewithall howe he hath punished whoredome & other filthinesse, when they reigned ouer sore: and finally wee see how he hath punished periuries and outrages when mens prude hath exceeded so farre as it could no longer be borne. Now when we looke vpō such things, ought they not to serue our turne at this day also? Then let vs remember well the lesson that is giuen vs here: namely that for somuch as God hath euer since the creation of the worlde from time to tyme giuen vs some warnings too shewe vs that hee is the iudge of the world: we must learne too stande in awe of him, and to walke warely, that the punishments whiche he hath executed vpon the wicked may be lookingglasses for vs, and brydles too restrayne vs. But now lette vs returne too that he sayeth, that the highnesse of the wicked is but of shorte tyme. And why? For although they were lifted vp to heauen, or reached vp to the clowdes with their heads: yet should they not cōtinue, but God wculd throw them downe out of hand. Here Job continueth the matter that we sawe before: that is to wit, that God will now & then suffer the wicked to be aduaunced and too florish: but it shall not indure long. Now had Sophar considered this well: he would no more haue stode in contention with Job: but forasmuch as he taketh a generall sentence, and applieth it amisse: he goeth ouerhawtly to worke. Yet notwithstanding (as I haue sayd) this doctrine deserueth to bee receyued as comming from the holie Ghost: and there is no more for vs too do, but too looke aduisedly vpon it, and to apply it conueniently. Therefore let vs go forward with the matter. It is a very troublous temptation to vs, to see the wicked in prosperitie. For we would fayne that God should shew himselfe as he is: that is to wit, that he cannot away with the wicked, but throweth them downe because he hateth and abhorreth them. If we our selues do amisse, we would haue God to spare vs: & there is none of vs but he thinketh God to be ouerhastie in punishing vs. VVhen we haue comitted one sin, two, or three: if God chastyze vs, we thinke it is to soone, wee cannot away with it. But if another man haue done neuer so little a faulte, we would haue God to thunder vpō him out of hande. Lo wherevnto hypocrisie leadeth vs. But what is to be done on the contrarie part? VVe must bee contented too see the wicked triumph for a tyme in the worlde, and too haue their full scope, and too liue in ease and pleasure, and not bee grieued at it, no not althoogh wee our selues bee in the meane whyle in aduerstie and trouble. And why? For by that meane God intendeth too trie our fayth. If wee sawe things to bee suche as they shall bee in the ende, as God sheweth vs them by his woerde: would we put any trust in him? No. VVe would beleue nothing till wee sawe it. But when as we perceyue not the thing that God speaketh so soone as we would, and yet neuerthelesse continue still stedfast in his woerde, resting vpon that which hath proceeded out of his mouth: that is the thing wherein wee shewe our selues too beleue him. And so lette vs marke well that when God doth so lay the bryde vpon wicked and vngodly folkes neckes: it is to trie whither wee haue serued him purely, and whither wee haue patiently giuen him leaue too do what he will, without lifting vp of our selues agaynst him. Also there is yet more, that God will haue vs too learne that our Paradise is not in this worlde. But wee woulde fayne liue in pleasure, and that God shoulde dandle vs like little cockneyes. That were not for our behoofe, but cleane cōtrarie. For vnesse

God drewe vs too him by afflictions : wee would never (by our good willes) fleete out of this worlde : wee be as much intangled here as may bee. Therefore wee haue neede too be drawne to the heauenly kingdome by many tribulations, and that God shoulde inforce vs to come to him, and yet therewithall also shewe vs, that hee wi. l roote out the wicked, though they runne riot never so much. VVhen wee see this, wee shall haue no cause to beare them any grudge. So then (as I haue sayde alreadie) let vs learne to ouercome the sayd temptation when it is trumped in our way: and if the wicked happen too bee aduaunced, yea euen too reaching of the clowdes with their heads : lette vs vnderstand that wee muste not be grieued at it, as though God were a slepe, or as though he regarded not the worlde ne had any care of it. But contrarywise let vs assur our selues that Gods lifting of them vp, is too strike them quite downe at one blow, yea euen with a deadly fall. For if their falling were but as they stande vpon their feete : then might they well scape with the breaking of some bone. But when God suffereth them too be hoysed vp so highe : he sendeth them downe to their vtter destruction. Thus ye see to what intent Sophar sayeth, that the loftiness of the wicked is but for a short tyme. And nowe he addeth, that their ioy shall be of no long continuance. VVhereby he meeneth that the despyzers of God and all such as are tyde to the worlde, do ouer ioy themselues in the present prosperitie, and are vtterly drunken with it. True it is that the children of God may well be merrie when they haue prosperitie, like as when God sendeth vs wherwith to be fed and mayn-teyned, when he dealeth so with vs as wee want nothing, when he giueth vs health, quietnesse, and all other like things : we may well be merrie, yea and we ought to bee so, according as it is sayd in the lawe, Thou shalte eat and drinke before thy God and be merrie. But yet must not the faythfull settle their ioy vpon the present benefites, nor hold themselues tyde only vnto them. Yea rather if they want meat & drinke, or be troubled with sicknesse, they must not therefore ceasse to trust in God : but must learne S. Paules lesson, which is, to haue skill both to be poore and riche, too indure hunger and scarcitie, and also to haue abundance. Thus yee see that the mirth of Gods childre differeth greatly from the mirth of the vn-beleeuers and worldlings. For these reioyce in the things that they hold in hand without looking any further : and as for God or heauenly life, they haue no care of them, but besotte themselues in such sort, that if they find ease, they runne ryot into extreeme loocenesse of lyfe. Contrarywise, when the faulthul are in prosperitie, they are alwayes ledde further: that is to wit, to the acknowledging of Gods goodnessse in that he hath made them feele him more than a father towards them. And they know also, that when he may seeme to haue forsaken them, then is he neerest them to succour them. So then in this sentece Sophar ment to shewe, that when the despyzers of God and those that are giuen too do euill are aduaunced, and fortune(as they terme hit) laugheth vpō them, so as they prosper and liue at their ease: all that whyle they bee so dulled, that their mirth is a drunkennesse, and they runne ryot without order or measure. Lo what Sophar ment to speake. To this purpose, let vs marke well howe our God shalbe turned into gnasshing of teeth, Not that it is not lawfull for vs to bee merrie (as I sayd afore,) or that it is not Lawfull for vs too reioyce when God giueth vs occasion. But will wee bee merrie.

Then let vs(as S.Iames willeth vs:) Let him that is merrie, sing : that is to say, let him giue God thankes, and in calling vpon him let him alwayes still go foreward towards him and bee stablished in loue, feare, and trusste towards him more and more. Ye see then what our mirth ought to bee. But by the way, with this sayd mirth, we must also bee sad, considering how we ceasse not to offend God (as S. Paule also sheweth vs by example) and considering the vices that are in vs. And so let vs alwayes go onward still too the full and perfect ioy which is hidden from vs as yet. Thus much concerning this saying, that the ioy of the wicked shall not indure long. Furthermore lette vs marke that Sophar was beguyled by mistaking these wordes, a short time, and of small continuance. For when the Scripture sayeth that the wicked vanishe away, and that God will consume them in the turning of a hand : it is not ment that he keepeth one ordinarie stint, as I haue declared alreadie. And why? For if God shoulde do so, what should be referued till the latterday? wee would be wedded to this world, and not wayte for the comming of our Lord Iesus Christ to accomplish our resurrectiō and redemption. Our Lord therfore is fayne to reserue many, yea and the most part of things til his last judgement.

But yet in the meane whyle it is alwayes his office to destroy the wicked, and too shew that they bee but of short continuance. And in good sooth let vs consider well what our life is, and wee shall see that the thing which lasteth longest time in this worlde, doth but passe by and slippe away in the turning of a hand. VVee be such fooles, that if God lift not vp his hand the first day to destroy such as haue offended: we are of opinion that the tyme will never come. And why? It seemeth to vs that this life lasteth long, and yet, we graunt it is but a shadow: for eue-ry man muste away hence spite of his teeth. Therefore when it is sayd vnto vs, that the wicked continue not any long time: lette vs learne that it is not mente that our Lorde riddes them out of hand. For although they come too the yeeres of fiftie or threescore: yet ceasse they not to bee trayned on stili by Gods hande to their decay and confuzion. Too be shorte, wee muste bee pacient and wayte with silence what God will do, without such boy-ling and hastinesse as Sophar is wont to vse here. Behold I say howe it behoueth vs too apply this doctrine, if wee intend to fare the better by it. And truly it is a right necessarie poynyt for vs. For wee shall see many offended at the reading of the promises in the holy Scripture, (as that Leuit. 26.
& Deut. 28.
God will blisse those that are his, that he will leade them in all their wayes, that he will bring all their deuices too good ende, that they shall liue in prosperitie, that they shall bee blissed at his hande, bothe in themselues, and in their offspring, and their cattell, at home and abrode, and in their possessions, and that they shall all be preserued by the grace of God. And on the contrarie part we see, that the childre of God indure so great scarcitie and so many miseries, as is rufull. Sometime they haue not so much as one morsell of bread to put into their mouth, and they be smitten with diseases and al other calamities: while in the meane time the wicked whome God had threatened, do prosper. VVe be astonished at that, and we seeme to lose our time in trusting vnto God, and that his threatenings and promises are deceyfull. VVhat is the cause of suche trouble? It is for that we want pacience to bridle our selues, & to say, I will see what God wil do. VVe neede no more but to stride ouer, as when we haue to passe a diche wee bee fayne to leape and stryde, that wee may get ouer it.
So then, forasmuch as wee cannot leape ouer the things of this worlde, and so list vp our selues to beholde Gods judgements: therfore we cannot see them, though they be neere at hande. And certesse there are diuers that will say, I can go no further, for suche a thing stoppeth mee.

And what is that stoppe? It is but some strawe that lyeth in their way. That is all the lette, and yet they needed no more but to lift vp their foote, or to treda vpon it, to ouercome all the matter that that we make so greate a doo of. And is not that a greate lazinessse in vs? Howbeit when we bee destitute of Gods spirite, yee see in what plight wee bee. Yet are not the things that are conteyned in the holie scripture, spoken in vayne, nor without cause. Furthermore it behoueth vs to marke also, how Sophar sayeth here, that when the wicked shall haue lifted vp their head too the skie, and reached to the cloudes: God will find meanes well ynough to throw them downe, yea and to sink them euen into hell. Lo what the end of the wicked shall bee, which seeke nothing but to aduaunce themselues. True it is that God doeth erewhyles exalt his seruants too honour and dignitie: but yet do they not ceasse too bee lowly stiil all the whyle. VVhen a man is gouerned by Gods spirit, although he be a greate prince and honored of the whole world, and God haue reached him his hand too exalt him hyghly: 20 yet will he alwayes bee modestly mynded too acknowledge his owne infirmities, & to walk in feare and warenessse, saying; Alas what would become of mee if my God brydled mee not? He giueth mee of his grace, and as for mee I haue nothing of myne owne. Haue I any cause then too glorifie my self? No: But the neerer he commeth to mee, the more doeth he bynd mee too him: so as if I bee honored among men, it behoueth mee too be as a Mirrour to faue such as are destroyed and overthrowen. God then hath set mee in this cace, to the end 30 I should serue their turnes that haue neede of my help. Thus when the children of God are indewed with anye graces, they meene not to keepe them to themselues too serue their owne peculiar turne withall: but to acquaint them selues with their neyghbours, yea euen with the meanest of them, (according as Sainct Paule speakest) and to humble themselves too the lowest of them, as God hath commaunded them. But cleane contrarie, whē the wicked happen to be aduaunced, they doo nothing but lift vp their heads to the cloudes, and perke vp vnto heauen. And wheroft commeth that? It is bycause they haue forgotten themselues, and think not themselues to be mortall men, but take themselues to be (as ye would say) Gods. VVe see this in all these blynde wretches that are sortid in prude, namely that they knowe not themselues. If one speake to them as to men, they think they be forgotten. And that is it that Sophar meeneth by saying that the wicked lift vp their heads vnto the skyes, and perk aboue the cloudes. True it is that it behoueth vs to reache our heads aboue the skyes and aboue the cloudes: but that is after another maner: that is to wit, although we be wayfarers in the world, and see nothing but corruption in our selues: yet we must not fayle to possesse by hope the euerlasting benefits that God hath promised vs: but must be able to protest with Paule, that wee be citiziens of heauen, that the heritage is prepared for vs there already, that we be already set in the heauenly places, namely in the persone of our head Iesus Christ, who hath knit and vniited vs to him self neuer to be separated. Thus ye see how the faythfull children of God must lift vp their heads not only to heauen, but also aboue heauen. Yet notwithstanding it is not ment heereby that they should not humble them selues, according as it is sayd, that they shall alwayes stoupe vnto God as the Prophet Amos speaketh. And what meeneth he by saying that God will haue vs to stoupe vnder him? It is too the intent we should knowe that there is such a burthen vpon our shouolders as we be not able to beare, if we be not maynteyned by his power. And surely it is necessarie for vs, to the end he may be glorified in vs by deliuering vs after that sort out of the miseries and aduersities where-with we be so ouerladen and borne downe. Therefore let vs marke well these things, to the end wee may lerne to frame our selues to such myldnesse, as we may be of the number of those whom God will lift vp too heauen, after he hath cast them downe vnto hell. So then, will we be vphild by the hand of God? Let vs humble our selues (as the Apostle sayeth) yea let vs humble our selues in such sort, as wee may first yeeld God the glorie that belongeth vnto him, as of whom al goodnesse procedeth, and make true confession vnto him: and secondly haue euery one of vs an eye too his owne calling, knowing that God hath knit vs in such wyse togither, as the greatest ought to apply themselues to the least, and euery of vs ought to put Gods gifts to such vse, as all may take good by them in common, assuring our selues that the condition wherevpon they be giuen vs, is that others should be partakers of them as well as we. VVhen wee go to work after this sorte: it is certaine that we shall be alwayes vphild by the hand of God. And although the diuell make neuer so greate assaults vpon vs: yet shal we hold out. Againe though we be fayne to stagger now and then, yet will God be alwayes redye at hand, so as we shall euermore get the victorie howsoeuer the world go. Therefore if we be hild in such modestie as becommeth vs: let vs assure our selues, that God will cause vs to feele his power by making vs to continue in all goodnesse, euen to the end. And although we must be fayne too walke through manye hazardes and daungers of this world: yet will hee not suffer vs to rush against any euill encounters too breake our necke: but if wee meete with anye, surely he will giue vs the grace too leape ouer it, as I sayd afore. Thus muche haue wee too gather of these woordes of Sophar for the present tyme.

Now let vs fall downe before the face of our good God with acknowledgement of our faults, praying him to make vs so too feele them, as thereby wee may bee taught to mislike of our selues sith wee bee so wretched creatures as wee ceasse not too offend, and that therewithall wee may with true lowlinesse receyue all the chastyzements that he shall send vs, so as we may dayly more and more stoupe vnder his myghtie hand: and that being so striken downe, wee may notwithstanding not ceasse to walk as he commaundeth, with our hartes and mynds lifted vp by fayth and hope vntoo the kingdome of heauen, continuing neuerthelesse as little ones in this world: howbeit not as babes in wit, but as babes in malice: to the intent that being bereft of all vayne presumption and selfelyking, wee may so serue one another, as God may bee honored of vs all with one acorde. That it may please him too graunt this grace, not only too vs, but also too all people and Nations of the earth, &c.

This Sermon goeth on with the exposition of the viij. verse, and then with the text that is added here.

8. He shall vanish awray as adreame and not be found again, he shall passe awray as a vision in the night.
9. The eye that hath seene him shall see him no more, His place shall no more knowe him.
10. His children shall favyne vpon the poore, his hands shall restore his riches.
11. His bones shall be full of his youth, and it shall lie dovyne vwith him in the dust.
12. If euill be syueete in his mouth, he vwill hyde it vnder his tong.
13. He vwill spare it, and not let it go, but keepe it in the mids of his palate.
14. His meate in his bovvels shall be turned into the gall of an Adder vwithin him.
15. He hath syvalloved vp riches, and he shall spevv them vp again, and God shall plucke them ou: of his beliie.

Eere Sophar goes forward with the doctrine that was glauced at yesterday: that is to wit, that whereas the wicked and the despizers of God seeme to bee happy, the same shall not last long, because God must put to his hand to confound them in the end. He vsyth a phrase which may do vs to understand that they shall perish in their owne turning, or else as their owne dung, for so do the Hebrewes terme their turning, as if it were sayd that they shall go out as dung, and they speak it in way of disdeyne and reproche. Ye see then that his meening is to say, that although the despizers of God be braue and make themselves terrible: yet must they perish with shame ynoch, and be cast out as men remoue dung. Lo what the fense is. Afterward he addeth that they shall perish neuer to recover nor too bee made whole againe. Herepon he likeneth them to a dreame or to a vision in the nyght, which passeth away incontinent. To bee short, he sayeth that such as haue seene them in greate estate and authoritie, shall knowe them no more, neither shall there be any hope for them to recover their place againe. All this (as I haue declared) is verie true. For all the happinesse that appeereth in the wicked, shall in the end turne too their greater confuzion, and forasmuch as they bee cursed off God, it cannot be but they must needs come too an euill ende. VVhat is the cause of mennes happinesse, but because God receyueith them into his fauour and blissthem? Then if we haue the contrarie, so as he shake vs of: although the whole world seeme to be on our side and all things fall out to our contention tootoo well: needes mult all the benefites that it is possible for vs too haue, be turned to our vndooing. Therfore there is no fountayne of welfare but only the goodnesse and loue of our God. If we haue that; although wee seeme neuer so wretched, yet shall all things turne too our welfare. But cleane contrariwise, if God loue vs not, it is impossible that wee shoulde by any meanes prosper. VVe may well haue some outward shewe: but that shall bee of no continuance, as is shewed vs heere. Therefore let vs marke well the speeche that Sophar vsyth here. For although it betoken two things (as I haue sayd): yet notwithstanding it importeth that God ouerthroweth the wicked in the turning of a hand. This deserueth to be noted, because they seeme too be fastened with yron nayles (as they say) so as they may neuer be remoued. But God will finde the meanes to throwe them downe, yea euē vpon the suddein before men are aware of it. And when the thing shall seeme impossible to vs, God is able to woork beyond our imagination or conceyt. Again let vs lerne not too be bleared with the gloriousnesse and dignicie of the wicked, seeing that our Lord casteth them in the teethe with it as wee see. Doth the world hyghly commend such as are enriched by robberie, such as are aduaanced by wicked practizes, and such as despize God and all equitie and right? Behold, the holie Ghoste likeneth them too dung and filth. So then (as I haue touched) let vs not be tempted when wee see anye greatnessse & excellēcie in the despisers of God. But rather let vs herken too the saying which the holie Ghoste vterreth against them to put them out of estimation: and not without cause. For it is because we should not repine at their state, nor be drawen into their lines as our owne lusts would do at every blowe, nor finally bee disquieted, as though God executed no Justice in the world, but were asleepe in heauen, and listed not to repreesse wickednesse when it overfloweth his banks. Therfore too the end that such temptations haue not dominion ouer vs, let vs lerne to esteeme those things as dung and filth, which the world hath in greate reputation. Lo what we haue to do when we see men clap their handes at the wicked and in maner honour them as Gods. Therfore in the meane while let vs bee pacient, in wayting for the ende, assuring our selues that they be but dung afore God. But there is also this poynte more too bee noted: namely that their place shall knowe them no more, and that the eye which hath seene them shall see them no more. VVhereby Sophar meeneth that the wicked shall not be afflicted for a small tyme like as God doeth often tymes affliet the faythfull also in such wise as they may seeme to be vterly ouerwhelmed. Then may it seeme that God is mynded to confound his owne seruants without any hope of setting them vp againe: but yet haue they this promis, that although they were in the bottom of hell, the hand of God should stretch it self thither too drawe them out of it. VVherefore though we must bee faine to walk in the middes of the shadowe of death: yet let vs not be dismayed, seeing that God giueth vs this token that he is our Redeemer: that is to wit, sith we heare the voyce of God warriating vs that he hath not forgotē vs. Lo what we haue on our side. But although God giue the wicked but so much as a little fillup, their wounds are so deadly as they neuer recover them. And why? For when God speaketh, it is to destroy them, yea euē in such wise as no man may be able to set them in their estate nor to build

to build them vp again. VVel may mē attempt it, but they shall not preuayle at all : the more they think too further them, the more they plucke thē backe. Thus we see heere how Sophar sholeth out the despizers of God and the wicked sort, from the faythfull. For afflictions may well light vpon bothe alike : but there is oddes in the end of them. I say that afflictions light vpon the one as well as the other, insomuch that the faythfull shall seeme to beat the verie point to perish vtterly without recouerie: howbeit forasmuchas God hath promised too reache them to his hand, although they were come euen to deathe : yet should they be rayzed vp again. But as for the wicked, they must perish vtterly. And why? For the curse of God is vpon them. And therfore let vs lerne to comfort our selues when God shall send vs any afflictions. For al- though they be greate, hard, & heauie: yet is there cause of gladnesse, sith the end shall be happie. On the other side, when we see the wicked florish and triumph, let vs not cease to keepe on our pace, notwithstanding that we be miserable to the worldward. And why? For when God striketh them vpon the suddein, it is not to set them vp againe but there must they lie still, and their place shal neuer be acquainted with thē any more, as it is sayd more at full in the seuenandthirtith Psalme. For inasmuch as it is a hard thing to be beleued that God will destroy the wicked euen when they bee so well settled in this life, as it may seeme that they should continue in their state for euer: the holie Ghoste is faine to drawe vs backe oftentimes to that lesson, to the end it may be throughly settled in our harts, and we fully persuaded of it. Then if we perceyue not at the first, that God will raze out the wicked without euer suffering them too recouer vp again: let vs herken what the scripture sayeth, and we shall perceyue that God rooteth them out after such a sorte, as men shall not wote what is become of them. Thus much concerning Sophars woords where he sayeth, that the place where the wicked were shall knowe them no more .. And there is also a comparison of a Dreame in the night, and of the phancies that men conceiue. True it is that the life of man in it self may well be called a dreame. For what doo men heere vntill our Lord haue inlightened them and made them knowe that they be ordeyned to a better life? VVhat doo they (I say) but only dreame? All such as weene too gret weith and too heape vp riches heere hylowe, ceasse not too runne seeking heere and there, and too make large circuites: and yet notwithstanding they come always to one point, which is to think vpon nothing else but gathering: and all that is but a dreame. VVhat other vices so euer men be infected with, I pray you haue they any certain marke or any restingplace so long as they be intangled in this world? Haue they a cleere mind to vnderstand that God calleth them? No. Haue they their thoughts well setteld? Haue they their affections well ordered? No not at all. They do but dreame. To be short, if all things were well serched by peecemeale which men purpose and devise, which they take in hand, and which they doo: it would be found that their whole state is but like a dreame or fancie that a man conceyuth. And (as I haue sayd) such may mannes life be generally sayd to be: But specially it may be verified of those that hold aloof from God and turne their backs vpon him. For inasmuch as they leaue the light and wilfully seeke after darknesse: it is meete for them too haue such wages as they deserue: that is to wit, to haue their witts confounded, so as they may not be able to judge any thing, nor to discerne betweene whyte and blacke, but rather be ouerspred with a [continual] night to doo nothing else but dreame. And in deede we see also how they transforme things, and turne them cleane contrarie. Marke mee a despizer of God: he will beare himself in hand that he is able too woork wondres: and yet in the meane whyle he knoweth not that if God be his enimie, he must needs perissh, and that he may well fortifie himself, but he shall not be able to scape Gods hand that it fal not vpon him as a hideouse storne. But as I sayd, forsoinmuch as the wicked doo shun the light as much as they can, they deserue that God should cast them as it were into an vnlyghtsome place, as it were into a continuall night, there to be wrapped round about with darknesse. Haue they once their mindes so dazed, they conceyue dreames and fancies, and make themselves beleue this and that. So then it is not without cause that the holie Ghost doeth here by the mouth of Sophar liken the wicked vnto a dreame. And not onely they disguise themselves after that sorte, but wee see that other men also haue a false opirion of them. For if a wicked man be aduaunced, every man reverenceth him, yea and they enuie his state, and would faine be like him: and such as cannot come at it, doo oftentimes make an ydole of him. Thus ye see in what case men are when they see the wicked prosper. But we consider not that within them they haue a woorme that gnaweth them without end or ceassing, bycause Gods justice followeth them at the hard heele, and they are alwayes troubled in their consciences: Then knowe we not in what perplexitie and vnquietnesse the wicked are bycause God hath cursed them. But wee be bleared with a certain vayne shewe, and (as the proverb sayeth) all that glistereth is eyther gold or siluer in our eyes. So then let vs lerne to remember that which is shewed vs heere: that is too wit, that we must no more dreame, nor be so led by our owne misweening fancie. For God will skorne such vanitie, and shewe that in the end after we haue ben in darknesse, a day will come wherin we shall be brought too light, and when that day commeth, men shall see how wee haue ben beguyled in our dreames. But now are wee not in the night: for God inlyghteneth vs, at leastwise if the let be not in ourselues. VVhat is it then that maketh vs too dreame? what is the cause that we bee so deceyued by our owne fond imaginacions, and that every one of vs forgeth some fancie or other to him self: but that wee be loth too stay our selues to consider what God doeth dayly before our eyes, and specially what he warneth vs of by his woord? Behold how God sheweth vs which is the true happinesse and what is our true welfare. Blissed is the man (sayeth he) that feareth the Lord: Blissed is the man that applyeth himself too the mynding of Gods truthe: Blissed is the man that putteth his whole trust in God. For he shall be like a tree planted by a riuers side, alwayes full of good sappe, so as nother heate nor drought may cause him too forgoe his freshnesse, and lustinesse. Thus doeth our Lord shewe vs the true happinesse, that wee may knowe it if we our selues be not too blame. But what? wee bee fugitiue and cannot rest vppon firme ground, but wil needes haue a happinesse that is slippery and fligntfull. Therefore wee bee well woorthie too perish and too tumble intoo the bottomlesse pit, sith wee goe so wilfully too seeke after the darkenesse of the nyght. Thus yee see why I sayd, that forsoinmuch as God is so gracieuse as too inlyghten vs with his woord: it behoueth vs too come away out of our dreames and fancies, too the end we be no more tossed so. And afterward it is sayd, that bis bones are ful of his youth. The Hebrew woord that Sophar vseth here, doeth sometimes signifie hid and secret sinnes: and surely the Hebrew word that signi-

signifieth youth is derived thence also. And so, the sense may be, that a wicked mannes bones are full of the sinnes that he hath committed, and specially that he began to commit them in his youth, or else that in his youth his bones were full and he was filled and glutted with pleasures, so as he had his harts desire, and all that ever he had a mynd vnto came to his hand. This is it that we haue to note. So then, if we take the woord youth in his owne signification, the meening will be, first that Sophar warranteth the wicked, that if they be once giuen vntoo euill, they neuer turne backe again, according as it is sayd in Salomons prouerbes, that when a yoong man hath once take a wrong way, he shall go on still: and when he commeth to old age he shall continue all one. VVee see that when men haue once taken their way awrye to giue them selues to naughtinesse: it is very hard too plucke them backe again. Lo heere a good and profitable lesson. And although it be common ynough [in talke,] and that the verie heathen men haue made prouerbes of it: yet haue we neede to be warned of it, considering how wee be so much giuen to continue in euill as it is rufull, and think it too be nothing at all. But we perceyue not how: Satan taketh possesyon of vs when we continue in our filthinesse. VVhen a man beginneth first to doo euill, he thinketh that if he followe it still a day a moneth, or a yeere, he shall returne well ynough again in the end: verely as though we had repentence in our sleeve. But (as I sayd,) behold, Satan creepeth into vs and taketh possession of vs ere we be aware. Therfore let vs keepe vs from hardening so in euill, and as soone as we perceyue that our flesh and naughtie nature egge vs and prouoke vs to step asyde, let vs be restrayned by the feare of God. And if we be falne, let vs doo our indeuer too get vp again intinctly: and when wee bee out of the way, let vs returne byandby. I say, it is not for vs to delay till to morowe. And specially when a yoong man standeth vpon the ordering of his lyfe: let him be well aduyed that he giue not himself ouer too vyce and filthinesse. For if he weene to returne, when he listeth himself: hee is deceyued. Ye see then that the first thing which we haue too marke, is that we must not be saped in our sinnes. Now then, it is a verie fit maner of speaking to say, that the bones of the wicked are full of their youth: that is to wit, the wicked not only haue some fleeting lusts: as a man shall see some folk that haue not any malicioouse wilfulnesse in them, nor are vtter despizers of God, but haue still some seede of goodnessse, and would fayne giue them selues to welldoing, howbeit forasmuchas they haue no hold of themselues, nor are cōstant: assoone as they mete with any prouocation, they streyt overshoote themselues: we shall see some such, (I say). But Sophar meeneth much more heere: that is to witte, they haue their bones full of naughtinesse within, and are sooked or steeped in it, and they delight themselues in it. And wee see also that when the diuel poysoneth men, it is not by stinging them lightly, but by sheading his venim into the bottō of their hart, so as their witte and vnderstanding may conceyue nothing but euill. Lo how God punisheth such as haue despized him, and given themselues ouer to euill, so as they do dayly appayre and wex euer worse and worse. Hereby we see that it is not in mannes choyce to repent when he listeth, as these skoffers say, mocking God, with Tush, there needs but one good sigh at the end. But who shall give them that sigh? VVherfore let vs beware that we weler not in our sinnes. For if they once get into our bones and intoo our maree, our naughtinesse will go with vs to our graue, and well may wee stryue against it, but yet must we be fayne to dwell with it still in our old skin. Therfore let vs beware that such vēgeance of God light not vpon vs. Furthermore (as I haue sayd) there is another lesson for vs to gather out of his saying, that the bones of the wicked are full in their youth, and that they shal lie downe with them in their graue, where their naughtinesse shall lye with thē sayeth Sophar. Hereby he meeneth that when the wicked are (as ye would say) redye to burst for fulnesse of goodes and pleasures: God will make them leane ynough, so as they shall wither away, and be fayne to go stark naked too their graue. This serueth to confirme the matter that was discoursed not long afore: that is too wit, that when the wicked haue their owne wish, and are in their cheef iollitic, so as they seeme to be the happyest men in the whole world: it is all one as if their bones had ben full in their youth: that is to say, as if God had first giuen them all that they could wish, and afterward made them to lay themselues downe to sleepe. And with whom? Euen every man by himself alone: that is to say, with no more but only his bare carcasse. For God vncaseth them, and when they be stripped stark naked, he sendeth them to their graue. Hereby wee be admonished, that when wee see the wicked men haue meate & drink their fill, yea euē till they burst, so as their riches flowe vnto them more thā they desire, and they be honored and haue all their pleasures: I say we be warned not to be out of quiet when we see such things. For seing that our Lord hath told vs that it must be so: it is good reason that we should passe ouer such stumblingblockes, and not be shaken by thē. But let vs marke wel their end which Sophar sheweth here, how that every one of them must go lie downe alone by himself in his graue. Then seing it is so: let vs tarie till our Lord vncase the wicked: and then we shall haue no more cause to enuy them, nor to overshoote ourselues with them. If it be sayd, that it is a common thing to vs all to go to dust, and there to rotte: it is true. Howbeit we haue good companie, inasmuch as we haue walked in the feare of God during our life. For we knowe that if we yeeld our soules into his hands, he will keepe them well and faythfully. VVe shal bee well accompanied inasmuchas we knowe that the verie Angelles of God (as the scripture telleth vs) shall receyue our soules to put them into this sayd good and safe keepping, vntill we rise againe intoo the heauenly glorie. Albeeit then that to outward apperance, euery one of vs be cut of from the world, and from the companie of men, and laid in our graues: Yet shall we be well accompanied to Godward, when we haue walked in the feare of him. But on the contrarie part, the wicked must lie still in the dust: and although they haue had greate traynes and bāds and haue (as ye would say) trayled a long tayle after thē: yet must God bring thē to the end that is declared heere. Afterward it is sayd, that if euil be sweete in their mouth, they will bold it vnder their tong, they wil spare it without swallowing of it downe, and keepe it still in the palate of their mouth, and farther, that it shall be turned into the gall of an Adder in their bowels, and that assoone as they haue swallowed it downe, they shall spew it vp again. And among these things he spake also of the children of the wicked, which thing I had forgotten. Sophar therfore among those other things sayeth, that wicked folkes children shall flatter the poore, and their bandes shall restore the riches that they had possessed. Hereby he doeth vs to understand that God wil vtter his vengeance and make it to be felt, not only in the persones of those whom he speaketh of: but also in their children, according also as the Scripture sayeth, that God will make the iniquite of the fathers to Exo 34.6.7 come home intoo the bosoms of their children. It may Iere.12.c.18. seeme at the first blush that this agreeth not with Gods right-

Ezec. 18. e. righteousnesse. For the soule that hath sinned shal bear the punishment of his sinnes, as it is sayd in Ezechiel. How is it then that God punisheth the children for the sinnes of their fathers? He doeth so in deede. Howbeit we must presuppose that God doeth oftentimes of his owne graciouse goodnesse exempt the children of the wicked, and not ceasse to blisse, notwithstanding that they had deser-ued to bee cursed. Again when God intendeth to per-forme the iudgement whereof mention is made heere, he letteth the children of the wicked too hold on their owne race after the steppes of their fathers. By reason whereof they cannot but continually increace the mis-cheef: and for somuchas they bee vtterly voyd of Gods spirit, they doo but prouoke his wrath, and continue in heaping vp of his vengeance vpon themselues, according as God had executed it vpon their fathers. True it is that the verie cause hereof is for that God draweth them not backe by his holie spirit, so as they might not followe their fathers. And what for that? Is he bound or tyed too anye man? No. So then, let vs not think this maner of punishing straunge whereof Sophar speaketh heere: that is to wit, that God should impouerish wicked mennes children and bring them too so lowe an ebbe, as they must be fayne too sawne even vpon the veriest rascals. Theyr fathers were passingly proud, insomuch that the greatest and honorablest sort durst not match with them, but stood in awe of them: according as we see that such as haue their harts so puffed vp with pryde, must needs disdeyne men seeing they haue already begonne too de-spize God. VVe see then an intollerable pryde in them, 30 when they cannot voutsafe too giue a good looke too such as come to sew to them and too make supplication.
VVell, is it so? Their children must bee fayne too few too the veriest rascals that are. I say that this vengeance is performed when God suffereth the children too followe their fathers. And it is a thing right necessarie for vs to knowe, to the end we may consider of what sort the vengeance of God is vpon the wicked, seing it must also extend to their children: like as on the other side we perceyue the infinite goodnesse of our God, when it pleaseth him to blisse our childre and to make the feele his mercie for our sakes. For is not that an excellēt record of the loue that he beareth vs? So on the contrarie part, whē wee see the fire of his wrath so kindled that it not only pursueth our selues, but also spreadeth further and cat-cheth hold of our children also: is it not ynoch enough to make our heares stand vpright vpon our heads? Then let vs lerne to walk so much the more carefully in the feare of God, least wee drawe the sayd horrible punishment vpon our selues and our offspring. And herewithall let vs vnderstand also that our Lord will blisse the offspring of those that haue feared and honored him, that wee may with the better corage giue our selues to his seruice, when we see him so liberal that he thinks it not ynoch enough to make promise to vs, but will haue the same to extend to our children also. Behold (I say) what we haue to marke in this sentence. Now consequently it is sayd, that their bands shall restore their riches. And that agreeth with this that Sophar addeth: namely, bath he devoured? He must spew it vp again, and God will make him too restore the thing that he bath swallowed vp. It is ment heere, that the wicked may well rake much togither in a short tyme and inriches themselves: but they shall never the sooner inioy the goods that they haue gotten. And why? For eyther their children must be brought to pouertie: or else they themselues must spew them vp again. For God will not tarie so long a tyme in making them too yeld vp their account. But when they seeme to be come too the full point of their purpose, God must be fayne to doo a cure vpon them, and make them to cast vp their stomacks, to rid them quite and cleane of the greate store of goods that they had raked togither. VVe see verie many examples hereof: but yet there are verie fewe that think vpon it. I say we see men pilling and scraping on all sides: VVel, God giueth them the brydle so as they haue the meanes and occasions to inriches themselves: they buy both house and lands, they turne the pennye, and they deale with merchandize: and so ye see them as full and as well stufed as may be. But haue they once swallowed vp all, there will come such a storme, that he which was worthe a hundred thousand crounes, shall find himself so distressed, as he would be glad too scape safe with his bodie, like as a poore man that is in the midds of the Sea would giue all the goods he hath too bee al and that he myght saue his life. Euen so (say I) doeth God suffer riches too choke the men that haue raked them too-gether, and too be as it were their hangman: or else he shall be bereft of them and impouerished assoone as there commeth any fodeine storme. Also we see othersome that waste away by peccemeale. Truely men will say, see the euill lucke, behold such a one who was verie rich, he had spedde so well by his owne policie, as he was come too that ye see: and now is such a misfortune befalle him, or such a man hath delt amisse with him, or he hath made a foolish bargaine, or else he ioperded too much. Thus wee looke vpon the meane causes: but wee ought to go to the principall: which thing wee do not: and therein wee bewray how blind we bee, for that we consider not that when such maner of men are inriched by crueltie, extorcion, craft, deceyt, and guile, and haue raked other mennes goods vnto them without pytyng the widowes and fatherlesse: that is the very cause why they bee turned out of all their goods. So then for want of knowing Gods hand, although it shewe it self: we turne all vpside downe. VVherefore let vs lerne too take better heede than wee doo. And when God giueth vs such examples, that is too wit, that such as haue ben verie rich are not only abated, but also delt withall by God as he maketh them too cast their gorge, so as we see them impouerished before our faces: let vs acknowledge that it is God which layeth his hand vpon them. But whereas it is sayd heere, that their owne bandes shall restore their riches: how commeth it to passe that they which haue so swallowed vp all things, doo stoupe so lowe as to restore that which they haue raked togither with their owne hands? His meening is not that they do it of their owne accord. For the wicked would neuer come too that poynct by their good wills, except God graunt them a speciall grace too acknowledge, Alas, I haue doone those men greate wrong whom I haue so polled and beguiled, and therefore I must be-think mee to restore all too them again. If such as haue defrauded their neyghbours can come to this poynct: it is a blis sing of God. But here Sophar speaketh of those whom God curseth. How then shall their hands restore the things that they haue taken? It is for that men knowe not the meanes whereby God maketh them too cast their gorge, and too seeme vtterly destitute of wit and vnderstanding, whereas heretofore they had ben so skilfull in dooing their businesse as they coulde discoure vpon their matters how too lay for them afore hand, and say, such a thing must be done first, and then will I haue that thing done, and this way and this must we go to woork. Then as they haue ben politik too gather too themselues on all sides: so shall ye see them become stark dolts insomuch that they shall seeme to giue backe

backe again all the riches which they had scraped toogither, as though they had cost them nothing : and too bee short a man would say, that they play the little babes : which do and vndo their things . True it is that such manner of men ceasse not too be as couetouse as euer they were, and to haue their furnace still burning in them, so as they could find in their harts to haue deuoured a hundred worlds . But yet they be so blinded in them selues, as they passe not too lash out that which they hild so streytly before. And wherof commeth that, but bycause 10 God disfurnisheth them of all wit and reason, too impouerish them after that sort ? Thus ye see what we haue to marke in the first part of this sentencie . But now, although the wicked doo swallowe vp things in that manner, deuowring one and fleecing another, and seeming to them selues neuer to haue ynough, though their goods increase still more and more : yet let not vs ceasse to behold that thing by fayth, which wee see not as yet with our eyes . Looke mee vpon a wicked man that inricheth himself, he scrapeth vnto him on all sides . VVell, what 20 shall I think of him ? wee must haue an eye too that which is sayd heere . True it is that wee shall not foorthwith perceyue how our Lord doeth the cure that I speake of, in making them to restore the things that they haue so swallowed vp and deuowred . But let vs behold that thing in his word which wee conceyue not of our selues, nor see not evidently : and it will make vs that we shall not be tempted, to doo euill . For what maketh vs so couetouse too take away other mennes goods? It is bycause we beare our selues in had that those 30 things shall continue with vs for euer . But on the contrarie side, see how God threateneth vs, too the intent it should serue for a bryde too restreyne vs, that wee myght not be tempted too stretch out our haudes to other mennes goods or to inrich our selues by the losse of our neyghbours . Now immediatly it is sayd that if euil bee sweete in his mouth, be will hold it there . See here the trim and fit similitude that Zophar vseth . For it expresseth at what poynct the despizers of God be : that is too wit, that looke where they take any pleasure , and 40 looke where they finde any sweetnesse, there they hold them selues and feede their humor: as for example, when a couetouse man can gather any goodes, that is sugre and honnye to him . Surely it is as if a man were hunger staruen , for although a peice of meate were nother tastable nor sauorie, yet will he chop it vp . And it 50 commeth to passe (as Salomon sayeth in his proverbes) that he which is throughly a hunred thinks the meate that he eateth too bee sweete, although it bee bitter in deede . The wicked then are in the same case : that is to say, in all their misdoings they find some sweetnesse . And how commes that too passe ? Because the diuell sauceth them . Looke vpon a whoremaster : if he bee once chafed with his owne lust, the diuell blindest him, and makes him find his sin so sweete, that all his delight is in it . If a man be giuen to dronkennesse, or to gluttonie, he serues them of the same sauce . Thus ye see how the wicked and the despizers of God, doo fynd sweetnesse in all their misdoings . For they play as 60 these liquerouse folk doo, who licke their lippes and hold it as if it were sugre , yea and sometymes keepe it vp to the roof of their mouth, to hold the sweetnesse of it the longer, and they be loth to swallowe it downe too soone . VV'e shall see some of these liquerouse sort that (as another boodye sayeth) could find in their harts too haue cranes necks, to the intent that the sauour of the meate might tarie the longer with them ? And if they meeete with a cup of good wine, they think they haue neuer emptied the glasse ynough : but they would faine haue the sweetnesse of it to tarrie longer, and that there were a spring in it to runne continually . So then Zophar sayeth that the wicked doo fynd sauour in iniquite, like these liquerouse folk , who when they haue a delicate morsell in their mouthe, doo hold it vpon their young, rub it too their palate, and licke their lippes and are as well at ease as can be . Lo in what point the wicked are : but in the end they find a bitternesse hidden vnderit . And whereof commeth that ? when a man will giue one poyson, he must season it with honnye and sugre , that the bitternesse of it be not felt at the first taste . But as soone as the poyson is swallowed downe, it woorketh verie sharply, and the bitternesse of it becommeth much feicer and deadlier, than if he had felt it at the first receiuing of it when the morsell was yet in his mouthe . So also when the wicked haue swallowed downe their sayd sweetnesse, Zophar sayeth that it shall bee turned in them to the gall of an Adder . Now must we indeuer too beare this in mynd . And surely although that by the declaracion of this similitude, every man sees it too bee a meetly common doctrine, and such a one as may bee vnderstoode euен of the rudeſt and vnlerneddeſt ſort : yet notwithstanding our cold praſtyzing of it doeth alwayes ſhewe that wee haue not taken heede ynough of it . Neuertheleſſe there is ſuch a grace in this similitude, as a ma may wel ſee that the holy Ghost did ſet it downe to the end too ſtirre vs the more to remember what is conteyned in it.

So then when we perceyue that the diuell commeth to tempt vs, and layes his bayts for vs : let vs beware we bee not allured by him for vyces will at the first fyght haue alwayes ſome sweetnesse in them ſo as we ſhall be deceyued by them . But they bee full of hooks . The hungry fishes doo no ſooner bite the bayte, but immediatly they bee ſtricken and hang fast by the hooke . Euen ſo is it with vs when we ſuffer our selues to be ſeduſed and beguiled by our owne vices . Yea and euen the heathen men haue often uſed this similitude, (according as Plato ſayeth) that looke how manie luſtes and affections there are in men, ſo many baytes and allurements are there, which Satan offereth them too throwe them headlong afterwarde intoo deſtruſion . True it is that at the beginning there will bee ſome likelyhold of sweetnesse, and it will ſeeme too bee the sweeteſt thing in the world . But in the end, that which is conteyned heere muſt needs ſhewe it ſelf: that is to wit that the sweetnesse which the wicked ſhall haue felt in all their miſdoings, ſhall bee turned intoo the gall of an Adder .

And forasmuch as heere is mention made of the despizers of God, that is too wit, that aſſoone as they ſhall haue chawed the poyſon, and swallowed it downe althoſh they feele not the bitternesse at the first, yet muſt it ſhewe it ſelf in the end : let vs pray God that he ſuffer vs not to fynd ſauour in our vices, but that he giue vs the ſpirit of wiſdom, that we may diſcerner aryght, and not be deceyued by the vayne sweetnesse that we feele in our ſinnes at the first taste .

Then let vs not be allured by that, but rather let vs ſeeke true and liuely sweetnesse in his grace, which is coſmunicated vntoo vs by our ſauour Ieſus Christ, too the end he may fill vs with the sweetnesse of that hope of the euerlaſting life wherenvntoo hee calleth vs . Furthermore, let it not greeue vs though we bee kept hungry in this life, and haue not wherewith too fill our ſelues, but rather be pyned at Gods hand with many afſtictions and miſeries, let it not greeue vs I ſay too beare it, aſ-

it, assuring our selues that wee shall bee partakers of the heauenly inheritaunce, where we shall haue full fruition of the inestimable sweetnesse that God hath promised to those that are his, which as yet is hidden from vs.

Nowe let vs fall downe before the face of our good God, with acknowledging of our sinnes, praying him, that he will not suffer vs to yeld our selues too Sathan's deceits: and that although of our owne nature wee bee readye to turne aside vnto the enticements that he offereth vs, yet we may bee so held backe and restrained by his holy spirit, as none of the lustes and affections of our flesh may carry vs away, to tosse and tormoyle vs, as they are wont too do, but that wee may stedfastly withstand them, vntill that by the power of his holie spirite wee haue gotten full victory, and bee come too the marke which our good God hath set afore vs, that is, that being conformed too his glory, and vntited to his sonne in his heauenly kingdome, wee may haue wherefore too glorifie and magnifie him, and too reioyce fully in him. That it may please him too graunt this grace not only too vs, but also too all people and nations of the earth, &c.

The lxxv. Sermon, which is the third vpon the xx. Chapter.

This Sermon goeth on still with the exposition of the xv. verse and then with the text following.

16. He shall sucke the venim of the Adder, and the young of the Viper shall flee him.
17. He shall not see the riuers and the stremes that flowe vwith honnye and butter.
18. He shall restore that vvhich he hath gotten , it shal not tarie vwith him according to the surenes of his change, nother shall he inoy it.
19. He hath gathered togither and he shall bee made poore , he hath spoyled the house and not builded it.
20. He shall not feele any contention in his belly , nother shall hee bee able too keepe his desyre.

Mong the other corruptions that intyce vs to drawe from God, and to give our selues too euill dooing, one is that men are simply persuaded that it is a desirable thing to be riche, without regarding wherein riches cōsist, or that the end of possessing the is to enioy them. The world the is blind, so as it knoweth not what it is too bee riche, nor too what end and purpose men should bee riche. And so we see that the wretched vnbeleuers are wedded to this affection, namely that a man must be riche by what meanes so euer it be . Heerepon they fall too snatching, polling and extorcion, passing not how they come by things so they haue them, and in the meane whyle knowe not that God curseth them, and that when they haue gathered greate abundance of goods so as they may seeme to haue swallowed vp the whole earth, they shall reape no fruition of the goods that they possesse . And why? For God will plucke their goods out of their hands, or else make them so too melt away as they shall feele no profit by them . So much the more doeth it stand vs in hand too marke well the sentence that is conteyned heere . For first it is shewed vs, that men beguyle themselues when they beare themselues in hand that when they haue gathered greate goods they shall inioy them . And yet notwithstanding, that is the thing that all couetous folk doo ground vpon, If I may get lands and possessions (say they) I shall take the reuenewes, so as I shall not neede too goe seeke for corne or wine out of myne owne Cellars, and Garners, but I shall haue too make monie of besides . Again I shall haue diuers other things, so as men shall bee faine to seeke to mee, and I shall haue neede of none of them . I shall be honored, I shall be credited . If any man hang the groyne at mee, I shall haue monye in my pouche to wring him with . Now when men make such account, they may soone come short of their reckening: & (as the commō prouerb sayeth) they reckē without their hoste. For God may well suffer such mē to gather, and to gaine, and to heape vp greate store : but when they bee fully fraughted and charged, then must they lay vp their stomachs again. Thus ye see what is ment in the first place by saying, He bath devoured [greate] goodes, but he must spew them vp again. And why? For God will plucke them out of his belly. How comes it to passe that the vnbeleuers beare them selues in hand, that the goods which they haue gotten shall continue alwayes with them, and that they shall neuer be bereft of them? It is bycause they perceiue not that there is a God in heauen which must call them to accound as it is shewed vs here in this streyne. For it is rightly sayd that couetous folk doo make iust reckening that they be sure of all the goods that they possesse . But the holie Goste bringeth vs backe to this judgement of God. VVhen a man (sayeth he) shall haue swallowed vp all the goods that he is owner of, so as he hath it, not only in his cofers, or in his garners, or in his cellars, but also in his belly: is not God able to plucke them out again? So then let vs assure our selues it is to no purpose to haue devoured them. In our getting of goods, it behoueth vs aboue all things to be able to protest truly, that we hold all of God, that is to say, that we haue gottē the by meanes lawfull & allowed of God, so as he hath put them into our hāds. Lo here the principall point that we must ame at: Imene euē then when the case standeth vpō gathering of the goods of this world. The let vs no more be so foolish as to imagin that all our happiness cōsisteth in being riche. But rather let vs bethink our selues that the true richnesse is not the hauing of greate abundāce of worldly goods, gottē by right or wrong: but the blisſing of God, so as a mā be contented with that he hath: & therwithall also be able to injoy & vse the goods that are in his hāds. And this is a speciaall gift of God . Furthermore let vs bee afayde of this threate that God will make vs to spew vp that which we haue devoured, notwithstanding that the stomacke & bellie haue cōsumed it. Let vs lerne (I say) to take that which God giueth vs by his grace, and to be contented with it, so as we play not the cormorāts and drunkards, who cram in so much that they are faine to lay it vp again byandby after: but rather as the sober and aduysed man that taketh his repaste measurably, so let euery of vs take heede too increase increasen himself by such meanes as God giueth him, that he be not caried away with so excessiue covetousnes as to deceyue on the one side, to deuour on the other, to rake to him by deceyte one way, and to pill and poll another way. In her ore (as I sayd) let vs content our selues to receyue whatsoeuer God shall giue vs. But here is added yet a greater cursednesse : that is to wit, that such as like to iriche themselues by suttleries, or by crueltie, or by any other vnlawfull meane, doo sucke the poysone of the Adder, and the Vipers young shall kill them. This is to according to that which was afore, that is to wit, that the wicked mennes meate shall bee turned intoo the gall of Adders within their bowels, notwithstanding that they find it somewhat swete in their mouth, yea & likke their lippes at it, and delight themselues in it with rolling it about with their young. We see that such as never think theselues too haue ynough, are wel at ease & verie merrie when they may deceiue any man. And again if they haue any practize in hand, o (say they) that will fall out well for our purpose : so as if they once take in hand too get any thing, they will never be at rest till they haue brought it about. Thus is there sweetnesse in their tong, but God turneth it all to bitternes. Wherefore let vs marke well, that when it is sayd heere, that the wicked shall sucke the poysone of Adders, & that the viper shal kill the: it is to shewe vs that God can wel chaunge all the sweetnesse wherwith the wicked do begui'e themselues. For if they intrap folk, they think themselues the happiest men in the world. Too bee short, it is their paradise if they can intrap men on all sides. But what? we must go to the end of them. For it is sayd that God will chaunge all, and turne that thing into Adders poysone, which was thought to be as sweete as honnye and suger. Then let vs simply followe the petition wherein our Lord Iesus Christ hath taught vs too aske our dayly bread of God. For vnder that saying is comprehended that when God shall haue giuen vs what to eate and drink, he must also voutsafe to turne the same intoo good nourishment. For it is not ynough for vs to haue wherepon to feede : but our Lord must also be fayne too blisse it throughly, and to make it auayle to our nourishment. But (as I have shal see again anon) hee that crammeth and glutteh himself with much eating, is so farre of from being suffized: that all of it shall be turned intoo his bane. True it is that he may well be filled: but that shall be after the maner of a wretched bodie that hath the dropsie. For were a dropsiman purged of that humor that is in his bodie, he shuld bee better at ease with one halfe cup of wyne, and one bit of bread would doo him more good, than all the meate in the world. But sorasmuchas hee is full of naughtie humors within: he might drinke vp the Sea and the fisshes to (as men say) and yet be never the better. Euen so is it with them that haue deuoured all things cruelly like wyld beastes. God must be fayne to turne it all to their bane. And so folowing the admonition of Moyses, let vs leyne to pray God too bee our fosterfather. For even therfore did God feede his people in the wildernes by the space of fortie yeeres without bread or other vitayles, by giuing them Manna from heauen. God (sayeth he) hath maynteyned thee after that sort, too the intent that thou shouldest knowe for the tyme too come, that man liueth not by his owne labour, so as thou myghtest say, it is by the diligence of myne owne hands that I haue gotten these things: no: but like as thou seest that God fed thy fathers in the wildernes with Manna from heauen: so when he giueth thee bread, receyue it thou as of his owne hand. Now let vs go couet riches and rake them to our selues: [But therewithall] let vs marke what is sayd heere, that is to wit, that they shall bee so farre off from turning to our welfare, that God conuerteth them into adders poysone, and maketh them like the biting of a scorpion. Yea and we myght knowe this by experience although it were not written. Let vs open our eyes, and we shall perceyue that God executeth his iudgements in the world, after the same maner that is specified heere. But what? we be blyd: I say not that wee be vtterly ignorant, but that we shet our eyes because we would not see them. True it is that sometyme they cannot be discerned: for even the good men are troubled with much feare. But yet for all that, God setteth markes vpon his iudgements, to the end we myght receyue some instruction by them. Therfore it is long of vs and of our wilfulness [that they be not seene] because we turne away our sight from that which God sheweth vs. Then let vs leyne to bee somewhat wizer, and wheras it is told vs heere, that we shall come so farre short of being nurished by the goods that wee get by rauening, that the same shall become our bane, and they shall sooner burst vs than satisfie vs: let vs leyne to content our selues with the little that God shall giue vs, so the same may doo vs good. Now it is sayd immediatly, that the wicked shall not see the riuers nor the streames that flowe with butter and bonnie. Heere we be done to vnderstand, that the wicked shall be deprived of the blissing that God hath promised specially to the faythfull, which is to giue the such abundance, as if the riuers flowed with wine, honnye and butter. True it is that we see not this: but yet for all that, when we be sussteyned by Gods grace, and knowe him, and rest vpon his goodnessse and fatherly loue, assuring our selues that he careth for vs too nurish vs as his children: if the riuers flowed full of honnye and butter, we should not be so well contented as we be. For al things in this world may perish and fade away, sauing this fountayne (that is too wit the hand of God) which never drieth. So then it is not without cause sayd heere precyfely, that such as feele not the sayd nourishment of God, but play the wyld beastes, way well burst themselues, and when they haue all the pitts and all the welsprings in the world, yea and the grete riuers to: yet must they be a-thirst in the middes of thiem, and al their abendance shal not be able to suffize them. And what is the cause? It is for that they be destitute of Gods blissing. For (as I sayd) that is it wherin consisteth all the rest and contention of men: and that is the meane to fill them and suffise them, that is to say, to make them say ho, that they may prayse God and always go on forward in their race. Then if we haue not this blissing of God, all the goods in the world cannot suffize vs. These sayings are common ynough as it should seeme: and yet who is fully persuaded that they be true? For if it were so, surely we should see equite and vrightnesse reigne among men, and there should not neede so many lawes, nor so manye iusticers to represse the extortions that are committed. Yea there should not neede so much teaching and exhorting. For every man would bee his owne schoolmaister and teacher, and every man would carie iustice with him inclosed in his hart, so as it should not be needfull to come to the judge, there should neede no Scrivans, aduocats, nor processses. For we would prevent the mischeef, and assure our selues that God who hath put the goods of the world into our hands, could sussteyne vs as he thought good and as he hath promised vs, although we had not one grayne of corne, no nor one drop of water. And in good sooth we be convinced hereof by experience. For by craveng our ordinarie foode at his hand, we be fed like little babes by his goodnessse. If we

If we haue not much, yet let vs content our selues. For hee sheweth vs the grace too nurrishe vs, as if Manna fell vpon vs from heauen : If we haue much: he will haue vs to put it to the right vse: which is, that we must not be as cormorants to keepe euyer of vs to himselfe that which we haue receiuied, but must communicate it to suche as haue want and neede of it. So then, seeing that our Lord auoucheth himselfe to bee the fosterfather of those that are his: let vs not feare that wee shall be left destitute of that which he knoweth to be needefull for vs, but let vs hold ourselues contented with so faire a promise. Certainly if wee had that discretion in vs, euyer one of vs would be refrayned, and there should neede no threathnings nor lawes to say, Absteyne ye from euildoing, hurt not your neighbours, do no man wrong, do no more to others than ye would haue done to your selues: for euyer man would bee brideled of himselfe, and be induced to vprightnesse, and we would not go to violence as we do. But now it is seene, that mēs lusts are so outrageous, as they cannot by any meanes be tamed, no cords nor cheines are able to tie them. Then (I say) there shoulde neede no such constreints, but our handes would of our owne accord be as it were tied vp from doing euill, yea and we would be desirous to serue euyer mans turne and to do them good. For these causes we oughte to minde this lesson well. For it will be ynoch enough to draw vs backe from all vanitie and loocenesse, from all excessiue lusts, and from all the wrongs and extortions that we haue bin wont to do for the enriching of ourselues. Moreover, it will stire vs vp to regard God, by resting vpon his onely blisshing, and therewithall to vse well the goodes that he hath put vs in trust with, knowing that wee bee but stewards, and that his giuing of them to vs is vpon condicione, that wee should yeld him a good and faithfull account of them, by shewing that none of vs hath deououred them alone by himselfe, but made our neighbours partakers of them, according to the abilitie that we haue receiuied.

Thus ye see in effecte what is conteyned heere. Nowe it is saide, That the wicked shall restore that whiche they haue gotten, and that it shall not abide with them, no verely according to the measure of their change, neither shall they inioy them. That whiche we haue herd heeretofore, is expressed heere more at full. How is it then that the wicked are neuer satisfied, althogh they haue gathered so much goodes, as they seeme redy to burst? VVherfore do they awaies want? It is bycause our Lord prospereth not the things that they haue in their hands. For like as a man might cast much goodes into a gulfe and yet they shuld not be seene: so an insatiable man may snatch and catch on all sides, and yet not cease to be hūgrie still. And this commeth of two causes. For as it is a singular grace of God when we can content our selues with a little, so as we call vpon his name, and waite to be fed at his hande, according as we haue found our selues to haue bin nurrishe by him heeretofore: so on the contrarie part when he suffereth the couetousnesse of the vnbeleeuers to bee kindled, so as they be awaies gathering, and euermore coueting and neuer contented: The same is a punishment to them. Then let vs marke well, that the first cause why the wicked canot inioy the great goodes that they haue gathered, is bycause our Lord sets their lusts on fire, and suffereth them to haue a racking within them that neuer ceaseth too torment them: and the devill still kindleth the fire by Gods iust permission, in the hartes of them that regard not him. Thus muche concerning the firste point. The second cause is, that like as God increaceth one graine of corne to the nurrisheing of those that are his, and maketh it to multiplie to a hundred, so as a little shall suffise them and make them fat: So likewise on the contrarie part he curseth and withereth all that euer the wicked can cram in. They shall eate double: that is too say, they shall gather ynoch and too much: howbeit, God will consume it euery whit, (as it is said to the Prophet) and all shall go too naughte, so as a great heape of goodes shall vanish away in a minute of an houre. Ye see then that God rooteth vp that whiche men made | great account of: and that is the cause why the wicked cannot enjoy that which they possesse. True it is that they will be proude ynoch, according also as our Lord Iesus Christ sheweth in the parable of the rich man that had enlarged his barnes. My soule (saith he) be merrie: for now hast thou well wherewith to feede thee: beholde thou hast suche abundance as thou canst neuer wante. Those therefore that are so wedded to worldly goodes, and haue gotten much by their wicked dealings, haue no great cause too boāt of their riches: for not withoute cause is it said vnto them, If riches flow vnto you, set not Psal.62.c.11. your harts vpon them. For thereby the prophet meenneth, that very hardly shall men bee riche, but that they shall find themselues wrapped in worldly vanities. And that also is the cause why Sainte Paule exhorteth Timotheus, to warne the rich men of this world, that they bee not exalted with pride. VVhereby he doth vs to wit, that the rich men make an ydoll of their goodes, so as they thinke themselues to be aboue the state of men, and vtterly forget themselues. So then, the wicked may well rejoice of their gettings, but what manner of reioyning is that? A cursed one, euen suche a one as God must in the end turne to gnashing of teeth and anguish. Therefore let vs marke that we must not stand vpon a day or a yeere when we see the wicked triumph and take pleasure in their state, and beare themselues in hande that there is no felicitie but theirs. But let vs looke to the end, and we shall find that the thing which is conteyned heere shall be accomplished: that is to say, that their ioy is not euerlasting, and that (howsoever the world goe with them) the wicked are alwayes in torment and unquietnesse. And surely if wee could see what is in theyr harts, it would appeare that euen in the middes of their ioyes they be alwayes full of care and perplexitie, and afraid least the earth should faile them. Looke vpon a man that hath gathered great goodes, surely no man shal be able to beare his pride, but hee could find in his harte to set his foote vpon all mens throtes, and vnder coloure of his credite he trāples one vnder his feete, oppresleth another, and makes the third to honoure him as God, and when hee is at home in his owne house hee stands tooting vpon himselfe as a Peacocke at his owne tayle. All this is seene I say. But yet hath hee secret prickings within, and God will not abide that such as glory after that manner in their goodes, shoulde haue any certayne rest: but putteth a woorme into them whiche gnaweth them in such wise, asthey be in continuall anguish and perplexitie howsoever the world go with them. And it is said expressly heere, That the wicked shall make restitution according to the lengthening of his chaunge. This saying may at the first blush seeme somewhat darke: but it conteyneth a good lesson. For in effect it sheweth vs, that the wicked must bee faine too restore the things which they haue gotten with great laboure. This is for the first point, as if he shoulde saye, men are very blynde and wittlesse when they take so greate peynes too get goodes: for they must yeld them vp agayne though they haue neuer so muche. And that is a very harde nippes (for wee knowe that the couetous sort are wedded too | their their goodes:) it is more than if a man shoulde breake their bones and plucke out the marras of them. For the goodes that they possesse are as deere too them as theyr owne liues. Very farre are they led away, which consider not what goodes were created for mens vse, and that they be but as an income to the present life. And yet notwithstanding we see that the wicked torment them selues for them: and if they haue neuer so little harme or losse, it goeth too the harte of them as if a man had cut theyr throte a hundred times. But yet neuerthelesse they must be faine to restore them, not with their good will, but because God plucketh them from them, as hath bin saide heeretofore: yea euen according too the prolonging of the chaunges and rechaunges that they haue made, so will God haue his turne too change also. And how is that: VVhen a man is so gripple in gathering of goodes, and God giueth him head, what wil he do? He will so transpose thinges, as it may seeme hee will make a newe world. Hee impouerisheth him that was rich, he abateth him that had much, and he pulleth him downe that was aloft.

Lo howe the couetouse (as muche as in them lieth) do make a new world. And God(as I said)giues them leauue for a time to plow vp all things, to mens seeming. Yea but it is with venim and poysone. They stuppe them selues full: but that is but too vomit it vp agayne anone after, yea and to feele horrible bitternes by that which they haue swalowed downe. But haue they so changed all things: that is to say, haue they made such turnings as that they haue landes and possessions where they had none before: and their cofers filled, whereas they had not three shillings in their purse before? Are they in estimation and credite, whereas they were despized afore? Haue they then changed the whole world? God also hath his turne. If a mortall man presume too displace things, if he practice, if he determine, as who would say I will do this and that: shal not God chaunge al at length? VVill hee sit idle in heauen? Thinke we that any of all these chaunges are made heere withoute his permission?

And when he suffereth the to be done, thinke we that he hath resigned his office and meddles no more with the governement of the world, because hee winketh at things for a time? No no. But his will is to blind the wicked after that sort, and hee suffereth them too compasse their enterprises, to the intent to cast them downe, and that with the deadlier fall. And on the other side he exerciseth the faith and pacience of the faulfull. For they might be troubled at the sight of such changes. But they haue the discretion to wait quietly for the ende, and not to overshoote them selues too hastely, whereby God trieth their faith, and by that meanes they be prouoked to returne to God with greater earnestnesse. And so(as I said)we see that heere is conteyned a good lesson, when mention is made of the pride of the wicked sort, in making chaunges, so as it seemeth that they woulde spite God, and displace all the bounds that God hath set. For like as he will haue realmes and dominions to be bounded: so also will he haue bounds settled among priuate persons, that every one may feasably possesse his owne. 60 But what do these raueners, these Gules, these wilde beastes? It should seeme(as I saide) that they are loth too leauue eyther bounds or borders or any thing else, and that they would faine make a newe world. Haue they changed a pace? Hath God suffered them to do it? Hee must afterward chaunge his copie, and set things againe in their former state. Thus much concerning that sentence.

Anon after it is saide, that it is because the wicked haue impouerished the good, and spoyle d the houses whiche they builded not. Heere we see that it behoueth vs to consider Gods iustice in all the punishments that he sendeth in this world. Truely it were alredy a good instruction, if wee knewe no more but that the chaunges of this world are not casuall as men terme them: that is to say, that if there happen any alteration, the same proceedeth of the hand of God. But that is not all. For though wee simply graunt God such a power as to say, he ruleth the world, he doth all things, and nothing is done which hee guideth not by his determination and will: yet if we go no further, it is no glorifying of God as we ought to do. For like as God will be knowne to be almighty, so will he also be knowne to be righteouse. True it is(as hathe bin declared heeretofore) that wee shall not alwayes perceiue the saide righteousnesse by the thinges that are seene: but yet must we haue these two thinges: that is to witte, firste wee must knowe that thinges are not turned heere by fortune and aduenture. And why? For God disposeth al things, it is God that gouerneth and holdeth the bridle. Marke that for one point. And when we knowe this almightynesse of God, wherevnto all the world is subiect: VVe must come secondly to his righteousnesse: that is to say, we must be fully resolued and perswaded, that Gods turning of things in this worlde is not as though hee dalied and played with vs as with a tennisball. For the wicked sort say that God maketh a sport of men in taking pleasure eyther to exalt men or to cast them downe. But as for vs, let vs assure ourselues that Gods almightynesse is not a tirannicall or inordinate power, but is ioyned in vnseparabell band with hys righteousnesse, so as he doth all thinges after an vpright manner.

True it is (as I haue saide) that wee shall not always perceiue this righteousnesse of God, but that sometimes he hideth it, and wee conceive not the reason why hee doth things. Howbeit that is no let but that there should be very good reason [in his doing.] That is the thing

49 wherein Iobs friends were deceiuied: and therin we must not resemble them. They condemned Iob for a wicked man. And why? For they imagined of him after the common manner. But Gods iudgements must not be esteemed all after one rate. VVhy so? As I said afore, sometimes God doth things that are to vs incomprehensible. VVhat shall we do in that case? Let vs conclude neuerthelesse that God is righteouse. Yea but let vs confess therewithall, that his iudgements are a bottomlesse pitte that cannot be sounded. For God is two wayes commended in the holy Scripture for his righteousnesse. Sometime when God punisheth mens iniquities in the sight of the world, to the ende he mighte bee feared and honored as it is saide in the Prophet Esay, that if God keepe his court and shew himselfe iudge of the world, then the inhabitants of the earth will learne to walke vprightly: and whereas every man tooke leauue afore to do euill: we will thinke, Alas alas, there is a iudge whome we ought to feare.

Thus yee see howe Gods righteousnesse is sometimes shewed openly. But sometimes also God woorketh after a fashion that is straunge too vs, so as when we haue inquired of a thing, why it is come so to passe, and how it is to be taken: we must bee fayne too come short[ of our purpose. But yet neuerthesse it beloueth vs to acknowledge that God is righteouse, and to honoure his secrete iudgements which ate in him as in a bottomlesse pit. Then howsoever the worlde goe, (as I saide) God must bee hilde alwayes for rightcoule. But

But heere he speaketh of Gods righteousnesse which is apparent vnto vs, and which we may behold with oure eyes. For it is said that bycause the wicked haue beggered the good men, they them selues must bee paid with the like measure. Bycause they haue raked and spoyled mens houses, God must drieue them out of them, and turne them quite out of dores, when they make theyr reckoning to dwell at their ease. But if wee haue good discretion, no change at all can come amisse, but wee may profite ourselues by all sorts of them. If God do at any time impouerish such as haue liued wel: let vs assure ourselues, that if that be done too the greene tree, what shall become of the seare tree? And so let vs tremble vnder the hand of God, praying him to grant vs the grace to injoy the goodes that he hath put into our handes, as his intent is: or if it please him to bereue vs of them: let vs pray him to giue vs strength too beare paciently the pouertie that he shall send vnto vs. Thus ye see what we haue to marke. And on the other side, when we see that our Lord compelleth the cormorants too vomit all that whiche they had swallowed downe, making them too yelde an account, constreyning them too restore that which they had snatched away, drieving them out of the houses which they had builded by violence and deceits, and bereueing them of the goodes that they had gathered by lewde fetches: let vs acknowledge that God do: h then hold his assyses, to shew vs that although hee nowe and then suffer the wicked to grow rich, it is not too the intent the same should continue with them for euer, but that the things which they haue swooped vp shuld turne to their bane, whereas the goodes of the faithfull should turne to their welfare, and become as good to them as riuers flowing with butter and honie. I say let vs acknowledge it, to the end we may behold Gods iudgements and humble ourselues vnder them. Also let vs learne not to enuie the wicked, when they seeme to liue at rest and ease in their abundance with credite and honoure. For God will turne it all too their miserie, and put them to open reproch and shame before all men. Thus ye see how it becommeth vs to marke the chastizings and punishments that God sendeth vpon the worlde, that wee may appie them to our instruction, as Saint Paule counseleth vs. My brethren (saith hee) let no man beguile you with vaine words. Truly a man may heare what wicked words are cast foorth, and howe Gods iudgements are scoff at, but be no: you deceipted by them. For (saythe Paule) the wrath of God commeth vpon the vnbelieuer for such things. As if hee should say, Tarrie not till God smite vpon your heads: but when he punisheth the wicked before your eyes, know you that he cannot away with vngodlinesse, but must be faine to shew himselfe a judge when you abuse his pacience too long. Therefore profite ourselues by such chastizementes, and learne to know that he intendeth to make you wise by other mes harnes.

*L*oe heere what wee had to marke in this sentence. Afterward infeweth this saying, of taking away the houses that they builded not. True it is that God promised his people that they should dwell in houses which they had not builded: but that was a speciall promise of God when he did set his people in the land of Canaan. Againe wee know howe the holy scripture saith generally, that the man is happie which eateth the laboure of his owne hands, and is nourished therewith. Therefore if we intend to haue our goodes to do vs good, let vs learne to haue them in such case as we may saye, that God hath giuen vs them. For God meddleth not with crafts and extortions. I confess indeede that the wicked are not inriched without his will: but yet it is not therefore too be said, that hee alloweth of their doings. Nother is it ment that the wicked acknowledge God to say, I thanke God, I thinke my selfe beholding to him for that which he hath giuen me. No: for they hold them as it were of the diuell, and not of Gods blissing. Therefore let vs on our side learne (as I said afore) too make account of thys promise, that we be happie when we eate the laboure of our hands, that is to say, when we eate not any thing but such as we haue gotten by good and lawfull meanes al lowed of God. Furthermore let vs assure our selues that it is to no purpose to builde in this world: For all thyngs heere are fleeting and transitorie. Let vs not be like these fooles that make their nest in this world, as who woulde say, they looked neuer to go out of it. Therefore let vs not be tied to it. For which is our cheefe house? It is our bodie. Though a man haue great palaces and as sumptuous houses as any be in the world: it is certaine that he cannot continuall in them for euer, hee cannot keepe himselfe in prison there. So then the peculiarest lodging that every man hath, is his owne body: and yet wee see what britlenesse is in it. VVhat firmenesse hath it? It is nothing but corruption and rottennesse. VVhat is to bee done then? Let vs hie vs to the heauenly building, that is to saye, let vs desyre to be so repaired as Gods spirite may dwell in vs, and wee be made his temples, and that whatsoeuer is now corruptible and transitorie in vs, may be renewed, so as we may be set in the same state that is promised vs. Ye see then that we must not in this world seeke to drawe other mens goodes to vs, to take pleasure in that whiche is none of ours: but liue contented with whatsoeuer God giueth vs, and therewithall pray God so to build vs, as we may be his temples, to the ende hee may dwell in vs by his holy spirite, and not suffer Satan to carrie vs away, or to enter into vs, to nourish our vices and sinnes in vs: for by that meanes he would make our bodies foule stinking stables. But we know that God cannot dwell in any filthy place. Therefore if wee will haue him to settle in vs, we must first pray him to clenze vs from all vncleanness, to the end hee may build vs by his grace to be true Temples of his holy spirite. Lo how we may be well buildest. But we must understand that al proccedeth of his meere grace, according as the scripture auoucheth it to be his charge to build vp Sion. The like as generally our Lorde Iesus Christ buildest all the whole body of his Church: so also let vs assure ourselues that he must be fayne to build each one of vs. And that is the thing that we must arme at, VVe must not be wedded to the fligntful and corruptible things of this world: but we must hie vs to the everlasting things, and laboure for them more and more till wee bee come fullie too them.

Now let vs fall downe before the face of oure good God with acknowledgement of our faults, praying him to make vs so to feele them, as we may learne to mislike them more and more, and to take suche hartie remorse, that we overcome all temptations, and hie vs alwayes to the heauenly glory where our true heritage is, and that we may be so giuen vnto it, as we may seeke nothing but to please our God and to frame our selues wholly to his will, so as we may shewe by our deedes that his calling of vs vnto him is not in vaine, but that we be willing to glorify him in all our whole life, acknowledging the benefytes which hee giueth vs of his meere grace, too the end wee should yeld him praise and do him his due honours. That it may please him to graunte this grace, not onely too vs, but also to all people and nations of the earth. &c.

20. He shall feele no suffizance in his bellie, nother shall he keepe his desire.
21. There is none of his meatel left: Therefore shall not his goodes be multiplied.
22. VVhen his abundance is at the full, he shall be in anguish, all the hands of labouring men shall come vnto him.
23. VVhen he hath vvhierewvith to fill his bellic, God shall sende him the dread of his vvrath, and make it to raine vpon his meate.
24. VVhen he fleeth from the yron vveapons, a bovve of steele shall meete vvith him.
25. The syword shall bee dravven out and shall cut him: it shall passe through his gall, fearefulness shall be vpon him.

Ophar going forwarde with the matter that he delt with yesterday, addeth heere, that the wicked man never hathe any contention nor rest, nor shall fave any thing the better by aught that he leaueth behinde him, nother shall his goodes thriue with hi. heire or successioure. This sentence hath bin declared alredy. Howbeit, for the larger confirmation thereof it is repeated once againe, that we may beare it the better in mind, and also be the better perswaded of it. For if we see a man haue abundance of goodes, we are of opinion that he wanteth nothing, and that hee hathe contention and all felicitie: so as he needeth to do nothing else but take his pleasure, seeing that ali thinges answer his harts desire after that manner. Marke I pray you how we perceiue not the wretchednesse that is hid in them whome God curseth, but give iudgemente according to that whiche we see with our eyes. But Gods judgement is inclozed in their bones, and in their mares. And therefore ye see it is for our behoofe to heare this sentece often, that we may be the surer of it, and haue the remeberance of it printed in our hart. On the other side, whē we looke vpō a rich man, we thinke that heauen & earth shoulde mingle themselues togither to confounde him. And therefore God declareth that although man haue never so great welth yet shall the same perish euery whit, and vanish away in such wise, as there shall be nothing for his heire or successor to hope for. VVherefore let vs marke well these two pointes, that wee may learne to set more store by Gods blisssing, than by all the welth in the world: and not be tempted to couet cursed riches, which cannot come to a good end, bycause God will scatter them abrode. Lo whervnto this lesson ought to serue vs. So then let vs vnderstand first that our chiefe marke must not bee to be well prouided of great abundance of worldly goodes: but that God must be so singularly graciosa vnto vs as wee may feele his fauoure, that we may bee sure it is his will too be our father, and that we take our nourishment at his hand. This is it that will give vs both contention and rest. But we see what the couetousnesse of men is, how their desire can never be quenched. Agayne what are these worldly goodes? Sure it is that we shall be bleared sometimes euen with blasts: but yet doth God open the eyes of such as are so giue to gathering of riches, that they perceiue how they are nothing and that they passe away swiftly as a smoke. So then it is impossible that a man shuld be cōtent and satisfied, whē he looketh no further but vpō the goodes that he hath in his hids. The only meane to haue rest, & to see when we haue ynough, is that God shew himselfe our father, and that we beleue that he hath his hande continually stretched out to giue vs al that euer we haue nedde of. VVhen we haue this regard with vs, we shall haue good rest: and although wee had but one bit of bread (as ye would say) yet notwithstanding forasmuch as we be sure that God is rich ynough to maintaine vs, wee will waite vpon him for that which he promiseth. For he saith that the Lions and wilde beastes (notwithstanding that they be giuen to rauening, and seeme as though they would swallow vp all things) cease not too suffer hunger and scarsitie, whereas God nutritsheth those that are his in the time of derth. True it is that: they shall not bee alwayes exempted from distresse: but yet will God succoure them when they be come too extremitie.

This (say I) is the thing wherin the faithfull reioyce. And that is the benefyte that is spoken of heere. For like as the wicked men haue no true discerning of a benefyte: so the childre of God esteeme a morsell of bread to be a declaration that God is their father. And theraby they be also confirmed, that as he hath susleynd the to day, so wil he do his duetie to morrow likewise, and that he hath always wherewith to do it, and that his grace and goodnessse are never abated. This is the cause why it is said, that the goodnessse of God is laid vp in store for the that feare him. True it is that our thinking vpon our bodily nourishment is not the principall point wherby God will haue vs to feel what loue and fauoure he beareth vs: but that we must mount higher: namely that although wee were the veriest wretches in the whole worlde, yet hath God prepared riches for vs aloft in heauen wherevnto wee must hie vs, and therupon wholly set oure minds. Neuerthelesse looke whatsoeuer our good God doth tovs here bylow; it is as it were a foretast that he giueth vs of his souereine goodnessse. But now let vs come backe againe too the texte that wee alledged out of the Psalme: Lord how great is the abundance of thy goodnessse, which thou hast laid vp in store for them that feare thee. VVherfore doth the Prophet speake so? Bycause that although God do sheade out his bountifullnesse every where, (according as it is said that his mercie is vpon all his creatures, yea euen vnto the brute beasts) yet the wicked and vngodly (notwithstanding that they cram themselues with Gods benefits till they burst) perceiue not the goodnessse that is in him, but are vtterly voide of the knowledge thereof. And why? For God hath laid it vp in store for those that feare him. Thus muche concerning the firste poynte that is shewed vs heere, namely that we must not deeme men happie for the greate abundance of the goodes that they possesse: but according too their contention. For it is vnpossible that suche as know not Gods grace, ne haue any care of it, shoulde haue contention, bycause they knowe not what a benefyte they haue, whiche is all one as if they had it not. Afterwarde it is sayde, that there shall bee no remaynder of their meate. This is a straunge thing, that when a man shall haue heaped vp great goodes, and shal be likely too leaue his children as little kings, God will undermine all, and there shall bee no remaynder lefte.

Surely

Surely this falleth not out continually, nother (as I haue said) will God haue one vngangeable rate kept always in the execution of his iudgements in this world: (For what a thing were that? Then should nothing be referued till the latter day.) But yet for all that, we shall perceyue some token; of them, in that God consumeth some mans goodes after such a sorte, as it shall be apparant to mens eyes, and yet not knowe where they be become, nor by what meanes he hath bin impouerished. VVhen we see such things, ought we not to thinke that God executeth his office, and giueth vs occasion to thinke vpō him and to acknowledge him to be our iudge, to the intent wee be not inticed to inordinate lusts as we are wont to be, nor surmisse that oure happinesse consisteth in raking much goodes to ourselues, nor imagin that riches are eueralasting, but rather come alwayes backe to this poynct of seeking our ordinarie foode at his hande both to day and to morrow and all our life long? Thus ye see howe we ought to practise this lesson. And when Sophar hath spoken after that manner, he addeth, that when the wicked man is in his chiefe welth, he shall not cease to be in anguish, and that the handes of all labourers shall come vnto him, or else that the hands of all men that are able to do any great aēte shall come vpon him. And so the sense may be dubble. The word that is placed there, betokeneth a man that is forward in executing of things. It may be taken for a man that laboreth, traueleth, or worketh: and it may also be taken for a man that is disposed to doing of harme, wrong, or violence. Howbeit the playne meening is, that every labouring hand shal come to the wicked [to do the seruice,] and yet the same shal not boote them at all. Lo what the summe is. Sophars meening is, that we ought not to beguile ourselues whē we see the wicked throughly stuffed, and that our Lord heapeþ vp goodes in their houles, so as it should seeme hee were minded too give them a hundred times more than he giueth to other men, and the whole world is ready to do them seruice, in somuch that they haue men in fee, and euery man offereth himselfe vnto them saying, Sir will it please you to employ me? For when they haue all the hands that can be to laboure too do them seruice, and to profite them: yet they shall not cease to be in anguish. Behold a wonderfull iudgemente of God, and therefore so much the more ought it to bee sensible too vs, that is to say, we ought to be touched with it so much the more. Is it not a thing against nature, that a man that hath wherwith to do himselfe good, so as he wāteth nothing yea and which (if hee lift too haue a great trayne) may haue a great number to take peynes for him that he might liue at his ease and pleasure, should for all this, not be able to inioy his owne goodes, but liue in continuall griefe, and bee afraid least the earth shoulde faile hym? Surely it is a thing against all reason. Neuerthelesse we see welynough that God doth persecute them after that sorte, bycause they haue gotten their riches by lewde practises, thereby shewing them right well, that all that geere can serve them to no purpose, bycause he curseth euery whit of it. Behold (I saye) a iudgemente of God which is right straunge: so as if wee seeke howe it commeth to passe, wee shall not finde out the meane, and therefore we conclude that it is God whiche worketh so. Agyne it seemeth too vs, that if wee haue the good willēs and loue of men, so as euery man seeke too do vs seruice, all goeth well with vs and we can neuer want. But it is saide heere, that when the wicked haue men after that sort at their commandement, so as they haue as it were a whole host of men that are redy to laboure for their profitse: it is nothing worth, and all is but continuall anguish. Heere therefore Zophar intended to inlarge that which he had said afore, I say he intended to giue vs a greater certaintie of Gods iustice vpon the wicked. And for the doing thereof, he setteth before vs their wealth, and the good will that men beare them. Thus ye see howe the rich men ruffle it out, and seeme to vs to be owners of all, and that God hathe not (as ye would say) any more power to annoy them. See how men sette themselues in their owne imaginations. But what shall their abundance boote them? Nothing at all. For we see the wicked are in continuall anguish, although they haue wherewith to make themselues merrie, and neede no more but too say the word, and their table is redy furnished for them. They haue seruants at theyr commaundement, they haue retayners in fee, and to be short it seemeth that the world was created for none but them: and yet for all that, they cannot eate one morsell of bread at their ease, as the poore man doth that is not worth past the valew of ffe shillings, and betaketh himselfe to God: For such a laboring man, liueth dayly vpon his dayes worke, and when he hath dined he knoweth not wherewith he shall suppe, but referreth it to God, assuring himselfe that at leastwise he is in as good case as the birds, that lift vp their bills to heauen, whom God feedeth. So (I say,) poore folke are in case as the yong rauens, according as it is said in the Psalme, and God nurisheth them by his blissing. VVherefore let vs learne to turne againe vnto God, assuring our selues that we shall not want any thing if he take the charge of vs, and that though he giue vs no great abundance of goodes, his blissing shall suffise vs. I say let vs advise our selues not to be sorrowfull though God be not so beneficiall to vs as we would haue him. And although hee deale sparingly with vs, yet let not vs cease too haue franke harts. To be short, let vs not martir our selues out of measure, vpon trust that he will never faile vs. Further it is a token of vnthankfulness in men, when God shall haue shewed himselfe liberall towards them, in giuing them great abundance of goodes, and yet notwithstanding they be still doubtful, & neuer cease their thoughtfull muzing vpon one thing or other. I say it is a token that they never were acquainted with Gods grace, or else if they knew it, that they haue not esteemed it as they ought. Then if God giue vs wherewith, let vs learne to content our selues, knowing that he setteth his goodness before our eyes, to the intent we should learne to settle our selues vpon it, and there rest. There is also one other point: namely, that although we haue wante of worldly goodes, and it is likely that many euils and miseries shall come vpon vs: yet must we withstand such thoughtfull conceits. True it is that we cannot be vtterly carelesse, nother must we: but yet must we moderate our passions, & specially we must consider what it is to be fed at Gods hand, so as we may seeke foode of him, and also hang vpon his goodness withoute greeuing our selues too much. VVhen men are fauourable too vs, let vs acknowledge that God doth it for our comforde: but yet must wee not rest still vpon men. For God can curse their laboure in such wise, as they shall rise early and go late to bed, and yet speede never the better. Then needeth wee no more but Gods blissing, and though we bee destitute of all helpe, his onely grace will bee ynough for vs: but contrariwise, wee may haue the whole worlde on oure side, and yet if God reach vs not his hand, it is certaine that all shall go backwarde..

Thus ye see what is shewed vs by this sentence. If we could practise it, wee had profited for all oure lyfe long. But it is a piteouse case, that when every vs shall haue confessed these things, (as we be sufficiently conuinced of them) we cannot settle our selues vpon them: and so we do well shew by the effect, that we beeleeue not that there is none other thing than Gods only blissing, that doth men good and giueth them contentation. For we cannot haue an eye vnto him. If he exercise vs now and then, and withdraw his hand and giue vs not such abundance as we would wish: we acknowledge not that he is almighty to succoure vs. And yet notwithstanding, his meening is too call vs thither by afflicting vs, as if he shoulde giue vs some strokes of the spurre to prouoke vs to seeke him, and to desire him to pitie vs. And to our seeming we neuer haue sustenance ynough, except we haue abundance in our hand: nother consider we that if it please God to deale sparingly with vs, his only blissing will suffice vs better than all the welth of the worlde. But let vs passe further. It is saide, that when the wicked shall haue filled his lellie, God will sende him the terroure of his wrath, and it shall raine vpon his meate. This is a confirmatio of that which we haue seene erewhiles. True it is that Zophar passeth further: for he had saide, that the wicked shall liue in anguish, and that although they be throughly furnished and stored of all thinges, yet shall they not ceasse to bee incombered, because God giueth them not contentation, but rather stings and secret prickings, in somuch that they be faine to martir themselues continually: yea and although men indeuer themselues to serue them, yet shall it not further them at all.

After that Zophar hathe saide so, hee addeth, that it may well be that the wicked shall not feele Gods curse at the first stroke, and that they shal welter yea and boast themselues in their good fortune as they tearme it. To be short, ye shall see the wicked men liue at such ease, (too outward appearance) as it shoulde not seeme that they feele Gods wrath. But behold saith Zophar, in the turning of a hand God will make it to raine vpon theyr meate. And what shall it raine? the rage of his wrath. VVee see that which I haue touched alredy: whiche is, that heere is a higher step than that whiche I haue expounded alredy. For the anguish whereof mention hath bin made, and the vnquietnesse and comberance that the wicked haue, springeth of their continual distrust: For they haue no regard of God: and in this world there is nothing to trust vnto: and therefore they be in grete vexation of mind. Neuerthelesse it is said, that they shall be at their ease for a time, and they shall be dazled, so as too their owne seeming they shall bee happie in al respects. VWell, doth it therefore follow that Gods blissing is vpon them? No. How then? God suffereth the wicked to runne riot so more and more, and when they put their trust after that sort in their riches, they do but prouoke God further. For they know not him of whom their welth commeth, and theraypon take occasion too ouershooote themselues so much the more. Thus ye see how brutish the wicked become when they haue not the said vnquietnesse to pricke them, but are at rest and contente themselues, weening that all goeth well with them. But so muche the more must Gods vengeance increase. VVhy so? Because they haue gotten theyr goodes amisse, because they haue them by craft and extortio, because they bestow them naughtily, and because they succoure not such as haue neede, but rather are as gulfes.

Moreover, they bee so vnhankefull and proude againste God, as it shoulde seeme they woulde worke him spite, too whome they bee so greatly bounde, as though they were not beholding to him for anything. They presume vpon their riches, they make their paradise in this worlde, they thinke themselues peeresse, and make them hornes too dresse againste God. Beholde (I pray you) the top of all iniquitie, whyche causeth Gods vengeance to be the more horrible vpon their heads. And Zophars intent is now to saye, My friends although ye see the wicked vtterly besotted in their welth, and that they be of opiniō that no harme can light vpon them, yet let vs not thinke their case too be the better for that. And why? For euen when they shall thinke vpon nothing but making good cheere, and all the worlde is in loue with them: then will God send the fire of his wrath, whiche shall fall vpon them as a tempest and as a raine that commeth suddainely. In Sommertime when a little blast woulde serue a mans turne, beholde there commeth a suddaine storme vnto thought of. Euen so likewise Gods wrath shall bee suddayne when hee listeth too punish men. And so ye see there is none other shift for vs, but to shroude our selues vnder the shadow of Gods goodnesse. For then are we in safetie, whither he giue vs abundance, or whither he deale sparingly with vs. VVhen we be vnder his hande and protection, one bit of bread will bee as good to vs for our nourishment, as Manna from Heauen. And if we haue abundance, we shall perceiue that therein God sheweth himselfe a father to vs, and handleth vs as his children. The faythfull therefore wil euer way fare the better by the things that God sendeth them. But as for the wicked, they may well haue wherewith too burst, but yet must God throw them downe and turne their goodes to their harme. VVee see what befell too the people of Israell. They were not contented with the heauenly Manna, it was too vnfauerie a thing for them: but they had a longing too the meates whiche they had bin accustomed to in Egypt. VWell, God sent them their meate in such quantitiē, as they did cast it vp agayne. But what? while the meate was yet in their throtes (as it is saide in the Psalme) the wrath of God came vpon them.

Pf.78.c.30. 31.

Thus ye see how God stealeth vpon men vnwares, even in the twinkling of an eye, vpon them that thinke not themselues subiect to him. So then if our Lorde giue vs any goodes, let vs learne not too intangle oure selues in them, nother let vs make a graue of the thing whiche ouer hit to be a ladder for vs to climbe higher on, as the vnbelineuers do, who hie them not too God when they haue goodes, but snarle them selues in them: Therefore they make a graue of them too fasten themselues to the earth withall. But contrariwise, we must make a ladder of the goodes that God gyueth vs in this world, too climb vp aloft on it, that we may be led vnto him, and by knowing his goodnesse and fatherly loue, apply all his benefyts too suche vse as he meeneth them too vs. VVhat is too bee done then? Though wee haue meate and drinke, yet neuerthelesse let vs lifte vp oure eyes aloft, and desyre God too feede vs. For wee must bee throughly perswaded, that it is not the meate that wee take sustenaunce of, but it is the onely power of G O D that maynteyneth vs. Agayne the meate may perishe although it be in our mouthes: or else it shall be turned into gall and poysone in our bellies. But are wee full fed? Let vs thanke God for hauing care of vs, and for continuing his fauoure toward vs, and by that meane let vs be the more prouoked to serue him. Thus ye see what we haue to marke in this sentence. Nowe Zophar addeth, that when the wicked man fleeþ from yron weapons, he shall meeþe with a bow of Steele. VVhereby i.e signis

he signifieth, that God hath many wayes to persecute and punish the wicked, so as they shall not be able too scape his hande, what shifftes or attemptes soever they make. Truly the wicked will alwayes be seeking how to shunne inconueniences, and to bring it about they will be bold ynough too despize all things. And Zophar also meant to bewray their presumption, when hee said that the wicked shall shunne the yron weapons:as if hee had said, True it is that the wicked are ware and wise ynough (to seeming) to eschue all inconueniences : and assoone 10 as they foresee any inconuenience, straightwayes it must be remedied, and such order and such must be taken for it. The wicked therefore shall not be so fast asleepe, but they shall always haue an eye to the ordering of theyr affaires. But what for that? do they turne vnto God whē they intend to take order for them? Do they make their recourse to him , to receiue counsell at his holy spirite, that he may bring all their enterprises to a good ende? No. There is nothing with them but pride and stateliness, in somuch as they thinke they shall welynough 20 finde very good and conuenient shifftes in their owne braynes. Ageyne they know not how it belongeth too God to guide all things and too leade their doings too their end and marke. The wicked yeld not that honoure vnto God. So then, they cōsult, they beate their braines (as the Prophet Esay saith) they make their discourses, they conclude, and they beare themselues in hande that they can go through with all things, and bring them to passe as they theselues haue deuised. But God sheweth that all shall fall out cleane contrarie to their attempts, 30 because they haue bin so caried away by their owne fond fancies. Then let vs marke well, that if the wicked be never so subtle, and it seeme also too be easy for the to find startingholes, by reason they haue laid so wel for their affaires aforehand : yet notwithstanding God will find them out in the ende, and they shall not be able too scape out of his nettes. This is in effect the thing that is shewed vs here. And why? For God hath diuers meanes to persecute his enimies. He is not as an earthly Princee, who when he hath made great preparatiō, preuailes not 40 by it at all, but is disappointed of his hope, and is new to begin againe. But without remouing, or without deuising any thing, hee needes no more but too speake the word, and it will bring more to passe than all the armies of the world. VVe see how he hath incountered his enimies diuerse times. Did he raise any great host of men when he punished Pharao and all the Egyprians? No: he sent him woormes and filthynesse. Behold how God woorketh when it pleaseth him. Agayne if he suffer the wicked to scape some harme : it foloweth not that they 50 by their policie haue overcome Gods hande which was against them. But our Lord suffereth it, to the ende that their condemnation shoulde grow the greater, and that they should waxe wilfull in their opinion, according also as we see it come to passe. For when the wicked escape some aduersitie vnouerwhelmed:they do but shake their eares, and they be quite dispatched, as they surmize: and therevpon they take greater libertie afterwarde. God then doth now and then send but some small aduersitie to the wicked, and pursueth them not with any great rigoure, but lets them go as if they were escaped scotfree. But what? It is to dubble it anone after . For in somuch as they scoffe at Gods pacience , and prouoke his anger more and more : he also must be faine to vtter his roughnesse, and to thunder vpon them, and whereas he had scarce giuen them a ticke with a rod : he must be faine to draw out his sword against them , and too take his bow and shoothe at them. And therefore let vs learne to mind this saying well aforhand, too the ends that if our Lord visit vs, we may not thinke to shunne the mischiefe by oure owne byleapes, but rather commit ourselfs vnto him, that insted of persecuting vs as his deadly enimies as we deserue to be, he may voutsafe to take vs to mercie. And this is the cause why his threatnights are repered so often in the holy scripture. For it is not heere only that it is said that the wicked man shall flee from the weapons of yron and meeete with a bow of steele : But we see how the Lord himselfe speakerth it by his Prophet, saying, It shall be too small purpose for thee to hide thy selfe in thine house: If thou go out into the feelds, thou shalt meeete with wild beasts : when thou art escaped from the mouth of the Lion, there shall bee a Beare that shall find thee welynough. Heereby our Lord sheweth, that he hath all creatures in his hande, and can serue his owne turne with them to persecute men, so as we cannot make account to be discharged, till wee haue found fauoure in his sight, and that he haue pitie of vs. So then the only meanes to be sure and safe, is that God haue receiued vs. But if we flee aloofe from him, he hath too long hands, and when hee hath drawne his sworde, he hath a bow also, that is to say, he hath so many sortes of chastizings and punishments, as in the end wee must needs fall vnhappily, except we be reconciled vnto him, as I haue shewed alredy. Now like as God threatneth swords, bowes, wild beasts, and Scorpions to such as lift vp themselues aginst him and stoutly harden themselues against his hand : so also on the contrarie parte he sheweth, that hee hath wayes without number too sauē those that flee for refuge to his goodnesse, and put theyr trust therein. True it is that we shall be inuironed with many miseries, and many deathes shall lie in waite for vs: but God also hath diuerse wayes to succoure vs, yea which are to vs incomprehensible. Therefore when we be vnprouided of all meanes, so as it shal seeme too vs that we be vndone, let vs bethinke ourselfes thus: God hath some issue of death which is knowne to himselfe, and the same is hidden from vs, because he intendeth to exercise our faith, let vs tarrie till he discouer his goodnesse, and when it shall please him to make his countenance to shine vpon vs, then shall we perceiue that we be in life euē in the mids of death. Ye see then that the threatnights which God maketh to the wicked, ought to make vs too resort vnto him, and so shall wee haue full matter of gladnesse and rest, notwithstanding that wee be in many daungers, and that assoone as wee bee passed out of one, another is at hand, and it seemeth to vs that we can never be deliuered. For like as God hath sworde to punish the wicked: so hath he infirme deliurances to succoure his faithfull ones. Lo in effect what wee haue to remember in this verle. And for a conclusion it is said, that the sworde shall be drawne, and pearce through his gall, and that fearefuiresse shall be vpon him. VVhen hee saith that the sworde shall bee drawne, and pearce the wicked quite and cleane through his gall: it is as muche to say as it shall bee a deadly stroke that shall wounde him to the harte: and this serueth too do vs too vnderstande, that Gods punishmentes shall sometimes bee suddayne. True it is that they are not alwayes so: and therefore it must not be made a generall rule. Also(as I haue told you) the question is not whither God perfourme his iudgements swiftly: but yet doth he giue vs some shewe of them euē in this life, too the ends wee should the earnestlier herken for the last day, whereas all things shall be set agayne in their full state and perfection. Neuerthelesse (as I saide) Gods iudgementes shall sometime be suddaine: and that is it that Zophar An. 5.c.19. meant ment too expresse in saying: the sword is drawnen and shall strike him quite through the gall: as if he shoulde say, The wicked man shall not perceiue a farte off that God mindeth to punish him, but he shall keepe on his trace still, as if he were out of danger: howbeit the sword shall no sooner bee drawnen out of the scabbard, but it shall strike through his body. Now then we see what is the meening of this sentence. And heereby we be warned to foresee daungers a good while aforehand, to the end wee may flee vnto God and pray him to keepe vs. And it is not only heere that Gods iudgementes are shewed vs to be suddaine: but it is also saide that when the wicked shall say, peace, all is safe: Gods wrath shall fall like thunder vpon their heads. Heereby (as I said) we be warned, to looke a great way before vs for the inconueniences that may happen, and wherevnto our life is subiect. And why? V Vere it not a corzie to our life to saye that we be miserable, and that it were much better for vs that God had not put vs into this world? No, but it wold teach vs not to fall asleepe in this world, but too runne vnto God, and to assure ourselues that if we be vphild by the power of oure God, wee may outrace Satan and the world, yea and death it selfe. And why? Because we shall haue God for our protector and defender. And so let vs marke well, that whereas the wicked perceiue not their owne miserie, it is too throw them downe the rather: and forasmuch as they mind not to call vpon God, but contrariwise beare themselues in hande, that they haue no neede of him: their destruction must needes fall vpon them before they thinke of it. Furthermore hee faith imnediatly, that fearefulness or terroure shall not go an inch from them. Thus the wicked haue a double mischiefe: whiche is that the sworde shall runne them through as soone as it is drawnen out of the scabbard: and besides that, God shall never suffer them to bee at rest, but although the daunger bepast: yet shal they tremble for feare still. And whereat? Euen at the shaking of a leafe of a tree, (as it is saide) and they shall thinke that death hath already caught them, when no man pursueth

the. So we see wherat the holy Ghost amed. First he intended to shewe vs, that we must not enuie the wicked when they bee so well garded, as it may seeme that no harme can come neare the. And why? For god shal strike them through in the turning of a hand, yea euen with a deadly stroke, whereof they may never be healed. Marke that for one point. Another is that when we see the wicked in feare: we must vnderstand that there is but only one meane to be in rest: which is to know that we be vnder Gods protection. Therefore let that suffice vs. For although it behoue vs to walke in feare before him: yet shal wee alwayes bee sure of his goodnessse, whereas the wicked and the despisers of his maiestie shall alwayes be so afraid as they shall never haue any rest. Therefore let vs learne too retire to our God with all lowlinesse, and too liue with our neighbours withoute doing any man wrong, least the same measure bee moten to vs againe. And when we go so too worke, surely God will make vs to feele his goodnessse, and deliuers vs from all the dangers, terrors & dismayings that can happē to vs.

Nowe let vs fall downe before the face of our good God with acknowledgement of our faults, praying him to make vs feele them and bee sorie for them, and too consider better the iudgements that he sheweth vs, that we may dayly more and more bee instructed to withdrawe our selues from the transitorie thinges of thys world, which are wont to blind men, as though all their felicitie consisted in them, and rather that we may attaine the wisedome and skill too knowe that God draweth vs to him by the troubles that wee see heere bylow: and that if it please him to exercise vs with afflictions, we may thinke it is to prouoke vs to seeke him: and on the other side, that if he hadle vs gētly, it is to the end that we feeling his fatherly loue, shuld sticke the faster to him, and loue and honor him with so much the earnerster mind, still passing heere bylow, and inioyng the benefits that he bestoweth vpon vs, vntill he bring vs to the true happiness whiche tarrieth for vs in heauen. That it may please him to graunt this grace, &c.

The lxxvij. Sermon, which is the fifth vpon the twentith Chapter.

26. All darknesse shall be laid vp in his secret places: the fire that is not bloyven shall consume him: and cursed shall be the residue of his house.
27. The Heauens shall bevvray his iniquitie: and the earth shall rise vp against him.
28. The bud shall go out of his house as floyving vvater, in the day of his vvrath.
29. This is the portion of the vvicked man from God, This is the heritage vvhich he shall haue of God for his vvords.

E saw yesterday howe the despisers of God are afraide withoute comfort. True it is that the godly may bee abashed and afraide, but God comforteth them, and when they runne vnto him they be sure that he will succoure them. As for the wicked, inasmuch as they despised al men, and were so full of pride that they thought themselues subiect to no mischance: God will scarce them after such a sorte, as there shall be no remedie for their feare. And therefore let vs learne to stand in awe, that we may walke godlyly. Let vs learne to be well aduised, that we be not carelesse as murtherers, and we shall find that God will make vs safe euen in the middes of all our terrors. Thus then the only remedie not to be afraid out of measure, is to walke warely, and so to know the infirmities that are in vs, and the daungers that compasse vs about on all sides, as we may pray God to voutsafe to reach vs his hande, distrusting ourselues and learning too settle ourselues wholly vpon him alone. VVhen we haue such a kinde of feare, God will glad vs at our neede, and we shall be sure of his helpe. But if wee will play the hardie and stout fellowes, then must God needes bring vs to confusion, and wee shall conceiue such feare, as wee shall bee as good as in hell alredy in this worlde. Now too expresse the better, that the wicked shall not fynde any meanes of safetie, Sophar addeth: that in all theyr priuie and secrete places, there shall bee darknesse hidden or layde vp. At the firste sighte there seemeth too be no greate matter in this saying. But when it is throughly vnderstoode, it will appeere to be a good confirmation of that whiche was saide not long since. For heere by the Priuye places, are meanted the backenookes, which which the wicked haue when God persecuteth them, according as they haue alwayse some lurkingholes too hide themselues in. VVe see how the wicked man will alwayes haue some blinde byway , he will play the foxe, and digge himselfe a denne [ with many startingholes,] that he may not bee taken vnwares. And although hee knowe wellynough that God entereth intoo all places: yet will he beare himselfe in hand, that there is some little hole where he may hyde him selfe, so as Gods hande may not come at him. But Sophar saith, that euен there 10 be shall finde darknesse. That is to say, althoughe the wicked indeuer too shrinke themselues into shrowdes, yet notwithstanding when God pursueth them, they shall haue such a terour within them, as they shall quake althoughe no man follow them. Too be short, he meeneth that whyle the despizers off God are farre of from blowes, they set light by threatnings, and beare themselues in hande that none euill may come neere them: but when it commeth to the verie pinch, they bestirre themselfes to get couert. For though God lay no hande on 20 them, nor shewe any euident signe that liee is agaynst them: yet shall they haue darkenesse, that is to say, they shall haue vnquietnesse in them. And this teacheth vs to seeke no blinde bywayes to shunne Gods hand. Then let vs vnderstand that as oft as God citeth vs to himself, we must come foorth to account. And therefore let vs not devise any shifte to escape, yea and althoughe the worlde seeme too promise vs never so many lurkingholes: let vs assure oure selues that all that is nothing. VVherefore let vs come willingly vnto God, and offer 30 vp our selues before his Maiestie, praying him too receyue vs to mercie. And if his face shine vpon vs, then shall wee bee deliuered and set free from all darkenesse. Yea and althoughe the whole worlde were confounded and put out of order: yet shoulde we alwayse bee safe and sure, being in the custodie of our God. Otherwise, if wee had all the couerts in the worlde, they should so little auayle vs, that we shoulde finde more dismayenesse in them, than if wee were discovered on all fydes, and coulde see the miserie that is vpon vs afore hande. 40 Yet notwithstanding, men cannot refrayne themselues from seeking of lurkingholes, as it is too be seene. On the contrarie part, what intendeth God when hee sendeth vs his worde? He would haue it to bee as a Cres- set, yea rather as the Sunne to vs, that euery of vs might serche what is in himselfe, so as the sinnes that were vnknowne too vs before, may bee layde open to vs, and euerie of vs bee sorie for them: and furthermore espie the punishments that wee haue deserued, soas wee may not bee taken vnwares like the vnbeleeuers which behight themselues peace and safetie, but maye discouer Gods iudgements as if wee were on a high watchtower, 50 Haba.2.2.1 as it is sayde in the Prophete Abacucke, and preuent the inconuenience that is towardes vs, I say preuent it, euen by prayer, supplication, and repentance. Yee see then wherat God ameth, when he inlightneth vs by his Gospell. But wee drawe quite backe: for (asmuch as in vs lyeth) wee quench the sayde light, and bicause wee bee naught, we be loth that the things whiche are hidden in vs shoulde come too light. Too bee short, wee couet alwayes to bee flattered, and it doth vs pleasure too abuse our selues with such flatteries. And what will God doo when his worde hath borne no sway with vs? VVill he sit still? No. But he accomplisheth that which he speakest by his prophete Sophonie: that is too wit, hee entreteth with his Lanterne euen into the deepest caues. For beholde what hee sayth of the Citie of Ierusalem: I will visit thee with my Lanterne (sayth he:) thou hast hidden thy treasures in priuie places, but thou shalt win nothing by that, for thou must needs be winnowed out. So then let vs suffer God to inlightneth vs by his worde, and let vs not seeke lurkingholes. And when we be come before him willingly after that sort, surely he will hyde vs in his tent (as the Scripture speaketh,) and hee will not onely giue vs a house, or a chamber to drawe intoo, but also he himselfe wil be an invincible fortresse to vs. To be short, the shadowe of his wings wilbe a good safetie for vs. On the contrarie part, we shall feele that which is sayd here: that is to wit, that such as will hide themselues, and specially which dig deepe dennes(as it is sayde in a place of the Prophete Esay) shallbee found out of God spye of their teeth, and though there were no more but their owne conscience to pursue them: yet shal they perceiue that they haue gayned nothing by imagining too escape Gods hande. Thus yee see what we haue too marke in this sentence. And consequently it is sayd, that the fyre which is not blowne shall consume them. Heere Zophar threatneth the despizers of God and all the wicked, that although there happen no harme vntoo them from anie creature, yet they shall not misse too bee consumed by Gods wrath. There needeth (sayth he) no artificial fire: for the wrath of God will be ynochough to destroy all them that will not willingly submit themselues too him. This similitude is common ynochough through al the holy Scripture: namely that God is as a consuming fire, and men as stubble that will soone bee consumed, or else as snowe that by and by melteth. And it is expressly sayde that Gods wrath is a fire, not onely too melt snowe, or too burne stubble: but also to clive rockes and mountaynes, and to make the whole worlde to fall downe, so as neither heauen nor earth shall stande vnshaken, assoone as God giueth any signe of his wrath. And how shall the poore creatures then do which are so frayle? If there be nothing in vs but stubble, what shall become of vs when God shall haue kindeled his fyre that consumeth all things? Nowe wee see what Sophars meening is. For the holy Ghost speaketh by his mouth, and telleteth vs that we must not trust in the fauour of the worlde, and that when all things fall out as we would haue them, yet are we not therefore escaped out of Gods hande. And why? For (as he addeth afterwarde) there shall be neither heauen nor earth, but it shall rise vp to execute his vengeance. True it is that too shewe his mightie and incomprehensible power, hee may well nowe and then suffer the creatures to be fauourable towards vs, and our desires to be fulfilled, so as nothing shall fall out agaynst vs: but when we bee so at our ease, God needcs no more but to shewe himselfe our enimie, and the onely fire of his wrath will bee ynochough too consume vs, without the seruice of men, or without the imploying of any creature about it. For although the holy Scripture(to make vs too perceyue the better howe terrible Gods wrath ought to be to vs) doo sometimes say, that there is brimstone or thunder mingled with it: yet notwithstanding, it addeth likewise, that the same commeth not of mans hande, nor is made by any inferiour art or meane, but is wrought by God only, according as it is sayd in Esay, Esa.30.5.33 that hell fire is prepared long ago for the wicked, and for the enimies of God. And when mention is made of fire and brimstone, it is sayde that it is the verie breath of God that blowerh in it. VVhich is all one with this that Zophar sayth heere, namely that there needeth no bellowes from elsewhere, nor any forraigne helpe to kindle this present fire. And why? Because the force that proceedeth out of Gods mouth, is ynochough to consume the wicked vtterly, when it vittereth it selfe agaynst them.

Nowe then let vs learne to frame our selues in such wise vnto God, as wee may not feele the execution of this sentence vpon our selues. For it will be too late to cri<sup>te</sup> alas, when God shall haue kindled his inquenchable fire. But it is sayde that Gods worde ought to be vnto vs as a burning fire, howbeit not to consume vs, but to clenze away all the drosse and superfluities that are in vs. For like as golde and siluer are fined by passing through the fornace, ere they can do seruice or be applyed to our vse: Euen so our Lorde intendeth to ridde vs of our wicked lustes by his worde, (which are things not onely superfluous, but also hurtfull,) that wee may dedicate our selues afterwarde to his seruice. And this must bee done before all other things. Therefore when God purposeth to enflame vs with the loue of him, too the ende we may bee wholly rauished therewith: the same must bee done by the meane of his worde. But if we cannot abide it, wee must needes become as chaffe or stubble, according as it is sayde in the Prophete. Shall not my woerde be a consuming fire, and as a hammer that breaketh the stones, and shall not this people bee as chaffe? Thus then yee see howe wee cannot disfete Gods worde of the office that hee giueth vnto it to bee a consuming fire: It must always be so.

Nowe on our side, if we bee diligent in offring oure selues vntoo God, hee will purge vs from our filth, and wee shall be reformed too his righteousnesse, and inflamed with his loue. But contrariwise, if we play the wilde Coltes, and maliciously and stubburnely reiect Gods woerde: Let vs bee sure that (spye of our teeth, and doo the best and woorst wee can) the same shall burne vs vp, euen bycause wee shall bee but strawe, chaffe, and stubble, whiche is consumed out of hande. Yea and when God hath made vs perceyue oure damnation by his woerde, hee will doubtlesse also put to his hande, and make vs to vnderstande by experiance that hee hath not sayde in vaine, that fire shall consume the wicked, yea euen without any blowing, without any kindling, and without putting any mans hande too it, or without the ayde of any creatures by any meane. To bee short, let vs learne too stande in awe of Gods wrath, and not fall a sleepe when wee see things fall out as wee would wishe in this worlde. For that can serue vs too no purpose, when our iniquitie shall come too account before God, and hee shewe himselfe too bee oure iudge. Thus ye see what wee haue too beare away in this sentence. And it is sayde immediately, that all the residue of his house shall go too hauecke, or that there shall be nothing but misfortune vpon the rest of his house. Like as oure Lorde vtereth his goodnessesse towardes those that are his, by blissing both their household and their children, and all that belongeth too them: So on the contrarie part, he sheweth howe dreadfull his wrath is, by spreading it selfe out vpon all that is aboue the vngodly, according as wee see howe the worlde is generally defyled with vs. For what is the cause that there is neyther heauen nor earth, no nor any corner in the worlde, where Gods wrath and curse is not seene vpon all creatures? Is it not our sinnesse? VVee knowe it is sayde, that there is not one man vpon earth that dooth good, but all of vs are compised in the generall condemnation of sinne, which is vniuersally in vs all.

Psal.14.b.3. Rom.3.b.12. Nowe forasmuch as God of his owne nature hateth sinne: wee must needes bee odious vntoo him. So then seeing that all creatures are as it were accursed by reason of oure filthinesse and vncleannessse: bothe highe and lowe muste bee sayne too feele of that defyling. Euen so standeth the case peculiarily with the wicked. For if a man bee giuen too all vngraciousnesse, so as hee is a dispizer of God, rushing forth intoo all euill: all that euer hee toucheth is as it were defyled by the fylth that is in him. Not onely bicause a naughtie man marreth and peruerterethose that are conuersant in his compaニー, bringeth vp his children lewdly, and disordereth his wife: but also bycause there is a secrete curse of God vpon his heade, too spread out vpon his children, his householde, his cattell, and all that euer hee hath. Thus wee see in effect, that when mention is made of the remnant of wicked mens houses, it is too shewe vs, that when our Lorde is agaynst men, they haue good cause too bee abashed. And why? For when they bee sunken and destroyed in their owne persons, the vengeance of God muste stretch further. And this is sayde too the ende wee shoulde not enuie the prosperite of the wicked, when wee see them fare well, considering that their ende is such as wee see heere. Therefor when the faylfull haue conceyued howe terrible Gods wrath is, they muste bee so touched with it, as they must no more thinke the wicked to bee happie for their faylfull prosperitie. For they do but drawe their lines till they come too their vtter destruction. And so wee conclude, that it is better for vs too seeme misera ble (sobeteit that we stand in Gods fauour) than to haue all that man can wishe, and in the meane tyme God bee agaynst vs. Lo what wee haue too marke in this sentence. Nowe when Zophar hath spoken so, he addeth, that the heauens shall breake his iniquitie, and the earth rize vp agaynst him. Hee had sayde heeretofore, that fire shoulde consume the wicked without blowing: that is to say, that God without vsing the seruice of his creatures, is able too destroy all them that lift vp themselues agaynst him. And heere hee tellet vs of another kinde of punishment: which is, that God will arme his creatures to execute his vengeance agaynst the wicked. Ye see then howe God worketh in diuerser sortes, when he mindeth to punishe the despizers of his Maiestie. Sometymes (as I haue sayde) hee suffereth all things to go well with them too outward appearance, as so they shall not doubt nor mistrust any thing, and (which is more) they shall sport and wallow in their good fortune. But when they bee drunken after that sort in their prosperitie: beholde, God will ouerwhelme them sodenly, not with naturall fire, but with his secrete and incomprehensible power. Yet notwithstanding, in the meane whyle, it is not too bee sayde that oure Lorde hath not his creatures in hys owne hande too arme them in such wise agaynst vs, as euerie of them shall bee swoordes, bowes, arrowes, and other weapons, which God will stirre vp too destroy vs withall.

And this is made purposely, bycause that when the wicked bee puffed vp in their pride, they thinke too get the maystrie by their hardhartednesse, as it is to be seene that if these shamelesse folkes bee rebuked fortheir sinnes, yea euen for their notorious sinnes which little children can bee judges of, yet keepe they still a brazen face: for a man shall never ouerface them till they bee conuinced thrice tentymes tolde. VVell then, and after what maner dooth God bring them too reason in the ende? Euen by arming the heauens agaynst them, that is too saye, by discouering their shamefulnesse by all meanes. For when they shall haue vsed such vnshamefastnesse and scoffed at all the warnings that are giuen them, yea and made a scorne of all Gods threatninges: then muste they bee so persecuted (yea euen without putting too of any mannes hande) that when God alone pursueth them, they shall not knowe where too bee come come, but chafe vpon their bryde too spye God with-all. But is their furie once ouerpast? Then must they be rooted out with their shamelesse stubburnesse when they haue abused Gods pacience ouerlong. Thus ye see in effect what Zophar ment too say. And what haue we too doo? True it is that sometymes wee shall bee wrongfully diffamed, and oppressed with false slauders. But wee maye commend our case vntoo God, and hee will make oure righteousnesse to shine as bright as the morning, as the Scripture sayth: insomuch that when 10 Psal.37.4.6 the night is passed, and wee haue had some darke storme that hath suppressed the knowledge of oure innocencie, our God will in the ende shewe himselfe to be our warrant, and mainteyne our case in spye of the wicked, and of all their lyes. But on the contrarie part, when wee go about too woorke wyles, and thinke too scape by oure shifte and hypocrisies: let vs looke for that which is spoken heere, namely that the heauens shall bewraye our iniquitie, and spite of our teeth wee must come too the open light, and be discouered as at midday. VVee 20 will bee in oure lurkingholes: verie well, God will suffer vs too bee there for a little while: but hee can skill well ynough too hale vs oute of oure deepest dungeons, and too bewray oure shamefulnesse. VVhether wee will or no, wee must bee ashamed of the shrowding of our sinnes, which shall then steppe vp agaynst vs, yea, and all creatures with them, notwithstanding that for a tyme it haue seemed that there was neyther heauen nor earth which fauoured vs not. For if God become oure enimie, all creatures must needs shewe themselues too bee subiect vntoo hi.n. True it is that this happeneth not alwayes nor oute of hande, according as I haue declared heeretooefore, that Gods iudgements are executed diuersly. But yet muste wee alwayes haue this saying before oure eyes, (that is too witte, that the heauens shall bewraye the iniquitie of such as despize God, and the earth shall ryse vp agaynst them) too the ende wee may learne too discouer our owne iniquities vntoo God, as the Scripture counselleth vs too doo. Then let vs of oure owne free accordie acknowledge oure dettes, and 30 1.Iohn1.4.9 confesse our selues blameworthie before God. Haue wee so disclosed our owne iniquitie? Then dooth God couer it, then dooth hee burie it, then dooth hee cast it into the bottom of the Sea, so as it shall never come 19.

Micah.7. d. too remembrance any more.

Againe, haue wee shewed both too heauen and earth, that oure onely desire is that God should pitie vs, because hee mighte with good right condemne vs? Beholde, the heauens shall bee as a mantle too vs, and the earth shall lykewise couer vs, so as oure iniquities shall be buried. But I say wee muste confesse our iniquities vntoo heauen: that is too say, before God. And wee muste also confesse them in the earth, when wee shall haue cast stumblerblockes into the Church, and haue liued amisse. For wee must not bee ashamed to yelde our selues guiltie before men after wee haue sorrowed before God. But if wee minde too shiftoff things by lying, God muste bee fayne too shewe that hee hath not spoken this sentece in vaine. After that Zophar hath spoken so, hee addeth, that the bud of his house shall go away like flowing water in the day of Gods wrath. Nowe when mention is made heere of the budde of the house of wicked men, it is to expresse that all the hope which they haue for the time too come shall beguile them. For when the wicked are cropped by Gods hande: they hope still to bud againe, and too renue, and recover their former state. But it is sayde that God will disappoynyt that budding, and make them slide away as water in the day of his wrath. True it is that when the faythfull are smitten by Gods hand, they alwayes releue themselves with hope that their miserie shall not indure for euer, according as it is promised them that gods wrath indureth but Ezay.54.e. the turning of a handle, but his mercie shall last towards them for euer. So then the faythfull may and ought well to comfort themselves, bycause they knowe that God will make them to spring againe. And the holy Scripture vseth often this similitude, that although they be cropped yet their roote is left still in the grounde. Nowe when they take such hope, doo they presume vpon their owne power? Or is it their intent to spye God? No: but after they haue acknowledged that they be worthie to bee forsaken of god, they trust in him that he will haue mercie vpon their infirmities. Contrariwise, when the wicked hope that their afflictions shall not continue for euer, it is after a maner by defying God, and with a kinde of iusting agaynst him too knowe who is hardest. Beholde, God is agaynst them, and they on their side sticke to their tackling, that is to say, they are so wilfully bent vntoo sturdiness, as they determine neuer too bow their neckes, but too continue alwayes stiffe agaynst God. Thereupon they flatter themselves, and beleue that the miserie which they endure shall passe away, and that when they bee once gone, all shall go well with them. And whereupon commeth it that they take such hart of grace? As I sayde afore, it is not for that they haue any trust in Gods mercie: but it proceedeth of a deuilish pride, so as they beare themselves in hande, that Gods hande is not strong ynough too daunt them, by reason whereof they will not in any wise submitte themselves vnto him.

And therefore it behoueth vs to marke well howe it is conteyned in this sentece, that God will make all their budding to fade away like water: that is too say, it shall bee too no purpose for the wicked too take highly vpon them, and too beare themselves in hande that they shall bee sette vp againe: for God will plucke them vp roote and rinde: and although they haue had some bud left, that is too say, although God haue left them some little shewe, so as it might seeme that they were not vtterly dispatched: yet shall it fade away specially at the day of his wrath. Nowe must we wey this saying. For it doth vs too understande, that wee must not imagin that God is ydle when hee ouerpasseth things, and putteth not his hande too the punishing of the wicked. And why? For hee hath his conuenient seasons. Then hath Goddes wrath a certaine determinate day, whiche wee knowe not of. Therefore when wee see the wicked in prosperite, and in their triumphes, and it seemeth that no misfortune shall euer befallthem: let it come too oure remembrance that the wrath of God hath a day, and that God knoweth when it is time too punishe. I say let vs tarie paciently, and in the meane while learne hereby not to fall asleepe, if God spare vs. And if our Lorde make vs not to feele this vengeance for a time: but let vs alone and handle vs gently, although we haue offended him: I say let vs not flatter oure selues therefore, for there is not a more daungerous deceyte, than when men sleepe sapling in their sinnes, and thinke not vpon Gods wrath, vnder colour that hee beareth with them. For then doo they gather a great heape of wrath too themselves, as Saint Paule sayeth in the second Chapter too the Romanes. Then let vs learne not too flatter our selues at such time as wee bee in rest: but let vs dayly thinke vpon the daye of Gods wrath, and prevent it: namely by trembling continually before oure iudge, praying him to receyue vs too mercie, because wee bee we be so greatly indetterd vnto him: and let vs keepe our mouthes shet when it commeth too the mainteyning of our case. Nowe if Zophar had applyed this matter rightly, hee had not condemned Job as he did: but he had acknowledged that of Job which hee speakest generallie: that is to wit, that whereas the wicked do prosper, and yet notwithstanding Job hauing led a blamelesse life, is punished so rigorously: it is not to be sayd that God disalloweth him, and alloweth the wicked. For he hath a day for his wrath. True it is that Zophar is as a Prophet

Numb. the 22.23. & 24 of God. But yet doth hee peruer all things as Balaam Chapters. wrath, whereof he spake. And for this cause ought wee too give the better heede to this saying, to the ende wee haue the sayde skill that I spake of, namely too consider that God hath his conuenient tymes to punishe the wicked. To conclude, all the doctrine that wee haue heard, hee sayth in the ende, Such is the portion of the wicked, yea at Gods hand, and at Gods hand also his heritage is like because of his wordes. As touching this conclusion, it is as it were a sealing of that which we haue heard heere before, to the intent it might be of the more authoritie in our hartes, & that we might be fully assured of it, & receyue it without any doubting. Marke then the portion of the wicked. And at whose hande? At Gods. As if he had sayd, True it is that the wicked ruffle it out in this worlde, and play the looce Colts: for they beleue not that there is a judge in heauen, neyther thinke they vpon him. But yet for all that, they cannot pluck that preheminence from his mackie, and hee prepareth their indytement. This then serueth expressly too daunt the wicked, which put God out of their minde as much as they can. Also is it a good lesson for all the faythfull, to teache them to say, Go to, wee may do much euill that shall bee pardoned at mens handes, yea and they shall never say so much as blacke is our eye for it. But in the ende wee muste come before the judge, and when we come thither, this forbearing at mens handes will turne too oure double condernation. That is the counsell which wee haue too gather of this text, when the name of God is expressed heere two tymes. For men oftentimes discharge not their dutie, specially those I meene that are in office to do it. VVee never passe of admonishing such as doo amisse, nor of correcting them, but wee winke at them. Yea and the Magistrate which ought to put too his hande to reppresse offences, doth verie often let all alone. Men then both generally and particularly dissemble and make countenance not to see a whitte. But God is not negligent in his office. For as well they that haue beeene borne with, as those that haue borne with them must come to account. So then the name of god, togither with the circumstance of the text, ought to wey greatly with vs, sith wee knowe it is not without cause sayde, that such is the portion of the wicked, yea even at Gods hande. For it serueth too wipe away all these vaine hopes which wee bee woont to conceyue when men giue vs their hande, and eyther winke at our sinnes, or else pardon them. Let vs not trust vpon that. For it will bee a double confusion too vs afore God. And let vs assure our selues that although we bee seaped from the worlde, yet must God shewe himselfe too bee our iudge. Nowe whereas mention is made of portion and heritage, that also serueth to do vs too vnderstande, that we must be fully resolued of this poynct, that God will not leaue the wicked vnpunished. And like as euerie man calleth that thing his portion, which is ordeneed or allotted vnto him: So hath our Lorde alreadie assigned to the wicked, that which belongeth vnto them: that is their heritage, that is too say that same is as theyr patrimonie, so as there is nothing more peculiarly a mans owne, than the punishment that God will lay vpon the wicked. And hee speaketh purposely of their wordes. Howe so? True it is that some men restreyne this too the blasphemies that the wicked belke out agaynst God: but the worde that is sette downe heere soundeth none euill. So then it must be taken more simply: that is to witte, that wicked men may well alledge as many excuses as they list, but they shall gaine nothing by it: for they shall be condemned with all their wordes. Surely Zophar had an eye to Job, and therein (as I sayde aforse) hee applied it amisse vnto him: but yet it ceaseth not to bee true and good in it selfe. And it is the holy Ghost that prouunceth heere in generall, that the wicked with all their gay woordes shall bee rooted out by the hande of God. Therefore this worde is not couched heere without cause. For wee see continually howe the wicked are desirous to pleade agaynst God, thinking to worke wonders with their vntowarde allegations. And truly God suffereth them to holde pleaso for a time: but at length he sheweth that which is written in Genesis, namely, that his spirite shall not striue any longer with man. God had borne with as outragious wickednesse as coulde be: and when he saw that men abusid his pacience after that manner: he sayde I wil no longer pleade with you, I must be sayne to put to my hande. Thus ye see howe it is sayde heere, that the wicked maye well file their tonges too iustifie themselues, for they can good skill too chop Logicke with God: but shall that further their case? No, no. They rather sharpen the swoorde, and God must be faine too execute the sorer iustice, and the terrible vengeance vpon their heades. So then, men maye be armed with their tonges to pleade agaynst God: but God hath his hande armed, and will stretch it oute of heauen too confounde all such as shall so p'leade agaynst him. And this saying ought to touch the wicked more than it doth. But what? Heereby it is seene that there is a brutishe blockishnesse in the greater parte of the worlde. Nowadayes there is no bowing vnder the woerde of God, nor vnder the corrections that are done vnto vs in his name and by his authoritie. For men encounter them with such turcinesse, as it is well too be perceyued that there is no more religion among them than is among the Turkes and Paynims. And not onely warnings are in vaine that are giuen men in secret: but also if open faults be spoken of in the Pulpit: whereas men ought too aske God mercie, and too sue to him for it with all humblenesse: what is too bee seene, but that men are fully bent to stande stoully agaynst God? As for example: when I spake the last Sunday of the shamefull outrage that had beeene done heereby at Cologny: they fell to iustifying of themselues, and to conspyring agaynst God, and too deuising with themselues, howe too hide the thing that was altogether apparant. The matter is, that the Sermon was broken off in the Church, and yet coulde not be obteyned at those roysters handes, to leaue off when they were warned: the matter was complayned of. As howe? Such a thing is not to bee suffered. But men will seeke meenes too colour all, yea and some will picke a quarrell as if they had great wrong done vnto them. Yee wretched men, yee shoulde haue prepared your selues too the Lordes supper, and I tolde you of that shamefull disorder, to the intent ye shoulde bee sorie for it, or at leastwise (if ye had not beeene become deuils) ye shold haue beeene somewhat touched to conforme your selues: but you come cleane contrariwise in a rage too woorke all mischeefe. Is it not apparent heereby, that you seeke nothing but to fight openly agaynst God? But if wee speake

speake of secreter matters, yet the whole worlde knoweth them. For wee see open whoredomes, wee see blasphemies, wee see drunkennesse, gluttonie, and other excesses, we see the despysing of Gods worde, and alle ecclesiasticall order , wee see briberies and cruelties, and that there is as much gentlenesse among men as among woolues, so as there is none other meening but to do violence too one, and too poll another , and finally all shame is gone . These things are apparant. But what if there be other more outragious things, and that a man shoulde speake of them in the Pulpit ? A man might well bee the more wearie. And with what conscience come you too receyue the Lordes Supper at my hande ? Thou commest euen with the same that Iudas did. But thou shalt bee sure to feele Gods vengeance with trimbling , as Cain did, and that thou art a manifest and apparant reprobate. I haue alledged this example, to the ende wee might learne not too stande checking agaynst God. For if hee list to pleade with vs, alas what defence shall wee haue to get the vpper hande in our case ? But yet let vs not thinke that God needeth to studie how to tella long tale : for he will conclude and execute his sentence without pronouncing it newe againe, for we haue ynough in the holy Scripture, wherein hee sheweth he sheweth himselfe to bee fudge of the whole worlde. Thus ye see what we haue to marke in this text : that is too wit, that if wee confesse our faultes afore God, wee shall be forgiven at his hande : But if wee stande pleading with him, or if wee seeke lurkingholes too hyde our iniquities : we shall not only be conuinced by his worde, but also he will lay so rough hand vpon vs, as we shall be ouerwhelmed vnder him, yea euē without any remedie : and then will it be no time to aske forgiuenesse. Therefore let vs take the conuenient time that God assigneth vs, while he offereth vs the meane to obteyne mercie of him by his Gospell.

Nowe let vs fall downe before the face of oure good God, with acknowledgement of oure faultes, praying him too make vs so too feele them , as it may leade vs too true repentance : and that in steade of hardning of our selues, we may bee so hartbroken , yea euen before he make vs feele the sorenesse of his wrath, as euerie one of vs maye bee his owne iudge: too the ende , that 20 when wee shall appeare before the iudgement seate of oure Lorde Iesu Christe , all oure sinnes maye there bee couered and buried by his righteousnesse. And so let vs all say . Almighty God oure heauenly father,&c.

The lxxvij.Sermon, which is the first vpon the xxj.Chapter.

And Job ansyvered and sayde.

2. Hearre my vvordes and let it be for your comfortes.
3. Bearevvith me and I vvill speake : and vvhen I hauespoken, mocke you on.
4. Is my talking vnto man ? If it vvere so, hovv should not my spirit faint ?
5. Marke me and be abashed, and lay your hande vpon your mouth.
- 6, Verely vvhen I bethinke me, I am afraide, and feare taketh holde on my flesh.

T seemeth after a sort , that the woordes which Job setteth downe heere, are contrarie to the worde of God , inasmuch as hee auoucheth that god punisheth not the wicked, but letteth them alone so as they prosper. But we haue seene heretofore that we must consider the iudgements that God executeth in the worlde, according to the recorde of the holy Scripture. Then at the first sight, this talke of Jobs seemeth vtterly repugnant too all truth : but we must remember what hath beene sayde heretofore : namely that when the holy Scripture speaketh of Gods iudgements , it sayeth not that hee accomplisheth them peremptorily : for sometimes hee taketh in hande to shewe himselfe iudge of the worlde, but that is not in all poynts and all caces, nor yet after all one rate. Therefore it ought too suffize vs, that God giueth vs some token that the wicked cannot scape his hande , but must come too account before him. Neuerthelesse God doth sometymes dissemble , and wee see it by experiance . So then it behoueth vs too acknowledge that God doth by his prouidence gouerne the worlde, mainteyne and preserue the good , and punishe the wicked : as we make it no generall rule that all suche as bee wicked are punished out of hande, and that God delayeth not their punishment till afterwarde, nor vseth any sufferance , nor reserueth any thing to the life to come : for then should we enter into a great disorder. VVherefore sithe that our knowing of Gods iudgements ought too be in such wise, as to wayt for the accomplishment and fulfilling of them at the latter day : thereby wee may well dispatche the contrarie, that seemeth too bee at the first blush, betweene Jobs sayings heere , and the holy scripture. VVhat is it that Job meeneth ? That wee see the wicked prosper, and that God is so farre off from punishing them, as they be caried on still in all pleasures and delights euen till their dying day, so as they pine not away with long lingring , but rather seeme too bee exempted by priuiledge at Gods hande from all aduersitie.

Nowe it seemeth after a sort that Job intended too beare men in hande , that all things are gouerned by fortune, and that God hath no regarde of worldly matters, ne careth for them . But his meening is nothing so , according also as hee himselfe protesteth at the ende, too the intent that men shoulde not take offence at his woordes. VVhat then ? His purpose is too shewe that when God visiterth a man , wee must not at the first dashe giue sentence of condemnation vpon him , too say, such a one is a wicked man, such a one is hated and forsaken of God : but it behoueth vs to examin well his life. And why ? For we must not thinke that God doth always handle men in this worlde wholly according too their deserts. VVherefore see we so many wicked men spared ? For it shoulde not seeme that their iniquities are knowne to God, seeing he layeth no punishment vpon them. So then let vs vnderstand that our Lorde reserueth many punishments to the latter day, whiche are not seene as yet : and againe that hee handleth those very rigorously whom he loueth, and haue not offended so greeuously as other men, which thing he doth not for their sinnes sake. If we know not why he doth it, let vs humble our selues : for God must be glorifyed in all his workes, werkes, although wee knowe not the reason of them as yet. Nowe then wee see what Job pretended. Howbeit, that wee may the better profite our selues by that which is conteyned heere, let vs lay foorth and serch out the things in order, as hee setteth them downe. Hearken to mee (sayth he) and take heede too my woordes, and let it bee too you for a comfort: that is toosay, let it bee in steade of the comfort that you come too giue mee. Truely wee knowe that Jobs frendes came too that ende: howebeit they were sore combered when they sawe him in that plight: and according to mans reason they concluded that Job was a castaway. See howe they were dazed with this generall sentence, that God punishmenteth the wicked. And so they set Job in the rancke of the wickeddest sort, which thing they ought not too doo. Nowe therefore hee telleth them, that where as they bee come too comfort him, hee desireth nothing of them but pacience and quiethearing. And afterwarde hee protesteth againe, that he shapeth not his talke vntoo men, as these hypocrites doo, who seeke no more but too bee iustified before the worlde, alwayes shunning the presence of God, and never come too acknowledge [what they bee] but by force, and till men haue throughly tried what is in them. Job then sayth, that his talking is not vntoo men, that is too say, hee is not led with vayne ambition, to make fayre countenaunces and shewings before men, but hee shapeth himselfe too well for prooife thereof (he sayth) might my spirit I had respect vntoo men? Ye see me here in necessitie, as no creature were able too indure in so miserable state. By all likelihooe I coulde haue beene dispatched a hundred tymes ere this: but sith you see neuerthelater, that my spirite sayleth mee not: is it not a signe that I knowe the hande of God, and that I submit my selfe too it, and that I rest vpon him? Seing I am not heere as a wauering Reede, can yee not perceyue that I haue a better and surer foundation? Forsomuche then as you see that I speake as before God: heare mee. And afterwarde hee addeth. Thinke not that I am without feeling. For when I beholde my selfe I cannot but be sore abashed, and I am greatly dismayde at the things whiche I see. For surely Job was as a spectacle of all terriblenesse: and when wee reade what hapened vntoo him, the heares ought too stande vp vpon oure heade. His saying then is that hee cannot thinke vpon himselfe, nor remember the great miseries that were befallen him: but terrible feare must catche holde on him. Therefore when ye knowe my state throughly (sayth he) then will you be astonisched, and lay your hande vpon your mouth. That is too say, you will blame mee no more as yee haue done hithertoo. For yee imagine of mee at your pleasure, and it is a signe that yee haue no pike nor compassion of the great miserie that is in my persone.

And heere wee haue too marke, first if we will comfort the miserable in their aduersitie, it behoueth vs too consider well howe. For there is required a singular discretion in that behalfe as wee haue scene heretofore. For afflictions are as diseases: and if a phisition vse one medicine for all diseases, what a thing will that bee? Some disease is whote, and some is colde: some disease requireth that a man shoulde be kept drie, and some other that hee shoulde bee refreshed with moysture: one disease will haue a man kept close, and another will haue him to go abrode. Yeseene then that a Phisition shall kill his patients, if hee haue not a regarde of their diseases: yea and it behoueth him also too bee acquainted with the complexions of his pacients. Euen so ought wee too consider of those whome God visiteth wyth afflictions. First wee muste marke what the persones are, and then howe wee see them dispozed. I say wee must marke what the personnes are. For if a man haue liued without stayne, walking in the feare of God, and shewing all tokens of sounde meening: what a thing were it too condemne him when wee see him in aduersitie? Againe, though a man had committed foule offences, and for a tyme beene in a rage agaynst God: if hee bee daunted by the aduersities that hee indureth, so as wee perceyue nothing but true repentance in him: were it not a beastly and wicked cructie, too steppe too him neuerthelesse, and too vse great roughnesse agaynst him? Nay we must rather reache our hande too suche as are beaten downe, and helpe them vp: according as it is sayde, that the duetie of them that will teach faythfully in the name of God, is too strengthen the weake knees and feeble hands, and to harten and comfort those that are in distresse, and in anguishe of minde. Esay. 35.4.3. Then that wee ought too vse great discretion in comforting such as are afflicted. And therefore it is not without cause, that Job telleth his frendes, it were muche better for them too holde their peace, than too increase his trouble by speaking, and hee woulde take theyr silence for a comfort. Yea and he addeth, that when they haue heard him, he will giue them haue too mocke on, not that hee meeneth that they might haue reason so too doo: but he rebuketh them for their rashnesse, according as it is sayde prouerbiually, that a hastie iudge giueth a swift sentenc. For they were ouer hastie in condemning of Job before they had heard him. And so when he sayth that they may mocke on when they haue heard him speake: he meeneth that there is nothing but disorder and rashnesse in them, and that they descant vpon an vnowne matter, whereof they were not yetthroughly informed. Therefore we haue a common doctrine too marke in this sentenc: which is too bridle our selues, when we come to iudging, and not too bee so headie till we knowe the verie truth in deede. And so much the more ought we too minde it, bycause wee see that men are by nature ouermuch inclyned to this rashnesse and ouerhastinesse. For although we woulde sayne be esteemed to be of ripe and settled iudgement: yet are there verie fewe to bee found, that giue themselues to bee so: yea and (which worse is) we shall see a great number that make haste to shewe their sine witte, for feare least men shoulde take them for dullardes. This causeth vs often-times too throwe our selues headlong into ouerhardinesse, and to inde crookedly and vntowardly of oure neighbours, without reason, or without indifferencie at all. Seing that this maladie is so naturall too vs: let vs learne to examin things before we speake. It is sayde that the wize man will alwayes heare, and the foole haue his mouth open, and never leaue babbling. It is not for naught that Salomon sayeth so, and we can well skill to say so too: but in the meane while we do yll put it in vre. And therefore what is our cheefe wisdom? Saint James sheweth it vs when he sayeth, that we ought to be slowe to speake, and willing too suffer our selues to bee taught. For when we haue the modestie too refrayne from hastie speaking: God will giue vs the grace to knowe the matters: and when wee knowethem, wee shall tell howe they stande. At a worde, wee shall haue profited greatly, when we haue learned too refrayne hastie judgement. For wee cannot iudge our neighbours after that sort at aduenture, without a double despising of Gods goodnesse. VVhy so? For wee must all appeare before his iudgement seate, as Saint Paule telleth Prou. 17. d. Lam. 1.6. 19. vs.

R. 14. b. 10. vs. Then if I judge my neighbour, before I know how 2. Cor. 5. b. the eace standeth: I take vpon me the authoritie of God, and I challenge to my selfe that which belongeth not too me, no nor to any Angell in heauen. And what an ouer-boldenesse is that? True it is that when we once know the euill, I say when wee knowe it, not after our owne imagination, but as it is of verie truth: we may be bolde too condigne it, and we shall not be rashe in so dooing.
 VVhy? For wee judge not at all: but onely ratifie the iudgement that God hath giuen by his worde. But 10 when we be so hastie [as is spoken of afore:] it is high treason to God, bycause we rob him of the right that is peculiare too himselfe, and pull it to our owne persones.
 And againe besides this, we offend God in taking vpon vs to judge of secrete matters. But it behoueth vs too knowe our owne measure, and that we haue neede too inquire of the things that we knowe not, and not to say it is so, or so, vntill we be throughly informed of the matter. Those twoo reasons ought too holde vs well in awe, that wee bee not ouerhardie in iudging our neighbours. 20 Furthermore if it behoue vs too keepe this modestie to-warde mennes persones: what muste wee doo to Gods doctrine? I pray you when euerie man shoothes foorth his bolt vpon a doctrine before hee haue throughly examined it: is not suche rashnesse worthie too bee double condemned? I haue shewed alreadie that wee bee traytors too God in robbing him of his honour, if wee iudge the persones of our brethren before wee knowe them throughly. But it is certayne that Godsdoctrine is much more precious than mennes persones. I go a- 30 bout too infringe some doctrine at auenture, yea, even some doctrine of the holy Scripture, or some article of the fayth: and is not that an vnhallowing of the holy things? Neuerthelesse wee see men bolde and ouerbolde in this case. For nowadyses, who shall bee soonier beleeved in matters of doctrine, than drunkardes, looce liuers, and heathenish men, whiche can as muche skill of Gods secretes, as can brute beastes, yea as can the the verie Swyne? These must snuffe vp their groyne agaynst Godsdoctrine, and dispute with mighte and mayne agaynst the truth, that hath beene wellstablyshed by the holy scripture. And what maketh them so bolde? Euen bycause they vouchsafe not too heere.
 But God punisheth them for their presumption, shew-ing that they bee but ranke fooles which alwayes haue their tonges walking, and never haue theyreares open too heare with pacience. So much the more then behoueth it vs too practize this sentence and admonition that is giuen vs heere, that euerie one of vs must learne to bee slowe to judge. And when wee doo so, we shall bee teachable. For hee will never proue a good mayster, which hath not beene a good scholer. If a man wil worke maystries at the first day, before hee haue euer beene bounde prentice to the occupation: he shall make fayre woorke and aduaantage himselfe greatly. Now if the case stande so in handie craftes: what is to be thought of Godsdoctrine which surmounteth all mans vnderstanding, and is reuerenced euen of the Angelles? And so, we must not onely haue beene scholers, that we may be maysters: but wee muste also perseuer all oure life long in profiting and vnderstanding, when wee mynde too teach others. VVhen God hath giuen a man grace too teach others, he must not thinke that hee himselfe is not bounde too learne any further. But let vs assure our sel-ues, that no man shall euer bee a good and faythfull teacher, except hee indeuer too learne still, as well as other men. To be short, it behoueth vs all, (as well those that teach, as those that learne) to be Gods scholers, and too

Proceede further and further in his learning, yea euen 'till we die. Thus much concerning that sentence. Nowe let vs come to the protestation that Job maketh. My talking (sayth he) is not vnto men, for were it so, howe shoulde my spaire not fayle? Heere Job sheweth all the children of God how they ought to speake. He had protested the like alreadie heretofore. Howbeit it is not without cause that he repeateth it again, forasmuch as it is certain that while we wander here bylowe, our talke will alwayes trayle a long trayne of superfluities after it, and wee shall not go to the matter roundly and substantially as wee ought to doo. VVhat is the cause that we are woont to snarle our wordes in such wise, as a man cannot wring out any pure truth out of vs? It is because we haue our eye vpon men.
 For besides that, men do bleare themselues, and discern not things as they ought to do: we on our syde are alreadie enclyned too follow it, and the diuell also thrusteth himselfe in, too make a hotchpotch of all things. So then oure woordes shall neuer bee well conveyed and cleere, except we haue God before our eyes, and speake as in his presence. On the other syde, wee are neuer throughly touched, when we talke but with men. For they iudge no further than they see, and we passe for no more but to hide our vices, and we thinke it ynoch if the euill be not apparant. Lo howe men fall asleepe in theyr sinnes, and neuer speake freely as they ought to do, vnlesse thy know that God summoneth them before him, and frameth their inditements, and that they mynd it not, and not tary till God condemne them, but rather themselues giltie of their owne accorde. This is the cause why Job protesteth here that his talking is not vnto men.
 True it is that we ought to haue regard of our neighbors when wee talke with them, that our wordes may edifie them. For if we cast forth light and wandring speeches: we shall lay stumbling blockes in their way, and we may hurt them diuerse wayes. Therefore when we speake to men, we must bethinke our selues afore hand: that is to say, we must haue regarde that it might be to their profite. But yet must we haue the thing that is spoken heere of Job: which is, to put God before. Job then meeneth not singly that he despizeth men, and that if hee see them rude and ignorant he will not in any wize applie himself vnto them: no: but that he is not led with such vanitie as too please men onely, and to forget God, or too put him behind them: but rather that when he speaketh, he maketh his reckening afore hande, that he is as it were in the presence of God, so as all his thoughts are knowne too that heauenly iudge, and therefore he must not dis guise himselfe, nor thinke too further his case by concealing the truth. Lo whereat Job looked. And so (as I haue touched alredie) let vs haue the wit to pray god to cal vs through-ly home to himselfe: that is to say, that as oft as he visiteth vs with his handes, he will so touch our mindes and hartes too the quicke, as wee may knowe that it is hee which punisheth vs for oure faultes, and that all oure thoughts are bare before him, and not be dazed & sorted in our owne talke, as they that are so full of babling, onely to please men. Beholde (I say) whereof we bee instructed in this sentence. And it behoueth vs to remember well the reason that Job addeth. If it be so (sayeth he) howe and wherefore dooth not my spaire fayle? It seemeth that hee leaueth his talke heere as it were cutte off.
 But the sense is that suche as doo so direct their talke too men without regarde of God, shall quayle in the ende, and that when they haue made fayre countenances at the first sight, their hypocrisie will bewray it selfe at the last. And in good sooth wee see it so by experience. For they that are so led with vaineglorie, and are alwayes

awyses desirous too bee had in reputation among men as the only respect that they haue : will surely tell manie fayretales , and roll so trimly in theyr Rhetoricke , as their woordes will vtterly bleare mens eyes , and it will bee a woorder too heare them speake . Heerevpon they streate themselves when men sooth them : but in the ende God pincheth them after suche a sort , as hee sheweth that all was but hypocrisye . God then taketh awaye that starche , as when a woman that starcheth hir face commeth into the sunne , and the heate lighteth vponhir , by and by the starche falleth off , and hir wrinckles appeare , by meanes whereof hir shame is so manifest as shee is faine to get hir away too hide it . Euen so is it with hypocrytes . For by reason of theyr goodly shewes, they shal be comended exceedingly of the world , and men will thinke there is none euill in them . VVell , God leaueth them there for a time , so as they shyne bright before men : but in the ende hee mocketh theyr hypocrisye , and then are they vtterly defaced , they bee pynched double and treble , till they can no more , all 20 the babling that they were woont too make is layde a water , and beholde all their goodly Rhetoricke fayleth them . Therefore let vs marke well this reason , too the ende wee may learne too come vntoo God of our owne accorde , and to haue a care to speake as in his presence , before he constreyne vs by force & violence . Thus then the reason that is set downe heere , ought to serue vs for a throte to make vs shunne all hypocrisye , and to follow the sayvnfeynednesse of settling our selues as it were in the presence of God , and of hauing an eye always 30 vntoo him in our talke . For if wee haue an eie vntoo him , surely hee will giue vs the grace too stande , specially if wee followe the example of Iob . For Cain and Iudas , and such other like were faine in the ende to seele Gods presence , not for that they were moued by it to returnde too repentance , but that God brought them therenvnto by force . But let vs follow Iob : that is to say , let vs seeke to hold our selues before the face of our iudge , and let vs go to him with al humblenesse , acknowledging his iustice , that we may giue him the glorie which belongeth to him , and which he deserueth . VVhen we go so to worke , and desire too bee succoured by his goodnessse , surely our wittes shall not fayle vs though we were presfed never so extremely , yea and seemed to bee vtterly ouerwhelmed . VVe should (say I) be neuerthelesse hilde vp , and in the ende so restored , as God shoulde shewe that all such as seeke him , and come too him willingly , are receyued at his hand , yea euen as it were too bee hilde in his lappe , and that hee will giue them suche a resting stay , as they shall neuer miscarrie , bee their infirmitie neuer so great . And nowe Iob (not without cause) addeth , that when his freendes looke vpon it they shal bee amazed , and compelled to shet their mouth , and too lay their hande vpon it to holde their peace . For if wee knewe Gods iudgements in good earnest , surely wee woulde haue more holde of our selues than wee haue . But what is the cause that wee bee so hardie too iudge so at randon , but for that wee examine not throughly the things that God sheweth vs . As howe ? If wee see a man afflicted , surely we can perceyue well ynough that the same commeth of God : but foorthwith wee fall too raunging : and say that God punisheth such a one for his sinnes : wherevpon wee fall too thundering at him . But (as I sayde) if wee considered Gods iudgements aright , wee shoulde haue better stay of our selues . And why ? For too consider Gods iudgements aright , it behoueth vs first and formost to thinke vpon our sinnes , and that in the persone of one man God intendeth always too instruct a thousande and many more : and looke howe many chafizementes and aduersities are shewed , so many teachings and instructions dooth God sende too vs all . Then if any man bee scourged , wee must not onely looke what he is , but we must also thinke vpon our selues : and surely then shall wee not lift vp oure hornes when wee come before Gods Maiestie : but wee shall haue suche a reuerentnesse , that if wee iudge oure neighbours , it shall bee with feare and greefe . For it shall behoue every one of vs too haue iudged and condemned oure selues afore hande , and too haue acknowledged that wee deserue too receyue much greeuoser condemnation at the handes of our God . I am a wretched mortall creature , and sillie worme of the earth , and I take vpon mee too iudge my neighbour , and what shall God doo agaynst mee when hee holdeth his assizes ? If wee thought of this , I pray you woulde it not strike a terror intoo vs ? On the other side , when wee see Gods justice vpon a man , ought wee not too perceyue that wee oure selues haue deserued much more , and that hee might handle vs much more rigorously ? True it is that wee coulde not blame God of crueltie : for hee is righteous .

Then if he punishe suche a one so roughly , what shall hee doo with mee ? I say , when wee haue such considerations , they will serue too humble vs , and too make vs walke in awe before God . And not onely that , but also it will strike vs in a feare , and too knowe the condemnation that hangeth ouer vs , if God had not had pitie and mercie vpon vs , as hee maketh vs too perceyue it . But aboue all , when wee see the iudgements of God , which are notable , that is too say , which are worthie of remembrance , and vnaccustomed : that ought to touch vs more to the quicke , and wee ought too conceyue so great a feare , as to abashe vs that we dare not open oure mouth . As for example . VVhen wee see but the common aduersities , whereunto wee bee as it were inured by custome : yet must wee not bee so grosse headed , as not to acknowledge the hande of God , and at the knowledge thereof bee striken downe and humbled wyth feare . But when wee see God sometimes stretche oute hisarme after such a sort as wee see things that wee never knewe nor thought of before : (as there are dreadfull punishmentes : ) Howe then ? That is straunge , therow was never any such thing heard of . Such things (say I) shall wee see , and it behoueth vs too thinke yet better vpon them . For when God seeth vs asleepe , and ouer-slouthfull , hee wakeneth vs . And like as if a man were falne intoo so sounde a sleepe , as hee could not answe when hee is called , and yet notwithstanding must needs wake if he bee iogged , or pulled harde by the arme : euen so dealeth our Lord with vs . For inasmuch as we be not moued with the common corrections that he sendeth vs , but are dull and retchelesse : he sheweth vs great and excessiue punishments , such as wee haue not heard off before , as if he ment too waken vs perforce . VVherefore let vs bethinke vs too profite oure selues by Gods iudgements : not simply to bee striken in feare by them , nor too bee so affighted as wee shoulde shunne hi . n : but too bee stirred vp too runne vntoo him , and too walke in his feare . Also let vs desire him too holde vs by strong hande , and not to suffer vs too stumble , seeing it cannot bee otherwise with vs , except hee holde vs vp and preserue vs . Thus yee see too what ende it behoueth vs too bee astonished at Gods iudgements . But contrariwise wee see that men seeke nothing but too forgette them , for too their seeming they bee to Melancholike matters . If God smite any man , all of vs must must profit our selues by it, as I haue declared alreadye. On the contrarie part there are verie fewe but they supprese such doctrine: and (which more is) although God bend himself too vs, and beate vs with his rods : yet doo wee labour too intangle our myndes, and too seeke vaine shifts too hyde Gods hand withall: and although wee feele the strypes well y<sup>nough</sup>, yet will wee not bee acknowleden how it is God that visiteth vs. See how wee would burie the remembrance of Gods straunge iudgements, which ought too fray men, yea and to moue euē <sup>10</sup> the verye stones. Yet are wee (I say) so wicked as too wish too burie them, as we haue seene by examples heere. VVhen our Lord hath executed so terrible iudgements as mens eares ought too glowe at them: a man needes not too speake of them: For these good defenders of the honour of Geneua make complaunt of it. I say, when a man speaketh of the man whom God would haue to be an horrible spectacle, and a feare and terroure too all men, if a man bring that thing to remembrance, and shewe that the blasphemer which spited God and all religion, was as ye would say, straught [of his witts,] <sup>20</sup> insomuch that the moother which bare him in hir wōbe, deposed that the diuell brought him in: they will say that men dishonour the citie. Behold these good men that are so zelous of the honour of Geneua, they could find in their harts that the Towne were sunken (it is well knownen who they bee, and a man needes not too poynt them out with his finger, nor too call them by their names, for they bee knowne wellynough) and yet for all that they pretend a desirousnesse too the honour of the <sup>30</sup> citie: but it is well seene of what hart their doings proceede.

Yee see then how the wicked would fayne burye the iudgements of God, bycause they bee desirous too plucke him out of his seate if it were possible, that they might not bee subiect too his iurisdiction. But yet when hee woorketh after a terrible fashyon, needs must wee be worse than brute beastes, if we be not moued at them: and yet for all that the gallants would fayne that all were buried. Furthermore let vs marke that which is <sup>40</sup> shewed heere: that is to wit, that when God lifts vp his mightie hand, and woorks after an vnaccustomed maner: it is to waken them that are to fast asleepe, and too bring vs to such awe and feare, that being abashed we may resort vntoo him, and lerne too hyde our selues vnder his shadowe, and pray him too guyde vs, and not suffer vs to fall into the bottomleise pit. This is it that wee haue too marke in this text. Now when Job speaketh of stopping their mouthes: it is a maner of speeche that is verye rife among the Hebrewes: as when it is sayd that the Prophet and the wise man will lay their hand vpon their mouth: it is to do vs to wit, that things shall bee so confuzed as the skilfullest and best practized men that are, shall not knowe what too say, but shall bee vtterly past their wits. And so sayeth Job now, that such as are so abashed must lay their hand vpon their mouth to keepe silence. And why? For the iudgement that God executed vpon the persone of Job, was terrible and dreadfull too mannes vnderstanding, and if a man should iudge of it after the flesh, he could not bee but amazed at the sight of Jobs persone. But now let vs gather the common doctrine of this: which is, that when God woorketh after such a maner as wee are not acquaynted with, wee haue to glorifie him: for when he sheweth vs the reason of his woorks, and will haue them knowne to vs, then he putteth woords into our mouth that we may be able too speake of them. Again when we see that Gods woorks out passe our vnderstanding, so as we know not why he disposteth the things so which wee see: what is too bee doone? VVee must lay our hand vpon our mouth, that is too say, wee must not be so bold as too prattle of them. VVherefore let ys lerne to knowe our owne abilitie, that we fling not our selues astray ouer all the feelds: but rather followe awythes the right way. For the dooing hereof, wee neede to knowe no more but what is giuen vs: according also as Sainet Paule bringeth vs to the same rule, namely, to knowe no more than God leadeth vs vnto. So long as he reacheth vs his hand, let vs go boldly: but when he leadeth vs no further, we must stopy there, and be as dumbe. True it is that we must awythes haue our mouth open after one sorte: that is, to glorifie God. But when we presume too bring him vnder the compasse of our vnderstanding, and would haue him to to reserue nothing too himself: whither go we then? Is it not an open despixing of God? He intendeth to hyde the thing from vs. And why? Too the intent wee should knowe our owne ignorance, and yet not cease to acknowledge him to be rightuouse, and to honour his woonderfull and incomprehensible ordinance. So then (as I haue touched alreadie) whensoeuer God sheweth vs the reason of his works, let vs thank his goodnesse, and say, Lord thou commest downe <sup>every</sup> lowe to vs wretched creatures, when thou youtsafest to shewe vs why thou doost this or that: and thy goodnesse deserueth well to be magnisid by vs, when thou communicatest it so familiarly to such as are not woorth it. But if God hyde the reason of his woorks from vs, and that it bee to hygh for vs to reach vnto: Let vs shet our mouth, that is to say, let vs not be talkatyue to babble after our owne fancie: but let vs glorifie God, and not be ashamed to be ignorant. For the verye wilidome of the faythfull is to knowe no more than it hath pleased God to shewe them. Therfore let vs make silence vntoo God after what sort so euer he work, till the last day of discouerie be come, when we shall see him face to face in his glorie and maiestie.

<sup>Prou. 30. d.</sup> Now let vs fall downe before the face of our good God with acknowledgement of our sinnes, praying him too make vs feele them better, so as we being cast downe in our selues, may not seeke to be set vp by any but by him, and that wee may bee taught to pitie our neyghbours, and to reache them our hand, and not to be cruell judges when we see other men in aduersitic, but that euery one of vs may bethink himself, to the end that when we our selues be in perplexite and our God afflicteth vs, wee may assure our selues that he will pitie vs, as no doubt but he will shewe himself a pitifull father toowards vs, if wee returne vntoo him with true humilitie and obedience, and graunt vs the grace too hold our selues contented with that which he maketh vs priuie vntoo as now, till he haue gathered vs too himselfe too bee made like vntoo him in glorie. That it may please him to graunt this grace not only too vs, but also too all people and Nations of the world, reducing the poore ignorant persons from the miserable captiuite and bondage, &c.

WE sawe yesterday for what intent Job did set downe a saying which at the first sight might haue seemed euill : which was, that God leaueth the wicked vnpunished . For that seemeth not to be agreeable too his office : but rather that inasmuchas he is judge of the world, it is his dutie too redresse the mischeues that are doone heere beneathe. Ought he not to restrayne men when he sees them out of square ? Or when he seeth himself despized, ought he not to maynreyn his owne glorie, and to pull downe those that are so mounted vp in prude and rebelliousnesse ? But wee see that the wicked doo rage against God, and abyde by it. It seemeth then that God is a sleepe . Therefore doeth not Job blaspheme God in making such complaints ? No : for his meening is to shewe simply, that although God bee the iudge of the world, yet it foloweth not, that the chastizings and punishmēts which he executeth vpon sinnes should always be apparant, so as mē might see them with their eyes, and point at them with the finger. Then if God delay his iudgements, it behoueth vs too stay our owne wisdome, and not to suffer it to raundge abrode after the imaginacions of mannes brayne, least we be to hastie. And though we see that the punishments are not so executed as were to be wished, yet let vs not be troubled nor offended at it : but let vs quietly wayt till the conue- niēt time be come, which God knoweth & not we. Now thē we see in effect what Job intedēd Howbeit he intermedleth it also with the iēptatiōs which the faithful may haue. For inasmuchas god maketh such delay, & seemeth to thē to be ouerflow: it cānot be but they must needs cō- ceiue some greefe and wcerinessē: but yet must we resist it. Now let vs see after what maner Job speaketh, VV before(sayth he) do the wicked liue ? wherfore become they old ? wherfore increase they in riches ? As if he shold say, Amōg al their desires mē think the cheef & happiest to be in helth, & secondly to haue long life , and thirdly to haue abundance of goodes. These are the things wherein men doo willingly place their felicitie. But all these are to be found in the wicked. Their cattell prospereth, their offspring cō- tinueth, and all things fail out as they would haue it, and whē they haue led a ioysfull life, they go to their graue in the turning of an hand, that is too say, they linger not in payne as the godly do, which droape all their life lōg, and are full of diseases, & pulled downe with many miseries. So thē the wicked liue at ease, and in the end God taketh them out of the world without any great greefe. By reason whereof it seemeth that the worst sort are most fauored of God. But in what case were we if we shoulde thinke that God intendeth too execute none other punishments vpon the wicked, than we see him execute at the first sight ? Now although wee haue in effect all that Job saith heere, yet shall it be good for the better insighting of the whole, to understand Zophars errour. Tuce it is that all the sentences which we haue heard in the former chapter are good and true. Howbeit(as I haue sayde) they bee misapplid, bycause Zophar ment to conclude that if we see a man sore afflicted, we ought to say hee is an enimy of God:and that when we see a man liue at his ease, wee may knowe thereby that he is in Gods fauour, and that god loueth him. But we must not go so to work: and in very deede it is the errore of the Saduceis. For although the Saduceis thought not the soule of man too be immortall, but that men liued in this worlde as brute beasts, and that there is nother heauenly life nor resurrection: although (I say) that they were so brutish: yet did they not thinke but there is a God, and that men ought to yeld themselues to the seruing of him, and to walke in vprightnesse and in a good conscience, and that God regardeth such as leade a holy life, to aide and succour the and to shew them his goodnesse, and also that hee punishmentneth the wicked. And how can this geere hang togither, seeing that commonly such as feare God haue a very euill life in this world? For the Saduceis say, that God recompenceth his seruants in this world, and likewise punishmentneth those that despise him. And so by their imagination, men should haue no hope for the time to come, but the good or euill that every man should receiue, should be Gods well or ill dealing with him in this life. But to resist such imaginations, and to represse so pernicious an errore, our Lord of set purpose doth not always punish the wicked, to the intent we should know how there is another principall judgement which is not yet seene. Againe, God doth not always shew signes of the loue that he beareth to his children. For he laucheth them vp as it were to the spoile and to the wide world, so as they be martired and assayled, and yet haue no succoure at his hand. And why? To the end we might know that there is a better and more excellent welfare laid vp for vs in heauen. See how our Lord summoneth vs to the latter day: and looke how oft the wicked are not punished as they haue deserued, but are spared, or the good are afflicted as much as they can beare, and seeme not too be hearde though they call vpon God, nor it cannot be perceiued that God hath the pitie vpon them, but rather seemeth too turne his backe to them, and to haue shaken them off, and not to be minded to deliuier them from the miseries vnder which they faint. So often doth the trumpet sound in our eares. Now then we see what the beastlinesse of the Sadduceis was, to thinke that men were wholly mortall, and that there was no heauenly life for them, and that the good that we can hope for, or the euill that we can feare, is but only in this world. But yet were they hardened in that grosse and beastly opinion: and Zophar and his companions were after a sort wrapped in the like conceit. Behold(say they)God is iudge of the worlde: and therefore if men be beaten with his rods, it followeth that he hateth the, and that they be vtter castaways. This conclusion is fond and naught. VVhyso? For it proceedes of this diuelish errour that mennes soules are mortall, and that there is nother resurrection nor kingdome of God. But contrariwise, these twoo things may verye well agree: that is too wit, that God is the iudge of the world, and yet neuerthelesse that the wicked may be as it were cursed heere, and their life subiect to many miseries, wheras the wicked shall liue merily and prosper, and triumph and haue whatsoever they wish. Those twoo things (I say) are not repugnat. And why? For Gods iudging of the world is not at our appoynment so as he should bee 10 fayne to execute his iudgements when the toy taketh vs in the head: no: but God is iudge of the world and yet notwithstanding he may well dissemble, so that when me become froward and offend him out of measure, he shall not neede to make any countenance of punishing them, for (as I haue sayd afore) he referueth the iudgement till another tyme, and he is not bound too shewe him self a iudge too day or to morrowe, neither is he like men which lose the occasions of dooing their busynesses. VVhen I haue a thing in hand, and the matter is easie for mee too 20 compasse, if I take not the oportunitie, it slippeth away from mee: and if I woulde do it afterward, I shall come out of tyme. And why? For therby God purposeth too stirre vs vp to be diligent, and to enter when he openeth vs the gate, and too go on when he sheweth vs the way. But as for himself, he must not be subiect to our state, as who shuld say, that if he woork not out of hand, the oportunitie will scape him. No: he can alwayes recouer the tyme, houre, and meane at his owne pleasure. And so let vs mark that we must not conclude that God must pu- 30 nish the wicked in this life, although he bee the iudge of the world. True it is that we may conclude, that he doeth it in part. As how? God is iudge of the world: therfore it followeth that he feeth the misdeeds that are doone, and that he noteth and inrolleth them. Again he hath a care of the good and of such as walk in his feare and seruice and trust in him and call vpon him, and he wil succour them. And in verie deede the faythfull perceyue that God is neere them and watcheth for their safegard. They knowe it by experiee, because he addeth them by some meanes or other. The wicked also doo spye of their teethe feele his hand when he persecuteith them. But is it therfore too besayd that Gods iudgements are alwayes apparent? No. Or that he punisheth every man heere after the measure of his deserts? No. But God giueth some signes wherby it is knownen that all things must come to account before him, and that men must passe through his hands. Also he giueth some tokens, to shewe that he never forgetteth those that are his, but that he hath them vnder his protection and safekeeping. Behold (I pray you) what we 50 haue to conclude when the holie scripture telleth vs that the world is gouerned by Gods prouidence, and all things must bee ordered by him. But (as I haue declared alredy) if we would haue our Lord too shewe vs fully and perfectly as now that he is iudge of men: what should bee referred to the last day, which is our whole hope? VVhen the holie scripture incorageth and exhorteth the faythful to liue well and holily: it sayeth, my freends lift vp your harts to the latter day. For it is impossible for vs to sticke 60 vnto God firmly and stedfastly without swaruing at any time, except we ouerleape the things that are heere beneath, and mouit vp with our mynds, that our anker hold be fastened wholly there. So must it be. Thus then wee see that Job encountered heere, against the false and cursed opinion of the Sadduceis, who thought that God executed not his iudgements but in this transitorie lyfe: and ment too shewe that the wicked may well prosper and haue all things as they would wish, and yet for all that,

that wee must not bee out of quiet as though all thing<sup>s</sup> were gouerned by fortune and that there were nothing but disorder heere bilowe. No: but it behoueth vs to gather our witts toogither, vntill our Lord shewe himself, who is as it were hidden so long as things are confounded, and are not in so good order as wee would desire. Ye see then that God doeth not always shewe his counreñce, and yet in the meane whyle it behoueth vs to see clearer than our naturall senses can. As for example, when it is fowle wether we see not the sunne: and yet we be not so vnwise but wee knowe wellynough that the Sunne shyneth still aboue the clouds. If a man should aske a little child where the Sunne is: he is quite gone, would he say. For he is not so farre lerned as too know that the light which we haue commeth of the Sunne whatsoever let is betwixt the same and vs. But wee that knowe by ex- perience, that the sunne keepeth his ordinarie course af- ter he is vp, notwithstanding that the clouds do take a- way the sight of him from vs: ceasse not to say, The Sunne shyneth, but the wether is not so faire and calme that we can see him where he is hidden. So also when our Lord sendeth troubles into the world, and wee see iniquitie runne abode vnbridled, ouer flowing all things as a wa- terflud and we perceiue not that God is minded to with- stand it, but rather seeme ih too let all things go too ha- uocke, so as good men are borne downe, and God ma- keth no countenance to succoure them although they fight and grone to him: I say when we see all this: it behoueth vs to haue a hygher reache than our owne mootherwit, and to be fully resolued that God will yet still assist vs. And also, forasmuch as we see he suffereth not the world to be vtterly ouerwhelmed but holdeth it still by a secret brydle, so as he restryneth the wicked, and al things passe not into bludshed and murther: let vs assyure our selues that God reigneth still, although it be after a dark maner. Again, do wee see that the good are not ayded and deli- uered at his hand? Yet doeth he maynteyne and preserue them. For without that, they shoulde perish at the first brunt. Although then that they bee tormented with affli- ctions: yet is it not to be sayd that God hath quite turned his backe vpon them, and regardeth them no more. Con- trariwise even in the middes of dark and thicke clouds, he alwayes maketh them feele that he is neere at hand to reskew them at their neede. Therefore it behoueth vs to be alwayes persuaded that God guiderh the sterne, yea even after a secret maner. Thus as now we not only haue Iobs meining: but also we see too what vse and end wee ought to apply his woords, to gather a good lesson of the same. It cannot but greeue vs to see things so farre out of square as they be in this world. For we be as tender and weakeharted as may be. And again wee alwayes inclyne to euill, and on the other side the diuell prouoketh vs to distrust. Then if we see not our Lord represso the wicked, nor correct such as haue doone amisse, nor contrariwise giue releef to the good: surely it may well greeue vs. For it may be that we shall conceyue some sorrowe and hart- burning, and demaund of God why he dissembleth, (for it will seeme that he is asleepe): but yet must wee not be hasty to boyle out after that sort. And why? For our Lord knoweth wel ynough how he should execute his iudgements, and it is not for vs to set him to schoole. No: But now were the tyme or neuer. And who are we? Is it for vs to set any appointment? Again if we say, we haue wayted to long: let vs assyure our selues we looke no fur- ther than before our seete.

But there is yet another life, and the passage wherein wee be as now, is nothing too that. VVhen men haue liued heere never so long, at length they come to the end

Tit.2.d.13 the holie scripture incorageth and exhorteth the faythful to liue well and holily: it sayeth, my freends lift vp your

harts to the latter day. For it is impossible for vs to sticke vnto God firmly and stedfastly without swaruing at any time, except we ouerleape the things that are heere beneath, and mouit vp with our mynds, that our anker hold be fastened wholly there. So must it be. Thus then wee see that Job encountered heere, against the false and cursed opinion of the Sadduceis, who thought that God executed not his iudgements but in this transitorie lyfe: and ment too shewe that the wicked may well prosper and haue all things as they would wish, and yet for all that, of their way, and it is but a small race in comparison of the time that is endlesse and of the life that is euerlasting. So then, when we shall haue considered that men are not only created to be here for a certaine tyme in the circuit which they make, but also that God calleth them further: we wil not thinke that God is too slowe, although he do not at the first dash execute his punishmentes vpon the wicked as were to be desired For (as I haue shewed already) he will soone recover the occasion which we thought too haue ben lost. Lo how wee ought too warre against the 10 lewde fancies that come in our way, when things be not brought to such order as we would well wish. Therfore let vs lerne to knowe, that although to our seeming God woork not at all: yet can he at all tymes finish his woork when he listeth. Only let vs tarrye and be quiet: and the end or falling out will shewe that he was not a sleepe, though we perceyued not that he regarded the things hecre bilowe. Thus then ye see how we ought to practize this lesson of Iobs. And wheras some will say on the one side, If God gouerne the world why redresseth he not the number of euils that are committed? why de'iuereth he not those that are his whom he feyth tormenteth with such extremitie? VVe haue to answer, that it is his will so too exercise the faith and pacientnesse of his children, and that he allureth the wicked and vnbeleeuers vnto him by gentlenesse, howbeit that he make them the more vnexcusable, for turning his goodness into occasion of hardening, and inhaunce their damnatio so much the more. Again, if we be at any time tempted too wish that God should make haste: we must beware that we set not him 30 to his taske. True it is that we may well mourne and say, Lord, how long will it be? But yet must all our desires and requests be ruled by pacience, and we must be subiect too God in all cases, and suffer him to dispoze the whole according to his owne will. VVe may wish: but yet in our wiſhes we must not think to make God subiect too our lustes: but rather thereby give a tryall of our obedience howsoeuer hee woork things otherwise than wee would imagin. Behold which is the true practizing of this lesson of Iobs. Howbeit above all things, let vs always indeuer to be established in the hope of the last judgement. Lo how we ought to procede & to acknowledge that god is righteouse, according as it is his office to gouerne the world. VVhen we haue once lerned those two points, it is a good foundation to build vpon. It is Gods office too gouerne the world: for we must not imagin him to be as any doll. If we acknowlede God to be an incomprehensible Being, so as we can say that God hath all maiestie in himself: and yet in the meane whyle rob him of that which is peculiar to him, & cannot be separed from him: we make him but an ydol and a dead thing. As in good sooth, if he gouerne not all creatures, if all things be not under his dominion, if all things be not ordered by his power and wisdome: I pray you is it not a rending of him in peeces? Is it not a defacing of his maiestie? Yes surely. So then we must be alwayes fully resolued of this point, that God gouerneth, & that al things are directed by his guiding and prouidence. And we must adde yet further, that he is righteouse, so as he gouerneth not after a disordered fashyon, nor vnaduisedly, nother is his reigning al only to shewe an absolute 60 power as tirants do, who to get themselues estimatio, take libertie to do wrongfully and crookedly whatsoeuer they themselues list. But Gods power is such, as is rightly ruled by his righteousnesse. And haue we once these two points: we must thenceforth be stablished in the hope of the resurrection by the troubles that are in this world. How? VVe see how the wicked doo liue and growe old, we see they lead their dayes in mirth, and make greate good cheere, we see that all things happen as they would wiſh, bothe in their children and their cattell, and in their household, so as it shuld seeme that God dandileth them in his armes: and therfore we must conclude that there is another iudgement: and so let vs cheere vp our selues with the hope of the comming of our Lord Iesus Christe. VVe see that good men are vexed and troubled here: and yet are they the heires of the world. And where is the inheriting of it? Sometimes they haue not a bit of bread to eate: they be lured: they call vpon God, and are not deliuered. Therefore wee must thinke that God holdeth backe the shewing of his loue that he beareth towards those that are his, and that he will not as yet in all poynts performe the grace that he hath promised them: to the end that by meanes thereof they might be moued too seeke the heauenly inheritance that is promised them, alwayes laboring and traueling thitherward. So them wheras of our owne nature we be inclined to stumbling, and to starting out of the way, when wee see things misordered: let the same serue too stablish vs, and let it bee as a stroke of the Spurrie to pricke vs forward, that we may drawe still too the sayd heauenly life, and say, well Lord, we see the wicked haue their full scope heere, but yet must not wee envie their prosperitie, for thy curse wayteth to fall horribly vpon them: and therfore it were much better for vs to be miserable, (so that thou keepe vs mercifully in the meane time) than to be wrapped in the confusion which is redie for those that do now triumph. Yea go too Lord, thou hast promised too be a father to vs: wee call vpon thee, and yet we see not thy help at the first push: whereby wee see well Lord, that this is not the place that we must rest in. It is in heauen, it is in heauen then: for that is the place which thou callest vs vnto. And so let vs not regard this present life, nother let it greeue vs to bee tossed with many waues and whirlwinds, sith that by that meane our Lord forceth vs to come vp vnto him, as though he spurred vs. Ye see then the principall vse that we ought to put this text vnto. And so, Job is so farre off heere from ouer-shooting himself as he hath handled the cheef articles of our fayth, by shewing vs that wee must not fight against Gods prouidence, when it sheweth not it self at the first d̄ash, nor followe the fashyon of the Sadducies in appoynting a full perfectnesse of all Gods woorks here bylowe: but contrariwise, alwayes haue an eye to the last resurection, bycause that that is the tyme wherin all things shall bee set in their state, and whatsoeuer is now confuzed, shal then be put in dew order. Furthermore if wee be preuented by any temptation, let vs not lose our corage, but let vs retorne to the conclusion that Job maketh heere. For (as I haue sayd already,) wee feele too much by expe-rience how weake we bee, and that we Faynt out of hand when we haue any temptation that pincheth vs. Therfore when things go crookedly and ouerhwardly, so as we be oppressed and the wicked haue the full scope: verely it will greeue vs and we shall conceyue such a bitternesse in our hart, as will make vs to enter into disputation as Job doeth heere. Then shall wee surely fall intoo disputing, for it cannot bee but that wee shall bee troubled at the first syght, and say, what meeneth this geere? what intendeth God to doo? But wee must not abyde there: and therfore when wee haue disputed, and asked what this geere meeneth, let vs come too that which the holie scripture sheweth vs, which is that if God kept so vnchaungeable an order here as nothing might be out of square: where should our Paradise bee? what fayth, what hope should we haue more? Howbeit for somuchas our Lord mindeth too traine vs further, he leaueth things in dousfull balance as now, so as we may say, where are we? but but that is to the intent we shold haue an eye to the resurrection. VVherfore let vs not be discoraged although our nature be greatly inclined to many evill temptations: but let vs lerne to resist them, and let our conclusion bee such as Job maketh heere: that is it to say, that although we haue bee shaken at the first brunt, yet neuerthelesse we may conclude, that God is rightuouse in all his doings: and that although he delay his iudgements, yet for all that he forgoeth the occasion of executing the whē he listeth. For his forbearing of the wicked, is but a taryng til their turne to be fully come. Thus ye see what we haue to mark in this sentence. Now Job hauing already spoken of the prosperitie of the wicked, sayeth heere exprefly, That they runne after the sound of the Taber and flute, and daunce at the sound of the Organs, and lend their dayes in mirth and gladnesse, & go downe into the graue in the twinkling of an eye. Here Job meeneth to exprefse somewhat more than he had doone afore in saying that the wicked liue and growe old, and al things fall out as they would wish: namely, that they also for their part do take the benefite of the time, and as it were besotte themſelues with the good things that God ſendeth the. They be two diuerſe things to haue helth, offspring, cattell, greate poſſeſſions, riches, and honour: and to take ſuch pleaſure in the as to ſet ones whole felicitie in them. VVhyſo? Abraham was riche, healthie, & ſtrong of bodie, as Iacob reporteth well of it, in that he ſayth that his owne dayes were vnhappie in comparison of the dayes of his fathers. Ye ſee then that Abraham was ſtrong and in good lyking, and alſo it was promiſed him that he ſhould die in a good and luttie old age, whē he was ſatiſtied with liuing here bilowe. He was riche: for althoſh he had no inheritaſce nor poſſeſſion: yet had he bothe a greate house-hold, and much cattell as the scripture ſheweth. But was he in the meane whyle besotted in them? was he bleared with his riches? No: but he was as a wayfarer in this world he knew that God caſled him to a further thing, he groūded not hiſelf vpon his owne strength, he was not like thoſe that royst it out and play the looce colts whyle God giueth them lustineſſe and helth of bodye: but he was alwayes as a man well tamed before God, ceaſing not too humble hiſelf, ſo as his examplic may do vs verie good ſeruice. But when the worldlings and ſuch as looke no further than the earth, haue riches and bodily helth, they become ſo drunken with it, as they forget themſelues and regard God no more. And like as we ſee that at one table a stayed man will well and soberly take his repaste of that which is there, without misbehauing of hiſelf: and another wil glut hiſelf till he burſt, ſpecially if there be ſtore of wine: and as we ſee ſome labour nothing ſo much as to play the very beaſts, and it ſeemeth to themſelues that their throte is not wide ynough to guzle in wine, but they ſtreyne themſelues as it were vpon the racke, to fill their paunches the better: euen ſo ſome men may haue greate proſperitie and yet wil not burſt out into excefſe, but will alwayes hold themſelues in feare and awe. But the wicked (as Job ſayeth here) will abuse Gods benefits and gifts, & when he doeth as it were lay the brydle in their necks: then they fling ouer all the feeld, and think not that there is any more ſubiection for them: inſomuch as they frisk about at the ſound of the Taber and the Flute and there is none other talk with them but of dauncing & making good cheere, wherat they play the brute beaſts altogether. This was it that Job met to vtter in this ſentēce. And wheras he maketh vs a diſcription of the despizers of God, ſhewing vs them as in a picture: it is to the end we ſhuld lerne too retire out of ſuch brutiſhneſſe. And therefore when God giueth vs abundance of welth: let vs lerne not to ſotte our ſelues in it, but to walk continually in feare, holding our ſelues in awe and being watchfull. For (as S. Paule ſayeth) wee bee nor the children of darkneſſe. 1.Theſ.5.a.5 God hath inlyghtened vs with his woord, and he will haue vs to walk as at hygh none day. Thus ye ſee what we haue to marke in this ſtreyne. Again when God ſendeth vs not our eaſe and pleaſures: Let vs vnderſtand that he cutteth vs our morsells bycause he ſeeth that we bee not able too diet our ſelues. A man will not giue his chyld more to eate than he knowes is meeete for him: if he doo he ſhall cough mee a foole: and euē ſo doeth God deale with vs. He hath hiſ hand alwayes reached out too dooys good, and he is no nigard of hiſ expenſes as though he were afrayd that he ſhould want hiſelf: but when he ſeeth our luſtes diſorderd, ſo as there is no rule nor meaſure in them: he handleth vs as he hiſelf ſees best for vs, by giuing vs a conuenient portion. Then let vs knowe that if we haue not wherwith to make greate cheere, nor wherwith to feede our pleaſures: it is Gods dooing too cut vs out our pittāce. For he knoweth what our ſtomack can brucke, and that abundāce would but marre vs. Thus ye ſee what we haue to marke in the ſecond part of this ſentēce where it is ſaid, that the wicked runne after the ſound of the Taber and the Flute. Neuertheleſſe wee ſee it is no noueltie in the children of this world to exceede meaſure in the vanities which God condēneth, as in dauncing and ſuch other like loocenesſe: it hath ben ſo at all times. For the diuell (all whose drifts tend to blind men and to drawe them from the regarding of God and from the ſpirituall life) hath had theſe knacks from time to time, and men haue willingly folowed that which they haue liked of and which pleased the flesh. Therefore wheras nowadays we ſee many men ſeek nothing but to royst it, inſomuche as they haue none other countenance but in ſeeking to hoppe and daunce like ſtray beaſts, and to doo ſuch other like things: let vs vnderſtand that it is not of late beginning, but that the diuell hath reigned at all times. Howbeit let vs knowe also, that the euill is neuer the more too be excused for the auncietneſſe of it. Men haue alwayes doone ſo: yea, and that was bycause the diuell hath alwayes reigned: but muſt God therfore bee quite diſpoſeffed? Furthermore (as ſhall bee declared more fully to morrowe by Gods leaue) it is true that the Flute and the Taber and ſuch other like things are not to be condemned ſimply of their owne nature: but only in reſpect of mennes abuſing of them, for moſt commonly they peruer the good uſe of them. For certaiſly the Taber doeth no ſooner ſounde to make miſ merrie, but there is alwayes lightly ſome vaniti, I ſay not ſuperfluouſe, but beaſtly. For behold men are ſo caried away, as they can not ſport theſelues which a moderate mirth, but they fling themſelues into the ayre as though they would leape out of themſelues. Thus then Job meint to note heere a curſed mirth and a mirth that God condemnethe. VVherby we ought too take warning too reſtreyne our ſelues, and wheras we ſee there are many whoſe whole deliht is too ſeeks ſuch paſtymes, let vs ſay, a miſcheef on them. And if we wil not haue the ſame curſe too light vpon our ſelues: let vs lerne to abſent our ſelues from ſuch looce and wanton paſtymes: but let vs rather aduiledly reſtreyne our ſelues, and ſet God alwayes before our eyes, to the end that he may bliſſe our mirth, and we ſo uſe hiſ benefits, as we may neuer ceaſe to trauell vp too heauenward. Thus ye ſee how it behoueth vs to apply all our mirth to this end, namely that there may be a melodie ſounding in vs wherby the name of God may be bliſſed and glorified in our Lord Iefus Christe.

too make vs so too feele them, as wee may bee hartely sorie for them, and in returning vnto him desire him to mortifie our whole nature, ruling all our thoughts and affectiōs by his righteousnesse, and making vs new creatures, to the end we may so passe through this world, as we may not be hindered by any stumblingblocks and bylets that are in it, nor cumbered and thrust out of the way by the miseries that we haue to indure here, nor by the aduersities that God sendeth, nor tempted by the prosperitie of the wicked: but that we may fight stoutly against all temptations, euē till he gather vs into his heauenly rest, and make vs inioy the inheritance that he hath promised vs, wherof we bee yet destitute for a time, that our fayth and hope might be exercized. That it may please him to graunt this grace not only to vs, but also to all people and Nations of the world, reducing the poore ignorant persons from the miserable capitiuite and bondage, &c.

The.lxxx.Sermon,which is the third vpon the.xxj. Chapter.

This Sermon conteyneth the reste of the declaration of the xij. verse, and so forth of the texte that here followeth.

13. They spend their dayes in vvelth, and sodenly they go dovvne to the graue.
14. And yet they say vnto God, depart from vs: for we desire not to knowv thy vwayes.
15. VVho is the almighty, that vve should serue him? or vwhat shall it profit vsto pray vntoo him?

T was yesterday declared, that Job here speaketh of those that abuse the benefits which God bestoweth vpon them during this mortall life, so as they be caried away with pleasure, and are as it were dronken therewith. And hereby we ought to take warning so to reioyce, that there be always a measure in vs, and that wee bridle our selues. For the thing that ought moste too put vs in remembrance of God, is the receyving of the benefits that he bestoweth vpon vs, which thing ought to drawe vs vnto him and make vs too loue him. Contrariwise we see that they which reioyce without measure and ordre, forget God, and are so glad that they thinke no more on him, neyther will any more be subiect vntoo him. So then let vs folow this modestie or meane that I haue spoken of, and learne so to moderate all our pleasures, that we bee not caried away with the world. And thervithall also, bycause here is mention made of the flute, of the taboret; harpe, and other instruments of musike: let vs note, that the things which of their owne nature bee good, ought not by vs to be put too an euill vse. As musike of it self cannot be condemned: but forasmuch as the world doeth almost alway abuse it, we ought to bee so much the more circumspect, and this place warneth vs thereof. VVee see at this day that they which vse musike do swell with poysone against God, they become hardharted, they wil haue their songs, yea and what maner of songs? full of all villanie and ribauldrie. And afterward they fall to dauncing, which is the cheefest mischeef of all. For there is alway such vnchaste behauour in dauncing: that of it self and as they abuse it, (too speake the truth at one word,) it is nothing else but an enticement too whoredome. So then it is not without a cause, that Job intending too declare that the children of this world, and the despisers of God doo passe measure in their reioyings, speaketh of the sounde of the taboret, of the flute, and of other instruments of musike. As I haue already touched, he doeth not so condemne these things, as though they were euill of their owne nature: but he considereth the abuse that therein is committed: for men do never so well kepe measure, as to vse musike modestly. This vice then is here to bee noted, to the end that we may so thinke of it, as wee may take some profit thereby. To be breefe, let vs as long as we list excuse the vanities that are committed in musike: yet do we see that the spirit of God condemneth them, bycause that men delight to much in them: and when they set their delight and pleasure in these base & earthlie things, they thinke not a whit vpon God, nother do they ascribe the whole vnto him.

This is the summe of that which we haue to note out of this place. Now at length it is sayd, that God will suffer the despisers of his maesticie too go too their graue in a minute of an houre, after that they haue spent their whole life in greate ioye and pleasure. This thing also is very well noted in the threescore and thirteenth Psalme, al- Psa.73.4.4 though he vseth an other similitude there, which is, that the wicked go too their death without any impeachmente or hinderance, and that they haue nother bands nor cords. And therby the Prophet ment to shew, that the children of God in this world doo nothing but pine awaie and hang the wings: for sicknesse and diseases, and other such like things are as it were bands that drawe vs vnto death, and pull vs backe again from it. On the one side, when we be sicke, we see that death threateneth vs: for we are thereby taught how fraile a thing our life is: yea they are all of them messengers which God sendeth too saye vntoo vs: Prepare your selues: for you haue nothing certaine nor sure in this worlde. These then are the bands of death which drawe vs vntoo him.

And again we go on pinying and cannot die: yea a man would thinke sometyme that wee should not liue half a yare to an end at the mooste, and yet we go forth on, and in the meane season the disease continueth still with vs. This we see in the children of God, but in that whyle the wicked spend their tyme in mirth and ioye, yea they are lustie and full of courage: and when they come to their death, it seemeth that (euē as they would wish) they lay them downe to sleepe. This will seeme very strange: but let vs kepe in remembrance, that which hath be already declared: that is to wete, how Job ment to shewe, that although God punish not all trespasses here in this world: yet must we not thinke that he is a sleepe, nor that he hath giuen ouer his office: And why? because he deferreth to give iudgement vntill this presente life be past. Yee see then how we must liste vp our mindes aboue this fraile life, knowing that when a man hath in this world gotten all that hee would desire: yet ceaseth he not too bee miserable, nother must wee therefore attribute any felicitie vnto him. And why? because he must come before his judge. And therefore let vs

let vs not be tempted too become like vntoo those that despise God, and giue themselues too sporte and plaine, so as they become dronken in their pleasures. But let vs rather desire to be miserable, and too taste of Gods goodnessse, and be contented therwith, knowing that our chieff felicitie, is that he loue vs and bee mercifull vnto vs : & that we lerne to looke vnto this heauenly heritage. This is it whereof the faithfull are admonished in this place. Now herepon Job sheweth, that the wicked do vsterlie reiecte God. They say vnto him, depart from vs: for we desire not to knowe thy wayes. Truth it is that the wicked wil not spew out such blasphemie as to renouee God: but in effect they do well declare how they passe little of him, and desire nothing else but to be rid from his subiection: and although they cannot bring that to passe, yet they labour to go as farre from him as they ca: this we see. And for professe therof, when men liue without remorse of conscience, and willingly and wittingly become brute beastes, so as they make no differéce betwene good and euill, but thinke that all things are laufull: is it not as much as too say vnto God, departe from vs: For if God be neere vs, we must haue him before our eyes as our iudge, nother must we thinke or say anie thing but as if it were in his presence, nother must we atiēte any thing but as thogh we wold be iudged by him. Then as for all such as would haue libertie to liue as they list: It is all one as if they wold drive God farre off from them, and haue none acquaintance with him. And verely the next wordes, (namely we will none of thy wayes) declare the thing which we haue heere to vnderstand. For to be neere vnto God, or to go farre from him, is not referred too the maiestie of God: For his diuine being sheweth not it self, it is not visible vnto Creatures. True it is that we may well haue some vnderstanding of it, and we may knowe that his being is infinite, and spreadeth out euery where: but yet notwithstanding the cheef knowledge that we haue of God, is by his vertues, wherethrough he communicateth himself vnto vs, and cheefely in that he telleth vs his will, and teacheth vs what maner of one he is, and sheweth vs how we ought to walke, and how our life ought to be ruled. Behold, we be then neere vnto him, when we suffer our selues to be taught by his woord, acknowledging that it is he which speaketh and sheweth himself familiarily vnto vs, too the end wee should come vnto him, and there rest our selues. Furthermore when men will noryeld themselves teacheable, but refuze all instruction, and desire to be stark doltes, so as if a man bring them any good doctrine they make no account of it: then in stede of drawing neere vntoo God, men withdrawe themselves from him. And therfore I sayd, that Job declareth here the thing which he had intended afore: that is too wit, that inasmuch as the wicked and the despisers of God, are loth to submit themselves to Gods wayes: they withdrawe themselves from him as much as they can. Therfore, we will none of thy wayes (say they) that is to say, get thee away from vs. And this is a text wherof wee may gather a good and profitable lesson. For first of all it is shewed vs here, what is the roote and foundation of good life: namely too haue God before our eyes. True it is that we cannot eschewe him: no: but it beho ueth vs on our parte, too come neere vntoo him. And this is the cause why that when the holy scripture intendeth to signifie that a man hath led a holy life, it sayeth that he hath had God before his eyes: and contrariwise

Gen.5.e.22. when it sayeth that a man hath turned his backe to God, Iere.2.f.27. it sheweth that he regarded not God, or that he had no mind of him, and it is all one as if it were sayd, that a man is runne astray, and giuen ouer to al euyll, and finally past recoverye. This maner of speaking therfore is a notable thing. VVhy so? wee be inclined alreadye by nature vntoo all vncleanesse. And how can wee get out of it? It is a hard thing for men too aker themselues, and too offer force and violence too all their pleasures and delights, so as a man might knowe them to be renewed, and say that they bee no more the men that they were. This I say is a hard thing. For a man will alwayes run farre astray intoo euill, if there bee not a wonderfull power and force too make him turne head, and to giue ouer his owne will, witte and reason. And (as I haue sayd afore) men will continually go forward vnto euyll vntill they bee reformed. And who is he that shall reforme them? They cannot do it of themselues, nother is there any creature that can bring it to passe. Therefore God must be fayne too worke. There is no way too helpe it but Gods presence, so as a man may be broughte to say in himself, go too, it behoueth me too walke before my God, who is my iudge, and I can by no meanes escape his hand. If a man haue that consideration: then may he fight against all his wicked lustes, so that whereas he had bene giuen too all euill; he shall bee ready to followe all good. Again besides that our wicked affections do cary vs away, we be also so blinded that enery of vs maketh himself beleue, that euill is good and we discerne not vntill God enlighten vs. For so long as we walke one after another, we be like mice in the chaffe, as the proverb sayeth: that is too say, there is no order amongs vs, but euery man will abuse his neyghbour: we are like wretched beastes: he that goeth before guideth the way very ill, like a poore blinde man, and is like too deceiue them that go as they were wont to go: for we make custome a lawe. Then is there no other means too shew vs which is the right way, but too looke vnto God, and to haue him neere vnto vs. You see two reasons that do well declare vnto vs, that this thing is more than necessary for vs. Let every man the present him self before God, let vs drawe neere vnto him, and let vs take heed that we estrange not our selues from him: for this is the only bridle that can tame vs, and that can subdue vs too that which is good: whereas otherwise we should take a beastly libertie, which would drawe vs to euyl. And again, God which giueth vs wisdome and discretion, knoweth very well what is good for vs, and what is necessary to stay vs, to the end that none of vs shoud wander in his owne folishe fantasies, but folow Gods plain will which is the rule of all righteousnesse and equitie. So then will we walke as it becommeth vs? Let vs begin at this ende, that is too say, let vs drawe neare vnto our God. How shall wee drawe neare vntoo him? First let vs knowe that there is nothing hid from him, that all things must come to accoumpte before him, and that he muste be the iudge enen of our thoughts also: and thus much concerning the first. Furthermore, let Heb. 4. 12.

the worde of God. For our chefest felicitie is that God draw neere vnto vs, and we vnto him. And how shall this be done, and by what meanes? It is done when he on his parte commeth downe to vs, deliuering his worde vnto vs, and doeth testifie vnto vs that he will dwell amongst vs: and when we receiue this worde, it is as much as if we received God, and did him homage, too the end that he might raygne ouer vs. For as much the as God is present with vs by the means of his worde, we see that there can no greater misfortune happen vnto vs, than whē God suffreth vs to wāder in our own fatasies without his guiding, & whē we haue not the doctrine of saluatiō by the which he draweth vs vnto him. And contrariwise the greatest and most inestimable tesor that we haue, is that God governeth vs, that we be taught his will, that we haue a certaine testimonie that he wil receive vs vnto him self as his people. But this the world knoweth not: & therfore so much the more is this place well to be noted of vs. Furthermore let vs know, that all they which are stubborne, and cannot bow their necks vnder Gods yoake, do as much as thrust him far from them. Truth it is that they think themselves greatly iniuried when men call them mortall enimies to God, and say that they seke nothing else but to thrust him out of all authoritie, that they might more easely tread him vnder fote. Oh (say they) we mean no such thing, yea but will they make the holy Ghost a liar, who hath plainly taught, that all they which will not submit themselves to the doctrine of salvation, fight against god to the vttermost of their power, & wold banish him out of the world, and cannot abide that he should raigne, and enjoy his authoritie: you see what the holy Ghost sayth of the. For as much then as the case standeth so: if we will not be guiltie of such a sacrilege, let vs learne to humble our selues: and whensoeuer God sendeth his worde amongst vs, let vs tremble at it, and therby declare that we seke nothing else but to be present with our God, always to beholde him, and to walke as they that know very wel that we must make an accompt of our whole life before him, and that we can not escape his hādes. And moreover let vs long for the presence of God. For it is not inough that we haue our eyes vpon God: but we must desire to be alwaies in his sight & vnder his guiding, for sometime the most wicked will haue an eye vnto God, but it shal be as the galey slauess doo, who fall to rowing when they see themselves fast chayned and surely beaten: then they must needs do it, but it is of force and constrainte. So the wicked when God speaketh, do knowe that he is present there: but if it laye in them they wold destroy his Godhead which is against them, they would also thrust God out of his kingdom, or else they would flee from him, as the holie scripture reporteth of them, that they shall say vnto the mountains, Couer vs. You see how the wicked do alwaies flee from the presence of God, because it is terrible vnto them. Now on our behalf (as I haue sayd) we must not only knowe that he is neere vnto vs, but we must desire always to be in his presence, knowing that our state and condition is miserable, when God doth not beholde vs. VVhether can we go but into distractiō, when God is not our safegarde? For if we think to saue our selues, wher is our assurance? what guides are we? So then let vs lerne to praye vnto our God, that he neuer departe from vs what soever happen: And that we may so do, let vs pray him to make vs feele and taste the infinite goodnessse which is in him, that through his inlighthening of vs by his worde we may knowe that he is the iudge of the whole world, and that we must render an accompt before him, not only of all our doings (as we haue sayd) but also of all our thoughts. Truth it is that by this only we cannot be drawnen vnto him with our good willes. VVhat must we do then? we must acknowledge him too be our father, as in deed he sheweth himself so. VVhē we know him so good and pitiful: it is certaine that we will seek boldely to come neere vnto him: and when we be come thither, we wil desire nothing els but to cōtinue there euē to the end, and by no meanes in the worlde to swarue frō him. Thus much we haue to note out of this place: namely that not only we should haue God before our eyes, but that also we should desire him to looke vpon vs and too guide vs. Now after that Job hath here shewed forth such blasphemie of the wicked and despizers of God: he addeth moreover, that they say: what is the almighty that we should serue him, and what profit shall we get by praying vnto him? Here Job setteth out the pride that is in all the faithles and wicked men. And it is a place worthie to be noted: for the holy scripture sheweth, that the principall vice that is in all the wicked, is this pride: as contrariwise humilitie is the chiefest vertue that is in the faithfull. And why: for if we haue this humilitie, besides that therby we learne to be displeased with our selues, yea wholly to cōdemne our selues, and to spoile our selues of all opiniō of vertue, and to come vnto our God to seke our whole felicitie in him: besides this (I say) we shal know that it behoueth vs to be subiects vnto him that hath all rule ouer vs. You see then how humilitie is the mother and roote of al vertues. On the contrarie parte, when pride beareth rule in men, they must needs in their whole life be frowarde, and wicked. Now this pride is here attributed too the faithlesse. For first of all they conceiue meruelously of them selues, they trust in their owne wisdom. And we see that they ca never come to an end, because they are so puffed vp with presumptiō: For they will be wise, yea in despite of God, and they think they should abase themselves to much, if they should forsake their owne judgement for to harken to that which is set forth vnto them in the name of God. And farther, haue they such confidence in their wisdome? Then will they giue themselves the bridle in all their delights and pleasures: & if they be reproud therfore, they think they are greatly iniuried. You see the that the faithlesse are always drowned in presumptiō: & for this cause the prophet Habacuk setteth this hautinessse against faith, Hab. 2. 4. signifying therby that faith alwaies leadeth men to a true humilitie and obedience: and contrariwise that a faithlesse man must needs alwaies exalt and lift vp himself against God: for it is impossible for him to do otherwise. And therfore it is not without cause, that Job here speaking of the wicked, armeth the with such pride, that they think they should not subinit theselues to God: but say, who is the Almighty that we should serue him? Truth it is they will not vtter such words with their mouth, excepte God discouer them: as sometimes it happeneth that the ypoerites spew out horrible things. And then who is the cause therof? it is God that constraineth them. For they wold gladly hide themselves, to the end that their filthinesse might not be knownen to the worlde: but God will not suffer it, according to that which is said, that they, who when they know God, did not glorifie him as God, are deliuered vnto a reprobate mynde, so as they are giuen to all wickednesse, and get themselves an euil name through their owne follie. God then will sometime suffer the wicked to speake as is here sayd of them: but although they holde their peace, and make goodly protestations that they will serue God: yet in their heart they beare such spite against God, that they wish he had none authoritie ouer them, saying in themselves, what is the Almighty that we should serue him? As for example, the worst men that can bee chosen, will say at the first, that there there is one God, and that it is meete he should be honored of vs. Yea in generall termes they will indeede confess so much: but whē they come to the clozing(as they say)and that a man goeth about to rule them, and sayeth vnto them: what hath not God declared his wil vnto vs, in what sort he will haue vs to walke? then you shall see they will not heare on that side. If a man would pull a couerous person from his couetousnesse, or reprove an ambitious man of his vice, or a whoremonger, dronkard, or blasphemer of their faultes: by and by they kicke against God: for they would fayne haue full libertie to do euil. And although they do not vtter these wordes with their mouth: What is the Almighty? yet do they swel like toades, and will not yelde themselues to be subiect vnto God. Here then we see that Job accuseth not onely them which with open mouth haue vttered this blasphemie whereof he speaketh: but also all those that are so swollen in theselues (as they say) and are filled with such arrogancie, that they will not humbly submit themselues to God, nor acknowledge it meete that he should haue soueraintie ouer them. To be short, if we will not be condemned with these men: we muste compare God with our selues: that is, forasmuch as he is our creatour, wee muste acknowledge, that he ought to haue the whole dominion, and all things ought to be subiect vnto him. And thus much more for an item: that seing he hath redeemed vs by the death and passion of his onely begotten Sonne, he hath well deserued too haue all soueraintie ouer vs. And now that he hath purchased vs so dearly, we must no more be addicted to our selues, but be wholly dedicated to his seruice. Furthermore for as much as he is our father, wee muste bee his children. And for this cause also he sayeth by his Prophete Malachie: if I bee your Lord where is the feare? if I be your father where is the loue and the honour that you owe vnto me. By this God declareth that we can not be truely his subiects, vntill we acknowledge the right that he hath ouer vs, and giue him all his titles and dignities. He is our Mayster and Lorde: we must then giue him all reuerence: and seing that we acknowledge him to be our father, it is very meete that we should honour him, yea with a true loue. For a childe, (if he be not such a wicked monster as euery man abhorreth and detesteth,) will honour his father, which it is certaine he can not do, vnlesse he loue him. You see then how we must looke vnto God. And when wee be so come to our selues, (alas poore creatures that wee bee,) what is there in man whereof he may glorie? There is nothing in him but cursednesse. And yet for all that, how hath God honored vs? He hath created vs after his owne image and likenesse: & although this image be blotted out in vs by the sinne of Adam, and we bring nothing frō our mothers wombe but the curse: yet had God created vs after his owne image. And this is one very great and excellent honor. And beside that, he hath vouchsafed to redeeme vs by the bloud of his onely begotten Sonne Iesu Christe, whom he woulde not spare. And moreouer he hath called vs to be of his housholde: and not only to his seruice, but as his owne children and heires. VVhen we shall then haue made these comparisons, if we had harts of yron or steele, should they not (I pray you) be softened? Yf we should swell with arrogancie so that we should burst withall; ought not all this poyson to be purged, and we with true humilitie come to the obedience of God? And for this cause, when he intendeth to make vs willing to obey his commaundements, and to acknowledge the auctoritie that he hath ouer vs,

2.* he vseth this preface in his lawe: I am the Eternall thy God. VVhen he sayeth I am the Eternall, he bringeth vs backe to our creation to shew vs, what we are, I haue fashioned you (sayeth he) of nothing as I haue created this world, and you are but a parte thereof. You muste then holde your being of me: and if you do me homage, and knowe me for your creator, you will tremble vnder me. Nowe when he hath thus spoken, he sayeth farther, I am thy God, to shew that he is a father of his people, and of all those whom he wil instruct by his worde. And this fatherhood ought (as I haue sayd) to bring vs to a louing reuerence. And then thirdly he rehearseth the benefites by the which he had made his people bounden vnto him.

VVeli, now there are greater and more excellent benefites bestowed vpon vs: for he hath not drawen vs from an earthly bondage, but from the depth of hell: and that not by Moyses, but by our Lorde Iesu Christ. Seing it is so, we see how wee be by all meanes bounden vnto him.

And therefore it is not meete that henceforth we should be any more addicted to our selues, but every man should be ready wholly to dedicate himselfe to the seruice of God. And concerning this that Job addeth moreouer, it is certaine if wee knowe what is taught vs in the holy Scripture, we will not say any more, what profitte is there in praying vnto him? Our Lord might well say vnto vs, serue me, do that which I comandaunde you, without setting forth vnto vs any hyre or reward: for we are bounden vnto him, as we are taught: when you haue done al-that shall be comandaunded you, yet are you vnproufitable seruants: that is to say, God shall never be in our dette, but we are bounden to giue our selues wholly vnto him,

God might then simple comande without adding any promisse: and yet he doth applice himselfe vnto vs, and se-ing wee could not bee brought to serue him vnlesse he made vs some promisse: when he sayeth serue me, he addeth and I will be your father, I will be the defender of your life, I will ayde you in all your necessities. And besides this, he is not content with all these promises: for in indeed they shold not auayle vs, vnlesse he went farther:

which thing he doth when he sayeth, I will forgive you your sinnes, I will receyue you to me in mercie, I will blot out all your iniquities: and afterward I will uphold you, and although you be frayle, and serue me not altogether as you ought to do, yet will I take well in worth this halfe seruice that you do mee: for I am your father: I will not straightly examine your doings. Thus many promises then doth God make vs to bind vs vnto him, hereby it is seene that we haue none excuse to say, what profitte is it to serue God? for though we flee from him, yet can wee not be without a mayster. They that wil walke at randon, and (as they say) with the bridle let loose, spite of their teeth they shall serue, but it shall be their owne lustes, and the Diuell. The heathen men could say that the most miserable seruice, and straightest bondage that is amongst men, is to be subiect to their owne vices: lo-thus haue the Heathenmen themselues spoken of these diuelish mistresses the lustes. Is it not then more than shame for vs, bcyng tauȝt by the woerde of God, that we wil be halfe Kings, & haue such an vnbridled liber-tie as there can be nothing more vnrule, then euē to do what we lust? Now it is certaine (as I haue sayde) that we could be in no more miserable and cursed bondage. And beside that, the Diuell hath the whole rule ouer vs, so that wee can not escape his subiectiōn, when wee will be exempted from righteousnesse. And this is it that S. Paule meaneth when he sayeth in the 6. to the Romanes, you were freed onely from righteousnesse. He vseth this similitude of bondmen, who in times paste were franchy-sed that they might be no more subiect to their maisters, but bee of a franke and free state and condition. And so,(sayeth he) when men had not Iesus Christ,they were freed : so as they had libertie too do euill, and were not subiect too the righteousnesse of God, but what then ? were you therefore in true libertie ? Nay, cleane contrary,(sayeth he)you serued sinne, whiles you tooke no hold vpon the righteousnesse of God. And now in what case are you ? he directeth his talke to the faithful, and sayeth, you are ashamed when you thinke vpon your life that is passed:now you know that the Diuell had rule ouer you, and that it was to your ruyne and destruction. You are ashamed in your selues, when you call too remembrance that you were so forsaken of God, and wandred like brute beastes. Such is the state and condition of all those that exempt themselues from the seruice of God. On the contrarie part, when we serue our God,it is certaine that that seruice is more honorable than to enjoy a kingdom, as here before hath bene declared. God doth not call vs to the end that we shou'd be in the state and condition of seruants : but to take vs for his owne children. Seing then it is so, wee see very well that it is no losse labour to giue our selues to the seruice of God, neither muste wee any more alledge and say,what profite shall we get thereby? seeing that our Lorde and maister doth tell vs, that all our blessednesse is to walke in his feare. And contrarywise there can no greater misfortune happē vnto vs, than to exempt our selues from his seruice ? Thus much then we haue to note. Furthermore lete vs extende this same farther, as Job also doth : for he meaneth,that the wicked when they are in prosperitie, giue themselues too spore and play, and thinke that it i. all one to liue well or ill, 30 and making a mocke at God,thinke that he fauoreth the, if at the first stroke he do not throwe them downe. And howe ? when God spareth the wicked that passe their bounds in their wicked doings : therevpon they become harde harted. And why ? they thinke that all goeth well with them when they doo not perceiue Gods plagues :

Ecclesi. 8. b. ii. they begin to despise and to rebell(sayth Salomon) you see then how the wicked thinke that there is no profit in seruing of God,& that it is much better for them to giue themselues to euill, when God at the first doth not execute his iudgements. Now on the contrarie part,we must thus conclude in our selues,as the Prophet Esay speaketh

Esay. 5. b. 10. of it, say yee, surely it shall go well with the righteous. Therefore when wee see a confusion of all things in this worlde, and it seemeth vnto vs but a mockerie to serue God : yet muste we still continue in this sure perswasion that our Lord and maister will not disapoynt them that wayte vpon him, and that they haue not bene led with a wayne hope,in looking for a reward at his hand : but that

Psalm. 16. 4. 5. they may say with Dauid, the Lord is my reward as also 50 he sayeth vnto Abraham, Abraham walke before me,for

Gen. 15. 4. 1. I am thine exceeding great rewarde. Thus must we fight against this temptation which is very common, namely that men begin to mistrust the promise of God, when they see the wicked prosper,while the poore faithfull are afflieted and tormented on euery side. VVel there is yet an other woord to note:which is,that after that Job hath spoken of the seruice of God, in the second place he setteth here prayer,that is to say, the reverence that men do vnto God in humbling themselues vnder hi'n, and in making request vnto him. It is not without cause that Job did vse this worde. Truth it is that God will be honored and serued of vs in charitié,brothe'ly loue,temperāce,humilitie, & other such like things : he will haue vs to loue one an other,to seeke to relieue our neighbours, and euery man to submit himself to that which is comauanded him,as his calling requireth: and to liue togither, and euery man to applie him self to his labour without deceyuing any man.

This is the seruice of God, and they are all of the acceptable sacrifices vnto him : but yet to serue God wel, wee must begin at this end, namely to honour him in giuing him the prayse that is due vnto him: and that is done by supplication and prayer : As for example : if a man walke without doing any euill, so as he can not be accused that he hath deceyued any man, that he hath bene cruell, that he hath troubled his neyghbour, nor can bee conuinced either of whoredome,or of drunkēnesse, but(to be short) 10 hath absteyned from all notable vices in the sight of men, and yet haue nother religion, nor fayth in his harte, but hath quite forsaken God : shall his life(for all this) be accepted of God ? No : for it is nothing but vanitie : all this is nothing but filthinesse before God. And why ? what is it to haue giuen vnto men that which appertayneth vnto them : and to deceyue God, & robbe him of his preeminence and authoritie ? And shoulde not God haue a greater priuiledge without comparison,than al creatures? So then it is not without cause that Job minding to shew what i. the true seruice of God, putteth downe this speciaall kinde of seruice(to weete prayer,)when we come to present our selues before him in prayer . According to this, the holy scripture sheweth that it is the chiefe sacrifice which God requireth of vs: as it is sayd in the fiftith Psalm, that he hath refused al the ceremonies, wherwith the hypocrites make a shew of seruing him. For whē they haue done many goodly outward things:they thinke that God is greatly bounde to heare them. VVhat is it then that God requireth of vs ? Cali vpō me in the day of thy neede,& I will heare thee: and so shal thou glorifie mee. Psalm. 50. 40 c.15.

The chiefe seruice therfore that God requyreh of vs, is that we call vpon him, knowing that when we come vnto him in truth, he will make vs partakers of all his benefites, and so gouerne vs by his spirite, that we shall never be bereft of his graces. For this cause then Job minding to shewe what is the seruice of God, sayeth that to pray vnto him is a thing moste excellent of all . To be short, wee learne hereby, that if wee intend to leade a well disposed life, and suche a one as God alloweth and accepteth, wee muste first of all put our trust in him, knowing that wee bee wretched creatures, when wee haue not recourse vnto hi' goodnessse . But contrarywise if we stay our selues vpon it,wee shall want nothing that he knoweth to be expedient for our saluation. Furthermore lete vs take heede that we give good example to al men, that wee be not cruel to our neighbours, but rather indeuer to helpe them at all times and in all caces, bearing with the weake, and communicating the things that we haue, vnto the needie. VVhen our life is thus ruled : that is a true seruice of God. But if wee robbe God of his honour and make a pretence to serue him, and yet liue like Cates and Dogges among our selues : it is true that with our mouth wee shall make protestation that wee serue God, but it will appear in deede that we are his mortall enimies, and that there is nothing in vs but rebelliousnesse, and that wee do nothing but make warre against him al our life long.

Now lete vs fall downe before the face of our good God with acknowledgement of our fau'rs, praying him to make vs feele them better ihan wee haue heretofore done, to the ende we may be sorie for them, and therewithall seeke the remedie in him : so that being purged and clenzed from our sinnes, wee may seeke nothing els but to cleane vnto his righteousnesse : And that we may so do, let vs always looke vnto him, knowing well that he hath placed vs in this world to the e d that we should always go forwarde vnto him, yea in suche sorte as we doubt not but that he hath a fatherly care ouer vs. And in

in the meane season let vs desire to be instructed by his woerde, and that he would alwayes lighten vs, not onely in our outward workes, but also in all our thoughts and affectiōs, so that with harte and minde we may be wholly given to him, to the ende that his holy name may bee glorified in our whole life. That it may please him too graunt this grace not onely to vs, but also to all people and Nations of the worlde, &c.

The lxxxj. Sermon, which is the fourth vpon the xxj. Chapter.

16. Their prosperitie is not in their ovyne hande : let the intent of the vvicked be farre froin me.
17. Hovv is the candle of the vvicked put out ? and their destruction commeth vpon them, and God deuideth their lines in his vvrath.
18. So that they be as the chaffe before the vvinde, and as the stubble in the vvhirlevvinde.
19. The Lorde hideth his strength for his Sonnes, and payeth him, and he shall see it.
20. His eyes shall see his destruction, he drinketh of the furie of the Almighty.
21. And vwhat pleasure leaueth he in his house ? he seeth his dayes shortened.

E haue before shewed what the minde of Job is : that is to wit, that the iudgements of god in this world are not so apparant to the eye, that a man may therevpon certainly conclude, that according as every man liueth well or i.l, so is he punished, or receyuet at God his hand his due wages: but rather that in this transitorie life there is a confusion of things, so that the wicked liueth at ease, and the godly is tormented all the dayes of his life. And yet for all that, Job doth acknowledge that God ceaseth not to be a rightuos iudge, and that men should not stay vpon the presentestate of things, and that it is no true felicitie which the wicked enjoy, whiles God winketh at their faults in sparing them. VVee see then in a briefe summe the discourse that Job maketh here : and it is a thing very profitable. For first of all, when we consider the matters of this worlde, it is a very harde thing to perswade vs that God doth guyde them as he thinketh best, and that men are so vnder his hande and gouernance, that they muste needes come to an accownt before him : this I say can not enter into our heads : or els if at any time wee do perceyue it, yet are we not fully perswaded therein. For we see howe the hypocrites thinke to deceyue God. And on the contrarie parte also when we suffer any harme, or when wee see that things are not well ordered, and that God sufffereth the wicked to passe their boundes, so as it seemeth that he mindeth not to punish them : we begin to doubt, and enter into terrible thoughts, saying : VVhat ? if God had any care of the worlde, and things were guyded by him, should wee not see an other maner of government than we do ? thus much then for one poynt. And againe forasmuch as wee be carnall, if God do not worke according to our minde, we thinke he shal never come in time : and if we see not his iudgements to day, we thinke to morowe it will be to late, and we can not haue such pacience and quietnesse in our selues, as to say, God knoweth the conuenient time, he will execute his iudgements when he shall see good, it pertayneth not vnto vs to appoynt him the day nor the houre : that lieth not in our hands. And why ? because we be fleshly. So much the more then must wee remember this lesson that is here contayned : that is to wit, that wee passe aboue all this worlde, and that our fayth surmount the things here beneath, that when wee see the wicked to bee in prosperitie, and the good to bee maruelously afflissted, the same do not stay vs, nor so hinder vs that it should make vs to faynt : but let vs lifte vp our selues by fayth, that we may know: wel, it is true that God so letteth loose the bridle to the wicked that a man would thinke their life happie : contrarywise we see the good and godly to be tormented, and to be in Payne and anguish, so as a man would thinke that God had forsake them, and that he thought no more of them, but let vs tarie his leysure, & go on forward. Thus must we practise this doctrine that is here taught vs by Job. Now we haue seene wherefore he thus reasoneth, that is, because his friends woulde make him beleue that he was a wicked man, for that he was so afflissted by the hande of God. This was a grieuous temptation for him and very offendisue. VVee muste then arme our selues with this that is here set before vs, to the ende that if God visite vs, and we be handled roughly of him, we may not be so oppressed with confusion, that despayre get the vpper hande of vs : but let vs know that God ceaseth not to loue vs and to pitie vs although he shew himself so rough for a time. Thus you see how in the secōd place we must apply this doctrine to our selues. Now let vs note things particularly. Job here protesteth, that although the wicked bee not punished at the first fault, yet ought no man therefore to thinke them happy, for he knoweth that their felicitie shall not continue, but that God shall make an ende of it. Their prosperitie (sayeth he) is not in their owne hande. As if he shoulde say, you reason that God dealeth with euery man according to their deserts : but now wee see the cleane cōtrarie, so that I thinke the wicked shal not escape one whit the better cheape. And why ? for they bee not Lordes of their owne state (as they say) but God holdeth them in a bridle, & he can deprive them of all their pleasures, and of the things which they thinke to make to a full and perfect felicitie : yea they are so blinded in the selues, and so puffed vp with pride, as they thinke themselues half Angels, and to be briefe, do recken themselues to be out of all daunger. VVell, their prosperitie is not in their owne hande : that is to say, they deceyue themselues with a vaine imagination, and they do but dreame, when they say their life is so happie. Therefore their intent is farre from me : that is to say, I will not be blinded with this present felicitie that me do see in the wicked, as they that are made dronken with it. VVee see then what lob ment to declare by these woordes : And therfore that we may the better profite in this doctrine, lette vs note, that when we see the wicked preuayle, God holdeth a secrete bridle in their mouthes, so that all that they haue to day, shal be taken from them to morrow : and they haue nothing in their owne power. If this were well printed in our hart, we should not be so troubled, as we be, with the things, which we beholde with our eyes. And why ? because we thinke that what soever we see to day, shoulde continue for euer. True it is that we will graunt that the world goeth rounde, and that things are chaunged every minute of an houre, and that nothing is certaine, nor nothing is sure and constant : wee do affirme it playnely ynough with our mouth, but wee thinke it not with our harte.

harte. And that it is so, if to day we be in prosperitie: our head is so incombred with it, that wee thinke all is ours, and wee make the reckoning without our hoste. If wee haue any affliction, then wee say, and will it alwayes bee thus? wee thinke we shall never see an ende of it. If at any time, wee be grieved with the prosperitie of the wicked, wee imagine that they shall never come too decay: and if we stande in feare of them, we are taken with such feare, that we thinke there is no remedie: and if any man say vnto vs, let vs abide patiently, and God shall prouide: we can not stay our selues vpon Gods prouidence. Thus we see how present things do carie vs away, and wee are so encombred with them, that wee haue no stay in our mindes, neyther to call vpon God, nor to committre our selues to him, nor to know that he will prouide for things in due time and place. So muche the more diligently must wee learne this doctrine, where it is sayde, that the prosperitie of the wicked is not in their owne hande: that is to say, that men may be in prosperitie, but their life hangeth by a threede (as wee haue seene here before) and all that which they thinke they haue, they haue it but by way of borowing, and in a moment all shall be taken fro them. Let vs know this: and when wee know it, if God bestowe his benefites vpon vs concerning this presente life, let vs acknowledge ali to come of him: yea and bee asreadie to be spoyled of them, as we were to be clothed with them, beholde Lorde, thou haste giuen me wherewith too liue: but I am not certayne and sure thereof, I must not make mine account to enjoy it for euer, but so long as it shall bee thy good will and pleasure. Thus it shall come to passe, that the faithfull in possessing things shall be as if they possessed them not as S. Paule sayeth:

Cor. 7.f.

30. For they do not perswade themselves that the things are theirs for euer: they know that they may become poure when it shall please God, and nothing shall be straunge vnto them when it shall happen. As also on the contrary parte, if God sende vs pouertie, let vs thinke thus: well Lorde thou haste riches in thy hande, and thou couldest bestow them vpon vs, if thou diddest see it good: in the meane season lette it bee thy pleasure to feede vs, and as thou seest our neede, vouchsafe to helpe vs, and suffer vs not to be afflicted beyonde measure. Also when we see the wicked to glorie in their wealth, it is nothing: lette vs know that that which they thinke they haue in hande, they haue it not. And why? Because our Lorde is aboue them. This is it that we muste keepe in remembrance. And furthermore when it is sayd, let the intent of the wicked be farre from vs: let vs learne, that wee must not be as it were in the darke to fall a sleepe in things present, and to stande to much in our owne conceyte for our wealth and abundance, nor be angrie with God if he handle vs not after our owne minde. VVe must not then become such: for what is the intent of the wicked? it is that when God sendeth them the thing that they desire, they are so puffed vp with pride, as a man can no lenger bearre them, they will not acknowledge themselves any more to bee mortall men, but they exalte themselves aboue their degree, and ascende so high, that in the ende they muste needs fall and breake their necke: a man shall finde nothing in them but arrogancie and spiritual drunkennesse, wherewith they become so beastly, that if at any time a man speake vnto them of death, of sicknesse, or of pouertie, they thinke that it can not come neere them, & that a man doth them great iniurie to say so vnto them. If any man will go about to humble them, and say vnto them: let vs know howe weake and frayle our state and condition is: they will answere, yea but am I as other men are? am I to be counted in the number of them that are so dealt withall? Thus the wicked become so proude in their prosperitie, that there is no dealing with them? To be shorte they forget that they be men and creatures, and perswade themselves that they are no more subiect to the corrections that God layeth vpon vs in this world. Furthermore if they bee afflicted: then they rage, they gnash the teeth and bite the nayle against God, and a man shall see them come at the mouth in their rage. And why? because they haue not yet learned to submit themselves vnder the hande of God, and to offer themselves vnto him for a sacrifice, to the ende they may be dedicated vnto him, to bee dealt withall as it shall please him: they know nothing at all what all this meaneth. So then when God dealeth with vs fauourably, wee muste bridle our selves, knowing that he declareth vnto vs his fatherly loue to the end he might drawe vs vnto him, and that we should come vnto him with true humilitie as it becometh vs, saying: well Lord seeing thou shewest thy selfe so favorable, it is very meete that I shoulde cleave vnto thee. And how? it is not in placing felicitie here: but contrarywise when thou shalte afflicte mee, I shall say, well Lorde thou doest waken me, least I should stay my selfe and become careless here beneath, putting my trust and confidence in this world, and in earthly things: thou wilt humble mee and tame mee, to the ende I should so much the more couragiously looke vnto thee, that I might atteyne vnto thy heauenly kingdome. Thus must we haue our intents seuered from the wicked, that is to say, our mindes may not be here so entangled with worldly things, that they should make vs become brute beastes, and so drunken that wee should nomore thinke vpon God: but contrarywise wee muste contemne and despise all those things wherein the wicked are wonte to delight, knowing that although wee bee poure and miserable, yet our state is not the worse for that, because we haue good hope that God will haue pitie and compassion on vs. This is the summe of that which we haue to note out of this place. Now Iob addeth: How is the Lampe of the wicked quenched? How is their destruction come vpon them? and how hath God settled their liues? or their sorrowes. This is a confirmation of that which hath bene already harde. By this woerde Lampe Iob setteth out their prosperitie: according as the holy Scripture vseth that maner of speach, namely of comparing the goods of this worlde to brightness, and the afflictions to darkenesse: He sayeth then, that the lampe of the wicked shall be quenched: but he speaketh of it as it were with an admiration, because this same is so done as it passeth mans wit, and otherwise than wee can conceyue. For (as I haue sayd) we haue our eyes so bleared, that wee can not see a farre of what God mindeth to do, neither what he hath plainly spoken. When we see the wicked prosper, we thinke that this prosperitie of theirs shall never be quenched: we can not comprehend it, although the Scripture speaketh of it, although wee haue experience of it dayly, in that we see that God throweth downe the wicked, after they be exalted, euen as it were vp to the clowdes. When we haue seene this: we thinke no more of it, neyther do we thinke that the thing can euer come to passe: and yet God hath shewed it vs, and as it were poynted it out with his finger. So then for as much as mans wit doth not ascende so high, and wee are so fast tied to things present, that wee can not conceyue what God mindeth too do: Iob speaketh here as of a straunge thing. How (sayeth he) is the lampe of the wicked quenched, and their destruction come vpon them? when he layeth, that their destruction commeth vpon them, he sheweth, that when God entreateth the wicked gently for a time, wee muste not fasten our eyes vpon the earth,

for when we reason whether God be iudge, and whither the wicked shal be punished in the end : we must not consider what may happen on this behalfe or on that. No: for whereas they be drunken in their wealth, whereas they be lifted vp in their pride, and whereas they thinke that no harme can happē vnto them, and that all creatures are appointed to serue them: all this is nothing. And why? for God shall sende their destruction from aboue. Nowe whereas we should looke vp on high: it is not ment that we should looke according to our outward sense, for we shall not attayne vnto God: there is to great a distance, we should fainte by the way. VVhat must we do then? let vs behold God by faith, and let vs lift vp all our inwarde senses aboue our selues. Thus then must we iudge of the fall of the wicked: that is to say, we must not consider so much what may happē vnto the according to the world, as what God is able to do. And what is the power of god? It is infinite, & a power that passeth our capacitie. So then this serueth to teach vs, that when things seeme impossible to me, we must not sticke to conclude thus: God worketh after a fashion that is hidde and vnknowne vnto vs: even in such sort as we shalbe constrained to woder when we heare how the same is done. Yea, for God will shewe vs that he is not subiect to any worldly meanes, and that the things that he doth muste be maruelous in our eyes. This is the summe of that which wee muste remember. Now it is sayd, that God will stretch out their cordes in his wrath. True it is that this worde Cordes, is by some expounded Sorrows: as also it may be take: but the naturall sense is, that God in his wrath will set out the portions. For this worde cordes in the Scriptures is taken for portiō, because that in old time when men would lay out ground by the aker, that is to say, measure ground, they vsed lines. And the holy Scripture applieth this similitude to this order of Gods prouidence, that even as lande is measured to set out the meeres & bounds, and to deuide the possessions, to the ende that every man may haue his right, that things may not be confused: so God by his prouidence doth bring into order that which is confused. It is as much then as if he did stretch out the lines. Now it is sayd, that God will stretch them out: yea, but it shal be in his wrath. And why? it is to teach vs, that we should not be to much amazed when things come not well to passe at the first. As for example, if all things shal seeme vnto vs to be turned vpside down in this world, and that there be no more bridles nor cordes, but that the wicked take their pleasure, that they cast themselues ouerthwarte the fields, that good me are troden vnder foote, that they are assualted with great crueltie & extortion, that no remedie appeareth, but the euil waxeth worse and worse, that God maketh as though he turned his backe, that there is no more any iustice in the worlde, that the mightiest carieth the bell away, & to be short, that we are here as it were in the midst of great stormes, that all things in the world are turned vpside downe: yet must we not be swallowed vp with desperation. And why? Let vs tarie till God spread out the cordes in his wrath: for although to day he hyde these cords, & doth not set out the bōds, in so much that things be not brought into good order: yet hath he always the cordes in his hād, and will well declare that he knoweth howe to spread them out and to make the partition. And why doth he it not at the first? because it is not yet due time. It is true that he never ceaseth to be the iudge of the wicked: but he will not at the first shewe his vengeance vpon them, he will not so soone put in execution that which he hath decreed in himselfe, and also it is not expedient for vs. Furthermore it behoueth that the wicked be made more vnexcusable: which thing is brought to passe when God calleth them to repentance (as sayeth S.Paule) by bearing with them. For so much the more Rom.2.4.4. are they to be blamed before him, in that they haue so abused his goodnessse and pacience. Besides this, when the good men are tormented, they haue wherwith to humble themselves: it is meete that by this meanes their faith should be exercised, to the ende that they might patiently wayte for helpe from God, knowing that their saluation is hid, for as much as it lieth in hope: and that hereby God stirreth them vp to come vnto him, to the ende they should seeke their inheritance without this worlde. See then how our Lord (not without cause) deferreth his iudgements: for the time is not alwayes conuenient to execute his wrath, as he knoweth it better than wee. This is the summe of that which we haue to learne out of this verse. Now it is sayd moreouer: that then they shall be as stubble before the winde. VVhereby, Job meaneth, that there is no roote in all the felicitie wherein the wicked do glory, & are so proude. This similitude is much vised, so that it needeth not to be expounded: for it is a thing very well knowne vnto vs also, how the stubble is caried away with the winde and tempest. So then Job protesteth here that the felicitie of the wicked is not so rooted, but when the whirlwinde of Gods wrath cometh vpon it, it shall vanishe and melte away quite and cleane, so as there shall be nothing lefte, and therewithall lette vs note, that he sheweth howe the wrath of God shall come in a minute of an houre, when as they shall not thinke of it: as it is sayd, that the wicked shall be taken suddenly, and 1. Thes.5.4.3. when they shall say peace and safetie, beholde todayne destruction shall ouerwhelme them, and it shall be as the throwes of a woman with childe, that takehir sodenly when she thinketh not of it. Job then would expresse this same, to the end that it should not so grieue vs that wee should pine away, if God sende not things as we woulde wishe. And in deede what is the cause that wee be so impatient, when God suffreth things to go to hauocke? It is because wee thinke he needeth long preparation, and wee would haue our God to shewe some tokens of his working, and wee would haue some sight of them long before. To be short, we will haue God to be like a mortall man, asthough he shoulde bee maruelously troubled when he taketh any worke in hand, and should neede to seeke helpe and ayde to bring his purpose to passe. Thus wee would make God and his whole maiestie subiect to our state and condition. VVhat must we do then? let vs knowe that in a minute of an houre he can finishe his worke, yea when there shall be no meanes, nor things any whit disposed thereto. So lette vs learne that all the felicitie of menne is but a dreame: specially when they thinke themselves happy, and become proude in their prosperitie, all is but a fonde imagination that soone vanisheth away. And why? because there is no roote. It is much better than for vs to bee miserable to the sight of men, and in the meane season too haue a liuely roote in God, to knowe that wee shall neuer bee destitute of his strength and ayde: let vs knowe that this is the chiefe felicitie, and that it is sufficient for vs to haue it, and that all the reste is nothing in respect of it. And in the meane season, although it seeme vnto vs that the wicked shall alwayes remayne in their state and condition, and that God hath so established them here, that they shall neuer be moued, and they also be puffed vp with this pride (as it is sayd in the Psalme, there shal neuer any harme come neare them): let vs not cease to comprehend this iudgement of God as it is here declared, that is to say, fadaine, and that he shall not neede to order things long before: for God is aboue all this comon ordre of nature, so that he can worke after a fashion that is new and strange to vs. Nowe Job addeth herewithall : that God not only punisheth the wicked in their owne personis, but also extendeth his chalimentes and punishments even unto their children : and that the wicked shall in ther life time knowe that there is nothing but vanitie in their state, yea and (will they nill they) perceyue that they stande vpon an vnseure ground, before that God haue cast them downe.

It is true that they cease not from their pride for all that: but how soever it be, God vrgeth them so farre, that they perceyue they can not alwayes continue so. This is the summe of that which Job meant to intreate of here.

Exo.20.b.5.6. Now we haue to note, first when he speakest of the Deut.28.a.4. children, that it is according to the common doctrine of the Prover.20.a.7

holy Scripture, that is to say, that God blesseth not onely the fayfull themselves, but also continueth his fauour vpon their children. Thus you see that God beareth vs such loue, as he is not content, nor thinketh it ymough to haue a care of our saluation, and to giue vs that which he knoweth to be meete and profitable for vs: but also he embraceth our children, and sheweth himselfe a father to them likewyse. VVe see then how the goodnessse of God is described vnto vs in the holy Scripture, that is, that when he hath receyued vs vnto him, and testified vnto vs that we are vnder his hand and protection, he sheweth also the same fauour vnto our children for our sakes. Se-ing it is so: wee haue good cause to repose our selues on him, for we must conclude, that if for our sake he continueth his fauour towards them that succeede vs, by a more strong reason wee shall alwayes finde him a mercyfull father. Ought we then to mistrust him & his goodnesse, scing that he is so favorable, as to haue a care ouer them also that come of vs. Now on the contrarie parte it is sayde, that God curseth the race of the wicked. And how? for they are destitute of the guyding of the holy Ghost, so that all must go to naught, and herein we haue none occasion to murmur and grudge against God, as there are some that will thinke it very strange. VVhat(say they) is it possible that God should punishe the children for the fathers sake? is it not sayde, that hee that sinneth shall beare his owne iniquitie, and that the Sonne shall not be punished for the fathers sake? yes truly, and that in such sorte, as the Sonne hath no cause to complayne, as though he were righiuos, and that God, notwithstanding that the punishment is due vnto his father, causeth it to fall vpō him who is innocent and guiltlesse: for that can not happen. But when it is sayde that God will re-quite the iniquitie of the fathers into the besome of the Sonnes: it is not for that he doth them any wrong: but it is for that he leaueth the wicked there. Now when wee are forsaken of God, what can wee do but mischiefe.
Thus we see then that God sheweth not such fauour to the wicked as to giue them his holy spirite: and so the Diuell must needs raigne ouer them, and stire them vp to prouoke the wrath of God more and more, and to hasten their own destrucciō. The children then are wrapped vp together with their fathers: for when a house is cursed of God, the same is in the possessiō and thraldom of Satan, & the spirit of God ruieth not there. Therfore the children are so punished for their fathers, as it is a iust judgement vpon themselues also: they can not say, we are guiltlesse: for they are found faulzie before God as well as their fathers. And on the contrarie parte, when the children of the faithfull continue folowing the steps of their fathers, then the blessing of God appeareth, so that men haue not wherefore to glorie in themselues: the children will not say, this heritage appertayneth vnto vs, God causeth vs to prosper, because our fathers were Ezec.18.e.20.

worthie to haue such a succession. No: but the whole must be attributed to the onely free goodnesse of God, who worketh being not bounden vnto men, neyther owing them any thing, but because it so pleaseth him.
This is it then that we haue to learne when it is sayd, that although God punish not the wicked at the firste, yet he will addresse himselfe to their children, that is to say, he will reserue punishment for them. And this is to prosecute this matter, that we must not giue judgement vpon the prouidence of God, by that whiche may be seene in this world, but must quiet our mindes & stay our iudgment vntill God shewe that his time is come. It becommeth not vs then to appoyn the times. Men are froward when they make such haste. But you see that God hath a peculiar fashion in his doings, whiche is sometime straunge vnto vs, but yet must we humble our mindes & say, Lord, we will like well of it, what so euer thou shalt do although it be not agreeing to our fantasie. This is it then that we haue to note vpon this woord, to hyde or re-serue, when it is sayd, that God reserueth for the children of the wicked the punishment that he hath executed vpō their fathers. True it is that this can not entre into all mens heads, neither is it a common doctrine. And this is the cause wherefore I sayd that we must herevnto applie our whole studie: for men of their owne nature are so hastie and impatiēt, that they woulde haue God too set before their eyes, what he mindeth to do: neither can we giue place to his prouidence, except he make his hande very manifest. And on the contrarie part, vpon what condition are wee placed in this worlde? Is it not that wee should bee in continual combats, knowing that in this worlde wee muste be tossed and turmoyled this way and that way? And so lette vs exercise our selues in these reseruations that are here mentioned. VVhen wee see the wicked so triumphē, that it seemeth that God hath giuen them a priuiledge aboue all other men: well, let vs wayte still. And why? for here is mention made of referuing or of hyding. VVee see not yet what is meant by it: and therfore let vs take heede that we iudge not of things un-knowne: for somight we be reprooved of rashnesse. But when shall we see? when it shall please God to open our eyes, and to execute that whiche he hath determined in himselfe. In the meane season also let vs put this doctrine in vre that is taught vs here, cōcerning the reseruation of benefites, which God hath prepared for his fayfull. For it is sayd, that they are hidden. Then if we will repose our Psalms.31.f.20.

trust in God, and cōfōrt our selues in that which he hath promised vs, we must ascende aboue the worlde, and behold the things inuisible: for whosoeuer shal stay himself vpon that which is manifest vnto him, renounceth fayth and hope, and to be short, shettereth vp the gate of saluatō to himselfe. Furthermore (as I haue already touched) Job shewed that the wicked shall well perceyue that all their case is nothing but vanitie and follie, but he meaneth not that they feele it in deede, neither that they be touched with it: for if ambition did not blinde men, and that they were not altogether dulheads, it is certaine that assoone as they perceyued theselues to be miserable in exalting theselues, they would yeeld themselues obedient vnto God, & not haue such cōfidence in this world. How happeneth it then that the vnfaidfull exalte themselues, and are at this day so madde in their arrogancie & presumptiō, that they will not submit themselues to any equitie or reason, but do things in despite of God, despising both him and his grace? whence cometh such rage? it is because they know not what is prepared for them, & in seeing they see nothing at all of it: that is to say, although God shew the many tokens of his wrath, yet will they knowe nothing.

True

True it is in deede that they be punished, & haue within them some prickings that torment them very much. But how soeuer it be, yet are they not touched to the quicke that they might know their destruction that is at hande, but are touched with the harme that might happen vnto the according to the iudgemēt of the world. For they are in deede in great perplexitie, and say, I muste prouide against such a danger whereinto I might fall. You see then how the case standeth with the wicked. And it is a thing which we ought to note well: for it is not ynoch enough for vs to be touched lightly with a pufse to make vs feele our frayltie: that were but a small matter. God doth in deede constraine the wicked so farre, and yet they are neuer the better for it: for we see them still obstinate, what soeuer befall them. VVhat muste wee do then? when we heare any mention made of the vanitie of this world, and of the things of this present life, lette vs know that although men take great paynes to aduance themselues, yea and bring their enterprises to passe: yet all this is nothing, because that not onely they shall not enjoy the riches which they haue heaped togither, as they thought too haue done: but their successours also shall be cursed in them, and shall haue no ioye of them. VVee may not thē freat at the prosperitie of the wicked, for it is but frayle & changeable, & it can not but turne to their curse & destrucciō. Thus then must this doctrine be put in vre. And againe when God shall sende vs prosperitie, & plentie, let vs know also that the same shal not continue for euer: for wee muste still come to this poynt, namely that God will draw vs beyond this worlde. Therfore let vs so consider the vanities that are here beneath, as it may not greeue vs when we see our selues certaine & sure of nothing here. And why? For if we desire to be rooted here beneath, we shall renounce the kingdome of heauē. But whosoeuer knoweth that our life is with God, and that it shal be reueled vnto vs at the coming of our Lorde Iesus Christ: it shall not greeue him to be tossed in this world, and to see that there is nothing but chopping and changing, nor any thing certaine and sure, & that therfore we must long for the heauely life, to the which God calleth and biddeth vs dayly by his woerde, yet in the meane season in the middest of all these worldly troubles, & things so disordered as we see: let vs not be ignorāt that God so guydeth and gouerneth the worlde by his prouidence, as nothing is done here beneath without his will. And althoough the reason thereof be not manifest vnto vs at the first: yet for all that, so it is. Our duetie is then to be quiet, and to tarie paciently vntill God shew vs by experience that the end of the wicked shall be cursed, and that the afflictiōs of the good men shall be turned to their saluatiō. Howbeit whilst we waite till God shewe vs this same in effect, let vs walke stil vnder him quietly, & let vs not behaue our selues frowardly for any thing that happeneth vnto vs, but let vs be ready to suffer afflictiō when it shal please him to lay it vpon vs: & if he sende vs prosperitie, let it be a meanes to make vs taste of his fatherly goodness, & to draw vs vnto him more and more. Now let vs fal down before the face of our good God with acknowledgement of our faultes, desiring him so to inlighten vs in this world, not only by giuing vs that which he knoweth to be good for vs, but also by his woerde, that in the midst of the darkenesse of al the afflictiōs which we haue to suffer, we may not ceasse still to feele his goodnessse & fauour, and so to folow the way that he sheweth vs, as we may neuer be turned there frō for any thing that happeneth vnto vs. And in the meane season also that our eyes be not blinded neyther with prosperitie, nor with aduersitie, nor with any thing what soeuer it be: but that wee may behold this glasse which he hath giuen vs, that is to say, his holy woerde, and that by the same we may be alwayes guided vnto him to be transformed into his image, vntill such time as he haue clensed vs frō all ouer sinnes, & haue vtterly abolished in vs al that cometh of our corrupt & sinfull flesh, to gather vs fully to himself, that we may be partakers of his glorie which he hath prepared for vs in heauen. That it may please him to grant this &c.

The lxxxij. Sermon, which is the fifth vpon the xxij. Chapter.

22. VVho is he that vvil take vpō him to teach god knovlege, vvhio iudgeth the highest things?
23. This man dieth in his full strength, at his easē, and quietly 24. His breasts or teates are full of milke, and his bones flouvre vwith Marie.
25. And another dieth vvith great painē, and neuer eateth vvith pleasure.
26. They are layde both in the dust, and the vvorimes shall couer them.
27. I am not ignorant of these things, and hovv you go about to do me vvrong.
28. For you say, vvhile is the house of the Prince, and vvhile is also the Tent of the vvicked?
29. Aske them that go by the vway, for ye can not denie their signes.
30. The vvicked is kept vnto the day of destrucciō, they shal be brought forth to the day of wrath.
31. VVho shall shewve him his vway to his face, and vvhio shall tell him againe of that vvhich he hath done?
32. He shall be brought to the graue, he shall be layde into the rombe.
33. The grauelly earth shall be svveete vnto him, and euery man shall go aftet him, and the number of them that vvent before him, is infinite.
34. And you comfort me in vaine: for in your ansyvers there is nothing but lyces.

Ob here prosecuteth the matter that wastreated of yesterday, that is too wete, that although it seeme strāge in our fātie that god shoulde intreate men so confusedly: yet it becommeth not vs to reproue him, nor to wage the lawe against his iustice, nor to murmur as though he did evill: but we must humble our selues before his maiestie, knowing that his prouidence & government is a wisedome to high and to profunde to be comprehended of vs. This is the cōtents thereof. Now to shew that it is so, he sayeth, The one shall die in distresse, and the other shall die with eaſe: that is to say, we shal see some that al the dayes of their life shal do nothing but pine away in great miserie: & at length they die, being very to liue any lōger, because in their life time they had nothing but trouble & tormēt: the other are fat & in perfect health, yea they are riche & wealthe. This is it that Job meaneth by this similitude, their breasts are full of milke, and their bones are full of marie, that is too saye, beholde beholde they are fatte euery way. Nowe when wee see this diuersitie, the cause thereof is vñknowne vnto vs. For if any would say, howe happeneth that some do so prosper, and spende their whole life in pleasure and ease, and other some liue in continuall payne? what meaneth this? he should see no manifest reason thereof. It is truth that there be some of Gods iudgements (as it hath bene touched here before) so well knowne vnto vs, that if we would open our eyes wee might well marke and see the cause why God dealeth so with men: but it is not alwayes so: for God intendeth to trie our obedience by holding our eyes closed, so as we know not the reason of his worke, but are as it were blinde in that behalfe. Then if we give him the glory, and confess that he is iuste and true, although the same be not manifest vnto vs: it is a good triall of our fayth and seruice that wee yeldre vnto him. On the contrary parte, if we will be sharpe witted, and subtle, and be to curious in searching things, so that we wil not allow God for rightuous vñlesse he shewe vs the cause why: this is a Diuelish prye, and therein wee declare our selues that wee will not be subiect vnto God but by force, and when it shall please vs. So then lette vs note that Job here speakest of the iudgements of God, that are yet hid from vs, as the mooste parte of them bee. VVell, what must we say in this case? Who is he that will teache God knowledge? that is to say, who is hee that will shew God his office? who is he that will teache him his lesson, and say, he must worke on this fashion, or on that? Shall we be they? Can we ascende so high as to come to the infinite height wherin God is? Alas there is too great a distance. And if we will lifte vp our selues so high, God can bring vs downe well ynochough to our shame and confusion, for it appertayneth vnto him to discusse high matters. Shall we walke aboue the Angels of heauen? VVe must with all humilitie reuerence the secrets of God and his incomprehensible iudgements: and shal mortall man, that is but duste and ashes, take vpon him to searche them out, and to know a reason therof? Then must we humble our selues too beholde the iudgements of God: and when they shall seeme vnto vs not to be reasonable, yet let vs learne to be content with them, brideling and as it were imprisoning our mindes, least God should be disgruyed by vs, and his maiestie & glory transformed. VVe must acquaint our selues (I say) to beholde things, and to conclude that God doth them according too reason, although it seeme not so in our owne eyes. And why? for (as I haue already sayd) during this life our God will see whether we will confess him to be iust, wise, and good, although we haue no knowledge of his rightuousnesse, goodnessse, and wisedome. True it is that he sheweth vs signes ynochough of it: for he will not be glorified of vs, and in the meane while leaue vs ignorant how, nor wherefore: he ministreth vnto vs matter sufficient to gloriſe him: but yet he doth many things wherein wee are as it were blinde. Men must not then vsurpe that which appertayneth not vnto them, that is to wit, that they should say, well, we may iudge according to that we see. Yea? & where is then the prayſe which thou owest vnto thy God and thy maker? wilt thou measure him by thine owne capacitie? thou arte nothing. VVhat are thy minde and vnderstanding? Are they of such constancie and force, that the whole glorie of God can be enclosed and cōprised in them? doest thou not herein take too much vpon thee. Therfore when we see things in this world turned vpside downe, what muste wee do? let vs know that for all that, God disposeth things as is meete, & knoweth the reasons which are hidde frō vs: and in the last day, that which is now as it were buried, shall be made very manifest, & we must suspend our iudgement till that time. Truth it is that we may pray God to make vs to perceyue wherfore he doth affiſt vs, when we be affiſted. VVhen a man is in ſuch payne and findeth himſelf in great anguſh and miserie: he may runne to his God, and ſay, Alas Lorde this thing ſhould ſeeme very ſtrange vnto me, and therfore I might leefe my paciēce, were I ro: affiſted of thy goodneſſe: and euen that which is for my wealth and proſite, ſhould turne to my hurte and conuſion: and altho:ough I perceyue not the cauſe wherfore thou puniſhſt me ſo: yet muſt I know that it is for my wealth. Neuertheleſſe vouchſafe to let me vnderſtande, to what end thou doest affiſt me. If a man be at his eaſe, he muſt also bridle himſelf, and pray vnto God that he would not ſuffer him to abuse the beneſite that he hath receyued, as to ſay, I am more worthie than other men to be loued of God: for he dealeth with me after an other ſorte: I ſee a great nu:ber of men very miſerable, and yet I haue what I can deſire, which is a token that God is very well pleaſed with me. So then let not this prye and arrogancie enter into our heads: but leaſt we be tempteſt with it, we muſt pray vnto God that he make vs to vnderſtande, wherfore he ſpareth vs. VVee may then deſire of God that he would ſhewe vs the cauſe of his workes: yea ſo farre foorth as it is expedient for vs: but we muſt also come with all humilitie, not taking vpon vs to make God ſubiect to our iudgement, to ſay, that he muſt diſclose vnto vs in every poyn̄t wherfore he doth this or that. No: but let vs tarie paciently vntill he declare vnto vs, that which we know now but partly. And forasmuch as wee cannot atteyne to the full knowledge of Gods workes and to the cauſes of the ſame, vntill we be tranſformed into his image: when we haue in this life gotten ſome ſmall taste of his goodneſſe, rightuousnesſe, and wisedome, ſuche as it pleaſeth him to communicate vnto vs by his holy woord, where he teacheth vs that which he knoweth to bee expedient for vs at this time: let vs contēt our selues with it. VVhich thing can not be done, vntill we haue renounced this curioſitie that is in vs, & the deceyueable boldneſſe wher: vnto wee are to much inclined and giuen. Lette vs then keepe this ſentencē well in remebrance, wher it is ſayd, Who is he that will teache God his duetie? Are we ſuch great doctours that we can teach God his lesson, and controll him? Now when men murmur ſo agaynst the prouidēce of God, and finde faulte with it: it is as muſh as if they would take in hande to teach God. And what arrogancie is it, that a creature, in whom there is nothing but all beastlynesſe and ignorance, ſhoule take vpon him too teache his Creator? Then is it a cursed monſtrousnesſe and agaynst nature, when men do ſo highly exalte themſelues, as they wil gaynesay and replie agaynst the workes of God. True it is that wee thinke not of it at the firſt: but yet all the murmurings and replies that wee make, and all the miſlikings that wee haue of that whiche God doth contrarie to our iudgement and appetitie, are as ma:ny blaſphemies: for it is the tayle of al our euil thoughts. To be ſhorte, who ſoeuer is not content with Gods prouidence (yea and that with all humilitie,) confeſſing generally that what ſoeuer proceedeth from him is good and rightuous: the ſame(as muſh as lieth in him,) would pull God out of his heauenly ſeat, and ſpoyle him of his maiestie, and ſet himſelf in his roume and place. VVe make fayre protestation that wee meane no ſuch thing, but the thing it ſelfe declareth otherwise. To be ſhorte, as ofte as wee be tickled with this curioſitie to be to ouer inquifitiue of heauely matters, and in the meane ſeafon haue ſuche boldneſſe mixte withall, as wee rage agaynst God: lette vs note that we muſt come to this cōparison,

what art thou? and what is God? hee is thy creator, and doest thou set thy selfe agaynst him too dispute of hys workes, as if thou were his fellow? And what presumest thou to do? hast thou any thing in thee, wherefore thou shouldest enter into so deepe matters, and make al things subiect too thy judgement? VVhere art thou become wretched creature? VVhen wee are once come too this compaison, it must needes be, that wee bee worse than mad, if this pride wherewith we bee puffed vp, bee not quite throwne downe. This is it that Iob ment here too teach in saying, who is he that wil teach god knowledge? Furthermore, because men be so bolde, as they can hardly be brideled, vntesse they be holden by violence, and as a man woulde say bounde with Chaynes: hee sayeth, yet shall God judge high matters. As if he should say, well, when men wil vsurpe that which doth not appertaine vnto them, as to plead agaynst God: what shall they get in the ende? Truly, they may alledge this and that: but yet God shall not bee diminished. Let men then exalt themselves as muche as they can possibly, yet shall God always remaine in his place spite of their teeth. And hee shall not onely remaine safe and sounde: but hee shall also sit aboue as iudge of high matters, and we shall leape here like frogges. Shall we flie aboue the clowdes? and although wee had wings too flie so high: yet are the Angelles farre more glorious and excellent. But yet are the Angelles Gods fellowes, or equall? with him? No: Contrariwise it is sayde, that they hide their faces wthy their wings: as wee haue seene in Ezechiel vnder the figure of the Cherubins, and that the Angelles (although there bee a great Maiestic in their nature) neuerthelesse when they beholde the brightness of God, are constrainned too hide themselves before the glorie that is in their Creator. Seeing then, that so noble and excellent creatures, are as it were astonished, when they should come neare vnto the Maiestic of God: what shall we doo in comparison of them? Seeing that God iudgeth highe matters, shall wee presume too exalt oure selues agaynst him? VWell, we cannot come so farre, and whatsoeuer wee shall throwe agaynst him, shall doo him no harme: but it must all retorne too our owne confusion: it is as much as if wee should cast stones ouer our owne heades, they must needes fall againe vpon vs, and yet wee shall not bee able too reache vnto God. VVe might peraduenture strike a blowe at him, if hee were on the one side or on the other of vs: but seeing he is aboue vs, yea and so high that we are not able to reach vnto him: if we lift vp our selues agaynst him, it is as much as if we shuld cast a stone on high, which (as I haue sayde) must needes fall againe vpon our owne heades, and ouerwhelme vs. So happeneth it too all them that will make suche arguments, and after their owne fantasie dispute of Gods woorke, and replie agaynst him. They do in deede throwe stones, but the same must needes fall againe vpon themselves. And this is it that is ment by that is sayde, that all they which shall dashe agaynst this stone, must needes bee brused and broken: yea and in the ende this stone shall fall vpon them too crouse them, and quite ouerwhelme them. Let vs note also, that GOD iudgeth high matters, not onely in that hee is the soueraigne aboue all creatures: but in that he dooth set himselfe specially agaynst them that do so highly esteeme of themselves more than becommeth them, and aboue their degree: for he sayth that he is a mortall enemie to all the proude. Let vs learne then, that if there be any such that will so exalt themselves, the same must needes turne to theyr ruine: as it is written, he that will humble himselfe, shall bee exalted: and contrariwise, hee that will exalte himselfe, must bee brought to nothing. It is the peculiare office of God to do things in this sort. Let vs note then that there is nothing better than to bee wise, onely so farre foorth as it please God to instruct vs, and let vs knowe that too obey him, and too submit oure selues vntoo him in all things, is our true wisedome. And when things come not to passe as we woulde wishe, so that wee bee easily stirred vp to enter into some disputation: let vs stay our selues, and say, yea but God hath such a perfection in him, that there can nothing proceed from him, but it is good and rightuous, and his will onely ought to suffice vs: for it is the rule of all well doing, this is the fountaine thereof, let vs draw out of it boldely. So when hee sheweth vs the reason of his woorkes, let vs giue him thankes, and with all humilitie receyue whatsoeuer he teacheth vs. But if hee hide them from vs, let vs be content too bee ignorant, so farre foorth as it shall please him, knowing well that hee reuealeth vntoo vs whatsoeuer hee knoweth too bee profitable for vs. Howesoever it bee, hee will keepe vs within a certayne measure, too the ende wee shoulde learne what it is too obey him, and too confesse that he is iust, although hee shewe vs no reason of his doings. This is the summe of that which we haue to learne out of this place. Nowe too shewe the greatnessse of this temptation, it is sayde afterwarde, that both of them are couered in the dust, and that the woormes eate them. In deede when wee see that a like ende happeneth to them both: although we haue bee diversly delt withall in this worlde: it might seeme that God playeth no more the iudge. But our sayth muste surmount the graues, and whatsoeuer wee can beholde with the eye. And this is it that is often tymes taught vs, that sayth is a sight and beholding of things inuisible. Heb. 11. 6. 1. VVe shall see some good man that shall haue serued God all the dayes of his life, and shall haue walked verie uprightly and sincerely: and neuerthelesse hee shall bee in continuall greefe and paynes, and God shall not ceasse too sende him manie tormentes euen to the death, to the which also he must go pining on a long time. And others that shall runne headlong too all euill, shall die at their easle. As I haue sayde this is the confusion of things. And what is the ende of it? they come to the graue. Are they in the dust? they consume away there, the woormes eateth, it seemeth that he that toke paynes to serue god hath lost his labor. And why? Beholde they are all gathered into one heape, the good & the bad: aswell those that haue liued here in great mirth and pleasure, as they that haue found nothing but sorow & trauell in this worlde. VVhat shall we say to this? It is certayne that we shall bee amazed if we stay our selues vpon that which may be sene with the eie. VVhat is to be done then? VVe must ascend higher, and knowe that God reserueth vntoo himselfe a iudgement that appeareth not presently. Yea truely. For Heb. 11. 4. 1. faith beholdeth things inuisible & things that are hid. Let vs know then that although in death all be like, yet there is a farre diuers condition. And when shall that bee? our God shall declare it in time conuenient. But in the meane season it is our dutie to walke alwayes in his feare, and to conclude, that seeing hee is iudge of the worlde, iniuitie shall not remaine vnpunished. And they that haue taken paynes to obey him, and to walke according too his rightuousnesse, shal not haue labored in vain, nor be disappoynted of their expectation. Thus must we conclude & go still forward. And we see also that God ment to declare the same vnto vs by the mouth of a deceiuere. For al though Balaam endeuered to ouerthrow al truth, & to turn it to a lie: yet God hilde him as it were on a rack, that he was forced to say that the death of the righteous is to be Num. 23. b. wished,

v. if acd. Let my death (sayth he) be like vnto the death of the righteous. He sayth not this of his owne head. For he woulde (as much as lay in him) haue brought to naught, and vtterly abolished the maiestie of God. But yet seeing God maketh him speake thus: it is more than if hee had sent all the Angels of heauen. God, I say did then authorize this doctrine with a peculiare marke, whē he did constraine and inforce a wicked man, & an enemie of the truth to speake on this wise. This is it then that we haue to learne: to wit that we must not fasten our eies vpon the 10 grāue, when wee see that all is there brought vnto one heape, and that there is no difference betweene the good and the bad, betweene the rich and the poore, betweene those that haue lained at their ease, and those that haue alwayes beeene in sorrow and paine.

It is true that in deth al things are turned vsidetown: but God knoweth howe to bring all things into an order and perfect state: as it is sayd that at the comming of our 20 Lord Iesus Christ, when he shall appeare too iudge the worlde, then shall be the restoring of all things. If it beso then that Iesus Christ shall come to restore the worlde: It followeth that the worlde at this day is out of frame, and things therein are out of order: but in the meane seafon let our fayth surmount all these things here, and let vs patiently abide till God finish hit worke, and find a remedie for all. Now Job addeth furthermore that the thoughts of them that went about to confound him, are not vnknowne vnto him, nor the wayes that they vſed to do him wrong: as if hee shuld say, I see wherto ye tend. For ye are as it were suborned of Satan to bring men to dispaire. But I will holde 30 me fast in the hope that I haue in my God. And although I be here so much oppressed as is possible for any man to bee: yet will I still continue calling vpon him that hath promised to be my sauour, and I shal not bee ouercome for any of your temptations. Thus then doth Job arme & defend himself against al that was obiectet against him by his freends: For he saw well ynough that they tended to no other end nor purpose but to bring him to dispaire. Nowe this place here conteyneth a profitable doctrine: which is, that wee shoulde alwayes learne to knowe the subtleties of Satan when he goeth about too bring vs into dispaire: and that we shoulde be armed agaynþ hym. For if wee haue the wisdome too take heede of the malice of men, when we see that they go about too hurt vs, and seeke our vtter ruine and destruction: must wee not much more sharpen our wites and sp̄rites too resist Satan, who is the Prince of all iniquitie. The thing then that we ought to knowe, is that when men go about too doo vs harme, wee must stande vpon oure garde, and consider the force and strength that is in oure enimies. 40 And if we cannot ouercome him by force, wee must fall to pollicie. If wee see a man go about too beguile vs by wicked slight: wee will beware of him well ynough. But Epb.6.b.12. (as sayeth Sainct Paule) oure fighting is not agaynst flesh and bloud: that is too say, when wee haue too deale but with men, it is nothing: but we haue to deale with spirituall enimies which are principalities. Behold Satan vttereth all his force, and we haue to fight agaynst the Diuelles in the ayre, which winde about vs, and inuiron vs on all sides: and they haue firie darteres wherewith we shoule be striken downe incontinently, if wee were not well furnished and armed at all poyntes. Therefore, it standeth vs in hande to bee watchfull in this case aboue all things and to be acquainted with Satans wiles, according also as Saint Paule speaketh of them in another 50 place. This is it which we haue to marke in this streyne: namely that forasmuch as Job was fenced agaynst all the the temptations that were put too him by those whome the Diuell stirred vp agaynst him: when wee see men go aboue too leade vs too destruction, wee muste haue our eyes open too espie their sligtes, that we may provide too disappoynþ them. And if wee haue this aduisenesse in respect of men, let vs much more haue it in respect of Satan. For hee is oure cheefe enemie whome wee haue cheefely too resist, that wee maye repulse all the practises and deuises whiche hee can attempt agaynst vs.

And heerepon let vs marke, that all excuses are taken from vs, if we bee surprised by the temptations whereof euerie man ought to take heede. If we steppe awry, euery of vs will alledge that there was some meanes or other, and that hee was seduced by some other man. And finally, wee put the same thing in vre which was shewed vs by our father Adam, when he sayde; The woman which thou gauest mee hath deceyued me. Yea, Gen.3. b.12. but our Lorde hath giuen vs discretion ynough, sobecit that wee can finde in oure hartes too bee watchfull. But as for them that will bee wiltingly rocked asleepe: muste not Satan needes snarle them in his snares, and make them too wander heere and there? Are they not well woorthie of it? Yes: For they seeme to bee willing too breake theyr owne neckes, and too haue soughe pittes too fall intoo, and that they bee well at ease when they finde anie meanes too start oute of the way. There are many that seeke stumbling blockes, and afterwarde say: Oh, beholde, such a one hath beguiled mee. But if we kept watch as God warneth vs, wee shoulde alwayes be preserued from the daungers wherwith we be snared.

Thus yee see what wee haue too marke vpon thy place. And immediately Job sayeth, Inquyre of them that go by the waye, you cannot denie their signes. Thys streyne is expounded diuersie wayes. There are that take these Iourneyers or wayfaring men, in an allegoricall sense for the faythfull, bycause they bee pilgrymes in this worlde, and haue no resting place: but that is too muche streyned. Some vnderstande that Job ment too saye heere, that hys freendes tooke hym as a wayfarer, that is to say, as an vnknowne man. As if hee shoulde saye, yee handle mee worse than you woulde doo a wayfarer or an vnknowne man. Othersome take it after an other fashion: but let vs holde vs too the plaine meening: whiche is, that Job meeneth too saye heere, that if his freendes, (or at leastwyze those that bare the name, and were come vntoo him vnder that pretence) had a sound and vncorrupted iudgement, they woulde not haue vſed suche flaunders agaynst hym. His saying then is, yea, aske the wayfaring men, the thing whereof yee haue hitherto reasoned, and euerie one of them can tell it you. And why? Bycause they are not ill mynded. For inasmuche as theyr heades bee not forepossesed with cruell iudgement, they will speake the truth and as the thing is. It behoueth you then too bee likewise moderated. This is the summe of that whiche hee ment to say. Nowe by this wee are taught, that there is nothing so contrarie too reason and truth, as an euill affection that a man shall haue nourished and conceyued within himselfe: for hee shall bee too blinded therewith, as hee shall not bee able too discerne any more, and the light shall bee vntoo him alwayes as it were darknesse. This maye helpe vs muche, if wee applie it too our vſe as it behoueth vs. VVherefore? VVe see how every man lettereth looce the bridle to his affections. VVhen we iudge of any thing, haue we respect vnto reason to bee guided by it? No surely, but our affections do so rule vs, that we see nothing, because wee are beforeoccupied with some fantasie

fantasie. One is caried away with his pride, and hee will not turn whatsoeuer happen. And if a man aduertise him of it, he will not hearken to it: what reason soeuer a man shal vse vnto him, it shal preual nothing with him. VVhe a man is so hardned against God and all equitie, he thinketh he could not get better estimation, than too remayne stubburne to the ende. Againe, an other is poysoned with some hatred or dispise, wherevpon hee will iudge rashly hauing no power to enquire whither the thing bee so or no. Forasmuch as this vice reyneth so in vs, & doth preual: so much the more ought we to note this place where it is sayd, that even the wayfaring men shall teach vs. That is to say, that they which judge of a thing at the first sight, and as it were passing by the way, shal be better and more vpright iudges than we be. And why? They shall not be forepossessed with their euill affections which hinder the from judging aright and according too truth. This is it that Job ment to say in this place. Nowe he addeth in the ende to conclude his matter which he hath in hande, that the wicked is referued to the day of his destruction, and that such men shalbe as it were trayned on to the day of wrath. This is a meane that we shoulde not runne headlong into rash iudgement when God punisheth not the sinnes of men so loone as wee thinke good. And when he afflideth the good men, and holdeth them as it were vnder many torments and troubles: then let vs say, yet is the wicked referued to his day. If we had this woordes Reserued, (as it was yesterday handled) well printed in our mindes, it would be a meane to keepe vs in a feare, that we should not bee so muche caried away as we be, seeing the troubles and disorders that are in this life. But we can finde in our hartes too referue any thing vnto God, and wee thinke if hee bring not this matter too passe to daye, too morrowe hee shall not come in time. The cause that all things are peruerted, is for that wee haue our mindes encumbered: And againe, wee speake so hastily and vnadvisedly, as in the meane season we giue no place vnto fayth, nor knowe any more of God and his rightuousnesse, than experiance teacheth vs. And by this meanes wee exclude the whole worde of God, and say that it hel-peth vs no more, and that wee will beleue nothing that is therein conteyned: but that we will beleue our owne eyes. Is not this as much as too separate our selues from God, and to estrange vs from his schoole to be no more his schollers? Is it to be marueyled, if after this, men become so madde, that a man can doo no more good wylth them, but the diuell possesseth them and caryeth them cleane away? as we see many suche nowe adayes? No, we must not maruell, it is a iust iudgement. So much the more must we marke this doctrine where it is sayde, that the wicked is referued to the day of his destruction. To bee bresfe, when we see the wicked here to bee at their ease and prosperite, and too triumph: it is true that it cannot bee chosen but we must bee tempted, and haue some greefe inwardely [So as we thinkē thus with our selues.] And howe, what meeneth this? that God is ydle in heauen, and seemeth to be asleepe and careth not for things here beneath. There might in dede such fantasies come into our heades. But we must beate them backe, and say, well Lorde, thou teacheſt me that I ſhould looke further than vpon this worlde. At the first sight it woulde ſeeme vnto vs that thou wart asleepe: but yet it is cleare contrarie, For inasmuch as we ſee there is another iudgement vpon the wicked, which is vñknowne vnto vs: we muſte alſo knowe that there is an everlaſting rest for the godly. God then giueth vs alreadie a declaration of his rightuousnesse, that there is a iudgement referued, in the which all things ſhall be reduced into good order. Thus must we take ſome profit by the exam: ples that are be- fore our eyes. Therefore if things come not to paſſe as wee woulde haue them, ſo as the wicked triumph, and God maketh no countenance to puniſh them: and contrariwise, the good be tormented, and we perceyue that they be not ſuccored nor ho:pen, but many iuriies and violences are committed agaynst them, and in the meane ſeason God putteth not to his hand to prouide for them: let vs run to this that is ſaid vnto vs, wel, there is another iudgement: for the wicked is referued to his deſtruclion. And forasmuch as the wicked at this day are ſpared, let vs note that their vengeance ſhall be ſo much the more horribile: Their market is nothing the more ameđed for that: but their condenmaſon is augmented every day more and more. And why? the time is dearely bought, for that they haue ſo mocked at the goodneſſe of God, and haue abuſed his wiſedom, and continued ſtill in euill, yea and hardened therein, and exercyſed their malice agaynst the good men and children of God. So then the faythfull ought to reioyce in the middes of their ſadneſſe, when they ſee the wicked ſo referued too the day of theyr deſtruclion. True it is, that for a time the wicked ſhall be in this worlde as it were in a Paradise: But ſhall it be alwayes ſo? No, for this life is ſhort and frayle, and they muſt needes come to an account. And when it ſhal be caſt in their teeth, that they haue mocked with God, and diſpiled his maiestie, what ſhall become of them, what horribile vengeance ſhall be prepared for them? Let vs then conceiuie ſuſh horrore of the finall ſtate & codition of the wicked that wee may be stayed from complaing with them, leaſt we be ſpoiled with their vices and iinfecções, and be wrapped togither with them in the wrath of god. Furthermore, are we opprefſed? do we ſee the godly men to be in trouble and anguifh? VWell, let vs knowe it to be true that our life is miſerable in ſight: but it is to make vs go forwarde: they are as it were prickings with the ſpurre for to encourage vs, and to stirre vs vp to the beholding of the heauenly life, that whyleſt wee labour to come vnto it, wee might contemne and diſpife all those things wherein the wicked are woont too delight, and place their whole felicitie here in this worlde. Nowe in the ende Job ſayth, who is bee that can iudge in the faue agaynst him, who is bee that ſhall pay him agayne that which he bath done? It ſeemeth at the first ſight, that hee ſpeaketh heere of God: but it is ſpoken rather of the wicked. Neuertheleſſe it tenideth too approue the iuſtice of God, and too ſhewe that the wicked, although they haue eſcaped the handes of men, ſhall not faille but come before the heauenly iudge. This is the ſumme of that which Job ment to ſay.

So then although the wicked haue ſo paſſed their life as no man durſt ſet himſelfe agaynſt them, and whyleſt they liued, it ſeemed that they were exalted vp to the cloudes: yet ſhall they not fayle but come to the graue. And it is true, that according too mans iudgement, the ſame might alwayes be alledged for prooife of the temptation: as howe? VVe ſee that all are equall. But Job heere concludeth agaynst his enimies, that although (to the ſight of men) the ende bee like, yet there is a iudgement of God aboue that, and men muſte not become ſo brutiſhe as to stay themſelues onely vpon the graue, and vpon the things that are ſeen here, but they muſt know that god ſhall ſo reſtore thiſgs, as the gothes ſhal be ſeparated from the lambes, when God ſhall declare himſelfe to be the iudge of the whole world: but the tyme is not yet come. This is the comparison that Job maketh heere. Nowe againe he repeateth that which he had ſayde, that is to ſay, that a man cannot diſcernē betwene them both. Mat. 25.6.

by the outward appearance. And why? This is the man that will be glad of the grauelly ground, but it is that his bodie may bee buryed therein: it is all one too him after death, and they are laid both togither in the graue. Behoide this is the state and condition of mankind, as it is said in the Psalme, that they bring to the graue the bodies of the great and little, of the old and yong, and that all go like flockes of sheepe to the graue. So then by the outward sight wee can not disererne the iudgements of God. And wherfore saith Iob thus? Is it because he mindeth to make a confusion of all? No: but it is good and profitable for the children of God (as we haue alredy declared) to be armed long time before against the temptations that might happen vnto them, when they see the ende of the Godly and of the wicked concerning the outward appearance to be like to the end that when they themselues be afflicted, they might call vpon God, knowing that if their state & condition be poore and miserable in this world, there is a ioy prepared for them, the hope whereof may well diminish and mitigate all the heauiness and troubles that might happen vnto them in this world. It is good that me should know the temptations that may happen vnto the. It is true that we must not be herein to hastie, so that whē we heare any mention made of the deliuernace that god will send vs in our aduersities, we begin by and by to replie. Yea, but when shall it be? we must not stay vpon such fantasies: but wee must generally learne to be pacient in all things, least we fall headlong into fleeing fantasies, and conceyue in our mindes things that God wil haue yet to remaine vñknowne of vs. Let vs then leaue the iudgement to him, vntill he reueale it vnto vs, and let vs know perfectly, that he doth such things as we cannot presently comprehend. This is the cause why Iob sheweth here that all goto the graue, and that all are brought thither: and it is to the ende that we should gather thus: well, it is true that in death all are lyke, wee put no difference betweene the godly and the wicked: and (as Salomon sayeth in his booke of the preacher) a living dog is better than a dead Lion: and the death of a man is like the death of a dog, inasmuch as the bodie of a man shall rot as well as the carkasse of a beast. VVe see all these things: but yet we must not stay there. Let vs then beholde that which is shewed vs in the mirroure of Gods worde. That is to wit, that there is a greater iudgement which God reserueth, and will execute when he shall shewe himselfe to bee the iudge of the whole world. Thus behoueth it vs to know temptations, & when we haue known them, we must resist the, & go forward: and let vs not be so folish as to say, Oh whosoeuer shall find prosperitie in this world let him enioy it: for in death there is no hope. But cōtrariwise, we must say, if we haue aduersitie in this worlde, let vs know that a better hope is layd vp for vs: and this is whervn to God calleth vs. If we haue prosperitie in this world, let vs thanke him for all: but let vs not put any confidence in it, for prosperitie may be takē from vs betwene this & to morrow, specially when we abuse the same. Thus I say must we wey things present, and thinke with our selues, that if we iudge of the according to mans iudgement, all shall be done out of order: and it is to the ende that sayth might preuaile in vs, and that the woerde of God might guide vs, so as it may be as a candle to shew vs the way in the midst of the darknesse of this worlde, vntill we come to that heauenly brightnes where there shal be no knowledge in part, but allperfection, at which time we shal behold God face to face.

1.Cor. 13.d.

Now let vs fall down before the face of our God, with acknowledgement of our faults, desiring him to make vs haue a better feeling of the, and that we may be more & more touched with them, so as wee may bee displeased with them, to the ende wee maye enioy the grace that is promised vs in the name of our Lorde Iesus Christ. And that when our sinnes passed, bee forgiuen vs of him, it woulde please him to guide vs by his holy spirit, so as we may alwayes more and more aspire to the perfection of the heauenly richesse, to the which hee calleth vs, where being rid of all our imperfections, and infirmities of man, we may bee clothed with his heauenly glory, which hath beeene purchased for vs by the bloud of our Sauiour Iesus Christ. That it may please him to graunt this grace, not onely vnto vs, but also to all nations, &c.

The lxxxij. Sermon, which is the fyrst vpon the xxij. Chapter.

THEN Eliphas the Themanite ansvered, and sayde,

2. Shall a man be profitable vnto God? the vwise man profiteth himselfe.
3. VVhat careth the almighty if thou bee righteous? or vwhat shall he gaine if thou vvalke vprightly?
4. Is God afraid to reproue thee, or to come vwith thee into iudgement?
5. Is not thy vwickidnesse great, and are not thine iniquities infinite?
6. Thou hast taken a pledge of thy brother vwithout a cause: thou hast spoyled him that vvas naked.
7. Thou hast not giuen vwater to drinke to him that vvas a thirst: and hast denied bread to him that vvas hungry.
8. And the mighty man had the earth in possession: and he that vvas in authoritie dyvelt in it.

Hen we haue too doo with men, if wee can charge our aduersary with any thing, or can finde any thing too reprove in him, we thinke wee haue halfe obeyned our matter: yea I say, when we our selues are in the fault, and there needeth no other iudge to condemne vs, but our owne conscience. If any man accuse me and I finde my selfe culpable: I seeke if I can finde any thing for mee to snatch at in him. And that will I alledge for mine owne discharge: and why so? For me thinketh that I shoulde so much the more diuert and turne away the mindes of them that shoulde be iudges of my cause, tō the ende that they should not wholly stay vpon mee, and that the euill whiche I haue committed, might bee as it were darkened and wrapped vp. The common practise therefore that we vse one with another, is that wee seeke some starting hole, & the same must serue vs to shift off the matter: as when we cā say, what? I haue done such a pleasure for a man: &

if I haue afterwarde offended him, the same ought to be layd in the ballance. Thus we would diminish the fault that we haue committed : or else we alledge thus: though I haue offended in this behalfe, is this man altogether innocent? Now when we come to God, & these things fal to the ground. It is true that we would vse the same talke with god as we do with mortall men. But we are deceyued. And why? what is that we can charge him withall: what can we find blame worthy in him? what seruice can we alledge that we haue done him, to say that he is beholding or boüden vnto vs for it. Our mouth must needs be stopped in all this, so as there is no more to do but too cōfesse the debt, & with all humilitie to acknowledge the condemnation to be iust without making any replie, or without atteyng the law any further, for we shal get no thing therby. And this is the argumēt that is here handled by Eliphias. And so we see that of this talk which he hath, may be gathered a good lesson: and he had spoken verie well, if he had applied the same as he shoulde. But he did not wel in applying it vnto Job. This is it wherein he was deceyued. Yet is this doctrine in it selfe & generally profitable for vs, that is to wit, that whē God doth summō vs before him, & stirreth vs vp to acknowledge our faults, it booteth not to seke any reply, or to say, if I haue offended in this behalfe God ought to pardō me: for behold I haue serued him in such a thing, and he ought to acknowledge it, and the same deserueth wel a good turn. Let vs then remoue all these toyes, for they takeno place when we appere before god. And why? For we bring him no gaine, he is made neither hote nor cold (as I say) by vs: and as we can do him no good, so also can we do him no harm. This once concluded and agreed on, we see that al presumption must be thrown down in vs. And there is no other remedie but with al humilitie to acknowledge the condemnation to be iust. But to the end that this same may the better bee vnderstanding: let vs debate the things in order as they are here cōteyned. VVberin (saith Eliphias) hal a man profit God? The wise man profiteth himself. True it is that at the first sight we think we deserue much at Gods handes, when we indeuor our selues to serue & honor him. But we be to much blinded herein. For we imagin that God might receiue some commoditie by vs, as though he had neede of vs. But contrariwise, he can neither increase nor diminish: he is in such sort the fountain of all goodnessse, that he wil borow nothing of another man: & that which men bring vnto him, is not to releue his necessitie, or to augment him in any wise. If I had nede (saith he) would I come vnto thee? Are not all the creatures in my hande? Furthermore, we know that God seeketh nothing without his owne Maiestie. So the let vs put away this foolish fantasie, that we do bring any cōmoditie or profit vnto God. And rather let vs confesse with David in the xvij. Psalme, that our goodnessse shall not reach vnto him. For let men enforce themselves as much as they will: yet can God receiue nothing at their handes, whereby it might be sayd that he fareth the better: yea and if God should bestow as many benefits vpon vs as wee woulde desire: yet could we make him no recompence, as it is sayde in the Cxvj. Psalme. VVhat shall I giue vnto the Lorde, for so many things as I haue receiued of him. I can do nothing but call vpon his name. So farre off is it then that we are able to make God bounden vnto vs, that when hee shall haue bestowed vpon vs all the benefites that may be, we are not able to giue him the like againe; neither can wee do him any seruice at all for it. Thus much concerning the first thing that we haue heere too note. Now if any man would aske the question, wherefore then doth God require of vs; that we shoulde be diligent to serue him?

It seemeth that he hath some respect to himselfe. No: there is no consideration but of vs, and of our saluation: God hath no respect of his owne profite, when hee giueth vs the rule of good living, and commaundeth vs to abstayne from euill, and requireth of vs to do this or that. God then in the whole lawe hathe no consideration of his owne profite, but considereth what is good for vs, and expedient for our saluation. Let vs do well, and the same shall returne vntoo our selues: let vs do euill, and the same shall returne too oure owne losse and hinderance: as for God, he remayneth always safe and sounde. It is true that (as muche as lyeth in vs) we offend his Maiestie, and abolishe his iustice, and are guiltie thereof. But yet can it not be sayd that we can diminish any thing of God, or that wee can robbe him of that which he hath, or that we can reach vnto him, too do him any iniurie. No truly. Therefore a man shall hurt none but himselfe: and likewise the profite that cometh of him returneth to his owne person. And herein we see the inclemable goodnessse of our God. For hee commandeth vs diligently, and declareth vntoo vs howe wee shoule liue. And why doth he so? Is it because he woulde play the good husbande? To say, I shall take some profite thereby? No surely. But bicause he procureth our wealth and saluation. If I should serue without respect of mine owne profite, and be so carefull of some mans benefite, that I shoulde go and sollicite him, saying, hee must doo this and that, and bee at him euening and morning too pricke him and stirre him forward to set some order in his affayres, and of all this no profite should redounde vnto my selfe: were not this a token of a rare and singular loue? And euen so dooth our God deale with vs. And yet what is hee? When wee perceyue his infinite Maiestie, and consider how he vouchsafeth too thinke vpon our saluation, and too be so carefull of it: mast wee not needes be touched too the quicke. Yea and as it were rauished and astonished at such bountifullnesse? and now what an vnthankfulnesse is in men, seeing that whereas God can win nothing by them, they are become so hardharted and dull, that when hee sheweth them the way of saluation, and exhorteth them too come vnto it, they will not vouchsafe too go one foote forward, but rather go backewarde. There is no excuse when we bee so vnthankefull to the bountifullnesse of our God. There is yet another thing, namely that although our God receyue nothing of vs: yet pretendeth as he were bounde vntoo vs. Haue I neede (sayth hee) of any thing that ye bring me? No: for hee can receyue nothing of vs. It is true: neuerthelesse God accepteth our doings, and maketh account of them, as though they were of some value: according as we see he likeneth himselfe to a husband man that hath a vineyard, which when he hath caused to bee dressed, he gathereth wine of it, or that hath a feilde, and reapeth corne of it. God in vsing such similitudes, declareth that he doth so account our workes, that they are vnto him as pleasant and sweete sacrifices. And also he sayeth that when we doo good to the poore, it is as if wee did it euen to him, and he accepteth it as done vnto himselfe, euen as our saviour Iesus Christ himself speakest of it, saying: whatsoeuer ye shal do to one of the least of my members, I accept it as if it had bin done to mine owne person. Seing then that our God abafelth himselfe so farre as too make himselfe subiect to the state and condition of a mortall and corruptible man, and sayeth that he receyuethe whatsoeuer we do vnto our brethren, althoough we can bring him nothing, and willingly bindeth himselfe vnto vs, when he is not in our debt: on our part, when we see al this, must we not needs be rauished with admiratiō of this so great a gentlenesse as our God vseth towardes vs? So then let vs note well how it is sayd in this place, that when a man shall haue taken paynes to leade a godly and vpright life according to the commaundements of God. It can not be sayde that in all his life he hath profited God any thing at all. He hath onely done himselfe good. But yet oure God to encourage vs to doo well, will accept the things whereby he taketh no profit. He requireth it as though he were the better by it, and declareth that wee shall not 10 leese our labour thereby, neither that it shall bee a thing vnprofitable for vs. This I say is the intent of our God: when he incourageth vs to lead a good life. Furthermore let vs knowe to what ende this is spoken vntoo vs in this place: for we must keepe in remembrance this circumstance that I haue spoken of, that is to wit, that when wee come to make our account before god, we must forget all these foolish imaginacions which we cōceiuē, that we can bring him such gaine as we shoulde deserue ought at his hand. Let all this(I say) be throwne downe. And why? He 20 is not as a creature that needeth the ayd and helpe of an other, he standeth in need of nothing, but is content with himselfe. Forasmuch then as our God is by no maner of meanes bounden vnto vs: let vs learne to humble our selues before him, and let vs besory for our sinnes, yea euen so as we may be vtterly ashamed of them, and desire God too forgiue vs them. But why shoulde hee forgiue vs, them? It is .not for that I can say, hee knoweth that I haue indeuered my selfe too leade a good life, and I haue, done this thing and that. For what is there that we can 30 so alledge? Surely nothing at all. And therefore let vs forget all these delayes, and acknowledge oure selues guiltie: for when wee haue vſed all these replyes, yet can they not reache vnto God. VVhen we haue too doo with mortall men, and vſe such flourishes too couer our faults withall: yet are we maruelously ashamed, if it happen that our lie do appeare. VVhat shal then become of vs when we come before our God? And herein we see how the Papists are deceyued. For although they can not deny but that they be in daunger of Gods curse, if he would vſe any extremitie towards them: yet will they alledge their satisfactions, and therein play the marchants with God, so that if they haue made default in one poynt, they can make amedes for it another way: yea they haue theyr workes, which they call workes of supererogation, which God never commaunded, these serue to fill vp the holes, whenthey haue cōmitted any euill, wherwith God doth vrge them. VVel(say they) if we haue sinned, here is it that shall make amedes for all: yea if the matter were tried by the ballance, yet would there be some ouerplus. To 40 this point are the Papists come, that they thinke it a great absurditie that forgiuenesse of sinnes should be frank and free, and that God should pardon vs of his mere goodnes. They will easily graunt it to be true cocerning the trespass, but cocerning the punishment, it perteineth vnto vs to redeeme it. VVhem be caried away with such pride: must we not say, that they haue quite transformed God, & that they know no more what maner a one he is? So much the more must we note wel that which is cōteined here: that is to wit, that we shal easily persuade our selues, that God is somthing profited by vs:which is but mere folly, & a vain fancie. And so whē we shal haue cōceyued how high he is, let vs lerne to acknowledge our faults with all humilitie & make no reply: for we cā lay nothing to his charge, neither cā we alledge vnto him that he hath receyued any thing at our hands, nether that he is in any thing bounden vnto vs. Thus much for one point. Now it is saide moreover, that god careth not whither we do wel or ill, or whither we walk vpe rightly or no. VVhē Eliphas speaketh thus: he meneth not that god shetteth his eies, & that there is no difference of good & ill with him: but he meeneth that for himselfe he forceth not of it. It is true that God as he is the fountaine of all iustice and right, loueth equitie, & if we lead an vpright life, then become we the Image of God. For it is certain that we haue no goodnesse in our selues: But it is as we see the sun shineth here beneth, when he casteth forth his beames. The brightnes that we see here beneth cōmeth not from the earth: we see the brightnesse vpō the houses, and vpon the earth, and yet it procedeth not from thence: but it is a brightnes reflected (as they call it) which returneth againe as the earth receyuethe it: it resteth then vpon the earth. For when we beholde our selfes in a glasse, the glasse hath no face: but the face of a man presenteth it self there, and the glasse representeth it backē againe. So then when we do well, it is not of our selues (for there can nothing be drawne from vs but al filthinesse and beggerie, as we are corrupted of nature) but our Lorde poureth his goodnesse & rightuousnesse vpon vs. Then if he shew vs the fauor in regenerating vs by his holy spirit, that we liue holily, we are as glasses in the which his image is as it were represented: and this is a brightnesse which commeth frō aboue, but sheweth it self here beneth. Now for as much as god acknowledgeth al that is good to come of him: this is the cause why he loueth that which is good: as it is impossible that he should do otherwise, seeing that he is the welspring and fountain therof. Otherwise he forceth not in respect of himself: that is to say, for his owne profit, or advantage that he receyuethe therby, he careth not how men do liue. VVhen men do the worst they can, shal they thereby take away the rightuousnesse that is in God? Can they diminish his maestie: can they abolish his glory & honor? can they shorten the bounds of his kingdom? No, they can not. In this sense then is it sayd, that God careth not what men do: but concerning vs, let vs consider if it be not our felicitie to submit our selues vnto him, & to yeeld our selues his obedient subiects. And seeing that he hauing no need of vs, neither of our life, nor workes, is yet so carefull that we 50 should lead a godly life: let vs hereby know the loue that he beareth vs: as it hath alredy beeene sayde that hee doth youchsafe to ioyne vs vnto him, and so to unite vs, that if we liue well, he sayth his kingdom is established: if we liue yll, he sayth he reigneth no more. And howe is that? Can we so hinder God, that his soueraigne dominion should not remaine vnto him for euer? No. And why then doth hee yſe such maner of speach? It is (as I haue alreadie sayd) to declare vnto vs howe hee loueth vs: as it is sayde in the eighteenth Chapter of the Proverbes, where the wisedome Pro. 18.4.31 of God is brought in saying, that his pleasure and delight is to dwel among men. God speaketh thus to declare vnto vs, that hee will not keepe his goodnesse shette vp and concealed in himselfe, but will poure it out amongst vs, that we may be partakers of it: and that hee taketh suche pleasure so to lighten vs, to the ende we should not bee as brute beastes, but know him, and conceiue of him as hee teacheth vs, in such sort as we might be lifted vp on high into his kingdome. After the same manner dealeth hee in all other things: for he delighteth to bestowe his benefites vpon vs, and to giue vs such fruition of them, as hee ioyneth himselfe vntoo vs, and vs vntoo him. God then is carefull ouer vs, that wee should leade a goodlife, but not for that hee hath any profite or harme thereby. This is the summe of that whiche wee haue to note. It is saide moreover. Is it for feare of thee that he will reprove thee, or goe to Lawe with thee? Heere it is shewed vs yet more playnely, that wee shall gette nothing, by seekinge delayes wyth G O D, as wee are woont too do wyth our fellowes fellowes and mates. For what is the cause that men vse so muche cauilling in their contiouerfies and debates which they haue with men, but to defende themselues to appaise the partie : or else to make him afarde, that he should no more prosecute the matter with such rigour ? As for example. VVhen any man is assaulted, hee will consider : this man pursueth me liuely : what shall I do ? then will hee vse some way to scape : or else hee will set some one at his aduersaries tayle, to put a flea in his eare, as they say : Thinkest thou not that thine aduersarie is to strong for thee ? Or else he will styrre vp agaynst him something vnder the gronde : so that the man draweth backe, and waxeth colde, and dareth not prosecute the matter as he had begonne : for he feareth least the mischeefe should fall vpon his owne head. So then because we are woont to make mortal men afarde, to the end we might escape their handes, and shew them our teeth, and giue them signes that we haue wayes and meanes to be avenged of them : we thinke wee are able to do the lyke with God. And what a follie is that ! must we not needes be voyde of sense and iudgement ? but because men be so arrogant as to thinke to practise the same things with God which they doo to their neighbors : therefore it is sayde, thinkest thou that God holdeth his peace for feare of thee ? Nowe what is the cause that moueth men too put their aduersaries so in feare ? because they consider, this man woulde do me iniurie, I must stay him : and although he set vpon me, I will giue him the repulse : or else I will finde some meanes by the lawe too reppresse him. The thing that stayeth vs from troubling one another : is that when we purpose to defende our selues, and the wicked seke to annoy vs, we haue the law that setteth it selfe betwene both parties: for when we make that our refuge , it stayeth them from executing that whiche they purposed to do : and thus wee proceede, when wee haue too doo with mortall men. But let vs not thinke that God is ledde with any such affection. For why ? what can wee do vnto him ? can we make him hote or colde, as I haue sayde ? So then God dooth not pursue vs for feare least wee shoulde preuent him, and sette our foote vpon his throte : for if he woulde but blowe vpon vs, wee must needes bee ouerthrowne : and they that so rise vp agaynst God , what doo they but breake theyr neckes ? It is as much as if a man shoulde breake his sinnewes and veynes, whiles he laboureth to go vp on high, and can not : hee must needes misse of his purpose, and if hee will force himselfe beyonde measure, hee shall breake and bruse his whole bodie . This is then a deadly fall. So happeneth it when men are come to this diuelishe pride to lift vp themselues agaynst God. VVe must not thinke then that our God is afarde of vs : for hee will mocke at such ouerweening, as it is sayde in the seconde Psalmie. VVell, it is true, that men make much ado when they conspire togither. And especially if kings and princes confederate and ioyne togither agaynst the liuing God , and the people also agree with them, they make much ado : but it is burhere beneath, and men are but as Grashoppers, as the prophet Esay speaketh of the .

our charge, it is not for that we bee able to doo him any hurt : it is not for any respect that he hath of himself to stay vs, lest we should preuet to giue the onset vpon him first : no surely. VVherefore then ? It is to make vs feele the euill that is in vs, that we might be thereby stirred vp to seeke some remedie , and with true repentance come vnto him, to be gouerned according to his wil. God therfore when he punisheth men, seeketh their helth, and in condemning mindeth to acquite them: or else when they be chastised, he mindeth to ratifie & confirme his justice, to shewe that no euill shall remaine vnpunished. And therwithall also he intendeth too abate mens pride , for that they delight in their sinnes, and glorie therein. God will bring down all those things, when he bringeth them to iudgement. And so let vs learne , no more to flatter our selues, when wee haue any remorse inwardly , and bee condemned by the woerde of God , and men shewe vs oure faultes, and rubbe vs on the galled backe. Let vs learne, I say, no more to vse any startingholes : for we shall do nothing else but marre our market, for wee may bee sure that God is not afarde of vs as though we coulde do him any harme : but hee stirreth vs vp too the feeling of our sinnes, that wee might bee displeased wyth them : and by this meanes he reacheth his hande vntoo vs, to leade vs to saluation : or else he mindeth to double our condemnation , that we may bee so much the more vnxecusable in that we eschew him, and beside the naughtinesse that is in vs, do also become so wilful & stubburn, as we wil not bow, whē he goeth about to bring vs back vnto him. This is the summe of that which we haue to consider. Nowe Eliphas addeth moreover. Is not thy malice great ? and are not thine iniquities infinite ? Truely this is verie yll applyed to the person of Job (as hath beene alreadie noted) but in the meane season we must holde vs to the generall doctrine, too the ende wee may applie it to our selues, as it is needfull for vs. Let vs note then, that by the mouth of a rude man , which had not such wisdom as hee ought too haue had for the apt applying of the truth to his vse, the holy Ghost dooth shewe vs what we haue to doo, when wee come too recken with God : namely too knowe that wee are in euerie poynt guiltie, and by all meanes bounde vnto him, and that hee is nothing at all bound vnto vs : and furthermore also that we can do him no harme. And that when he bringeth vs to the lawe, and condemneth vs, it is not for his owne profite, but for our saluation and wealth ? Yea let vs assure our selues that cuen when we be condemned, it is to the ende that we might be afterwarde acquit by him, least we shoulde fall into that condemnation whereinto the wickid shall be constrainyd to come in the ende. On the other side, let vs know, that when God bringeth vs thus to iudgement, it is to examin our sinnes , and too search out our whole life, to the ende we shoulde be displeased with oure sinnes. But in the meane season when wee shal haue ripped vp al that is in vs, & think that we know what is there : let vs understande that wee haue not yet perceyued the hundred part of it. I speake euen of them that haue a cleare sight, and flatter not themselues nor foster any euill . For howsoeuer it bee, for as muche as men bee dull , and haue a short and dimme sight , it is certaine that they shall not perceyue the hundredth parte of theyr sinnes . But God who hathe a farre more cleare sight than wee haue, knoweth them. If wee fall intoo a sinne too daye , and bee manifestly conuictid thereof , wee will committe another by to morrow in the Morning : yea and the daye shall not passe without a great number of offences and transgres-sions. And we are euer new to begin againe. For we shall not be conuinced of one fault onely, or of twoo, or of three, but of an hundred. And so what shall become of vs then? VVhen a man hath well examined his conscience, and findeth himselfe so many wayes guiltie, and then concludeth that God knoweth yet a hundred tymes more: where can hee become therevpon? Must wee not needs bee astonied at it? must not our heares stande vpright vpon our heades, and we bee plunged in the bottome of death? Thus much wee haue too note vpon this place: that is too witte, that as oft as in hearing the woerde of God preached, the vyses where-with we be spotted, are condemned: euerie man muste enter intoo himselfe, and make his owne processe, and tarie not till God prosecute the lawe agaynst him, but say within himselfe, Alas I haue offended on this wyse, and not onely once, nor twice, but so many tymes and more. And if I haue offended on this wise, there are diuerse other wayes: so that if God woulde turne vp my filthinesse, what a thing woulde it bee? I should be vtterly vndone. This I say woulde bring vs too humilitie and repentance: so as wee shoulde not bee so slacke as wee haue beene too approche vntoo our God: or at the least wee shoulde bee no more so stubburne to stiue agaynst his corrections. Yea and let vs bee so much the more carefull too doo thus, because wee see the moste part of men delight and glorie in their sinnes: and where they shoulde sige and grone, and bee vtterly ashamed, they will bee counted good Christians, yea of the perfectest that maye bee founde. In deede they will faye generally: I am a man, and all men muste confess 30 themselves sinners: but yet there is none that cloth better than I: I knowe none that hath a better will too liue well than I. And who are they that say thus? Filthie naughtypackes, yea and so filthie that the ayre stinketh of their wickednesse: and yet will they in thys case make a plaine mocke at God. Nowe (as I haue sayde) if wee examine our selues well, there shall remaine vntoo vs nothing but vter confusion, insomuch that we must needs acknowledge our selues guiltie, not for one sinne, nor for twoo, but throughly and wholy, 40 knowing that wee are accursed of God, and most miserable, were it not that hee hath pitie and compassion on vs. To bee breefe, wee are heere taught, that men must not confess theirselues sinners before God lightly, and as it were for fashion sake: (as they doo whiche thinke it ynough to say: oh I do not denie but that there bee some faultes in me.) No, we must not do so: but we must make the burthen so heauie as wee can beare it no more. For indeed so shall God be truly glorified: which is not when men say that they haue some small infirmities and imperfections in them: but when with Dauid they speake of the greatnessse of theyt sinnes, and of the multitude of their iniquities. And as Daniell speaketh of it in his confession: who was an Angell in comparison of other men, and yet hee sayeth, I haue confess'd my sinnes, and the sinnes of my people. Hee speakest not as of some small fault: but he sayeth, oure sinnes, O Lorde, are great and outragous. And so let vs learne too acknowledge what wee ere, yea and that in such a sort, as God may bee truely glorified throughly 50 and for the whole. Thus muche for one poynt. And what hope may wee haue that God will receyue vs, and bee fauourable and mercifull vntoo vs, if wee bee not as it were overwhelmed with our sinnes that wee haue committed? Oure Lorde Iesus sayth not, Come vntoo mee all yee that say, I am a sinner, there are infirmities in mee: no hee sayeth not so. But all yee that are loden and wearie, whose shoulders doo bende vnder the weight of your sinnes. These are they that bee calleed of Iesus Christ, too the ende they may finde mercie in him, and in his grace: and not they that so mocke with God, making a light confession, and beeing not once touched in their hertes. This is it that wee haue to note vpon this worde. Furthermore, to come to such a knowledge, wee must particularly examine the sinnes wee haue committed: for a man shall neuer truely say, I am as it were throwne intoo the bottome of hell, vnlesse he bee well searched out, and haue considered his sinnes, and marked them well one after another. Vnlesse then we do thus particularly examine our selues, we shall neuer perceyue our iniquities to be infinite and innumerable. For this cause is the matter here couched in this order. For Eliphias after hee hath pronounced in generall termes, that the sinne of Job was great and his iniquities infinite, sayeth: Hast thou not spoyled him that was naked? hast thou not taken a pledge without a cause? Hast thou not withdrawne the bread from him that was a hungred? Hast thou not denyed him water too drinke that was a thirst? And in the meane season wast not thou condescrate with men full of violence? This is the cause why God dooth nowe persecute thee. It is true (as we haue alreadie sayde) that Eliphias doth Job great iniurie and wrong: but in the meane season the spirite of God intendeth heere to teach vs the order which we must kepe for to be truly humblcd before God, least wee become hard harted, and by that meanes prouoke his vengeance instryuing agaynst him. To be breefe, let vs note that men shall never feele theirselues sinners as they ought to do, except they doo particularly consider themselues, and afterward enter into an account as it were by parcelmeale. True it is that wee can neuer make an ende; but wee must awayes conclude with Dauid: VVho can vnderstande his faultes? But yet wee maye not therefore say, that things muste bee passed over lightly, and not bee searched out to the ground. If an earthly iudge can bee sharpe witted, and attentiuē too heare a processe, which is but for the life of one man: must not we, 60 I praye you, when wee haue offended oure God, haue therin a greater care? yea and when the processe is not criminall, but onely for some small summe of money: yet must the iudge looke neerely too it, too see whether there bee witnessesse too it, whether in their processe they haue proceeded aright, and that the things be verified: and yet the controuersie shall bee but for ten or twentie Florens, for an hundred crownes, or for some other tryfle. And if the iudge doo not his duetie, hee muste needs bee counted guiltie before God as a theefe: for he is worse than a theefe, seeing that he stealeth an other mans goodes and substance, and that which apperteineth to one, he giueth vnto another. And when God dooth so farre honour vs as too make vs judges of our owne liues, yea and doth it for our saluation: shall we, I pray you, be excused, if we be negligent, and close vp our eies at that which is so good & profitable for vs? It is certain that we shal not. So the let vs weyl that which I haue touched: that is to wit, that men shal never truly know theirselues sinners, as they ought to doo, and as it is requisite, vntill they haue examined their liues particularly. And in deed we see how Dauid vseth the matter. For one fault onely bringeth him into the middes of the sea: when he seeth that hee hath committed so heynous an offence before God, as too bee the cause of the cruell murther, not onely of one man, but of many, whyles he went about to kil Vrias. Therfore whē he saw the wickednes of his sin, the enormitie therof constraineth him, not only to think vpon that fault alone: but also to consider himselfe more neerely,

Dan.9.c.20

neerely, yea and to behold himselfe as in the mids of the Sea, and to condemne himselfe vtterly. Thus also must we do. And therefore the popish shrifte was a diuelishe thing, when they would haue men shriue themselues in the priests eare for to spew out their sinnes there, as if a drunkard should goe spew out his wine, when he hath taken in somuch that his stomake is not able too beare it. God then wil not haue vs to make such a confession: for it is cleane contrarie and repugnant to his word. On the other side also hee will not haue vs too saye at one word, I haue offended: and to passe ouer the coales lightly (as the proverbe is heere in this countrey) but to consider ourselues ncere at hand, and every man to enter into his owne conscience, and too acknowledge thus: well, I am not only giltie before God for one fault alone, but for such a fault and such a fault: and not only for one time, but I still fall to it againe. VVhen we examine ourselues thus after suche a speciall sorte, wee may well conclude: Lorde our iniquities are infinite, our transgressions are innumerable. This is it wherein God will bee glorified. Thus must the poore sinners be touched too the quicke, and wounded in their conscience, that they may be displeased with their sinnes. In deede they that confess themselves in generall termes and saye, I am a sinner as all other men are: do well declare that they be not touched inwardly in the bottome of their hart, and that they cannot tell what it is to know their sinnes for to be displeased with the. But as for vs, let vs learne to searche all our sinnes euē to the bottome: and when wee haue gathered any number, let vs knowe that there is a hundred times more, and let vs be ashamed in ourselues, and acknowledge the condēnation, sighing before God, and saying: alas Lord it is true that our sinnes are many in number, and our iniquities infinite: but let the multitude of thy mercies be poured vpon vs, as Dauid spea- Pf. 40.c.13 afflict his. Now if we conclude thervpō, that his afflicting of thē is for that they led a cursed & wicked life: it is the next way to peruer al. But yet ther is a thig behind that is worse: which is that we enter into foolish cōiectures. And what are they? This má hath bin to mēs sight a man of a good cōuersation: & how then shall we find in him the cause wherfore he hath deserved to be so delt with al? This is it that ḡiaeth vs occasion to dream , and dote as Eliphias doth here. VVherfore we must be more sober & refrain our selues whē we go about to giue judgemēt vpon our neighbours. And therefore let vs not go to it at adūctures, but let vs examin well their life: and whē we know a man to bee a wicked person, and a despiser of God, so as his faults be notorious : then we may well say, that God punisheth him. And why? to the end that we should be taught by h̄is example, and that the same might be a profitable lesson for vs. Besides that, whē we perceue not in a má the cause why god shuld punish him seuerely: if any calamitie happē vnto him, let vs stay our judgemēt, & practise that which is here alledged out of Psal. 41.4.1. the psalm, that is, let vs be rather pitiful & inclined to the good part, & think, alas, if our Lord would deale with vs according to our deserts, what shuld becom of vs: For we ar no better thā this má: yea we may say that we be wors, and yet we see how he is plaged. By this let vs lern, that God wil lead vs farder, & sheweth vs that our life is nothing : & that moreouer he intendeth to exercise his in diuers battels, and whē they shal haue shewed thēselues pacient in the mids of their afflictions, he will haue thē comfort themselues in this, that they knowe there is a better rest prepared for thē in another place. Thus then must we in this case proceede. Now let vs particularly examine that which is touched hcere. Eliphias saith, Thou hast taken a gage of thy neigboure without cause, thou hast spoyled him that was naked. Heere we see that our sinnes ceasse not to be odious in the sight of God, althogh mē cōdemne vs not. For if a má be so cruell to take a pledge of some poore man when he lendeth him at his neede: if he take from him either the couerlet of his bed, or his coate wherwith he shuld be clothed: no má will sue him in the law for it. For if he should be sued there, he shuld be acquitted. And why? he hath lent him his money, and it was lawfull for him to take a pledge for h̄is assurance. Before men, hee can by no meanes bee constreynd: but we must not therfore thinke to be acquitted before God. And therfore when we thinke and perswade ourselues to be iust and innocent before God, bycause wee haue not bin reprooved before men: wee are deceiued. For worldly policie serueth not to bring vs to the perfectiō, that God requireth of vs as of his chldrē: it is sufficient that by it we be so maintained that euery man may inioy his right, that the strōgest carrie it not away, and that deceit, extorcion, iniuries, & outrages be punished. To this purpose should worldly policie serue. But whē we come before God, it is not ynoch enough for vs to alledge, I haue bin no theefe to be led to the galowes, or to bee whipped, I haue murdred no má that I shuld be condēned to death, I haue committed no crime that bringeth with it eyther bodily punishment, or infamie. VVhē we shal haue alledged al this, it is to no purpose. And why? for if I haue born my neigboure but a secret grudge, I am alredy accountēd a murderer before God. If I haue attempted to corrupt & abuse an other mans wife, or if I haue looked on hit vnchastly: lo I am cōdemned as a whoremonger, if I couet an other má's goods, and seke to draw thē vnto me although mē do not cast it in my teeth, yet am I takē for a theefe before God. VVe may thē out of this place gather a profitable doctrine: which is that we may not flatter ourselues whē mē cannot charge vs in our whole life that we haue bin sued in the law for any our misdeedes. To b eshort, though men may iudge vs as righteous as may be, yet must we not thinke that wee bee scaped for that. And what is the cause? he that shall haue taken a pledge for the assurance of his money, is counted before God sometime for a murderer. It is here said expressly, to take a pledge without a cause. And why? for simply the thing is not evill of it selfe, neither doth God vtterly reiect it, that is to witte that a man should take a pledge. For if it be lawfull to bie another mans goodes, it is lawfull to take a pledge. Behold, a feeld or a medow is layd to pledge, which thing God doth not cōdemne: & likewise if they bring some part of their mouables: the same of it selfe ought not vtterly to be reiected: but it is sayde that it is evill to take a pledge without a cause. And how is that? Eliphias addeth his mind, so that we neede not to seeke any other gloze. He saithe that Job hathe taken a pledge of his neigboure, that he hath spoiled him that was naked. And this is according to that which our lord declarereth in his law, namely that the pledges which we take, should not be of that which serueth to a mans ordinarie neede. For if a man be spoiled, and be a colde, if we be so cruel as to take his coate, the same is a kinde of murder. If a má forgoe his bed for the releefe of his hunger, or lay his couerlet to pledge for corn or other things necessary for his sustenance: he that taketh it, is very vnkind. For so farforth as lieth in him, he killeth him: only he chāgeth the kind of death: & it is as much as if a má wer in danger to be hāged by his own hands, & I wil vnsie the rope for him, but in steed of that, I will cut his throte. So then when a poore man shall haue nothing to eate, and shall be constrained to giue away his bed to get meat: this is to villanouse a crueltie, & such as can by no meanes be excused. And therefore our Lord saith in his law, take heed that the pledge of the poore man remaine not with thee al night. VVhē thou seest that the same setteth him to his necessary vse, & that he cannot be without it but he must susteine harme by it: restore it him againe: & if thou let the poore má haue his bed again and releue his necessitie, his sides shal blesse thee: & if thou haue restored vnto him his garment, so that he be not a cold, his body shal blisse thee. Cōtrariwise when a poore má is put frō his bed & diseased through thy wickednes, for that thou hast bin so vngentle that thou woldest lēd him nothing without a pledge: althogh the poore má do not cry for vēgēace, but is as he wer dumb, yet shalt thou be accursed, & his necessity shal be sufficiēt to cal thee to account before the judgemēt seate of god. This is now the mind of Eliphias. Yea saith he, thou hast spoyled him that was naked: that is to say, whē a poore má came vnto thee, & required to borrow money of thee, thou diddest not cōsider when thou tookest a pledge of him, whether he gaue thee his coate, or his bed, or his potte, or his pāne, so that when he had bread, he knew not how to eate it: for thou hast takē frō him the thing wherof he stood in great neede. VVe see thē that for to walke sincerely before God, & to liue togither as brethrē, it is not ynoch enough for vs to kepe the earthly lawes & to do nothing against worldly policie: but we must ascend higher; that is, wee must keepe this equitie of nature, to do nothing to any other má, but that which we wold that other men shuld do to vs. Therfore let euery man consider well what he wold that other mē shuld do to him, that is to say, what he wold iudge to stād with equitie, if he were in the like neede. Nowe there is none but can say very well, why should we not: for our Lord cōmādeth vs to cherish one another: and when I am hungry, I am in dāger also to be a colde:

acold: and he that pulleth my coate of from my backe, dothe not he declare that hee seeketh nothing else but too cut my throte? wee can alledge this reason very well for our selues. Then if we do the like to another, shall there neede any other iudge than ourselves too condemne vs? This is a brefe summe of that which we must learne out of this place. Nowe it foloweth afterwarde. Thou hast not giuen him water too drinke that was atbirst: thou hast withdrawne thy bread from him that was hungry. Heere Eliphias sheweth that it mighte bee that Job was punished of God for that hee had not bin so pitifull towards men as to releue them in their neede. Now that we may gather some frute out of this doctrine, wee must leaue the person of Job, as we haue before touched: and therefore let every man consider himselfe when God visiteth vs, and dealeth with vs so rigorously, so as wee are compelled too feele oure sinnes: I say lette vs examine the matter well, whether it bee not because wee haue not shewed suche courtesie towrdes oure neighbours as was commauded vs, and as wee ought too shew. Heere it is saide,

Pro. 21. b. 13 that hee that stoppeth hys eares when the pore crieth vnto him, and requireth aide at his hande, shall crie himselfe, and shal not be hearde. Behold God threatneth vs, that if wee will not voutsafe too helpe them that require aide at oure handes, when wee haue power and meanes too do it, he will suffer vs to fall into some mischiefs, yea the richest and those that lyue most at ease: for God hathe in his hande many rods too chastize vs withall, whiche wee at the firsde do not conceive. Truth it is that they whiche are rich hope they shall neuer fall intoo any perplexitie, and thinke that although trouble and confusion shoulde happen through the whole worlde, yet shulde they remayne in peace. But our Lorde declareth that they whiche will not helpe their neighbors at their neede, nor make any accounte of them, shall come intoo theyr place, and shall not be holpen, neither shall there be any to releue them: no they shall not bee hearde from aboue, and if they flee vnto God, the gate shall bee shut vnto them:

Lam. 2. 1. 13, as it is saide, There shall be iudgement without mercy to him that would shew no mercy. And it is the molt horrible threatening that can bee vsed against vs, when God declareth vnto vs that he will deale with vs without mercie. For what can wee looke for if God haue not mercie and pitie vpon vs? wee must needs all bee swallowed vp. Vndoubtedly, God depriueth vs and barreth vs from all hope of his goodnessse, when we be so cruell towrdes oure neighbours. Therefore if God visite vs, and our afflictions bee great, let vs learne too seache out diligently the cause wherefore, and too examine the matter thus: goto, I haue had meanes to help those that stode in neede of worldly goodes. But how haue I holpen them? haue I discharged my duetic heererin? if there were any that had neede of my helpe, haue I indeuenered my selfe to help him? if any came vnto me, was I redy to communicate my goodes vnto him? If we knowe that wee haue not done our duetic in this behalfe, let vs sigh before God, and knowe that he sheweth vs great fauoure to put vs in rememberance of our faults. Furthermore let vs note, that all these are fond & foolish startingholes to say, VVhat? shoulde I leaue my selfe bare of mine owne goodes? is not that which God hath giuen me mine owne, to dispose thereof as muche as shall seeme good vnto me, and no more? And if I haue goodes, I haue not stolne them: and if I do no man wrōg heerein, why shuld it not be lawfull for me to inioy that which I hold of God? For I giue him thankes for it, acknowledging that it was giuen me of him. I say we will thinke it wel done to alledge al this. For althogh our lord do giue vnto the riche that whiche they possesse, and though they haue it by a lawfull meane in such sorte, that they can protest that they haue it of him: yet followeth it not that they may vse it in such sorte, as they shoulde haue no regarde vnto the necessitie of another man, or that they should do it but lightly. For wher God bestoweth riches vpon vs abundantly, he doth vs the honoure to make vs his stewards and receiuers. Now we see that a receiuer hath not onely the charge to receive and heape vp goodes, but also to distribute them when his master commandeth him. Seeing then that our Lord appointeth vs as stewards of the goodes which hee putteth into our hands: hee will also haue vs to distribute them. And where? VVe know that he hath no neede of vs to disburse any for him: he wold haue vs then to help our neighbours and those that stand in neede: and therfore they that haue abundāce of welth must not alledge, O this is mine owne, yea it is so indeede: howbeit with this condition, that thou shuldest helpe those that stand in neede thereof. But that thou shuldest deuoure it thy selfe alone, God hath not giuen it thee too that ende. Truth it is that no lawe can bee made in this behalfe as saint Paule declareth: For it is not as if a Prince should leuiē a subsedie, for he will require some quantitie of the goodes that every man posseseth, and therepon must the cessement be made. God dothe vse no such proceeding: for hee loueth those that offer vnto him of theyr meere liberalitie, and (as saint Paule saith) with a cheerefull hart. The rich then must not giue vnto the poore as of necessitie and constraint: but with a free and frāke hart. And therfore if our neighbours bee hungry and thristie, and we knowing of their necessitie do not releue them: we be not to be excused. For then we haue deuoured and abused the benefits that God hathe put into our hands. VVhen we do thus, I say, it is certayne that God will count vs giltie as murtherers. And thus much concerning this verse where it is saide, that hee which is punished of God hath denied to giue a poore hungry man bread, and hath not giuen him water too drinke that was thirsty. No v it is added furthermore, the mightie man in the meane season possessed the earth, and be that bad autoritic dwelt therein. This serueth to shew that the riche men haue no compassion bycause they liue at ease. For they knowe not what it is to stand in neede, they knowe not what necessitie meeneth: and therefore they are not touched therwith. To be shorte, when they be full, they thinke that all the world is so as well as they. This is the sunime of Eliphias mind in thys place.

Nowe hee applieth the same to the person of Job. He vpbraideth him that the earth was not made for a smal number of men as the rich men thinke, which haue neuer ynoigh, but dayly are purchasing more and more, saying thus too themselues: This would serue well for my purpose, I must needs get insuch a peece of ground. They neede but sixe foote when they haue their full measure, that is to say, when they shall be buried: and he that hath goodes ynoigh to find a hundred persons is yet aferd he should starue for hunger. Like vnsatiable whirlpooles as they are, they wold not content themselues if they had the whole earth in possession, but woulde (if they could) pull the Sunne out of the skie. For it greeueth them that the poore shuld haue so much in common with them as to inioy the brightnesse of the sunne: Thus these whirlpooles would deuoure all, and thinke that the worlde is made for none but them.

Eliphias

Eliphas reproacheth heere such vanitie, according also as it is worthy to be condemned: howbeit he doth not well to applie the same to the person of Job, and yet this doctrine is profitable for vs. So then let vs vnderstand, that if a man abuse his credite, and ceasse not to gather deceiptfully bycause hee hath alwayes wherewith to compasse his matters and too bring them too passe, but is of vnstaunched and vnsatiable couetousnesse, and saith, I will haue such a thing, and I ca yet wind in such a thing, and therefore nippeth and pincheth on every side: it is alone as if he would haue the earth to be made for him alone. And this is it that is ment heereby, saying, that they whiche haue authoritie in the earth dwell therein. True it is that our Lord would, there shuld be gouernement: it is not amisse that there be rich men and poore:

Pro. 22.4.2. and both are created of God saith Salomon. In so saying he meeneth two things, that is to witte, that the riche should not despise the poore for as much as they are the creatures of God: nor the poore condemne the rich, for as much as God would there shoulde be both riches and pouertie. So then it is very lawfull for a man to haue riches in possession, and to inioy that which hee hath: But yet must he know, that we liue in the world with condition to vse mutuall participatioō one to another, and God doth not only giue an habitation or dwelling to the that can liue on their owne, but also saith that he hath giueri the earth for an inheritance to men. And the same is spoken generally. And therefore although there be some

Psa.115.6.16 in the world that haue not one foote of lande: yet must they haue a dwelling place in the world, at leastwise for 30 their money, if they haue it not of their owne: yea cuen in a straunge countrey, if they bee not in their native countrey, and if God will so trie them. And if the riche that dwell by them go about to drive them a farre off by spreading of their wings abrode: it is as muche as if they were angry with God, and in despite of him would take the whole world into their hand. This is it that we haue to note in this place: and it is a profitable lesson, to teach them which are aduanced too credite, not to be blinded with pride, nor to abuse their authoritie as they are wont to do. Then if a man be rich, let him consider that hee must not therefore occupie the whole earth. If he be in authoritie, hee must not therefore despise the poore which are of no estimation. No: but they must support one another & so behaue theselues, that he which is rich may offer some meanes to the poore to liue with him, and that they may get their liuing honestly when they trauell for his aduantage. Let him that is poore (althogh he haue nothing of his owne) content himselfe, seeing that it pleasest God to make him able to get his liuing without doing iniurie too other men: and let them so deale one with another, as the common societie may be mainteyned, and euery man be nurished and susteyned. Thus then are the rich men warned not to despise the poore so proudly as they were wōt to do: and the poore also to walke according to their degree and small habilitie: and all men to liue as though they were lodged in this world by the hande of God and nurished by his grace. This is the summe of that which we are taught in this place. It is said moreouer, that Job had sent away the widdowes without any succoure or aide, and that he had broken the arme of the fatherlesse: that is to say, that he had so throwen them downe: that whereas the poore fatherlesse shoulde haue bin succoured, they were rather oppressed. And heere is speciaall mentiō made of widows and fatherlesse children, bycause the Lord doth specially commend them for that they haue left succoure. For the wife is vnder the shadow of her husband and vnder his protection so long as she hath him aliue: and he also that is come to mans state, is alredy able too maienteine himselfe. But a poore widdowe hath neither Counsell nor meanes: and a poore fatherlesse child knoweth not what things meane. These therefore are more redy to be spoiled, and therfore our Lord would haue them so muche the more commended: for we are wont to pleasure them of whome we looke for recompence. But contrariwise God intendeth to proue our charitie, whither we will do good to them that are not able to requite vs. And besides that, looke where men be oppressed, there must wee applye such meanes as God hath giuen vs. The same is to be seene in widdowes & fatherlesse children: & therfore God hath commended them vnto vs. Hee ioyneth also straungers with them, bycause they haue not many kinsfolke, nor are alied or lincked too a long traine of friends by whome they might be maienteined. So much the more it becommeth the children of God to haue pitie vpon such persons. To be briefe, we see that God in his lawe and throughout the whole holy Scriptures, declareth himselfe to be more greeuously offended when widdowes and fatherlesse children and straungers are afflicted: than whē any other men are hurt or hanned, bycause that they be destitute of all succoure. And therfore so much the more must we haue pitie on them: and bycause they haue no meanes to requite vs, we shewe ourselues to bee the children of God, when we extend our charitie to them, and also God doth acknowledge the same, and putteth it in his accounts: and therefore let vs not doubt but it is much more profitable so to entreat the straungers, widdowes, and fatherlesse children, than if men had alredy recompenced vs. Contrariwise when we vexe those that as now do lie open to so many iniuries, and do addē euill vpon euil: we are come to the accomplishment of all mischiefe, and it is a token that wee are voide of all humaine iudgement, and become like vnto brute beasts: and therefore Eliphas (to reprove thys sinne) saith heere, thou hast reiectē the widdow and not succoured her: thou hast not holpen the fatherlesse when he was troden vnder foote. To be short, let vs assure ourselues that the Lord would haue the weake to bee supported by them that haue best meanes and are most able. If we do not so, we shew ourselues not to be the children of God. For wherevnto doth God looke? or wherein doth he chiefly exercise his mercie and pitie vpon them that are oppressed and can beare no more. It is saide that wee must resemble our heauenly father. The triall Lu.6.e.3.b. whereby we should shew that we are not called in vaine to be his childe, is when we are beccome like vnto him. Now we know that although God be pitifull to all his Psa.145.b.6 creatures, and although his goodnessse be poured out vpon all men: yet neverthelesse he telleteth vs specially that he regardeth them that are troden vnder foote and oppressed through iniuries and violences, and that he will helpe them, and be the defender of the fatherlesse, and Psa.146.c.7 maienteine the widdowes and strangers. Seing that God 8.9. declareth thus much: it behoueth vs to be like vnto him in that behalfe: and if wee do the contrarie, it is a token that we forsake God, and the fauoure that he hath shewed vs in choozing vs to be his children. Thus much we haue to note in this place. Now let vs com to that whitch Eliphas saith: For this cause do snares compass thee on euery side; and sodaine feare maketh thee astonished. VVe must alwayes remember that which hath bin declared afore: namely that this was misapplied to the person of Job. But therewithall let vs beare in mind generally also, that these things are laid before our eyes, to the end we should know that all miseries and calamities are chastizechastizements which God layth vpon vs for our sinnes. Truth it is (as hath bin alredy saide) that God will not punish the sinnes of men all alike: neuerthelesse we suffer not any thing but we are thereby admonished to examine our liues, and to sigh and grone before God, acknowledging our selues giltie before his maiestie. Thus much for one point. Furthermore, although God purpose some other end than the punishing of our sinnes: yet it behoueth every of vs to consider himselfe when he is visited of God, and not to shut our eyes when God doth shew vs the light: if the at any time we be afflicted: Let vs vnderstande that God hath laid his snare for vs. And why? For that we were as wild beasts. For if we had walked as the shepe of his fold, he would not haue layd his snares to take vs. No man will lay snares for Eawes and wethers: they are beasts that are easily handled: a man needes but whistle and they come. So then if we would willingly com at the only voice of our god: he shuld not neede to hunt after vs, nor to lay snares for vs: for so me are wont to do with wild beasts. Let vs know then that if God deale rigorously with vs: it is for that we haue rebelled against him: and therevpon let vs examine oure liues, and enquire whether we haue not offended him. And moreouer when such feare commeth vpon vs that we be astonied therewith: because we haue not walked quietly in the obedience of our God. For vnto them that are at peace with him, he promiseth that he will keepe them, although they were besiegued of their enimies: and that although they were in the mids of many dangers, yet shall they be alwayes in safetie, and sleepe quietly and rest vnder his shadow. Therefore if we be astonied with feare: let vs vnderstand that God punisheth vs because wee haue not simply walked vnder his obedience. To be shorte, euen as peace is a singular gifte of God: so troubles that come vpon vs, are curses sent from him. I said that peace is a singular gift of God: and howe is that? when we shall haue called vpon God with a true assurance that he will heare vs, and that he requireth nothing else but that wee shoulde come vnto him: it is an inestimable benefyte, and such a treasure as can never be sufficiently valued: neither can we obtaine the same but by the meanes of faith, when we know that God is our father in our sauioire Iesus Christ. Now this is not vnderstanding onely of the eternall saluation of oure soules: but also for that in this world we haue the priuilege to runne vnto God, and to commend our liues into his hands, and to seeke him in all our needes and necessities. VVhen wee shall haue gotten this peace, that we can stay our selues vpon the prouidence of God, and cast all our careks and cares vpon him, it is a singular bernesfyte that God hath bestowed vpon vs. Contrariwise, whē we are troubled, it is said it is an extreme curse. And why? Is not the state and condicione of man most miserable when hee is in such feare and astonishment, as hee feeth nothing but daungers on every side of him, and yet cannot come vnto God for to find rest and assurāce in him? when man is in such feare, is hee not alredy as it were in hell? Yes surely. And therefore let vs assure oure selues: that although all things come too passe as wee woulde wilshē: yet if wee haue not peace, it is nothing. Howbeit lette vs note also, that wee must not seeke oure peace in this world, as the wicked do: for so long as they are not troubled nor molested, they perswade maruelouse thinges to themselues, they triumph therevpon, and do all thinges to spite God withall. VVe must not haue a peace that proceedeth of retchlesnesse and bloc-kishnesse. And why? For they which so triumph in this world, haue neuer any peace, but while they forget God: and that is a cursed peace. It were better for vs to be in trouble that we might come vnto oure God, and seeke meanes to be reconciled vnto him, than too bee so past feeling. Let vs note then that our peace may not be only while we liue at ease: But it must be grounded in God, and haue respect vnto him. In the meane season, let vs know that when we are in trouble, it is God that visiteth vs for our sinnes: yea and also by this meanes he calleth vs vnto him to the end we shoulde seeke such peace as he hath promised vs from him. In deede Eliphias sheweth, that the troubles whereof hee speaketh, and the feare wherewith Job (as he thought) was seized, were only for that he could not trust in the goodnesse and fauoure of God. And this is a very profitable thing and worthy to be noted. For it may happen that euen the faithful shall be in great troubles and anguishes (as they are not altogether without feeling) and yet God ceaseth not to giue them light. VVhen they see themselves in this cace, as it were in deepe dungeons: yet haue they alwayes some light from God: they feele his goodnesse: and when they haue receiuied some comfort, he leadeth them stil foorth so as they be stayed vpon his promise whiche is infallible: To be briefe, what assault soever they haue, they alwayes lift vp their heads looking for their saluation frō him. It is as when a man is ready too bee drowned, and God reache him his hand: Behold hee is as though hee were restored to life againe and looketh vp to Heauen. But when we haue no light, and darknesse compasseth vs on every side, so that wee can perceiue no goodnesse from God, nor that he is minded too shewe vs any fauoure: then are we in a wofull cace.

Therefore if we will be assured in all these spirituall battells which we must abide in this world, which are so many feares and troubles as God sendeth to trie oure constancie and stedfastnesse: Let vs determine with our selues to set our eyes vpon this lighte that hee sheweth vs, that is to say, vpon the promises that hee maketh vs which are conteyned in his word. And if we herken diligently vnto them, to stay and repose our selues wholly vpon them: Let vs not doubt but hee will giue vs suche quiet and rest, as we may say, Lord I will not be afred of any euill, although I shoulde walke in the shadowe of death so that I be vnder the shadowe of thy wings and in thy protection.

Psa. 23.4.4

Now let vs fall downe before the face of oure good God with acknowledgement of our faults, desiring him to giue vs such knowledge of them, as it may not onely cause vs to confesse them, but also to hate them, and too bee displeased with oure selues for them, and too seeke meanes to be absoluē of God from them, beseeching him also that he will so guide vs by his holy spirit, as we being wholly in his subiectiōn and obedience, may seeke nothing else but to yeld ourselues obediēt vnto his will. And for as much as he commandeth vs to liue togither in this world as brethren: let vs continue in this brotherly vnitie which he hath consecrated among vs, and let euery man employ himselfe to help his neighbours to the end that wee may vnfeynedly call vpon him as oure father, and that he may acknowledge and auouch vs for his children: as he hath giuen vs the testimonie of this adoption in our harts by his holy spirit; and by the grace that hee hath shewed vs in our sauioire Iesus Christ. That it may please him to graunt this grace not only to vs but also to all people and nations of the earth. &c.

The. lxxxv. Sermon, which is the third vpon the xxij. Chapter.

12. Is not God on high in the heauen: and behold the heighth of the starres hovv high they are.
13. And yet thou saist, hovv should God knovv? can he iudge through the Cloudes?
14. Do not the clouds hide him that he cā see nothing: & he vvalketh in the circle of the heauē.
15. Hast not thou marked the old vvay vwherein vvicked men haue vwalked?
16. VVich vvere throvvn dovvn before their time & their foudation vvas as a riuier dried vp.
17. And they said vnto God, depart from vs, vvhat can the almighty do vnto vs?

S we saw before, Eliphias did wrongfully accuse Job, as though hee had liued wickedly among men: And now perciuing that Job did not acknowledge the condemnation too be true: he addeth, that hee is a despiser of God, as in deede men fall into such extremitie when they be giuen to euill, that being corrected at the hand of God they do not returne, but are rather somuch the more hardned. Therfore whē the scourges of God cannot tame vs, it is a token that we are vtterly past hope of recouerie. For the true medicinē too bring vs againe into the way of saluation, is that God should shew vs our faults and make vs feele them. They then that so kicke against the hand of God, declare thereby that they are past amendment, and that their diseases are incurable. True it is that this is ill attributed to Job, but yet we must follow the order whiche wee haue hitherto kept, that is too wite, that seeing the doctrine is good and holy, every one of vs must take some profyte by it. Let vs firste note, that they which do not humble themselues vnder the hande of God when they be chastized by aduersitie, declare that they haue no religion nor faith in them, nor aught else but the contempt of God. For although we haue bin so foolish as to stray out of the way, and too continue our wicked lyfe while God did wink at vs: yet it is time to amend them or never, when God dothe visit vs and as it were constreine vs by force. If God did but speake vnto vs: it ought to be ynough for vs: but when hee striketh vs, hee doth as it were adde some helpe to his word, because we are too dull vpon the spurre. Now if this will not amend vs: what should a man say, but that we be as it were chil- dren past grace? This is it then that we haue first to note. And concerning the person of Job, seeing that he which was(as wee haue alredy declared, and shall see hereafter more at large)of such perfection, was for all that blamed and susteyned such reproch, as to be accused to haue bin a cruell man and an vnjust dealer, and finally was counted a contemner and despiser of God: If at any time me do condemne vs so wrongfully let vs learne to be pacient. For God wil suffer vs so to be blamed, to the end we may learne to walke as it were before him, and not to be led away with ambition, nor to hunt after the glory and praise of men, but to content ourselues when our con sciences be quieted before God. VVe know that of nature we are inclined to such foolish pride, as we woulde be praysed: and if there be any goodness in vs, we would that all the world should know it, and that no man shuld refuse vs. Now you see heere how ambition is mixed with it, insomuch that it is ynough for vs if me esteeme vs, and that our pertnesse may bee raysed heere in this world: and in the meane season God is quite forgotten. And therefore it is for our profite that our Lord suff ereth men to do vs wrong: and that when we go about to do well, they turne it all to euill, so as we be blamed and slandered by them: this tendeth to our profite, to the end that we should learne too haue God for oure iudge, and content our selues when we be alowed of him: and then

10 although the whole world reicte vs, let vs set light by it. And if we thinke this too hard: let vs set before our eies the example of Job, who farre passed vs in all holynesse, and yet we see how he was wrongfully misused: and this was not done without the will of God, to the ende that he might learne this lesson that I haue spoken of, namely that we must not seeke to be honoured of men, but that it ought to suffice vs to be allowed of God, and that our consciences do testifie vnto vs that hee doth accept vs. Now let vs come to the reasons that Eliphias vseth here. 20 VVhat knowest thou not that god is aboue: Behold the heighth of the starres how high they are. Forasmuch as Eliphias accused Job of vngodliness & contempt of God: he vseth an exhortation. At the leastwise (saith he) behold God. And indeede the only meanes to awake vs whē we are falne asleepe, and when we thinke not on our sinnes, or when there is any pride or rebellion in vs, is only too thinke vpō God, and the same will be sufficient to bring vs againe to reason. And why? For whiles wee remayne heere in this world, we conceiue such a fleshly assurance, that we care for nothing, and no maruell: for we see nothing neere vs that can trouble vs, considering that already of our selues we are full of pride. VVel then we must come to God: and when we behold his maiestie, the spite of our teeth wee must learne too cast downe our head, and to reverence the infinite highnesse that is in him. And therefore the order that Eliphias keepeth heere is very good: and we ought to obserue it for a rule. As oft as we are not touched with our sinnes, nor do thinke vpon the vengeance of God, but are drunken with oure pleasures, and too bee briefe, do delight in mischiefe and cannot be broughte too repentaunce, the very remedy is to thinke thus with ourselues: VVel, there is a iudge before whome we must render an account. And what is he? is he a mortall creature? alas, No: when we come to conceiue the incomprehensible maiestie and inestimable highnesse that is in God, wee must needes bee so abashed as to humble our selues, and be no more puffed vp as we were.

This is the mind of Eliphias. Is not God (saith he) on high in heauen? VVhy doth he thus speake of the seate of God, but too discerne him from the creatures and things of this world? Truth it is that God (as he is of an infinite essence) is not inclosed in the heauens: hys maiestie is spred through the whole worlde, hee doth also fill the earth, as it is declared. The heauens do not comprehend thee, (saide Salomon) when hee dedicated the Temple: and God himselfe in his prophet Esay saith, Heaven is my royll throne, and the earth is my foote stoole. God then is not enclosed in Heauen: and yet is it not without cause that the scripture speaketh so. And why? there is in heauen as it were such a marke of maiestie and glory, that when we lift vp our eyes thither, we must needes be moued therewith. Lette vs beholde the earth heere beneth: true it is that the works of God that are ther to be seene, do stirre vs vp to magnify him. Howbeit forasmuch as we are not touched with suche a reverence whē we haue walked about here and ther beneath, as whē we looke vp to heauen, because there is a marke mark and print of the majestic & glory of god: let vs not think it strange that the holy scripture, whē it intēdeth to moue vs to honor God, saith vnto vs, that he is there aboue in heuē. And indeed if it shuld be said vnto vs, god is in this world: forasmuch as we be carnal, and our wits alway bēding downwards, we wold fastē him to a piller, to a house, or to a mountāin, or else we wold set him ouer hed & eares in som riuier: such ar the fancies of mē. Now to the end that whē we think vpō god, we might lern to imagin no earthly thing, but passe beyōd this world, and not stay on our own senses & fātāsies: it is said that god dwelleth in the heauēs, to the end we shuld know that it lieth not in our power to inclose him in this world, & to conceiue what he is (for we can neuer cōprehēd him: our senses haue to smal a measure) but rather that we shuld lern to reuerēce him with al humilitie. For this cause it is said that god is aboue in heauē. And if this same wer wel known vnto vs, it is certain that al superstitiō wold easily be redressed: as in deed it is sprong of this, that mē wold comprehend god according to their own capacitie, wher as they are not able to hold him. For always their senses wold faine he occupied in searching out curiously what God is, & thervpō they forge him, & cōceiue him to be such a one as semeth best to thē: as though god were carnal. And this is the cause why he draweth vs so carefully frō thēce, & sheweth vs that we must imagin nothing of him as we think good: for it is blasphemy & sacrilege so to trāsform him, for that we turne his truth into a lie, as

S. Paul speketh of it. Al they that forge idols, & trāsform God according to their own brain, are falsaries: not for 30 falsifying any publik writing, or matter of record, but for abolishing the majestic of God: & this is such a heinous treason against God, as it passeth all other. Therfore all they which build such foolish fantasies according to their own appetite, ar giltie of such treason. So much the more thē ought we to remēber wel this lesson which is taught vs here: that is to wit, that god is aboue: to the end that as oft as we speak of him, we may know that our sēses shal fail vs, & vanish away an hundred times before we can com to that highnes: & that we must worship him humbly, cōceiuing nothing els of him, but as he hath taught vs by his word. For that is al our wisdome: and (as I haue said) if this doctrin wer wel printed in our harts, the world shuld be purged of al superstitiōs that haue alwais reigned in it. How hapneth it that men haue so forged idols, & thought that God was not nigh thē, except they had some remēbrāce (as they say) or figure of him? It was for that men toke leaue to comprehend God, & to think of him that which was nothing so. This was then the fōūtain of all superstitiō: and whē mē did thus make them visible shapes, it was bicause they knew not the highnes 50 of god, nor his incōprehēsible majestie. And this is it that we ar taught, whē the people of Israel requiring to haue some visible signe to represent God, saith, we will haue him go before vs: that is to say we wil haue him there as a subiect vnto vs. Howbeit we must not so preace vnto God: but as (I haue saide) we must reuerence him with all humilitie. And furthermore, when men thought to serue God after their owne fashion, and framed lawes for themselues, saying this will be good, & such a thing wil be acceptable vnto God: it was bicause they would 60 make him like vnto thēselues, as though he delited in all the smal toys which they had inuēted: that is to wit, outward things: & so doing they trāsformed god, as though they would pul him out of his heuenly seat, to draw him down hither, or as though he wer a creature, and a fleshly thing. So then wee see, that all these fonde deuotions vsed in the papacie, & termed there the deuine seruice, sprāg of this, namely that they knew not the highnesse of God: For thē wold they haue cōcluded thus. God is not delited in the things that seeme good in our own eyes: for he is of another nature than we be: he is a spirit, & therfore must we serue him after a clean contrary fashion vnto that which pleasest our nature: nother must we in this case presumē to attept any thing of our own heads: but we haue his law, in which he hath declared his wil vnto vs, he hath prescribed vs our rule, let vs hold vs vnto that. This is the sobrietie which God requireth by his word, & whervnto he wold haue vs to submit ourselues without swaruing any thing at al therfrom. Herevpō Eliphias saith, Bebold the bright of the starres how bigb they be. This is according to that which I haue already laid: that is to wit, that forasmuch as the creatures here beneath do not moue vs sufficiently to the feare and reuerence of god: we shuld behōld the skie: for thē are we the more lively touched. True it is that it is too villanouse an vnthankfulnes yea & a want of senses, whē we are not moued to honour God, thogh we opened our eyes but only to cōsider the things that lie at our feete. For doth the earth bring foorth so many fruts by his own strēgh, the foode that we receue thēce: cōmēth it of his own nature & disposition? And therfore although a mā shuld looke no farther but at his feet, it is certain that if he opē his eyes he shal be cōuinced that ther is a God, whome he ought to worship: but for asmuch as we be dull & grosseheaded, that doth not greatly moue vs. VVhat must we do thē? To helpe such rudenesse & infirmitie, let vs looke vp on high: & thē must we needs be very brute beasts, if we be not moued at the sighte of the skie and of all the order which is to be sene in the starres, & so goodly & exquisite a disposition, which doth sufficiētly testify vnto vs, that ther is a wōderful majestie of God. Men then must needs be astonisēd when they behold the skie. Furthermore sith we know that the sunne and the starres are so noble & excellēt creatures: thervpō let vs ad that which is taught vs heere: that is to wit, that god is aboue, & that we cāno: reach vnto him VVhē we know this, must we not needs be rauished with much greter admiratiō: we 40 see that the heathen men which were not taught, were moued to idolatry by beholding the sun, the Mone and the starres. And why? for they saw ther such glory & dignity, as they thought they shuld haue dote great wrong & iniurie to the sun, if they shuld not have worshipped him as god. And it is certain that men in this case can do no otherwise whē they haue no better directiō: yet say I not that the heathē ar therfore to be exēused for they haue cōceiued that the sun & the Moone are creatures, yea euē liuelesse creatures which haue no feling: but yet they hauing no scripture nor law to be taught by, could not but be touched with this glory & highnes which apēred in the sun & Moone. By reason wherof they were moued to worship thē & to make idols of thē: & this error shal serue to our cōdēnatiō after another maner. For seeing that God speaketh vnto vs, & declareth himself so fully to giue vs record of his maiestie, & sheweth vs the way to com vnto him, & therwithall doth offer vs as it wer autētik seales in the sun and Moone to ratifie that thing vnto vs which he had spokē by mouth (as ther we see a prooef of it in effēt: ) I pray you shall we not bee duble gilty if this cōsideratiō do not moue vs & make vs to worship this gret God & his incōprehēsible majestie, & to humble ourselues vnder the same. This is the sum of that which we haue to learne out of this place. Let vs now com too that which Eliphias casteth in Iobs teeth: namely that he did not thinke that God marketh things here beneath. For he chargeth him with this vngodlynesse to say, that God walketh in the circalle of heauen, and hat the clouds are a stop vnto him, so as he seeth not the

the state of me to gouerne them. The thing that Eliphas doth heere lay fally vnto Iobs charge, isto beseene in all the wicked men of the world. For in asmuch as they perceiue not that God is heere neere vnto them: they conclude, that they are so farre off from him, that they may sport themselues as though he sawe them nomore. They be like these blind wretches, who when they haue no visible shape of God, thinke themselues vtterly vndone, and that God is no more among them. If the Papists see not a crucifix that may mow vpon them, or if they see not their marmosets, they will say, what now? VVhere is God become? They can no more skill of religion, they know not what christianitie meaneth, they pray no more vnto God, vnsesse they haue their marmosets, and may kneele downe before a blocke, or a stone. And so were the heathen always wont to do. For we see that when the heathen rayled at the law of Moy-ses, they said that the Iewes worshipped the cloudes and an vncertaine and secret Godhead, because they looked but vp to heauenward, and had no images to forge them selues a God after their owne desire. The wretched Papists proceede after the same manner at this day, and are altogether like the heathen: and it is impossible that men should do otherwise, vntill such time as God declare vnto them, that it is by another meane that he is neere vnto them.

Now in the meane while what do these wicked men, which haue no devotion in them? they thinke, Oh, God is aboue: but he is there in his glory: and what careth he for things here beneath? he will not busie himselfe about them nor meddle with them: neither is it a thing perteining vnto him or comely for his maiestie. Thus the wicked take occasion to estrange themselues from God, and to give themselues libertie to all mischefe, saying that God seeth them not. And wee must note this thing well: For were it not that we be staide by the hande of God, and that his word doth stand vs in stead of a bridle: VVe should fall into the like confusion. For when our Lord doth declare vnto vs, that he dwelleth on high, and that he beholdeth things heere beneath, and that there is nothing hid from him: VVel, wee are thereby admonished too walke as it were before his face. And hath he declared so much vnto vs? Yea, and he worketh also in vs by his holy spirite: he openeth our eyes to the end that we should thinke vpon his maiestie in all oure deeds and thoughts: and for a greater confirmatyon, hee addeth, that his word which is preached vnto vs is as a twoedged sword, so as it examineth all the thoughts and affections, and proceedeth euuen vnto the mire of the bones: as is said of it in the Epistle to the Hebrues. To be short, when God declareth vnto vs that he hath giue such a property to his word: the same stayth vs: and if we had not such a bridle, what shoulde become of vs? Let vs note well then this sentence where it is saide, that the wicked vnder the shadow, that they do not perceiue god by their naturall witte, thinke they are escaped his hand: and then they triumph, and willingly perswade themselues, that God careth not for any thing that is done heere beneath, and that heere is nothing but confusion of all things, and that the same commeth not vnto hys knowledge. Concerning this which is heere said of the Clouds, that the Cloudes are as a couert vnto God: that is very true, howbeit in farre other sense. For when the scripture speaketh vnto vs of the maiestie of God: it saith indeede that he is hid in the cloudes: and to what purpose saith it so, but to the end that we should not curiously gad astray as we are wont to do? For we see that men are so ticklish as nothing can bee more: and when they speake of God, they dispute of him to no purpose or reason and without all modeſtie, saying: yea but how is this? and how is that? And when they reason of God, it seemeth they do not only speake of him as of theyr companion, but as of some one that were inferiour vnto them. VVe see then such diuelish boldnesse in men, that they will enter into the deepest secrets of God, and they will turne vp all things, and leaue him nothing vntermedoued. To be shorte, God must be as it were subiecte vnto them. See wherto we are now come. For this cause the holy scripture saith vnto vs, that God hath the darke cloudes as places to hide himselfe in. And wherto saith it so? It is to mocke at the phantaſicalnesse that is in vs. For will we purchase vnto God? VVill we comprehend all his secrets? Let vs come but only to the cloudes, yet are we not come to the starres by a great way. Behould, one cloude only doth so lette vs as wee cannot see the sunne. And although his brightness come vnto vs: yet know we not in what place he is. VVhen the sunne shineth at noone dayes, if it be a close and a raynie wether we cannot marke the place of the sunne, to say, it is now in such a place. If a cloude let vs that wee cannot see a creature which sheweth himselfe dayly: I pray you how shall wee comprehend what God is? So then the holy scripture mocketh at such pride as is in men, when they will enquire beyond their measure and more than apperteyneth vntoo them, and dispute of God at theyre pleasure, and so discouer him, as too leaue him nothing at all. He is then hid in a cloude (saith the scripture:) yea, but it is not for that he seeth not: it is in respect of vs: for we cannot comprehend him: the cloude letteth vs, and our senses are too weake. And for this cause saint Paule saith in the place that I haue alledged, that men do vanish away in their owne imaginations. VVhat is ment by saying that they vanish, but that after men haue wandred this way and that way, they fade away as smoke? Even at this point are we: but God on his behalfe hath so cleere a sighte, that he can passe through all the cloudes of the world, so as there shall be nothing darke vnto him. And for this cause it is said that he dwelleth in vnapproachable light. This saying is very notable. God then cannot be knowne of vs. And why, seeing that there is nothing but brightness about him? This word vnapproachable importeth that we cannot come neere him. The more a man will lift vp him selfe, the further he shall go from him. I meane to lift vp himself with pride and presumption, as to say I can tell what God is, and I will comprehend him as I list. And indeede is not this a diuelish ouerweening? For (as I haue said) no man can attaine to the brightness of God, and againe there is nothing in vs but pouertie, weakenesse, and vnbabilitie. So then men of their selues cannot approche vnto God: but hee must approch vnto vs, and we must conceiue him to be suche as he doth offer himselfe by his word, contenting oure selues with that which is there conteined. But it is sayde that although this way be such, as by it we cannot come vnto God: yet he dwelleth in brightness, that is to say, that his eyes are not blinded, but that he seeth and knoweth all things. Now then wee vnderstande howe the cloude is a couert for God to hide himselfe in, yea so as men cannot come vnto him: but yet it is not a couerte in respect of himselfe, so as a man might say, that he governeth not all things by his prouidence, or that he seeth not plainly, not only all that is done here beneath, but also whatsoeuer me do here conceiue in their minds. Nowe in the meane season wee must note, that certaine men thinking to honoure God thereby, haue imagined that whiche is heere saide, whiche for all that is an horrible blasphemie:

blasphemie; and thus whiles men will honour God after their owne fantasie, they marre all. Some foolish menne therefore haue thought, that it was not meete that God should be troubled with vs, & that it should be great derogation to his maiestie thus to gourne al things. VVhat (say they) shall God be carefull for a flie, for a worme, for a birde of the ayre, and for this and for that? that were a proper thing in dede. Thus whiles men attribute vnto God such an honour, as seemeth good vnto themselues, they spoyle him of his power and maiestie. VVhat must we do then? Let vs learne to honor God, as he requireth it of vs: and let vs not (as hath bene already declared) do him such seruice as we haue forged in our owne brayne: but let vs simply herken to that, which God hath spoken and declared of himself, to that which he hath spokē with his owne holy mouth: let vs hold vs to that resolution, & let vs know that when wee shall haue knowne God such as he sheweth himself in the holy scriptures, we may gloriſe him, as it becometh vs, for that is also the due honor, which he requireth, and alloweth. Now when it is sayd in the Scriptures, that the prouidence of God and his mercie is stretched ouer euē vnto the brute beasts, & that there is nothing but it is susteyned by his hand & power: herein is first declared vnto vs his power: and besides that we ſee his infinite goodnesse in that he is carefull euē for the wormes of the earth, and in that a birde of the ayre falleth not to the grounde without his will, foreficht and ordinance. And behold: what goodnesse is there in God, who vouchſafeth to haue care of ſo vile and despized things, which we also ſet ſo little ſtore by? Furthermore thereby we may also concluſe, what loue he beareth vs, according to the reasons and prouifes of our Sauour Iefus Christ, how much more worth are you thā little ſparrowes? Now if they be nourished of your heauely father: thinke you he hath no regard to maynteyne you, or thinke you that you are not alwayes vnder his wings, or that he turneth not all things to your ſaluation, or that any thing happeneth vnto you without his good wiſt? Thus muſt we honor God, not bringing him in ſubiection to our ſenses & fantasie, but accepting al that he declareth vnto vs of him ſelfe in the holy Scripture. If we do ſo, we will no more ſay, God walketh in the circle of heauē, & therfore medleth not with our matters, it were an vnſeemely thing for him to be troubled with humane and earthly affaires: wee will ſpeakē no more on that forte. And why ſo? for God needeth not too take pleasure in idlenesse. It is a beastly opinion which they conceyue of God that would ſhut him out of this worlde, and thinke that all things are not gouerned by his prouidence and power, ſaying: tush God is of ſuch glorie, as he muſt be aboue in a happy life: he muſt haue no care of any thing. This is as much as to change God into an other ſhape. For our God (as I haue alreadie ſayd) is not like vnto mortall men, which do place a great parte of their felicitie in liuing at eaſe, or in rest and idlenesse. God is not troubled as we are: he needeth not to breake his braynes about things, to trauayle with his hāds, with his feete, or with any thing els: he gouerneth all things: & by what meanes doth he it? Is it by remouing himſelf? by going? by coming? by framing of things? by making great diſcourses? No truely: but he gouerneth & mainteyneth all things by his worde alone, which is of ſuch strength, that all creatures muſt needs obey it. So then we know that God doth not walke there aboue as it were in galeries, but filieth the whole world: and we muſt behold him as alwayes neere vnto vs. And bicaufe that on our behalf we be neare vnto him, we muſt walke as before his face, knowing that we cannot go one foote but he beholdeſt vs, and that all things are marked out before him. This is the briefe ſumme of all that wee haue to note vpon this place. Now Eliphias asketh Job: whether he haue marked: be way of the elders, and what is lecome of the wicked, who (sayeth he) are rooted out, broken and ouerthroned, and their foundation, that is to ſay, al their ſtabilitie was as a riuer runne out and dried vp. Here againe Eliphias conſirmeth that which he had ſayd afore: that is to witte, that from the beginning men haue knowne the wicked to be punished. True it is that God (as wee haue declared) hath alwayes giuen ſome exāples of his iudgements, to the end that men might be kept in feare: according to the ſaying of the Prophet Eſay: The Lorde ſhall execute his iudgements, and the inhabitants of the earth ſhall learne rightuousneſſe. Therefore when wee ſee that the Lord stretcheth out his arme, to chaffife the wicked, and sheweth himſelf to be their iudge: it ought to moue vs to feare him, and to loue him. God then hath at all times giuen ſome tokens that men muſt needs come to accompt before him, and that iniquitie ſhall not remayne vnpunished: but yet he doth not puniſh the, that offend him, all alike. And therefore we may not make it a gene‐rall rule, that the wicked are puniſhed in this worlde: for then it needed not to reſerve any iudgement to the latter day. VVhat ſhould become of the immortallitie of mens ſoules? what ſhould become of the hope that we haue of the reſurrec̄tiō: all that ſhould come to nothing. So then Eliphias marreth all, when he maketh a general rule of the particular examples that God hath shewed. But the thing that we haue to note is this: that when God hath puniſhed the wicked that lifteſt themſelues vp againſt him: although the ſame haue bene done but once, yet we muſt conclude, that althoſh there be many wicked me which are ſpared euē to the end, and after they haue liued in al voluptuousnes, die in a minute of an hour without any languiſhing, yet muſt they needs come to accompt. But when ſhall that be? let vs paciently tarie till that which is now hid fro vs, be reveled. This is then the brief ſumme of that which we haue to note vpon this place. Now in the meane ſeason let vs waigh the wordes that are ſpoken here: which are, that the wicked for a time may vaunt themſelues, yea euē ſo farre as to rayle againſt God, and to do things in diſpite of him: As Eliphias here reporteth of them that they ſay: Get thee from vs, and what can the Almighty do vnto vs? We ſhall ſee then this rage ſo furious in the wicked, that they will by no meanes knowe God, but do things to ſpite him withall, as though he had no more power nor authoritie ouer them: But in the end God can pull the downe well ynough. Now in the meane ſeason Eliphias vþbraydeth Job here that he ſayde, that 50 these menne miſſed not to haue their houses furnished with goods: for it ſeemed vnto him, that by this Job meant to denie the prouidence of God. But it is cleane contrarie: for the confeſſion which Job made is altogether ſuch as we ought to hold it: that is to ſay, that when God ſpareth the wicked, and they ſeeme to be ſo happy, that they do nothing but mocke at al religion, & the ſame remayneth vnpunished: neuertheleſſe we muſt ſurmoat ſuch temptations, and not be afrayd to concluſe, that God is iudge of the world, and will ſhewe himſelfe for ſuch a 60 one although preſently wee ſee it not. Lo then this is a right and ſound confeſſion which Job hath made: but it was miſtaken by Eliphias. Now we haue already declared these wordes: to wit that the wicked will ſay vnto God, Get thee from vs. Not that they ſo ſpeakē: but that they flee from al knowledge as much as in them lieu: & willingly and wittingly become brute beasts, as it is ſeen. If a man ſpeakē to theſe ſcoffers, which ſecke nothing els but to take their pleasure, if a man ſpeakē vnto them, (I ſay) of Dd. the

the judgement of God, and threaten them therewith : it is a matter to stirre vp their choler . Yea and if it lay in their power they would haue the whole holy Scriptures brēt, that men might never more speake of it. And wherfore ? it is euen as a malefactour which never would see neither gallows, gibet, nor iustice, nor any thing els. To be short, he wold that there were no more governement in the world . So the wicked coulde finde in their hearts to destroy the maiestie of God, if it lay in their power. In the meane season they refuse all doctrine, they stop their eares, and they blindfold their eyes, that they might neyther see nor heare. To be shorte, they withdraw themselves, as much as they can, from the obedience of God, and would by no meanes be subiect thereto. And also euen among our selues we see some that counterfait the great Christians, which are contented to say at one word, well, we must obey God, and the woerde muste be preached : but yet they would haue a man tell them a tale, of I wote neere what, so he rubbe them not on the galled backe. Such men (what protestation so ever they make) do well declare that they seeke nothing else, but to be estranged from God : and to say vnto him, Get thee from vs. For although they vtter not this blasphemie with their mouth : yet men see wellynough what their minde and will is. VVell, for our part, let vs learne to walke before God in feare and carefulnesse : and for as much as he is come once neere vnto vs, let vs pray him so to continue with vs, that we may never be estranged from him. And seyng that his worde is so familiar among vs (as he doth dayly communicate the same vnto vs, by the preaching of his holy Gospell:) let vs beholde him in the same, and desire him to lift vs vp aboue the clowdes : yea euen vnto heauen by the fayth which he hath giuen vs, and that wee may increase more and more in the same, vntill he haue fully ioyned vs vnto himselfe : to beholde perfidely that which is now hidde from vs : and to be fully fashio ned according to his image in the name of our Lorde Iesus Christ.

Now let vs fall downe afore the face of our good God, with acknowledgement of our faultes, desiring him to make vs so to feele them, that wee may learne to be displeased with them, and to sigh and grone, not for our calamities and afflictions which wee suffer, but especially for the offences which wee haue committed : knowing that when our good God layeth his roddes vpon vs, it is to drawe vs to suche knowledge of our sinnes as might make vs sorry for them, and drive vs to aske forgiuenesse of the same, and seeke the remedie which he hath promised : that is, that we running to him, and seeking to be ridde of al our sinnes, should couet nothing but to please him in all things, and to dedicate our selues to his honor and glorie : praying him so to augment in vs the graces of his holy spirite, as wee may constantly perseuer in his obedience in the middest of al the stumblingblockes and afflictions that may happen vnto vs, vntil he haue gathered vs into his heauenly rest. That it may please him to graunt this grace, not only to vs, but also to al people and nations of the earthe, bringing backe all poore ignorant soules from the miserable bondage of errour and darckenesse, to the right way of saluation, for the doing whereof, it may please him to rayse vp true and faithfull ministers of his word, &c.

The lxxxvj. Sermon, which is the fourth vpon the. xxij. Chapter.

This Sermon doth still prosecute the. 15. 16. 17. verses, and some other part of the Texte thereto annexed.

18. Yet hathe hee filled their houses vwith treasure : lette the intente of the vvicked bee farre from mee.
19. The righteous shall see them, and laugh at them, and the innocent shall mocke them.
20. Oure substaunce surely hathe bene hidden : and the fyre hathe devoured the remnant of them.
21. Acquainte thy selfe vwith him, and deale vwith peace, and thereby thou shalte haue prosperitie.
22. Receyue the lavve of his mouth, and lay vp his vvoordes in thy heart.

Ee beganne yesterday to declare to what end this saying of Eliphias redeth, where hee reproueth Job for saying, that God suffereth the wicked to prosper, and punisheth them not, as it is truth in deed, according to the judgement of the worlde. Eliphias and his fellowes had sayd, that God doth never so delaye his iudgements, but that they appeare heere amongst vs: which is against experiance: So that the saying of Job is true, that wee must paciently abide till our God set all things in order againe : which shall not be done in 60 this world. VVe must then walke in hope. And hope importeth so much, that wee shoulde not haue our syghte stayed vpon things presente, but that although all things were out of order, yet we must quietly abide Gods pleasure. Eliphias groundeth himselfe vpon this point, that if we consider the course of the world, we shall see that god hath at all tymes punished the wicked. True it is, (as wee haue oftentimes sayd) that God hath always giuen some tokens of his iudgements, for to keepe men in awe : but so farre off is it, that hereof we shuld make a general rule, that the same is contrarie to all reason and truth.

Now let vs come againe to that which hath ben alreadie begonne to be handled. Eliphias speaking of the wicked, attributed vnto them suche a pride, that they vtterly refuse God, and will not haue him come neere them, Not that they doe vtter suche wordes with their mouth: but bycause they can not abyde that God shoulde bring them vnder his subiection, as it is seene. Then till suche tyme as God hathe tamed men by his holie spirite, they can not beare the yoake, every man woulde haue libertie too doe as hee listeth: But heere is mencion made of them whiche haue bene hardened a long tyme, and are wearie of all good doctrine, and so hate it that they would wishe that they myght never haue more wordes of it. The number of such men hath always ben to greate as it is at this day. Furthermore when they are gone so farre astraye, as they refuse the Doctrine of GOD: they do all things to spite him withall, as though he could do nothing against them, and say, what can the Almighty do vnto vs? Truth it is that they will not spue out such blasphemie: but yet they walke boldly like murderers, so as they care no more for any threatening, but make a mocke at all things: and vntill the hande of God vrge them, and constraine them, they will go on still in their wickednesse. Nowe this is asmuch as if they should affirme, that they cared not for any thing that God can do vnto them: and so to be short, we see, that Eliphias ment here to declare howe far men passe their boundes, when they haue a while continued in mischief, and are become so diuelish, that they can not abide to be admonished, and brought into the right way: namely that they desie God as though he had no more authoritie ouer them. And it is not only in this place that we see it so: woulde to God we had not exâple therof before our eyes. But let vs note that which hath bene touched: namely that the holy Ghost ment to shew vs here as in a glasse, whether men fall headlong when they are a long time noozled in their sinnes: that is to say, that there is such brutish beastinesse in them, as they runne with their heads agairst God. For there is no more remorse of cōscience in them, as Sainet Paule sayth: their consciences are rocked fast a sleepe, so as they make no more doubt of any thing. And it serueth to the end that wee should walke in feare, and pray vnto God that he suffer vs not to come into such extremitie. Now let vs go on forward with the saying of Eliphias. He asketh of Iob, whither he haue marked the way of such men or whither he hath taken good beede of it. They which expound this sentence, as though Eliphias reproched Iob for folowing them, or fashioning himself like vnto them, are deceyued: but rather he intendeth to say, that Iob is a man altogether without iudgement, for that he doubteth whither God punisheth the wicked, seing he hath always perceyued that he doth it. But herein is he deceyued, for that he sayeth alwayes. That might haue well bene: but yet God hath not ceassed to releeue many punishments vnto the time too come. He ouerthrew the citie of Sodome with the others neere vnto it: but hath he done the like to all other townes, that were so giuen ouer to evill? No truly. He did once send a flud over all the world: yea but it was but once: and yet we see that men haue not ceased to prouoke his vengeance vpô them. Yea: but we must not appoint him a lawe to punish sinnes alwayes alike: he will deale as it pleaseth him, and we must content our selues with the order that he taketh. Yea truely for (as wee haue shewed) if he reserued no punishments, it would seeme that there should be no iudgement, and that we should no more come to any accouts. And if all things were so perfectly restored in this worlde, that there were no more to be wished for, nor any thing to mislike: then would there be no more of the resurrection. Therefore it behoueth our God to vse suche meanes, as he do but only give vs some examples whereby we may know that sinnes shall not remayne before him vnpunished, & that whereas he delayeth vs as now, and holdeth vs in suspêce till the latter day, it is to the ende that wee should not fixe our mindes here beneath, as though things were already so accplished, that there were no more to be wished for. This is then a briese summe of that which Eliphias mindeth to say in this verse, hast thou not marked the wayes of the worlde? for this woordes worlde signifieth sometimes antiquitie: as if he should say, it is not now that God beginneth to punish the wicked, but the histories of olde tyme do shewe vs that he hath alwayes done so: it is so long ago since Sodome and Gomorrah perished, it is so long ago since the fludde was. Know thou then that God hath brought the worlde vnder this rule, that he wil deale with men according to their deserts. Furthermore Eliphias hauing spoken of the punishment of the despisers of God, and of those that were gone so far out of order that they mocked at his power doth yet more agrauate their malice when he sayth, neuerthelesse God hath filled their bouses with treasure. For if menne were not bounde vnto God, they might well excuse theselues in that they do not yeelde themselues subiect vnto him: but all excuse istaken away, and men are guiltie of such vñthankefulnesse, that they must needs remaine amazed, when hauing perceyued that God by fayre meanes draweth thê vnto him, yet they haue set themselues against him, and would not by any meanes abide that he should winne them. Nowe we see what Eliphias ment by saying, that God had filled their houses with treasure. It is true that all men generally are bounden vnto God, forasmuch as they be created, placed in this world, and mainteyned there by him: but when God declareth himselfe vnto man more peculiarily: that is done to make him so much the more inexcusable. As how? Thus: to a man that is in prosperitie God sendeth all things as he would wishe: the same man hath lesse cause to murmur against God, than an other which is afflicted and tormented many wayes: and when the riche menne, and those that liue so at ease, turne the head againe, and play the restle lades, it is certaine that the same is to be compted a more haynous offence. And not without cause: for this gentie handeling which God hath thus shewed vnto them, ought to soften their hearts: and although they were stubburne of nature, and had some fearcenesse in them, yet God when he intreated them so gently, he meant too winne them by that gentlenesse. Seing then that they be so wilde: their offence is doubled. And this is it that Eliphias ment in this place. And therefore lette vs on our parte learne to way aright the graces which God bestoweth vpon vs, and the benefites which we receyue at his haide, which are vnto vs as many warnings to yeelde our selues obedient to him: and so farre forth to honour him, as to committte the gouernement and maystership ouer vs into his handes. For if we bee bounde vnto a mortall man: although he vsurpe authoritie ouer vs: yet wee will take it at his handes. And why so? I am bound will we say, nature teacheth vs that. And howe much then shall wee acknowledge our selues bounden vnto our God, for the benefites which he hath bestowed vpô vs, to him that hath created & fashioned vs, to him that maintayneth vs, to him that so many wayes sheweth himselfe a father vnto vs. How can wee yeelde vnto him that which wee owe him? And therefore (as I haue already touched) let every of vs looke well into I. im selfe, and consider the benefites that God hath bestowed vpon him, to the ende they may all be helpeles vnto vs, to bring vs to his obedience, so that he may peaceably raigne ouer vs, and guyde vs, & we by no meanes retell against him. And specially when God shall haue dealt so fauorable with vs and poured out his liberalite vpon vs: let that serue to make vs tractable vnto him, and lette vs not desire God too estrange himselfe from vs. For if he should withdraw himselfe from vs what shoulde become of vs? should wee not think that all the benefites which wee haue and receyue, proceede of nothing else but for that God is neere vnto vs? And if God were not with vs, what good thing coulde wee haue, seing that all commeth from him? So then the state and cōdition of men is miserable, whê they assay to flee frô the presence of God: seing they seeke nothing but all mischief. VVherefore let vs learne to humble our selues when God shall haue filled vs with treasures: and let vs not do as horses that are to satte, which kicke agaynst their mayster: as God

Dout.32.15. Upbraydeth the Iewes in Moyses song. Lette vs not be like vnto horses which are to well fedde, but let vs submit our selues vnder the subiection of our God: knowing that although wee haue receyued a great number of good things at his hande, in a minute of an houre he can bring vs to pouertie: if he haue made vs fatte, we may in short space become leane: he needeth but to blow vpvs, and behold all our wealth shal vanish away. Seing it is so, then lette vs walke awayes in feare, acknowledging the good things which we inioy, to come of God, and doing him homage for the same: knowing that wee could not inioye them, if it pleased him not to continue his grace and fauour towardes vs. Thus the riches shal be happie and blisſed, and honours and pleasures and suche like things shal not be meanes to make men dronke and to bring them aſleep: but rather to make them watchfull, and to put al things in God. hands: as if they ſhould ſay, Lorde it is truthe that hitherto thou haſt uſed ſuch goodneſſe towardes vs, that wee haue liued at our eaſe. But what? If thou ſhouleſt but turne away thy face, behold we were vtterly vndone. So Lord, as thou haſt maintained vs and preſerued vs vnto this time: let it please thee ſo to continue euē to the ende. Nowe Eliphaz ſayeth here, that th̄e were deſtroyed before the time, and that their fundation was as a riuer that is riue out. VVe ſhall ſee it ſometime happen to the deſpifers of God, that when they haue hoped to attayne vnto maruelous things, God ſhall throw them downe, and they ſhall be diſapointed of the vayne hope which they ſhall haue conceyued. VVe ſee it then: yea and althoſh God ſuffer the wicked to liue and die in proſperitie: what is that to the purpoſe? for if we conſider the preſent life: I pray you of what co-continuance iſit? VVe liue in deede: but yet man ſhall be alwayes ſuch, as the holy Scripture deſcribeth him to be,

Iob. 14. 2. Iſa. 40.67. 8. alwayes ſuch, as the holy Scripture deſcribeth him to be,

Iam. 1. 10. 11. that is to ſay, as an hearbe that is greene. But alſoone as the winde bloweth vpon it, it withereth away: alſoone as the ſythe paſſeth ouer it, the graffe becometh haye, his ſappe is dried vp, & it periſheth by and ly, there needeth but one broyling heate of the ſunne, and all is burnt vp. So then wee knowing the frailtie of our life, ought not to thinke it ſtrange, that we be compared to a riuer that is runne out and dried vp: or to a riuer which runneth in ſuſh wieſe, that if there be ſome water as now: ſhortly after it is not ſuch as we haue ſeen it to bee. This is a na- turall thing. But Eliphaz ſpeaketh here of a riuer that is ſo broken out of his bankes, as afterward it drieth vp, and hath no more his course. Euē ſo fare the wicked, which are become ſo bold, as they thinke they ſhall neuer fail: but they ſhall be ſo wasted, that there ſhall not remayne one droppe of strength in them. So then if wee take not this ſentence according to the minde of Eliphaz: we may gather a good and profitable doctrine out of this place: that is to ſay, that although God do not puniſh the wicked at the firſt, euē in this life: but ſpareth them: yet they ceaſe not to be like vnto a riuer that riueſt out: there is no ſoundneſſe in them, yea and they ſhall periſh before theyr time. And why, before their time? because they per- ſuade themſelues that they ſhall liue here for euer, and thinke that their felicitie ſhal co-continue awayes: but God cutteth off there life, and laugheſt them to ſcorne: And when they ſay my ſoule fill thy ſelfe, and thinke that they ſhould ſwallow vp the whole worlde: they ſhall be but a straw breadth from their liues ende: for God throweth them downe. It is not without a cauſe then that he ſayth, that they periſh before their time, for they are diſappointed of their hope when they promise themſelues long life: and our God cutteth them ſhorte, as it is ſayde of them, that they are, as if a man ſhouleſt cutte the threede of a weauers webbe. It ſeemeth that the threede ſhouleſt go Iſa.38.12. ſtill on, when wee ſee the weauers worke apace, but the threede breaketh and the webbe ceaſeth. So happeneth it to the lyfe of man, when we thiſke to go forward, and it ſeemeth vnto vs that we ſhall neuer haue an ende, we are become dronken with our ſelues, and beholde, in the meane ſeſon God cutteth of the threede, and there is no more to do. Let vs then minde this doctrine here, ſo that when wee know the ſhortneſſe of our lyfe, wee may ſo conſider the heauenly enheritaſce which is promiſed vs, that our expeſtaſion may be ſettled there, knowing that all they that lay their foundation in this worlde, haue no great ſureneſſe, becauſe they builde vpon the water, or in the ayre. All that then muſte vaniſhe away: as wee ſee that God puniſheth the preuumpcioſ of them that buylde in this world, & put their truſt in things preſent: he ſheweth the that they do nothing elſe but buylde in the water, or in the ayre, as we haue ſayd. There is nothing but the kiŋdomē of heauē that is certaine & vnhageable. VVe muſt then be grounded there: that is the true ſtay, as the Scripture ſpeaketh of it. This is a brief note of that which wee haue to marke out of this place. And that wee may yet profit more by this doctrine, lette vs way this ſaying, before their time, that the wicked ſhall be deſtroyed before their time, bycauſe our God taketh them hence, as if he ſhould puſh them vp by the roote by force. For they falſen themſelues here vpon earth, as though they ſhould neuer be taken away: they take roote here, but it is onely in imagination. The wicked then and the deſpifers of God ſhall take ſuch roote in their prude, that they ſhall thiſke they haue a fundation an hundredth foote deepe in the earth, and that it is imposſible to ſhake them: yea, but God will giue them but a little fillup, and they ſhal be ouerthrowne: for this roote is but imagined. And ſo it is not without cauſe that he ſayeth, the wicked periſh before their tyme. Neuertheleſſe, let vs hold fast that which hath bene ſhewed: that is to ſay, that if the time continue long, and we do not perceyue that our God will repreſſe the wicked and deſpifers of his maieſtie: let vs not therfore be diſcouraged. Let vs walke on ſtill, and ſuffer God to uſe his libertie: that is to witte, if it ſeeme good vnto him, let him chalſife the wicked in this worlde: if not, let his iudgement be hidden from vs vntill wee come to the latter day, when all things ſhall be diſclosed. Eliphaz ſayeth moreouer, that the rightuous ſhal ſee them and laugh at them, and the innocent ſhall make a mocke at them. It ſeemeth at the firſt ſight that this is not couenient, ſeing that the children of God ought to folow their heauēly father. VVe know that God is inclined to mercie and pitie: and when men mocke at them that are affliſted, the ſame is not without crueltie. How is it then that the holy Ghost attributeth ſuch an affection to the children of God, as to mocke at the wicked, when they ſee them ſo throwne downe? Let vs note firſt of al, that for to behold the iudgements of God aright, & to take ſome proſite thereby, we muſt be purged of all our carnall affections: we muſt not be led with a deſire of vengeance, nor be moued with ex- ceſſive paſſions, as wee are wont to be: all that muſte be amēded in vs, and we muſt haue a pure and cleere ſight to behold the doings of God. If we be thus diſpoſed, we may then without any crueltie mocke at the wicked, whē God deſtroyeth them: as in deede wee muſte like well of the iudgements of God: and finding them good, wee muſte also reioyce at them, bycauſe that our ſaluaſio is thereby aduaſed, and God thereby declareth his loue that he beareth vs. Let vs learne then that when God puniſheth the ſinnes of the wicked, we haue matter to reioyce at. Yea but wee muſte knowe wherefore. There are two cauſes:

wcc

we haue cause to reioyce, for that God thereby declareth himselfe to be a iudge, and his glorie and his maiestie do therby appeare. Lo this is a matter of reioysing: for as oft as our God sheweth himselfe, & giueth vs some triall of his strength and power to glorifie him, it behoueth vs to reioyce at it. For what greater ioy can we require, than the presence of our God, and that he should thus draw neare vnto vs? And for the second cause, God thereby declareth that he hath a care ouer vs as ouer his children when he punisheth our enemies, and those that troubled vs and delt outrageously with vs. God the by chastising the wicked, doth ratifie & cōfirme the loue that he beareth to the good & faithful men. This is againe a secōd cause of ioy. But yet wee must (as I haue sayd) be cleane purged of all desire of vengeance, and of all malice. To be short, when we haue put of all that is of our flesh, & the spirit of God guydeth vs, we shal haue a right and pure zeale, to reioyce at the fall of the wicked, and to take some profite by the iudgements of God. There is yet one thing to be noted, which is that where it is sayd, that the righteous shal mocke at them whom God ouerthroweth and destroyeth: the same is not ment of all those that are afflicted: for there be many whom God chalifeth for their wealth, whiche are not men altogether past amendment: and he punisheth them only in their bodies, to the end that their soules might not perishe. But heare is no mention made but of the reprobates. VVee know not whom God hath vtterly reiectē, except he shewe them vnto vs, as he did them of Sodome and Gomorrah, and those that were destroyed by the floude. Here we haue a certaine testimonie of the extreme vengeance of God, for there was no place of repentence left for those wretched persons, because they made themselues vnworthie of mercie. Of these then & other such like we may reioyce. But when God shall chalifise our neighbours, and wee know not yet whether he will haue pitie on them, we must haue cōpassion on their miseries, and be so moued with the iudgements of God, as we may conceyue hope that he will send some release to them that are so afflicted. Too bee shorte, thus muste wee put thisexte in practise. True it is that this doctrine thus briefly touched, might bee darke: but if euerie man note well that which I haue touched, he may afterwarde more at large thinke on it: and so the things that are thus briefly touched, may neuerthelesse content vs. First of all I haue sayd that we must vse such gentlenessse towards all our neighbours, as to wish their health, and to be sorie for their euils: as S.Paule teacheth vs that the rule of charitie requireth. Lamēt (sayeth he) with them that suffer. And we see that the children of God haue alwayes had this affection and zeale. Yet if we see that God punishest sinnes, we may also reioyce at it: yea and for as much as God therein declareth and sheweth himself vnto vs, our faith muste be the more and more ratified and confirmed in him, when wee see that he hath a care ouer mankind, and that all things are guyded by him. Now it followeth, that our substance is not consumed. True it is, that worde for worde it is, if our substance be not consumed or bidden. For the Hebreue worde signifieth two things: properly it signifieth to hide: but because when a thing is hid, it is no more seene, & it seemeth that it is quite gone: by the likenesse that is betwene them, it signifieth somtimes to cut of, and to bring to nothing. Furthermore it seemeth that he ought to haue sayde, was not their substance destroyed? referring the same to the wicked. And in deede the place was so translated by the Greekes. But if we beholde it narrowly, it seemeth that the natvie sence is this: yet our substance was not bidden. And let vs note, that it is a maner of speach much vised among the Hebrues, which importeth a greater affirmatiō: as if it were sayd, yea, it is certaine that our substance is hid. Also the word Substance importeth our state, our being, that which we haue in hād & the way to preserue vs, or restore vs. I ouerpasse the expositiōs that they giue vpō this place, which do not agree with it: let vs simply hold that which Eliphas meeneth to say. He maketh here cōparison of the righteous with the wicked, and of the faithfull, with the despisers of God. As concerning the faithful (sayeth he) of a truth our substance is hidden. Now when he vslēth this worde, hyde, he meaneth not that their substance is perished or lost: but cōtrarywise, that it is layd vp in safetie, as a treasure. How cōmeth it to passe, that in the midst of so many dāgers as we are in, yet we remayne vpright & are vpholdē, if we were not as it were vnder the wings of God? To be short, if we were not as it were in secrete & layd vp as a treasure: it is certain that our life every minute of an houre should be takē frō vs one way or other. So then we haue here a very good doctrine, whē it shall be thus vnderstāded according to the sence of the texte. For thus shall the righteous say: Our substance and state (that is to say, the power to mayntaine vs & preserue vs,) is all of it hidden: But as for that which is left vnto the wicked: it is devoured by the fyre: That is to say, God leaueth them nothing at all, in somuch that they must needs be destroyed with all their wealth. It is true that during this mortal life, it may seeme that we are swallowed vp & quite overwhelmed, that we are in great distresse, and to be short, that we haue nother strēgh nor substance. But so much the more must we practise this doctrine & apply it to his right vse by following that which S.Paule teacheth vs, namely that we are dead and our life is hidden. S.Paule shewing what is the state and conditiō Colos.3. 3. of the faithfull, whyles they are in this world, sayeth that their life is hiddē, as if it were not at al: But it is hidden in a good storehouse: for (sayeth he) it is hiddē in God, with our Sauiour Iesus Christ. The life of Iesus Christ being in heauē in that glorious bodie in the which he was rayfed vp, is not made manifest vnto vs, for if we looke where Iesus Christ, or his kingdome is, we shall not perceyue by our naturall wit, what is become of him. Neuerthelesse seeing our life is hiddē in heauē with Iesus Christ, we may be well assured of it. So then wee note in the first place, that God minding to proue our faith & hope, will suffer vs to be cōpassed about with many dangers, and our life to hang as it were vpō a threedē: and the windes to carie away our substance euery way. To be shorte, in steade of hauing one drop of life: he will suffer vs to haue a thousand deaths before our eyes, so as we shall thinke that we should perish a thousand wayes. But let vs not feare for all that, seeing that God keepeth vs vnder his shadow. For so long as we haue that place to retire vnto, we shall be in good safetie. Thus then must we practise this doctrine. And afterward when we cast our eyes vpō the wicked & behold their destruction, let vs be so much the more assured of Gods goodnesse, & take an occasion so much the more to magnifie him, saying: O Lord what a priuilege is this, that thou hast giuen vs, seeing that our life is in thy hand, and that thou art become the keeper thereof: & yet wherein do we differ from them whom we see to be cōsumed? we see them come to destrucciō, we see that that which is left vnto them, is cleane wasted: & Lord wherin do we differ from them? In nothing truly, sauing that of thy meere mercie it hath pleased thee to choose vs vnto thy self as thine inheritance, that thou mainteynest vs, and giuest vs grace too walke in thy obedience, and that thou doest continue such benefits in vs, as thou hast begōne, and guydest vs in the way of saluation. Frō whence Lorde cōmeth all our wealth. And yet we see what a pri-viledge thou giuest vs, as though wee were exempted fro all the miseries of this frayle life, as though we were no more to be counted amongst men. Now Lorde seing that thou doest this honour, and bestowest this benefite vpon vs: must we not needs magnifie such goodnesse of thine towrdes vs? Thus I say, when wee haue knowne what fauour God sheweth to his faithfull seruants, wee ought to be so much the more confirmed therein, and also stirred vp to giue him thankes for the same. And bicause it can not be done vnlesse wee beholde the destruction of the wicked, and reioyce thereat: therefore also it is good for vs to knowe, that when God punisheth the wicked, and poureth out some token of his vengeance vpon the, it is done to assure vs the more of his fatherly fauour and loue that he beareth to vs warde. Nowe when Eliphas hath thus spoken, he exhorteth Job to acquaint himselfe with God, and to be at peace with him, saying, that the same shall turne to his prosperitie. And after that he addeth, That he shoulde receyue the lawe of God, and place his woordes in his hart. In saying that Job shoulde acquaint him selfe with God, his meaning is that hee had erst withdrawne himselfe from him: And in saying that he should be at peace with him, he signifieth that by his wicked life he had declared himselfe as an enimie to God. This is euill applied to his person as wee haue alreadie seene: but yet the doctrine of it selfe is true and very profitable. And howe is that? first of all it is here declared vnto vs, that when menne runne astray, it is as much as if they estranged themselues from God. Therfore when we be giuen ouer to our vices: wee spye God, and are a let vnto him that he doth not drawe neere vnto vs: and it is as much as if we shoulde take our leaue of him, or els runne away from him without talking any leaue at all. And in dede it is not without cause that the Scripture sayeth,

that men haue not the feare of God before their eyes, & that they knowe God no more, when they take such libertie vnto themselues. VVee see then that men growe, as it were wilde, and become such brute beastes, that they be nomore of the household of God: and yet thinke they be in good case when they be so departed from him, so long as they thinke not vpō their vices and sinnes. Thus much for the first. Secodly it is shewed vs, that men make warre against God. There needeth no Herault nor trumpette to make a solemne defiance: for men shewe themselues mortall enemies of God, and wage warre against him, so oft as they runne astray, and depart from his obedience. If the subiects should rise vp against a King, I pray you were it not a warre much more wicked, than if there had bene some colour of reason, and the solemnities obserued, as it is wont to bee? Nowe when men giue ouer themselues to wickednesse, they put themselues in armes against God: for it is most certaine, that looke how many wicked affections and lustes be in vs, so many men at armes haue we ready to fight against God and his justice. So much the more then behoueth it vs too note well this place, that is to wit, that we can not take vnto our selues such libertie to do euill, but it is to take away all the familiaritie that wee haue with God, and to become wilde beastes, and so to stray from him, that we be nomore vnder his hande and obedience. But yet there is a greater mischief & further out of square, which is that willingly and wittingly wee raunge our selues in battle agaynst God. How so? Behold what a horrible thing it is that the creature should lift vp himself against him that hath fashioneid him. And what shall we get by it? who shal haue the victorie? we see well that we are worse than madde, seeing that we cease not yet to runne thus ragingly against him. This is it that we haue to note vpon this place. And on the contrarie part, let vs follow the exhortation that is giuen vs here: which is, that if for a time we haue gone out of the way, and our lustes haue caused vs so to stray and scatter abrode, that we are become wilde beasts, so as our God can lay no hande on vs, and that wee haue not kept our selfe vnder his gouernement as it behoueth vs: let vs seeke to acquaint our selues with him, that is to say, lette vs indeuer to winde our selues into his familiaritie. And how shal that be done? we know that our God calleth vs vnto him by his woerde. And when he seeth that we be gone astray and out of the way, he sayeth, come againe, come agayne. God then causing his wordē to be preached vnto vs, tēdeth to no other end, but to make vs tame, where as wee haue bene wilde: that is to say, to be taught and to be layd hande on at the first. VVhen we haue learned this lesson, we shall haue profited well for our whole life: whereto tendeth the whole holy Scripture but to make vs familiar with God? True it is that our God for his part doth shewe himselfe so familiar, as that there can be nothing more: he is as a nurse and as a mother: he doth not onely compare himselfe to the fathers Ofc. 11.3. which are lousing and gentle to their childe, but he sayth Isa. 49.15. also that he is more than a mother & more than a nurse. Seing then that God vseth such familiaritie with vs: let vs be no more like wilde beastes: and if we haue bene, let vs not cōtinue so still. And when we see that we haue bene so foward and so madde as to moue warre agaynst him by our sinnes: lette vs seeke meanes to be at peace with him. And how shall that be? It lieth not in vs to do it: but hee muste preuent vs by his infinite goodnessse. VVhich thing hee doth when the Gospell is preached, which is named the doctrine of peace, and (as S. Paule speaketh of it) it is the message of reconciliation. Seing 2.Cor. 5.18. then that God calleth vs to him, of his owne good will, and preuenteth vs, not taryng till we come to seeke peace with him, but cōmeth before vs, and seeketh nothing els, but to be reconciled with vs: let vs not be so vngracious, as to reiect him through our vnkindnesse, and to make no accōpt of the benefitte which he offereth vnto vs: but let vs with true humilitie yelde our selues subiects vnto him, knowing that he is ready to receyue vs in the name of our Sauiour Iesus Christ, and will cause vs to feele that he will be a gentle and pitifull father vnto vs, if wee be true children to him. 19.

Now let vs fal down before the face of our good God with acknowledgement of our faults, knowing that if he would deale rigorously with vs, we should be a hundred times swallowed vp, and also that we are not worthie to be maintayned in this mortall life: & therfore much lesse worthie of the heauenly inheritance and infinite glorie which hee hath prepared for vs in heauen. So then acknowledging our sinnes and vnbelinefe wherewithal wee are so much inclyned, let vs pray him that of his mercie it will please him to beare with vs, vntill the attonement be made betweene him and vs, and that wee may take such profit by all the chastisements that he sendeth into the worlde, as wee may alwayes acknowledge him to bee the iudge of the worlde, and that he will leaue no iniquities vnpunished, how long so euer he tarie. To the ende that by this meanes wee that are his children may be moued to feare and honour him as our father, knowing that he prepareth for vs an eternall inheritancē in heauen, notwithstanding that as now wee be in a poore and miserable state here in this worlde. That it may please him to graunt this grace not only to vs, but also to all people and nacions of the earth, bringing backe all poore ignorant soules from the miserable bondage of error and darkeenesse, &c.

This Sermon is still vpon the xxij. verse : and afterward vpon the text whiche is herevnto annexed.

23. If thou returme to the Almighty thou shalt be buylt vp, and dryue avvay iniquitie far from thy Tent.
24. Thou shalt lay golde vpon the dust, and as the pebble stone of the riuer, the golde of Ophir.
25. The almighty shall driue avvay thine enimies, and thou shalt haue a strong fortresse.
26. Thou shalt take pleasure of the almighty, and lift thy handes to God.
27. Thou shalt maketh thy prayers vnto him, and he shall haer thee, and thou shalt pay him thy vovves.
28. Thou shalt determine a thing, and it shall be established vnto thee, and his light shall shine vpon thy vvayes.
29. If the vvicked be shrovne dovvne, I am lifted vp : and God shall sauе those that looke lovly.
30. The innocent shall deliuer the Countrie : and it shall be preserued by the purenesse of thy handes.

According to that which I haue already declared, we must take this as an exhortation that is made vnto vs all, to shew vs what true repētance is. Surely Eliphias hath misapplied this too the person of Job: but yet the holy Ghost meant to deliuer vs a generall doctrine and such a one as might be greatly to the profite of vs all. Here before we haue seene what it is to be acquainted with God, after that a man hath gone astray from him. For when men give ouer themselues to euil, they quite forget God and turne their backe to him, and become as wilde men. But like as they that runne astray after that sort, do alienate themselues from God: so must wee acquaint our selues with him, suffering him to gouerne vs, and shewing our selues easie to bee guyded by him, so wee may become like lammes, and not play the wilde beaults, when he giueth vs any signe to come vnto him. After that Eliphias hath spoken thus: he addeth, That he which hath gone astray ought to take the lawe at the mouth of God, and place his wordes in his heart. This is a very notable point: for the rule of good life, is that we shoule haire God speake vnto vs, and know that the way which he sheweth vs, is that which wee ought to hold. Seing then that men go astray from the way of saluation so soone as they swarue from the lawe of God: Therefore it is sayd expressly in this place, that we must receyue the lawe at his mouth. Howbeit forasmuch as our allowing of that which is spoken vnto vs, is not all that we haue to do: Eliphias addeth that we must settle it in our hearts. For although a man yelde hymselfe to the obedience of God concerning the outward appearance: that is not the chiefe point: we know it shall not greatly aduauntrage vs to abstaine from doing euill onely as touching our eyes, hands and feete: but the hart must go before and guide all the rest. Will we then profit well in the schoole of God? his worde must take deepe roote in our hearts, according as it is sayde, that he regardeth truth, and contrarywise abhorreth all hypocrisy. Now we see in what wise wee must turne to God when wee haue bene as it were bannished from him: that is to say, wee must become his scholers, and he our maister. And therfore wee may gather, that all they which walke not according to the pure worde of God, are gone astray, although men allow well of them: as wee see oftentimes, how men thinke there is nothing but all holiness in those which follow their owne foolish deuotions: And it hath bene an ordinarie abuse eu'en frō the beginning of the worlde, (which raigneth yet at this day too much) that men will needes be gouerned at their owne pleasure, and yet thinke that their doings ought to bee well allowed of before God.

Contrarywise what is auouched heere? It is sayde that all they which walke not according to the woerde of God, are gone astray. No doubt but they will perswade themselves that their life is good and holy, and it may be that men will clappe their handes in token that they like well of them: but there is but one only competent iudge that can giue sentence in this case with authoritie, which is God: and we haire what he pronounceth of it. Therfore wee must no more replie to iustifie our foolish deuotion, nor say wee thinke that such a thing is good. All our owne fancies muste be layde downe, and wee muste harken what God sayeth, and suffer him to haue the maistership ouer vs to shewe vs the way that he will haue vs to folow. This is it that wee must first learne. True it is that this doctrine is oftentimes tolde vs: but yet is it not without cause that the holy ghost speaketh of it so much: for wee see how men are wedded to their owne will, wee will alwayes be wise in our owne conceytes, and wee can not finde in our hearts to gise God such honour, as that he shoule haue all the maistership ouer vs, and we shoule be his subiects. And thus (as the Prouerbe sayeth) wee do more than is commandied vs, to become the Diuels seruants. Lette vs examine all the things that are termed by the name of Gods seruice in the Papistrie. What shall a man finde there but meere inuentions of menne? there is not one sillable in the holy Scriprure to warrant that the things wherein the Papistes trauayle so much, are acceptable vnto God, but cleane contrarie: and yet wee see how they are wedded to them. And wherefore? By reason of the sayd diuersi pryde, that men can not abyde to be subiect to God, and too recyue the lawe at his mouth. It is true that at the firste they wil say it is good reason that God shoule haue the dominion ouer vs: but yet wee see what rebellion they vse. Wherefore is all our stiuing now adaves, but by cause we require that nothing should be added or diminished frō the pure lawe which was deliertecl vs frō heauē. If the Papists could be contented to be gouerned by the pure doctrine of God, we shoule soone agree togither, there shoule be no more disputation: but they wil haue their own lawes & statutes to be obserued, and in the meane season none accompt to be made of that which God ordeyneth. This is the matter where-

whereaboutes we striaue. Now although we know that all is but abuse and superstition, when me walke after their owne will: yet notwithstanding, men can not be stayed, but they will go on still beyond all measure. And we see how hard a thing it is to stay me with this bridle, of bowing their neckes downe in all caces to receyue the yocke that God will lay vpon them. Yea and when we haue cast off the tirannie of the pope, we cannot quietly yelde our selues obedient vnto God without gainsaying; but if any thing seeme to bee hard and troublesome, wee kicke against it. And what is it that maketh vs so bold, but because there is such a wilfull lostinesse and presumption in the mindes of men, as they cannot content themselues with the simple lawe of God? we see then how needfull it is for vs to be oftentymes put in remembrance of this point, to wete, that we must hearken what God speaketh vnto vs. And hereby we be put in mind, that we be like wretched beastes, that there is neither wisedom nor discretion in vs, and that we can never knowe the ryght way, till God reache out his hand vnto vs, and shewe vs which way we should walke. Thus much for one poynt. Furdermore it is also declared vnto vs, that we shall still bee caried away with our euill affections, till wee haue learned, and inured our selues too oley God without any gainsaying or replie. For so long as wee reserue any libertie to our selues, it cannot bee chosen but wee must striue and iwell and rakkle against the doctrine of God, if it press vs too much, that is to wit, beyond our capacite. VVhat must we do then? let vs lay from vs all striuing, and all the fayre reasons that we can inuent for the defence of our fancies and wicked lustes: and let vs become as meeke as lambes, and suffer God to handle vs as he list, so sone as he shal giue vs a token to come vnto him. Finally it is shewed vs, that we must not be like shaking reedes to suffer our selues to be led this way and that way: according as the Papists will in deede confesse that we must follow that which God comandeth: but they mixte therewithall their owne foolish toyes, yea and (a worse thing than that,) they so esteeme of mens inuentions, as the holy Scripture is despised thereby: and they make such a confused mixture of al things, as a man cannot tell who should preuayle, God or men. But here(as I haue touched)the holy Ghost maketh a distinction betwene God and his creatures, signifying that wee shall never be well gouerned, nor haue any right reformation in our liues,vnlesse God ahoue reigne ouer vs, and become our teacher and master, & that we know that the whole perfectio of our life consisteth in this simple obeying of him: Thus much concerning this saying,we must also beare wel in remembrance that which Eliphias addeth: concerning the settling of Gods lawe in our hearts, for(as I haue already touched)it is no seruice of God to make but fayre shews. Men may wel iustifie vs, when they see nothing in vs that they can reprove. And why so? because they cannot behold the secrete affections:for it is peculiar vnto God to search mens harts. But although men deeme vs to be as Angels: yet if our hart be not right and pure, and settled in that vprightnesse and soundnesse whereof the Scripture speakeith so much: all the rest shall vanish away like smoake. And so if we will leade a holy life,wee muste not begin at the feete,nor yet at the hads,to say I will refrayne my self from doing euill,in such sort as I will not be found blameworthy:but every of vs must enter into himself,& know that all our euill appetites are rebellious against God, and that he cannot raigne ouer vs,vntil such time as the same be quite put away. Then let vs see to it,that we purge our hearts,to the end that we may walke soudly before God: & if we inted to bring forth good fruits al our life long: let vs looke to it,that there be first a good roote. And this is it that is ment whē it is sayd: if you liue by the spirit, walke also according to the spirite. Here is set downe life, & afterward works: VVe must first liue by the spirit of God, that is to say, the spirite of God must dwell in vs,to beate downe all that is contrarie to the worde of God and his righteousnesse. And afterward the same must appeare in our whole conuersatio and life, that men may know what trees we be by bringing forth such fruit. For this cause also it is sayd, that the worde of God hath the propositio of Heb.4.c.12. a sharpe two edged sword,to examine & trie even to the māre, so as there may be nother thoughts,nor affections in men, but the same should bee wholly discouered. And also in an other place it is sayd, That they which profite in the woordē of God,ought to be reproved in themselues, 24.25. that is to say,they must appeare as it were before God, & present themselues before his heauenly seate, and there discouer their offences which before were hidde: for this cause haue I specially declared, that to profite well in the schoole of God, wee must take his woordē in our hearts. Now it followeth by and by : if thou returne vnto the Almighty thou shalt be buylt, and shalt draine away iniquitie far from thy Tent. And afterward, Thou shalt lay golde vpon the dust: and thou shalt haue substance of the gold of Ophir, as there be pebble stones in a riuier. Here Eliphias (the better to stirre vp Job) sheweth him what profite shal come vnto him, when he shall be so converted vnto God. Now we must always leauē the person of Job,because these things are euill applied vnto him: But yet the doctrine ceaseth not to be good for vs, and meete for our saluation: accordingly as we see that God vseth the like stile whē he exhorteth vs to repētance,that is to wit, he doth not simply commaunde vs,that which we should do, but he addeth a promise, to the intent to incourage vs the better vnto it. And in dede if we should heare but onely our dutie, and not be certified of Gods good will toward vs,it would be a meane to stay vs and hinder vs, so as wee should haue no zeale nor affectiō to draw neere vnto God. VVhen a man is in doubt, and knoweth not whether he shall do himselfe good or no by coming vnto God, he becomes careless. Therfore that we may be willing to returne into the right way, wee must be assured that God doth wayte vpon vs, and is ready to receyue vs, yea and doth already reach out his hand vnto vs. If we haue not this assurance in our selues: we can not moue one finger breadth: and much lesse ca we come vnto him as we ought to do: nay rather (which worse is) men will alwayes assay to runne backe, when they doubt of the good will of God: yea & his maiestie shall be fearful vnto them. If we conceyue in our mindes that God will deale rigorously with vs, and that he is our iudge. VVe must needs be so afryad of him, as to runne from him as much as is possible for vs. Thus (to be short) we see that vnles we haue tasted this fatherly goodnessse of God, and be assured that he is ready to receyue vs to mercie, a man shall never cause vs to do so much as to come to repentance. For this cause it is specially sayd in this place,that if Job returne, God will blisse him euery way: that whereas he hath bene spoyled of al his substance,he shal be enriched againe more than euer he was: he shal haue plentie of golde and siluer: he shall haue all things at his will: and God will so prosper him, that there shall be nothing but cause of ioy & thanksgiving. VVe see then briefly what is the minde of Eliphias: namely, that Job shold be stirred vp to returne vnto God by coceyuing the sayd good hope that he shall not come to him in vaine, nor be disappointed in seeking God,because he is alwayes ready to forgiue vs our offences whē we rune vnto him, and will of his infinite goodnessse blot out out all our sinnes. True it is that Eliphias doth always passe measure in that he thinketh, that God maketh those whom he loueth to prosper all alike in this world. That is to great an ouersight. For we see how God afflicteþ his and proueth their pacieē, by making the subiect to many miseries, and yet for all that he ceaseth not to loue them. Therfore me must not deceiue themselues by imagining that God will sende them all their hearts desire when he is mercyfull vnto them. But we must come againe to that which is sayd in the lawe, that is to wit, that like as all aduersities are scourges to punish our sinnes: so contrarywise whē he receyueþ vs vnto him, if we come with re-pentance, we shall be handled so louingly as he will cause vs to prosper so farre forth as shall be expedient for our saluation. Howsoeuer it be, this doctrine is true and very profitable, that when we returne vnto God, iniquitie shall be driven from vs, and by that meanes we shall prosper. For what is the cause that we are thus afflicted, one with pouertie, an other with diseases, and an other with many torments that are layde on him? Is it because God (who is our father) taketh pleasure in dealing roughly with vs, no surely, it is not therefore: but it is bicaufe we are not meete to enjoy the benefites which he hath prepared for vs, and is ready to bestow vpon vs. He seeth that we can not abide that he shoulde deale with vs according to his naturall inclination, that is to say, that he shoulde sende vs all that we would desire: for if we had welth, health, and ease at will, we would by and by become drunken in our pleasures, and kicke against our God, as horses that are to well fedde and pampered. God then perceyuing that we can not vse well the benefites that he bestoweth vpon vs, cutteth them off: not because he is a niggard, (as we haue sayde) but because he knoweth what we can beare, and is constrainyd to bestow his benefites vpon vs by small portions, to the end we may hunger and thirste for them, because we are so inclined to spend them riotously, and also that there followeth after them this wicked tayle of spirituall drunkennesse, that we make no more accompt of him, but become so wanton with them, as he can not any more enjoy vs. For this cause are we afflicted so many wayes. Furthermore let vs consider the offences that every one of vs committeth: and if God should let vs alone vncorrected, there should not be one man but he woulde fall a sleepe in his sinnes, and become so hardened in the, that his boldnesse would increase more and more. God then perceyuing that if he bare to muche with vs, hee shoulde suffer vs too runne into destruction: findeth a remedie for this mischiefe. And therefore wee are so much the more beholding and bounde vnto him. To be short, we constraine God to deale so rigorously with vs as he doeth: For if wee would giue place too his goodnes, it is certain that he would make vs prosper every way, & this world shuld be vnto vs an earthlie Paradise, where shuld be nothing but rest and ioy: we should haue cause always to lift vp our heads before him, according as mentio is made heere. For this cause then is it sayd, that if we returne vnto God, he wil chaunge all our aduersities & miseries into welth, & our life shal be so happie, as we shall haue cause too reioyce fully, and to giue him thāks for that he hath ben so good a father vnto vs, and for that we haue found him too bee such a one. This is the brief summe of this place. Now haue we a good and profitable lesson to gather out of it: which is to humble ourselues so oft as we are afflicted, and not to do as we are wont, that is to wete, not to snappe against God by chafing and fretting at him as if he had done vs some great wrōg. If a mā feele some want of things necessarie for the mainteynāce of his familie, and matters come not to passe according to his minde, he is displeased and murmureth in his heart against God: if an other be stricken with some disease, if an other be yet more oppresſed with pouertie, a man shal heare murmuring on euery side. Thus then our fleshe prouoketh vs alwayes, and pricketh vs forward too kicke against God. And wherfore? Bycause wee consider not that his chastizing of vs is of purpose to bring vs too the knowledge of our sinnes, to the end that we should sigh in our selues, and be ashamed of the euils which we haue committed and dayly do committe, and retourne vntoo him desiring pardon for the same. Furdermore we must apply to our selfe that which hath ben touched, that is too say that our God seing vs too slowe of nature to retourne vnto him when we are gone from him: calleth vs louingly vnto him, and putteth vs in good comfort that we shall be receiued of him, and not seke him in vaine. What wil we haue more: when we haue offended our God, we deserue to be cast off: yea and although we should aske him forgiuenes an hundred thousand times, yet might he refuse vs. Now then sith that contrariwise he cometh to vs, assuring vs that he requireth nothing else but to be at one with vs, and that if we wil seke attonement with him, he is already wholly disposed therunto: must it not nedes followe that we are verrie hardharted and stisnecked, if wee come not vnto him, and yee d not ourselues wholly too him with hart & mind? Fardermore let vs note wel that the only remedy for vs to retourne vnto God, is to call to our remembrance the promises that he maketh vs: for otherwise we should always flee from him (as I haue sayd) and although we made a shewe as though we were displeased with our sinnes, or had some hartbiting or remorse of conscience for our wicked life: yet could we neuer haue any minde to change our life, nor zeale to giue our selues vnto god, vnlesse we know that he wil be mercifull vnto vs. And this is a thing very profitable for vs: neuerthelesse it is very ill practised at this day. As for exāple, amongst the Papists there is talking of repenāce, but they knowe not what it is: for the diuel hath so bewitched them, that their repenāce is nothing else but to fast 40 certain dayes, to mumble vp certain pater nosters, and to play the hypocrites. The very true repenāce is, that a mā forsake him self, and put off his old skin, and be al wholy renued not only to outward apperance, but in the inward affections. But this is vtterly vnyknowne amongst the Papists. Howbeit let vs graunt that they know what repenāce is, and how they must retourne vntoo God: yet want they the principall point, for that they do not assure the wretched sinners that God wil be merciful vnto them, neither know they what is grace & mercie. They talke much of dooing penance: but how? At al auentures, seing they know not whether it be but lost time, or whether they shall winne any thing by indeuering to retourne vnto God. And what shall come of it? euen that which we haue shewed, and that which the Scripture declareth vnto vs sufficiently: namely that men may well tourne their cote, but they shal never draw neere vntoo God with their good will, and with a pure and sounde affection, vnles they be persuaded of his fatherly loue towards them: according as it is sayd in the Psalme, Lord 60 thou shait neuer bee feared, neyther will they euer obey the, til they knowe thy goodnesse. We see then how profitable this present lesson is for vs. And the better to expresse thesame, he sayth expressly, that man shal reioyce in God: and afterward, that be shal call vpon him, that he shal be heard, and that be shal pay him his rowes. This saying ought to be wel weyghed, where it is said, that they which retourne into the right way, shall reioyce in God: for it putteth a difference betwene the felicitie which the children of this world and the vnsaintfull do imagin, and the felicitie which God giueth vs as vnto his children. If the vnsaintfull haue such abundance of welth as they be at rest, and God giue them health therewithall: they thinke them selues happy therefore. And why? For their mindes ascende no higher. Carnall and earthly men beholde only the things that are present. Thus are we caught in Satans nettes: for if things come to passe according to our mind as concerning, the world: it is ynough to vs, wee desire no more, and our life is happy, as we think. Yea but where is the felicitie which we turmisse? Behold, contrariwise God affirmeth that we are then happy when we know that he is become mercifull vnto vs, and receiue our welth as of him and at his hand, and giue him thankes for the same, acknowledging them to be recordes of his goodness and loue toward vs. So then whē the worldlings reioyce and glorie in earthly goodes they looke no farther. It is all one with them as if they were with God, so they haue al their harts desire heere. Contrariwise, although the faythfull had all things heere, that were possible to be imagined: Yet would they not stay thervpō. VVherefore? They haue respect vnto the principlall: that is to witte, whither God loue them, and be become their father. And in deed the goodes of this world haue no taste nor sauour with the, if they be not seasoned with this goodnes of God. And vndoubtedly the true sauce (as men terme it) to make vs feele a good taste in the benefites that God sendeth vs, is for vs to acknowledge his goodnes and loue in them, and to take them for as many recordes of our saluation. VVhe the vnsaintfull haue their tables well furnished, they 30eate and drinke & play the gluttons, and take no farther care: and all their pleasure is in crāming of theselues. And whē they haue so spent the time, they must eyther returne to feasting againe, or else go sleepe. To be short, worldlings can not be merrie, but when they forget God. And to cōclude at one worde, they cannot be merry but in playing the brute beastes: for they must be as it were cast into a sleepe, so as they may haue no regard of God wēn they intend to refresh and ease themselues. Contrariwise, although the saintfull man haue meate and drinke: yet hath he no further delight therein, than to acknowledge therby that God is his fosterfather: saying, seing that he hath care of this fraile and weake body, it foloweth that he will much rather haue care of my soule, as w. ich is much dearer vnto him. For if i in this world, where we be as it were strangers, he vouchesafe to reache out his hand vnto vs: what will he do for vs when we be gathered vnto him in his kingdom? if a saintfull man haue not this consideration with him: he is in such care and anguish of minde, as he can nother eate nor drink. Happy is the man (sayeth Salomon) that bath a cheerfull hart, and poureth it out as before God. But is it possible for a man to reioyce, and to be merrie in God, so as he can wholly repose himself vpon him, if he bee not able to conclude that God loueth him? No surely can he not. For the reioycing of the worldlings is rather a brutish beastlynes, than a true ioye. And in deede we see the same by euident experience. For when the most parte of them, eate or drinke, how go they to it? even like brute beastes. If a hogge be in his sty, when his swill is brought him, he filleth his belly so long as his meat lasteth: as much doeth an oxe, or an asse: and even so do the most part of the world now adayes: for they deuour the benefits of God, without prayer, without thanks giving, or without any acknowledging of him. The saintfull contrariwise thinke on God, knowing well that their meats should turne to their condemnation, if they were not sure that they haue them of the meere fauour of God. For otherwise the

injoying of their goodes should be but a robbing of God, if they did not by prayer and supplication acknowledge them to come from him. Truth it is that the ceremonie is not ynough: for there are many at this day that praye and giue thanks to God with their mouth, when as their hart in the meane season is not one whit touched therwith. But I speake now of them that looke rightly vnto God. For in beholding the meats, they acknowledge in themselues, saying: It is God that maketh vs partakers of those his benefits. Vpon what condicione if we be his children: well, then we inioye parte of our inheritance, & it is as an earnest penny that he giueth vs, to assure vs that he hath created all things for our sakes. But if we be not his children: then must it be imputed vntoo vs for theft, yea for hygh treason. Now when the saintfull enter into such temptatiō, therupon they must needs be stricken with great sadness and anguish of minde, so as they cannot swallow downe one crumme of breade with mirth and contention. This is it that we haue to note vpon this place where, it is sayd, that the man which is truely conuerted, shall reioyce in his God according also as it is sayd in the lawe, thou shalt eate and drinke as in the presence of thy God, and shalt be merry before him. DOM.12.6.7. There also our God doth very well separate his children and his saintfull ones from the vnsaintfull, shewing that although the wicked haue meate and drinke abundātly, yet cease they not to bee accursed, and all their deynties and pleasures shal bee turned to their confusion. Let vs not then be tempted to become like vnto them: but if we will leade a happy life, and rightly inioye the benefits that God bestoweth here vpon vs: we must haue him before our eyes, and do him homage for all, and knowe that he sheweth him self to be our fosterfather, and causeth vs to feele his goodness, to the end that we might be drawen vp higher, & be alwayes more and more assured of this fatherlie loue that he beareth vs, and to bee short, that the corruptible benefits which he bestoweth vpon vs in this world, might be as it were helps to liste vs vp into heauen, there to lay holde vpon the eternall life, wherevnto this oure good God hath called vs. Furthermore, the means how to reioyce a right in God, is also immediatly exprest: namely, by calling vpon him, and by paying our vowedes vnto him when he hath heard vs. This is a good and profitable declaration of this ioye: for inasmuch as there is nothing else but the curse of God in all the benefits that we receyue at his hand, vñles we taste of his goodnes in them, so as we may reioyce and wholly repose and contente our selues in him: it standeth vs in hand to consider well how we may attaine vnto it, and what is the true means. It is here expressed that we must first call vpon him: and afterward paye him our vowedes, when he hath heard vs. There are two things here perteyning to our dutie: and the thirde is the promise that God maketh vs, that we shall not call vpon him in vaine, nor our prayers be voyde or vñprofitable. The end therfore whereat we must begin, is to pray vntoo God, yea euen before we reache out our hands one way or other to eate or to drinke: For if we do not begin at this end, that is to say, at the calling vpon our God, certainly all order is peruerted. So then let vs learne that the cheefe exercise and studie which the faythfull ought too haue in this world, is to runne vnto their God, and acknowledging him to be the fountaine of all goodnes, too seeke it in him: protestinge that they looke not for so much as one droppe of welfare eyther too bodie or too soules, other than is giuen them by his free mercy and goodnesse. VVhen we haue learned well this lesson, wee shall bee more inflamed to pray vnto God, than otherways wayes wee are . And we see how necessitie vrgeth vs in such sorte as we are in a manner at our wittes endes. Every man can confesse that the pouerties and afflictions wherewith we are inuironed are infinite: and yet how slacke and slowe are we to pray vnto God: where-as there are a hundred thousand causes in one day that vrge vs to pray vnto God: scarcely do we thinke on him three or foure tymes, and yet that is so coldly, as nothing can bee more . Therfore wee shall haue profited greatly if we haue once learned this lesson and can praetise it as it behoueth vs, protesting that all the benefites which we receyue, are his and in his hand, and that it belongeth vnto him too giue vs them . And to the ende we should nor go vnto him doubting, as we are woont to do : there is a promis added therenvnto that he wil immediatly heare vs. And without this promise all prayers are nothing else but meere hypocrisy . For what is it too praye vnto God ? It is a witnessing of our fayth . VWell if we doubt and waucr, and stand in a mammering and knowe not whither God will heare vs or no : it is certaine that wee haue no fayth . And so wee take the name of God in vain, forasmuchas our prayer whiche ought too bee a testimonie of our fayth , declareth that there is nought else but vncertaintie in vs : nother must we thinke that he wil heare vs when wee go too him in such a sorte . And in deede it is one of the cheefe articles of our christian beleef , to assure our selues by Gods promis, that he is ready too receyue our prayers at altymes and as often as wee come vntoo him, being persuaded that he tarrieth for vs and requireth nothing else but that we should seeke him : for the gate is open vnto vs, so wee come vntoo him in the name of our Lord Iesus Christ.

Lxx.1.a.b.7
And hereby it is seene that all Christen beleef hath ben abolished vnder the Pope, and is yet still at this present . For they speake much of their praying vntoo God: But what certaintie haue they that they shall bee heard? none at all . For contrariwise they are not ashamed to say that we must go to him doubtingly . This I say is the opinion euen of the great Doctours, and not only of the idiotes . They say it is a presumptuousnesse if we pray vnto God with a stedfast beleef, that hee will heare vs and that we shall obteyn our requestes . But surely it is a horrible trayterousnesse if men waner and gaze about when they praye vntoo God . Hereof commeth this superstitiousnesse that wee must haue patrones too make intercession for vs vntoo God, and besides euerye mannes priuate patron, they must also haue a speciaall warrant . For they haue never doone . VVhen they haue patched and peeced togither, so as they knowe not on which side to turne them, nor wherevntoo too holde them : they are as greate clerks at the end as they were at the beginning : for they knowe not whither they haue gotten any thing by their praying vntoo God . Furthermore, they never pray vnto God, but they serue him last: there the patrones and aduocates must haue the first wordes, and as it were the first fruities . Prayer is the cheefe seruice that God requyreh of vs : and what a thing is it when we conuey it ouer vntoo creatures, and God hath but the refuse of other mennes leauings? This is the common dealing in the Popedom: and not only the idiots (as I haue sayd) but the greatest clerks are the followers of the diuelish doctrine that is mayntained there . And so we see that all christian beleef hath ben destroied and abolished there.

And therfore so much the more ought wee to magnifie the goodnessse of God, for plucking vs out of so bottomlesse pittes , and so much the better ought wee sticke too the doctrine that is declared heere : which is, to beleeue stedfastly that we shall not seeke our God in vaine if we call vpon him in truth , bycause forasmuchas he telleteth vs that he wil heare vs, yea and that he will not tarie vntill we open our mouth, but holdeth his hand already stretched out to help vs at our neede as he speaketh by his Prophete Esay . And this is the cause why Isai.65.4.
the promises are so oftentimes repeated in the holy scriptures, and not without reason . For what so euer God promised men, they cannot bee persuaded that he will heare them . To be shorte, we cannot give credit vntoo God : but as for our owne lies, we beleue them too much . For this cause God ratifieth the promises which 20 he hath made that he wil heare vs . But wee must note to what end God, is so graciouse vnto vs, and so readye to help vs in all our necessities : It is too the end that we should paye him our vowe, that is too say, that we should by our thanksgiving proteste that in all things and for all things wee are bounde vntoo him . For this worde vowe, importeth a solemne record that men yelde by declaring that they haue not any thing but of Gods gift from aboue : and that they cannot requite God againe, nor present him with any thing saue only with prayse and thanks : as it is sayd in the Psalme, VVhat shall I giue vnto the Lord for all the benefites that I haue receyued of him? I will receyued the cuppe of saluation and call Ps.116.b.12 vpon his name . VVe see then that our God requireth no thing of vs , but that we should do him homage for all his benefites, and acknowledge his liberalitie, and so much the more extoll his mercy which he hath vsed towards vs . Thus then the way for vs too reioyce in our God , is that we knowing how much we are beholding vnto him, should giue him thankes for all his benefites, and thereby be stirred vp too acknowledge him hereafter for our father, and too doo him that honour and homage which is due vntoo him , assuring our selues that he will neuer fail vs, and that seeing wee haue felt him so good and mercifull, hee will continue the same still : And not only hee will make vs to knowe in this world, that wee haue not putte our trust in him in vaine , but trulie and perfity too inioye his goodnesse when he shall haue gathered vs into the heauenly kingdome which he hath purchased vnto vs by our Lord Iesus Christ.

Now let vs fall downe before the face of our good God with acknowledgement of our faults, praying him so to touche vs with his holy spirit, as our offences palt may be abolished by his meere goodnessse, and also too bear with ys all the dayes of our lyfe , vntill such tyme as hauing wholly clothed vs with his righteousnes , and transformed vs into his image, hee make his glorie so too shyne in vs, as wee may feele the frute of the inheritance which is now promisid vs . And so let vs 60 all say, Almighty God heauenly father, thou hast promisid to heare our requestes which we make vntoo thee in the name of thy sonne, &c.

The.lxxxvij.Sermon, which is the first vpon the.xxij.Chapter.

This Sermon conteyneth yet some thing of that which concerneth the three last verses, and afterward the text whiche followeth.

I Obansvvering sayde:

2. Although my talk be this day in bitternes, and my plague passeth my groning.
3. If I knevve to find him, or hovv to come vnto his seate.
4. I vvould pleade my case before him, and fill my mouthe vvith arguments.
5. I shoule knovve vwhat he vvould ansyvere me, & vnderstand vwhat he vvould say vnto me.
6. VVould he debate the matter vvith me by force? no, but he vvould put strength into me.
7. There the righteous shal debate vvith him, and I shoule be acquitted for euer.

E haue heere to conferre the last saying of Eliphias with the answere of Job which we haue now heard. Eliphias on his be half mayntaineth that God will alwayes knowe them that are righteous, and not only shewe them fauour, but the whole country for the ir sake. Job answereth to this, that although he be extremelie delt with at Gods had, it is not because he hath deserued it. And for proof therof he sayeth that if he had leauie and libertie to pleade his case: he would well declare that it is not for his sinnes that God doeth so punish him. These are the two contrarie sayings that are treated of here. Now touching the first which is the saying of Eliphias, it is true that our God hath promised to shewe him self mercifull toward them that serue him with a pure hart. And that the same shal extend not only to their owne persons: but also to their families, yea and to whole cuntries. Yet notwithstanding it followeth not that God will binde him self to one certaine rule. For we see how he trieth the pacience of his seruants and of those that indeuer to obey him in euery point. Then dealeth he not all after one rate as we haue declared heere before. And in deed although it be sayd heere That a cuntrie shall bee deliuered by the cleanness of one mannes hands: we haere

Ezecl.14.d. the Prophete Ezechiel say contrariwise: if Job Daniel & 40

14.f. 20. Noē were in this Towne, they shall deliuier their owne soules: but yet shoulde their children perish. It seemeth in deed that the Prophet there, hath respect vnto this place heere, too shew that God is not bound to saue a cuntrie for one mans sake only. If he do it, (as it may happen that he wil) it is at his owne libertie but to appoint him a law,

Cen.18.d. were a thing to vreasonable. Truth it is that it was sayd too Abraham, that if there could haue bē found but fие rightiuouse men in Sodome, God would haue spared the whole citie for their sake: and although it was filled with

Cen.19. horrible sinnes, yet God would not haue vsed the vengeance which is written in Moyses. Therevpon Eliphias intendeth to conclude, that alwayes, as oftē as their is but one righteous man in a cuntrie, for his sake the cuntrie shal be sauied: but this ought not to bee racked out so far as we haue declared. But to be short, let vs learne that al the temporal promises that are cōteyned in the holie scripture, that is to say, those which concerne the state of the life present, are not so generall that we shoulde alwayes stay vpō them. for our God reserueth the fulnesse of his grace for the faithfull in the life too come. It is ynough that they haue here some taste of it: neither shoulde it be for their profit to bee altogether filled with his benefittes in this world. If we had our felicitie as we would wish it, (as hath ben declared more at large heretofore) what would become of vs: Euery man would fall asleepe, and the hope that wee haue of the heauenly life, would bee as it were layd a water, yea bee quite abolished. Therefore it is needfull that God shoulde waken vs with afflictions, too the end we might think vpon the euerlasting heritage which is promised vs, and lift vp our mynds therevnto: for to that end behoueth it vs to be exercised in many aduersities. And that is the cause why I sayd that we must not rest peremptorily vpon the certaintie of the promises of this present life. For God distributeth them vntoo vs according as he knoweth them to be expedient for vs, hauing always an eye to our infirmitie. Neuerthelesse God will also prosper those that are minded to serue him, and make them so to feele his grace, as they shall haue aforehand as it were a pledge of the inestimable benefittes that are prepared for them in heauen: but yet must they not set their minds only vpon that pledge. Again if it please God to afflise such as haue walked vprightly, they must not therfore shrink away, nor be out of hart, nor cōclude that God hath shaken the off: but rather they must consider that by that meanes God intendeth to drawe them to him, and to kill their fleshly affectiōs, and to cut off the superfluities that are in them to the worldward, to the end they should be the better dispozed to passe out of it, and not settle themselues in things present. Thus must we alwayes cheere vp ourselues in the mids of our afflictions, and make our gayne when God causeth vs to feele his fauour, by considering that it is ynough for vs that we haue some promises of it here, & that the fulnesse therof must not be shewed as now, as the which shoulde not be for our welfare. Hereby wee see that Job had iust cause to rebuke Eliphias after that manner. Neuerthelesse he excedeth measure as he had doone heretofore. And this wil be the better perceiued by the wordes that he vseth. He sayeth that although his wordes be bitter, yet doeth the plague that he indureth farre passe his groning [or complaingt]. VVherby he meeneth that he maketh right greeuouse complaints: and yet that if men looke vpon his aduersitie and wey it well, they shall find it farre greeuouser than all his complaints. To be short, Job intended to excuse himself of that he cōplained so sore, & could not refraine himself nor assuage his owne sorrowe. He sheweth that he hath good cause to be so excessiue, because the miserie which he indureth doeth yet farre excede all his complaints. As for this, it might well be borne withall: but immedately he entreth into his old byasse wherin we haue seen him heretofore: Iob.9.d.35. which is that he would fayne go to lawe with God, & shewe & 15.c.22. that if he might atteyn to that, and haue leauie to maynteyne his owne case: he shoulde do welynough, and in cōclusion be quit and cleared. For then (sayeth he) God would not vsse force against mee, but deale with mee by order of lawe: and if I might haue such hearing, I shoulde immedately gayne the vpper hand. This matter would be hard to vnderstand, if we called not too remembrance what hath ben sayd heretofore: that is to wit, that although God be alwayes rightiuouse, yet is it after two sortes. The one is that which he hath declared to vs by his lawe, and that that is the righteousnesse whereby he dealeth with men and wherby he iudgeth them. Then if God summon vs to his judgementseate, and there deale with vs by the order of his lawe: that is one kind of righteousnesse or Iustice. For no man is able to say but we be iustly condemned when wee be condemned by the lawe of God. For what doeth God require at our hands which wee ought not to do? And if we make default, what can we say to it if he punish vs according to our deserts. Thus ye see one kind of Gods Justice which wil be graunted to be rightfull without any gaynsaying. True it is that the wicked will not cease to be alwayes grunting against it: neuerthelesse for all their grudging yet are their mouthes stopped for somuchas their owne cōsciences do so condemne them, as there needeth none other man to giue euidēce against them, nor to make long triall of the matter: for they haue a searingyron that burrieth the within. There is also another kind of righteousnesse which we are lesse acquainted with: which is, whē God hādleth vs, not according to his lawe, but according as he may do by right. And whyso? Forasmuchas our Lord giueth vs our lesion in his lawe, & commaundeth vs to do whatsoeuer is conteined there: although the same do farre passe all our power, & no mā be able to performe the things that he hath cōmaunded vs: yet notwithstanding we owe him yet more, and are further bound vnto him: and the lawe is not so perfect and peerlesse a thing, as is the sayd infinite righfulness of God, according as we haue seene heretofore, that by that he could find vnrighteousnesse in the Angels, and the verie daysunne should not be cleere before him. Thus ye see how there is a perfecter righteousnesse than the righteousnesse of the lawe. And so God listed to vse that: although a man had performed all that is conteyned in the lawe: yet shuld he not fayle to be condēned. But surely our Lord vseth it not. For he applieth himself so farre forth vnto vs, that he receiueth, and accepteth the sayd righteousnesse which he cōmaundeth, as though is were thoughly perfect, notwithstanding that it be somewhat qualifid to the state of man, I meene of man before he was corrupted with sin. This matter had neede to be layd foorth yet more at large, specially cōcerning the first righteousnesse. True it is that there shal neuer any be found that hath fulfilled the lawe, no not even of the faythfull. For so long as we abyde in our owne kind, we be so farre of from fulfilling it, that we cannot so much as think one good thought. VVhat is man in himself? A mortall enemie of God and all goodnessse. So then we haue no shift to discharge our selues against God, if he leauē vs to our selues, but contrariwise we shall do nothing else but provoke his wrath. And again whē he graunteth vs the grace by his holie spirit, to loue the thing that is good, & therewithall putteth such a woorkfulnessse in vs as our life becommeth a mirrour and example of holinessse: yet do we fayle so many wayes, that if we be able to answer God to one point, we be gilie in a thousand points for it. Yea and (which more is) wee neuer do any good, wherin there is not some blemish insomuch that we shuld be faultie in al respects before God, if he listed to handle vs iigorously. Howbeit, when God is so gracieuse to vs as to gouerne vs by his holie spirit, he accepteth the goodnessse that he hath put into vs, notwithstanding that it bee vnprefect. True it is that forsomuchas we do amisse, we haue not so much as were requisite: neuerthelesse God layth not our infirmities and sinnes to our charge, but shetteth his eyes at them, like as a father is not to inquisitio of his owne child, and although he see well ynoch the faults that are in him, yet he beareth with them. Euen after the same maner doeth God woork towards vs, for hee vseth

the same pitifulnesse in forgiuing al the infirmities wherthrough we do amisse. But now let vs come to that which is sayd heere. Job knew well ynoch that he was a wretched sinner, and he was not so blinded with pryde, as too beare himself in hand that he was throughly righteous, and that God did but byte at him without cause. But his meening was that if God would handle him after the ordinarie maner which he setteth foorth in his lawe, which is to blisse such as serue him, and too deale gently with them, so as they may well feele him their good father: after that maner and according too that rule, he could well answer before him. And so his meening is, that God vseth his owne prerogatiue of a righteousnesse which is secret and hidden from mē, and dealeth not with him any more by the order of his lawe, but by another consideration which men cannot take hold of nor reache vnto with all their reason and witte. Lo what his meening is. This will be the better vnderstood, by applying of it in forme of an example in the persone of Job, and in the person of some other man set as it were by his side. Looke vpon a man whom God hath chosen to himself: well, he indeuereth to walk holily and with a good conscience: and God blissteth him, and there appereth no token that God forgetteth him, but rather that he gouerneth him & hath a care of him. And why is that? Is it bycause that that man hath deserued it? No: for if we seeke for desert or woorthinesse in any creature, it can bring nothing which is not Gods owne afore: and if there be any goodnessse in mā, the same procedeth first of the holie Ghoſt. Man then bringeth not aught of his owne vnto God: and the goodnessse that is in vs should neuer be woorthie to be well liked of God, but should be rejected, bycause there is always some blemish in it. Therfore when ouer Lord maketh the faythfull to prosper after he hath giuen them a desire to walk according too his will: he vseth the ordinarie righteousnesse, that is too wit, the righteousnesse which he setteth foorth vnto vs in his lawe. But looke mee heere vpon Job who is a faithfull man and hath serued God with a pure and rightmeining minde: and yet notwithstanding he is tormented with extremitie: it seemeth that God hath set him vpon a scaffold to shewe there a dreadfull vēgeance in him: to be short, for aught that man can coniecture, he was handled roughlier thā Cain or Iudas. And what meeñeth such a straunge maner of dealing? Herevpon Job sayeth that our Lord vseth his secreit Iustice: that is to say, he vseth not the ordinarie rule that is conteyned in his lawe, but intendeth to trie Iobs paciēce, and to make him an example to the whole world. To be short, he intendeth to shewe what authoritie he hath ouer his creatures. Notwithstanding, in so dooing he ceaseth not to bee righteous: I meene even although he deale altogether after that manner. For I haue declared already, that God vseth not the sayd extraordinarie justice towards mē: howbeit, Job thought so. Ye see then that God shal be righteous still, although he proceede not according to the rule of his lawe. But now let vs trie whither Job spake rightly in saying so: no surely, he overshot himself. And for proof thereof, let vs take the sentēce that is set downe heere: He wil not debate with mee by force (sayeth he) but there I shal haue reason. How, meeneth he that God wil not deale with him by force? It were to go too lawe with him if he would give him the hearing. Job then presupposeth that God vseth an absolute or lawelesse power (as they terme it) towards him: as if he should say, I am God, I will doo what I list, although there be no order of Iustice in it but plaine lordly ouerruling. Herein Job blasphemeth God: for although Gods power bee infinite, yet notwithstanding, to imagin it to bee so absolute and lawleſſe is as much as to make to make him a Tirant, which were vitterly contrarie to his maiestie. For our Lord wil not vse might without right, nether is he lesse rightfull than mighty: his rightfullnesse and mightyflesse are things inseparabile. Therfore Iobs saying is euill. Not that he purposed (as I haue sayd afore) to blasphem Gods: but yet did wandering woords escape him, and that came bycause he could not brydle his affections. But now let vs come to the handling of the matter in truthe as it is. Hitherto wee haue but layed forth the matter. VVheras I sayd 10 there are two sorts of righteousnesse or Justice in God: that is true. Howbeit the applying of it was according to Iobs imagination, and that was a misapplying. But now let vs come to the pure truthe, that we may knowe how the matter goeth. It behoueth vs to beare in mind what hath ben declared heretofore: that is to wit, that God in his lawe applieth himself vnto vs, and requireth not so much as we owe him, but according to mannes abilitie to performe: I meene not his abilitie now that we be corrupted, but his abilitie when he was in his perfect soundnesse, such as Adam had before he fell, and such as the Angels of heauen haue yet stiil. Ye see then that God in his lawe hath a respect vnto our abilitie: yea, but let vs consider well after what maner this woord Abilitie is to bee vnderitood: for it is not according to the want or wretchednesse that is in vs as now: (for as now wee can do nothing but euill): but according to the state wherin wee should haue continued safe and sound, if corruption had not entered into our nature. And for the better vnderstanding herof, let vs take the Angels for a mirrour. Be- 30 hold, the Angels indeuer to serue God: they are not tempted with euill affections as we bee: there is no rebelliousnesse nor sin in them: and yet notwithstanding, although the obedience which they yeld vnto God bee pure in respect of vs: it ceasseth not to bee imperfect if it be compared with the infinite maiestie of God. Now then, God (if he listed) could vse vs after an extraordinarie maner: that is to say, although there were no lawe to rule vs by, yea, or although wee had performed all that is conteyned in the lawe: yet might he iustly condemne vs, but he will not do it. And why? He is contented with the rule that he hath giuen, shewing that he pitieth his poore creatures. And that is the cause why the Angels are pure and accepted for righiouise before him. But now let vs passe further. God hath promised to blisse such as walke in purenesse of hart and hand: yea, howbeit with condition to serue always to himselfe the preheminence to iudge what is meete and expedient for oure welfare. For if God perceiue that we haue neede to bee chastized, hee will do it: And although we haue had the 50 mind to serue him and haue pur our indeuoure thereto: yet will hee not therefore misse to handle vs roughly sometimes, so as it shal seeme that we haue offended him more greeuously than the wickeddest of the world, by his punishing of vs after that sort. But it is not as Job thought. And why? For it semed to him that God ought to haue hild himselfe contented with the obedience that he had yelded him, and that Gods punishing of him proceeded sinply of an absolute power, as who should say, that God delt wilfully, of set purpose to shew the stregh 60 of his arme, in ouerwhelming a poore creature that wist not what to do nor say, and that there was no reason in his doings. But these are words worthy to be blamed, yea and to be accursed. How then? VVhereas God hath so afflictid Job as we see, true it is that he meant not to punish him after the ordinarie manner of his desert: but yet might he haue punished him so, euen by his law. And why? For surely God beareth with vs, and accepteth our works in good woorth which wee do through the grace of his holy spirit, althogh they be faulty. But is he bound to do so? No. Hath he giuen vs his law to the intent to be subiect to vs, and to be bound vnto vs? No. He doth it of his owne free goodnesse. Now then if a man wold compell him to it, shold he not do him wrong? Yes. Therefore Job misbehaueth himselfe in this behalfe. For when a man shall haue walked as vprightly as is possible, yet shall he be found faultie before God, so as he may iustly send him all the afflictions in the world, and a man must be faine to condemne and humble himselfe, and too acknowledge that he hath deserued yet more.

Thus ye see wherein Job beguiled himselfe. For inasmuch as God of his owne meere goodnesse beareth with his children, and taketh their works aworth though they deserue it not: it semeth to Job that God vseth cructie towards him, or at leastwise an absolute and lawlesse prerogatiue: but he doth not so. True it is that Gods intent was not to punish Iobs sinnes: hee had another respect, and went another way to worke: according as I haue shewed, that it was his mind too trie Iobspacience, whereas in the meane while there were many wicked men in the world, which made merrie and triumphed at the same time, and God made no ill countenace towards them. And so we see it was not his mind to handle Job according to his deserts, howbeit that we must alwaies conclude, that God even according to his law, could haue sent Job an hundred times more aduersitie, so as he shuld not haue bin able to beare it. And why? The least offence that wee committe, trespasseth against the maiestie of God. And I pray you what punishment is great ynough for so huge an offence, as the impeaching of Gods maiestie and the casting downe of his justice? If we were ouerwhelmed a hundred thousand times, yet were it not comparable to the hideousnesse of the crime that wee haue committed. So then, Job reasoneth awry in saying that God hadleth him not after the rule of his law. Surely if he had said, according to his ordinarie manner, (meanning that God intended not to punish him for his sinnes, but for some other cause:) he had said very well and truly. But he saith, I see well that God vseth an excessive power, he thundreth against me as though hee woulde dispatch me, and therefore I must bee faine to holde my peace. VVhen he speakest so, doubtlesse hee playeth the horse that is broken looce. Not that hee was at any time out of pacience: howbeit, that pacience of his was not such, but that it now and then boiled with great walloppe, and did cast out some froth and skum. Thus ye see the opening of the matter that Job handleth heere. And forasmuch as these things are very high, the laying forth of the processe of this matter, may giue yet some greater light. Therefore let vs come to that which Job sayth, after he hath declared that what bitternesse souer he hath vttered out of his stomacke, yet his greefe surmounteth his complaint. He saith If it were lawfull for me to finde God. And what meaneth he by that? He meeneth to go to law after the manner of men. Out of all doubt, if God should abace himselfe so farre, as to go to law with vs: yet could we never win our case. And that is the cause why hee saithe in his Prophet Esay, let vs set a iudge or vmpre betwixte vs, too see who shall goe by the better. Esay. i.e. 8. VVhen God speaketh after that maner, he meaneth not to resigne his office, nor too stoupe so low as too submit himselfe too mans triall, that any body shoulde presume too gyue sentence vpon him. No: but hys meening in effect is, that although hee shoulde forbear his authoritiye, and that there were some man appoynted too bee iudge betweene hym and vs: yet shoulde wee not fayle sayle to be condemned. VVe might will pleade for our selues, and we might well alledge all our reasons: but yet should be confounded, bycause God would alwayes bee able to find some fault or other in vs. Mark that for one point. And therfore Job overshooteth himself much in wiffling to find God, that he might go to lawe with him, that is to say, in wiffling that God shuld stoupe so lowe, as he might take him for his aduersarie, to pleade his case against him before a judge. For although he had that priuiledge, and that God shuld graunt him his desire: yet should he alwayes be put to shame. But what maketh him to beguile himself? It is bycause his torments troubled him in such wise as he was not master of his wits, but sawe vexacion as in darkness, or else had his eyes blynd-folded, and considered not that God could find more blame in him than he himself was priuie to, if he lifted to examin him rigorously. And heereby we bee warned to stand vpon our gards when God sendeth vs any afflictions. Therfore let vs take heede that we hold ourselues short. And why? Bycause we shall out of hand be dazed in our passions, and the mischeef will pinche vs so sore, as wee shall no more knowe where to become. So much the more then had every of vs neede to looke narrowly too himself: and if God send vs aduersities, let vs assure our selues that we should be vanquished and beaten downe out of hand, if he vphild vs not by his grace. Furthermore let vs not beleue our owne likings: but when our fleshly reason alledgedh any thing to vs, let vs say: Alas, what imaginest thou ô wretched creature? for besids that thou art no competent judge in thine owne case, thy miserie hath blinded thee, and thou turnest aside out of the right way. If thou wert in quiet, thou mightest judge much better than thou canst now, for thyne owne conceyt caryeth thee away. Seing it is so, thou must not take vpon thee to stād in defence of thy case, but thou must willingly yeeld thy self gi:tie, assuring thy self that thou shal not be able to cleare thyself afore God, but that thou must be vtterly confounded. Lo what we haue to mark in this text. Now let vs proceede further. Job sayeth, would God dispute with me by force? No, but he woul'd give mee strength. Hereby he betokeneth, that god did presently dispute or reason against him by mayne force: But that were a charging of God with things that can by no meanes light into him. And vndoubtedly wheras the doctors of Sorbon say that God hath an absolute or lawlesse power, it is a diuelish blasphemie forged in hel, for it ought not once to enter into a faithfull mannes head. Therfore we must say that God hath an infinite or endlesse power, whiche notwithstanding is the rule of all righteousnesse. For it were a rending of God in peeces, if we shuld make him almighty without being alrighteous. True it is, that his righteousness shall not always be apparent vnto vs, but yet easeth it not too continue euermore sounde and vnappayred. VVee muste not measure Gods ryghteousnesse by our owne conceypte, (for that were too greate a streytening of it:) but we muste alwayes bee fully resolued, that Gods myghtfulness can not be separated from his ryghtfulness, bycause God can not be dismembred. But Job suppozeth heere, that God disputeth with hym by mayne force: that is too saye, that hee sheweth himselfe so terrible, as there is no reason too be had at his hande, bycause there is none other thing with him, but, I am thy God, and I may dispose of thee as I list my self. This is very true: Howbeit, God ordereth his creatures in such wyse, as we must not imagin that his righteousness is separated from his power, as I sayde afore. And that is the point wherin Job was euerseen, when he said, O, then would not God dispute with me by force. For it is certaine that althoughe God had disputed against Job with force or might, yet it shuld not haue ben with such a lawlesse might, as shuld haue born downe right: but with a righful might, notwithstanding that men could not comprehend the righfulness therof. And here we be warned, that when there is any talk of Gods myghtinesse ministred vnto vs, wee must reverence it by confessing the same to be always righful. And if we wil so do, then (as I haue touched alreadie) we must not mesure his myghtinesse by our vnderstanding; for what a thing were that? It is even the ground & caule of all the grudgings that are heard against God. For when men conceiue not the reason why god doth things, they fal out with him, & grash their teeth, & chafe against him. Sure it is a dueith pride & presumption, whē we wil have god to govern vs after our own liking, & fail to our controlling of al his doings, & cannot conceiue good opinio of thē, except he shew vs the reason why. But contrariwise it behoueth vs to honor the said secret myghtinesse, acknowledging that ther is righfulness enclosed in it, which we cannot espy as yet. There are other some, which to proue god righteous, wold abolish his mighty power. Of which nūber are they which in these days cannot abide that a man shuld preach, that God hath chosen vs of his owne tree goodnesse, & that he disposeth al things according to his owne good pleasure, and that nothing hapneth but by the ordinance & guiding of his hād. For, because they cānot brook that geere, they fal to ouerthwarting after this sort: How now? If God haue so chosen some, and forsakē the residue: it foloweth, that he bath created men to damnatiō: & is that agreeable to his righteousness? Againe, if all things be done by Gods will, what shal a man say to it, seeing ther are so many wicked things done? Now these wretched fooles, or rather madde men, can not fynde in their hearts to stoupe so low as to say: In dede it is a verie strange case, that God haung created mē, wil not also saue thē al: neuerthelater let vs assure oure selues, that Gods righteousness is to high & to depe for vs to attain vnto as nowe: but the day will come that our Lorde will make vs able to vnderstand the 1.C.12.5.9. 40 things that are hidde from vs as now. It is sayde that we know but partly & darkly: but whē we be become like to him, we shal not only see him as he is, but also we shal perfectly vnderstād the things that are not yet disclosed vnto vs. These drunken sots that are sortid in their ouerweening, cannot abide to yeld God so much glorie, as to submit theselues wholly vnto him. For if a man speake to the of gods prouidece they answer, how can it come to passe, that a man shoud be condemned for the euil that he hath comitted, & yet that the same shuld be done by the wil of God? They cannot discerne that man beeing coniunctid by his own naughtiness, is iustly cōdemned for the same & yet that god purposeth an other ende, which is vnknowen to vs. And Job hath well shewed this, by fatering al his afflictions vpō god. For when the theeuēs had robbed him of all his goods, he said it was god that had doone it: Howbeit in an other respect, thā the theeuēs had done it. Albeit that these things be strange to vs, yet must wee not fall: o slaudering of Gods righteousness, or to rayling at it. And thus the thing which I said was to be noted out 60 of this straine, is that we must not put God vnder such rule, as we be able to cēeeiue in our vnderstanding: for his righteousness farre passeth the reache of our wit. VVhat is to be done then? VVe must humble ourselues: & whē soever God worketh after any fashion that is strange & vnkowne to vs, we must not therfore ceaste to cēclude that he is alwayes righteous. For that is the way wherby God will triē whether we honour him or no: namely if when things fal out contrarie to our reason & liking, we neuerthelesse do still magnifie his name. For if God had led vs after our owne wiſh, and all the world were governed as we had deuized in our head: It were very easie for vs to say, God is rightuouse, God is good. And why? Because we ſhaſhall haue concluded already in our ſelues that it muſt be ſo. And what ſhould then become of Gods rightuouſneſſe? It ſhould bee but a certaine ſubiection vntoo vs: as who would ſay that if God did as we would haue him to do the ſhould he be wiſe, but not eſe: & that were greate reaſon. Contrariwise (as I haue ſayd) he tryeth our humilitie when he woorketh after ſuch a faſhyon as wee cannot find to bee good by our naturall wit, and yet neuerthelesſe confeſſe him to bee rightuouſe, and there reſt as paſtoners vnder the bryde of humilitie. Thus ye ſee after what maner we yeed god the glorie that is belonging to him. And therfore althoſh though God vſe greate rigour towards vs, ſo as we knowe not on which ſide to turne vs, and we ſeeme to be preſſed ouer ſore. Yet let vs beware that wee ſay not wiſh iob, that God debateth with vs in mightineſſe of power: let vs take hede that we father not an absolute power vpon God: but let vs conſider that there is alwayes in him an incompreſible rightuouſneſſe which it behoueth vs too honour though we perceyue it not, and that it ſhewe not it ſelf: let vs alwayes make this conchouſion, Lord, thou art rightuouſe, and thy iudgements are a bottonleſſe pitte. This is the cauſe why it is exprefly ſayd in the Psalme, Lord thou art rightuouſe, and thy iudgements are as a deepe ſea. And therfore man muſt ſtoupe in that behalf, for if he preſume to enter into the, ſurely he ſhall neuer wade out again, but be plundged & as it were drowned in the. Then althoſh we ſee ſo great and dark dungeons: yet muſt wee confeſſe that God is rightuouſe. Furthermore wheras iob ſayeth heere, that God would giue him ſtrength, and not debate with him by prerogatiue of his power: let vs acknowledge that God giueth vs ſtrength even in the greateſt rigour that he vſeth. For if he gaue vs not ſtrength, what a thing were it? God needeth not to vtter any extreme force to confound vs, let him but blowe vpon vs, and wee be diſpatched. For what is miſer? A little ruffe that is withered by and by, or elſe a flowre, or a bud of an herb, or whatſoever elſe is leſſe: to be ſhort, he is but a shadowe. Therfore if God ſhewe not his power in maynteyning vs, wee bee vndoone, yea even with the leaſt aduersitie that he can ſend vs. And what ſhould become of vs then if he vphild vs not, when he liſteneth to chaſtize vs ſomewhaſt roughlier? But he beareth vs vp in ſuch wife, that whē he ſmiteth vpon vs with the one hand to ſtrike vs downe, he hath the other hand vnder vs to lift vs vp again, and ſuffereth vs not to quayle. Therefore let vs conclude, that if God affliet vs, he will giue vs ſuch ſtrength as wee shall alwayes ſtand ſtedfast and vnovercome: yea verely, for he is neere vs, that is to ſay, vs that are his. In ſomuch then as wee feele ſuch aſſiſtance at his hand, it ought to ſuffize vs, affurnig our ſelues that he will alwayes haue ſuch reſpect of our infirmities, as he wil make vs too feele his grace more and more, and vtter it in ſuch abundance, as wee ſhall be well fenced with it to continue in his holie calling vnto the end.

Now let vs fall downe before the face of our good God with acknowledgement of our faults, praying him to make vs to profit more and more in true repentaunce, and to open our eyes, that wee may learene to ferche the wants that are in vs, and too condemne our ſelues for them: and therwithall reſort vnto him, not doubting but that he is ready to heare vs, and that whēoever we ſeeke the remedies of our diſeases, he will alwayes ſhewe him ſelf a good phisition in purging vs of all our wicked afſections: and that it may please him to open our eyes, too the end we may behold the fauour that he ſheweth vs, in adopting vs for our Lord Iefus Chrifts ſake, and in giuing vs the pledge of our ſaluation, that thereby wee may take occation of comfort and reioycing, yea even in the mids of all the afflictions and temptations of this world, ſo as we may ouercome them and all other battels wherwith he liſteth to exercise vs heere. That it may please him too graunt this grace not only to vs, but alſo to all people and Nations, &c.

The.lxxxix.Sermon,which is the ſecond vpon the.xxij.Chapter.

This Sermon is yet ſtill vpon the.vij. verſe, and then vpon the text that is added.

8. If I come afore him, he appeereth not too mee: and if I come behind him, I ſhall not atteine to him.
9. If I come on the left ſide vwhere he doth his worke, I ſhal not perceyue him: and if I turne meeto the righthand, he vvil hyde himſelf and I ſhall not ſee him.
10. According as he knovveth my vway, ſo doeth he triue mee, and I ſhal go out as gold.
11. My foote hath hild his path, I haue kept his vway, and not turned alide from it.
12. I haue not forsaken the commaundement of his lippeſ, I haue layd it vp, and I haue ſet more ſtore by the vvoords of his mouth than by my liuing (or my custome.)

Ob purſewing the matter that was treated of yesterdaſ, protesteth here, that if God would handle him after his deſerts, he ſhould not be ſo ſore afflieted as he is: for alwayes his meening is, if God would proceſſe with him according to the rule of his lawe. And hereby he betokeneth, that he is not puniſhed as an offender, but that God hath ſome other reſpect which is vñknowne vnto him. Certeſſe it is verie true that God dealeth not after his ordinarie maner towards him, when he vttereth ſuch rigour againſt him. For iob was none of thoſe that haue tranſgreſſed Gods lawe in ſuch wife, as their punishment ought to be an example vnto others iob was none of that number: he had indeuered to leade a holie life: & he had ſo behaued himſelf, not only towards me, but alſo towards God, as he might haue been counted more than half an Angell in co-paſſion of other me. And therfore he hath good reaſon to ſay, that the punishment which he indured was not for his ſinnes, if ſo be that he had acknowledged that god might iuſtly do it, if he thought good. For if our Lord beare wiſh men, it is not to be ſayd thereore, that he is bound to do it, and hat it may not bee free for him to chaſtize them more roughly if he liſt. iob therfore doth amiffe in this poyn̄t, that he acknowledgeth it not to be through Gods meere grace, grace, that he is not punished for his sinnes. Agayne hee doth euill in entering into Gods secret iudgements, and in surmizing that God vseth an absolute or lawlesse power, and in not acknowledging a secret righteousnesse in him, although his creatures perceiue it not. This is the cause why he saith, That the righteouse myghte go to lawe with God: if he would voutsafe to deale by the order of his law. But yet it is certaine, that if wee should go that way to worke, we must all of vs needes be condemned. For what mortall man can boast that he hath fulfilled the law of God? And it is written, cursed is he that perfourmeth not all the things that are conteyned in the law.

26. v.
Gal. 3. b. 10.*

Thus ye see that all mankind is shut vp vnder the curse, if God listeth to extend the rigoure of his law towards vs, according as Saint Paule treateth specially thereof in the third Chapter to the Galathians. Job then is farre ouerseen in saying that a righteouse man may pleade hys cace, if God wil give him audience according to the rule of his law. For (as I haue said) we must needes yeld ourselues giltie, not only for offending in some one poynte, but for transgressing in all poynts, insomuch as we never serue God as we ought to do, nor with such perfection as he deserueth and as our duetie requireth. VVherfore it foloweth that men are transgressers of the law, not in some one part of it, but in every poynt. Moreouer it is true that the righteouse may shew themselues before God, howbeit not to come to account: for wherein consisteth our blissednesse, but in hauing our sinnes pardoned and as it were buried at Gods hand, as it is written in the two and thirtith Psalme: And who dareth open hys mouth to pleade against the heauenly iudge? It standeth vs then in hand to haue Iesus Christ for our aduocate: and he in pleading our cace alledgedeth not our deserts, ne setteth himselfe in our defence to say that God doth vs wrong in punishing vs: but he alledgedeth the amends that he himselfe hath made, and that forso much as he hathe released vs our dets, we be now quit before God. Thus we see that Job offended in saying that the righteouse and iust dealing man may pleade his cace before God.

Now as concerning the other point where it is said, that if be secke God before him, be shall not perceiue him: and if bee come beynd him, be shall not ouertake him: and if bee go on the left hand, be will be bidden from him: and if bee turne on the right hand, be shall not see him: thereby hee meeneth that Gods iudgements are incomprehensible to him: which is a very true saying. Some expound this of the foure parts of the world: and all commith to one poynt. For according as it is said in the Psalme, who shall giue me wings to flie away? If I go ouer the Sea, the hand of God is too long: it will ouertake me. If I go downe into the deepes, there he will find me out. If I stye aboue the cloudes, yet will his hand ouerreach me, and plucke me backe from thence. Therefore it is all one in this text, when we vnderstand it to be spoken of the East, VWest, South, and North. Job meeneth that it is to no purpose for men to make long discourses, for when they haue trotted vp and downe all the world ouer, yet shall they never attayne to the great secrets of God, for they furniout all their capacitie and reach. But the sense continueth alwayes the same that I haue spoken of: namely that Job meeneth heere, that the maner of dealing whiche God vseth towards him, is so high and profound, as mans reason can never reach vnto it. And it is a very true saying, so it bee well applied: but Iobs fault is, that forasmuch as he perceiuth not the reason of Gods doings, hee imagineth him too vse an absolute or lawlesse power (as they terme it) that is too say, that God woorketh at his owne pleasure withoute keeping any order or rule, and that hee doth as he listeth, like a Prince that will not be ruled by reason, but foloweth his owne liking. In so saying Job blasphemeth God: howbeit, that is bycause of the sudaine pangs of his passions, wherethrough words escaped him without aduisenesse. Neuerthelesse he sayleth not to conclude alwaies that God is righteouse and blameslesse: he sticketh euer vnto that in himselfe. But yet notwithstanding, he is not able to bridle his tung from casting foorth words out of square by reason of his passions. This is it that wee haue to marke in effect. Now, that we may applie this doctrine to our vse, let vs vnderstand, that we must not preache before God too pleade our cace with him: for we must needes be condemned without any long procesmaking on his behalfe: and the mo defences and excuses that wee thinke wee haue, so muche the more must oure sinfulness increase. Then is there none other remedie, but to acknowledge ourselues giltie, and to craue forgiuenesse and mercie. Thus our comming vnto God, must not be to pretende any iustifying of our selues, nor to make any satisfaction: but to acknowledge our sinnes, and to beseech him to admit vs of his owne meere goodnessse and mercie, and, not to open our mouth to pleade our cace. For that manner of debating belongeth not to vs: it is the office that is giuen to our Lord Iesus Christ. Therefore let vs on our part hold our peace, and suffer Iesus Christ to be our spokesman and to make intercession for vs: that by that, meanes our faultes may be buried and we be quitt instead of being condemned.

Thus much haue we to beare away in the first place: and that is the meane too deliuere vs from our iudge forever: according as Saint Paule sayth, who shall lay any thing to the charge of Gods children seeing he iustifieth them? VVho shall stand against them seeing that Iesus Christ hathe taken their cace in hande to plead it? That (say I) is all our refuge: and without that, we be vndone, and we must not thinke to come vnto God without it. For we should be ouerwhelmed with his wrath as we be worthy. As touching the second point, it behoueth vs to marke, that Gods iudgements are oftentimes hidden from vs: but yet must we not therefore thinke them straunge, so as we should check against them or say, there is no reason in them. Let vs rather acknowledge that Gods righteousnesse is too high a thing for such rudenesse as is in vs, and that it were too great a presumptuousnesse for vs to desyre to attaine thereto. This (say I) must we be fully resolued of. I sayde that Gods iudgements are very secret, and that when wee haue soughte, serched, and ransacked to the vttermost that we can, we shall bee confounded: but doth it follow therefore, that God hath no rule of himself? No. And why? Let vs make comparison betwixt him and vs, and what a difference is there? My wayes (saith he) are further off from yours, Esay. 55. c. 9 than heauen is from earth. Truly he vseth that manner of speech to shew, that we must not esteeme of his mercy according to our own nature. Neuerthelesse god doth generally shew, that it is against all reason that we should measure him by our span as the Proverb saith. VVhat remaineth then? VVee must honoure Gods secrets when they be hidden from vs, and therewithall confess that all his doings are disposed with infinite wisedome, vrightnesse, and goodnesse, and that if any man attempt to doubt of that, he must needes come to shame, according as it is said in the Psalm, Lord howsoever the world goeth, thou shalt be found righteous. For Dauid saw wel the diuelish pride that is in men, who will needs be alwayes replying against God and controlling of him. But what win they by it? nothing, but that God must maintayne hys his owne right, and they be ouerwhelmed with their malapertnesse. Thus ye see a point that is well woorthy too be borne in mind, when it is said, that if we go from the sunne rising to the sunne going downe, and draw about from North to South, when we haue hunted ouer al the world, yet shall we not attaine vnto God. Heereby wee be informed, that Gods determinations are such a bottomlesse Sea, as wee can neuer attaine too them, and that the righfulnesse whiche is in them, is an infinite thing. Now let vs consider our owne abilitie, and marke what infirmite is in vs. If a man should bestow all his whole life in traueling, yet cold he not know the whole world. And what should we knowe of God when we had atteyned to the centre, (that is too saye to the bottome) of the earth? [Little or nothing.] And surely if wee could stye vp aboue the cloudes: yet should we come farre shorte of knowing all that is in God. So then let vs learne two things bresly: the one is, that when God woorketh not after our manner, wee must not thinke withourselves, that the creatures are able to do this or that: or that men haue bin wont to do so: or that the ordinarie manner of woorking is thus and thus: or that this is the order of nature. Gods mightie power must not be shut vp within the order of nature, nor within such bounds. VVhat the? Let vs confess that his iudgements are so deepe a Sea, as we cannot sound them. And therewithal let vs hold it for a sure principle, that God continueth euermore righteouse, notwithstanding that he seeme to deale crookedly and ouerthwartly: and although wee find faulfe with his doings, and haue apparent surmizes and colours so to do: yet (say I) lette vs awayes conclude thus withourselves: Lord, thou art righteouse, according also as Jeremy sayth. True it is that it greued him to see the wicked haue their full scope and the godly men to be vtterly troden vnder foote, so as all things were out of order, and might ouer-came righte, and there was no more conscience and vpright dealing among men. Jeremy lamented it and was sory for it. Agayne he saw the wicked liue vnpunished, as though God had bin asleepe, & had thought no more vpon his charge. Thus ye see it was a very hard and combersome temptation that the Prophet indured. But forasmuch as he knew, that fleshly wit cannot conceiue gods wonderfull iudgements, he maketh a preface before hee enter into his complaint and moane, saying, Lorde, thou art righteouse and thy iudgements are rightfull. His speakeing after that manner, is to shew that he intendeth not to enter into disputation with God, and to pleade with him as with his fellow or match, or too call in question whither God woorketh by reason or no. Jeremy abridged himselfe of that libertie, and cut off the occasion of that which he might haue conceiued in his mind. Therfore before he enter into his matter, he maketh this conclusion: Lord howsoever the world go, and although men may surmize that thou dost things without reaso: yet art thou righteouse and vnablemable in all points and all respects. Euen so must we do, and not say with Job, It is impossible for vs to know the reason of Gods workes. That is very true, howbeit it is but faintly spoké. But we cannot mount so high, neuerthelesse if God worke after a manner that we cannot comprehend, we must not therefore ceasse to acknowledge him to be righteouse, and to honoure him, and to humble ourselues before him. This is in effect the thing that we haue to reméber here. Furthermore let vs take warnig, that we may wel make large discourses, but we shall gaine nothing therby. True it is that men may haue great quicknesse in their wits: but yet must not the same giue vs occasiō of ouerweening as we see many do, who because they haue their wits wel sharp,

Ierem. 12. 4. 1

ned, thinke themselves able to find out the reason of all things: and that causeth them to run so astray, that in the end they be doted in their owne vnderstāding, that is to say, God punisheth their pride for taking to much vpon them. Therefore let vs consider well, that when we haue trudged vp and downe, we shal be neuer awhit the nerer to the finding out of the end of all things. For our Lorde will shew vs that our wit is too weake & rude to attaine to such heighth. Our knowing therefore must be but in part, & it must suffice vs to tast in some certaine measure the things that are for our welfare, waiting for the latter day when we shall haue them fully discouered vnto vs. Thus ye see more what we haue to marke in this streine. Now Job addeth immediatly, According as he knoweth my way, so will be trie me, and I shall go out as gold. Hereby Job betokeneth that God hath a great aduantage ouer him. I cannot know him (saith Job) and he knoweth me: I vnderstand not his works, and he iudgeth of mine: too bee short, he trieth me as gold in the furnace, in somuch that there is not so little a pece of froth or infirmite in me; but he seeth and discerneth it: and therefore it is too no purpose for me to go to law with him. This is the cōclusion that he maketh. Now this saying of his is very true, that God knoweth our wayes and trieth and proueth vs as gold in the furnace: but yet notwithstanding haue we any cause to cōplainte that we be not his matches: Shuld the creature checke after such a sort, as too take part against his maker? Though God make vs not haile fellow with himselfe, ought we to say that he doth vs wrong or iniurie? Therfore whensoever it commeth to our mind that God knoweth all our wayes, and that he trieth vs, and that he purgeth and sifteth out all the sinfull affectiōns and superfluouse thoughts that are in vs: let vs vnderstand that the same must teach vs lowlinesse & fear, and not prouoke vs to make any complaint as Job dothe in this text. And herewithall we see how God intendeth to bridle vs by al meanes for our owne welfare. For whē he trieth vs after that sort, commeth there any profite of it vnto him? No: but he knoweth it to bee expedient for vs, according also as when he commeth neere vnto vs, is it for that he is afraid, or for that he seeketh any profyte by vs? No, it is nothing so: but he knoweth that we haue neede to be kept in obedience and awe. For that is the cleefe thing that he requireth of vs, and it is the sea of al vertue that bringeth vs to saluation. Therfore it behoueth vs to be rightly subiect vnto god. For if he hild not his maiestie ouer vs, and shewed vs not what we be, and what our state is, and hilde vs not vnder his feete: what would become of vs considering the pride & malapertnesse that are in vs al? God the in not shewing vs the reason of his works, doth it to the end we should learne to obey him. Ageine if we see not why he doth this or that: how shal we cōprehēnd his being: we be sure (as I said) that if he trie vs, it is for our welfare. And in good sooth which of vs trieth himself? Nay cōtrariwise in sted of lighting a candle to serch out our own wāts & sins: we quēch the crest that god had lighted to our hād. VVhat else is the discretiō that he hath giue vs to discerne betwene good & euil but as it were a candle which he hath lighted, to the end we might perceiue the naughtinesse that is in ourselues? But we see how men laboure to quēch all the said knowledge, and would faine supprese their owne consciēces, that they might liue like swine, & be no more ashamed nor abashed at the euil which they commit. Men then go about to become brute beasts: and so we see that they indeuer too quenche the lamp or candle that God had lighted in them too drawe them too thys tryall: Seeing it is so: it is good reason that God shoulde searche and and tri vs, bycause we will not do it ourselues as oure duetie were to do, but by our good wills would become like brute beasts and dispatch ourselues of all discretion and reason. Thus ye see that the thing which we haue to marke in this texte, is that forsomuch as God knoweth our wayes and woorks aforehaud: it behoueth vs to conclude, that if hee make vs too passe as Gold through the furnace, the same is for our profitte and welfare. And although we perceiue not the reason of it, we ought to be contented that our Lord is righteous, and that he will in the end shew vs wherefore he hath tried vs after that manner, in making vs to passe through so many afflictions, as gold passeth through fire. Although then that this be greuous to beare: yet God doth it not without cause.

VVe perceiue it not as yet, bycause our wit is too weake.
Howbeit our Lord will in time make vs perceiue that he wrought not at all aduenture, but that he knew what was meete for our welfare. This is in effect the thing whiche we haue to beare away heere. Now when Job hath saide so, he addeth this protestation. That his foote had walked in Gods path, and that bee had not left his way, nor turned aside from the commaundement of Gods owne mouth, but had set more store by it, than by his owne living or manner of dealing.
True it is that Job might well protest that he had walked so vprightly, as that he was not of the number of the despisers of God, nor of the number of looce liuers that were giuen to all naughtinesse. Job might well say so: for it was true: according also as wee see that Dauid mighte well say, Lord I haue kept thy commaundements with my whole hart. Lord I haue set more store by thy lawe than by gold and siluer: all my delight hath bin in them: I haue not wertred in my wicked affections: but all my pleasure hath bin in the hearing of thy law. VVhen Da-<sup>Ps.119.</sup>uid speaketh after that manner, is it to boast himselfe be-<sup>Ez.130.4.3.</sup>fore God? No: for in another place he saith, Lord who is able to stand before thee? If thou enter into account with men, no creature can be iustifyed. Therefore enter not <sup>Ps.143.4.2.</sup>into iudgement with thy seruant O Lord. For who is he O Lord that shall stand vp, if thou marke all our faultes?
VVe see then that Dauid doth willingly yeld himselfe guilty, and that whereas he protesteth himselfe too haue followed Gods commaundements: it is all one as if he acknowledged the graciouse gifts that he had receiuied at his hand, & did him homage for them saying thus: Lord, thou hast done me exceeding great good, thou hast go-uerned me by thy holy spirit, my following of thy commaundements came not of my selfe, but thy guiding of me caused me to giue my selfe therevnto. Dauid by yel-ding such honoure vnto God, confirmed himselfe more and more in good hope, assuring himselfe that as hee had felt God good and graciouse to him heeretofore, so hee would never faile him heereafter. If Job had proceeded after that maner, his protestation had bin good and holy.
But what his meening heere, is to go to law with God, and to vphold that if God handled him after the ordinarie rule of his law, he should haue no cause to vse suche rigoure towards him. Job is grossely ouerseene in this behalfe. For if God had listed to haue punished him for the sinnes that he had committed: he might iustly haue done it: and in that he doth it not, it is of his meere free goodnesse. Job therefore doth not discerne aright betweene God & his own person. For he shuld haue said, Lord it is true that thou chastizest me, and I know and thou migh-test do it euē by thy law: and it is true also that I haue indeuered to walke before thee in as great soundnesse as was possible for me to do. Neuerthelesse there hath alwayes bin somewhat amisse, and therfore thou shalt find all my works to be sinfull. Job might haue spoken so and said: weli Lorde, I know well thou bearest with me: and that proceedeth of thy fatherly goodnesse. And although thou chastize me, yet thou makest me too perceiue that thou doest it not for my sinnes, but bycause it pleaserth thee too exercise my patience. Neuerthelesse, in the meane whyle I finde my selfe combred extremely, and therefore I muste conclude, that thou doest it vpon some secret and wonderfull purpose. If Job had spoken so: all had bin well. But he was caried away by the pangs of his 10 passions. And thereby we are all warned (as I said afore) to mistrust ourselues when we be afflicted. For we be (as ye would say) so dazeled, as we cannot discerne what is good. And if this thing befell vnto Job who is set heere before our eyes, as a mirroure of pacience: what will become of vs? Therefore when wee bee afflicted, lette vs pray God so to hold vs in awe, as we may glorify him, & that if any toyes come in our heads too grudge againste him, they may be beatē downe, knowing that we cannot speake one word of ourselues, but the same shall prouoke Gods wrath more and more. Thus ye see what we haue to beare in remembrance. Furthermore in going through with this sentence, let vs learne to know what the true seruing of God is: for Job sheweth vs heere how to do it.

VVherat then must we begin when we intend too give and dedicate ourselues wholly to the obeying of God?
At the keeping of the way which he sheweth vs. Men must not frame themselues new deuotions at their owne pleasure after the manner of the worlde whiche is too much giuen therevnto. VVhen men be most deuout, & would faine worke wonders, wherat make they their en-terance? At the folowing of that which seemeth good to their owne liking. Yea: as who wold say that God had no soueraintie ouer vs, or as though the cheefe poynt of hys seruice were not obedience. Then if any man will serue God aright, let him shut al his owne imaginacions out of the dores, and not behauie himselfe after his owne liking and wit: but let him submit himselfe to Gods word, and follow that which is set downe heere, namely, I haue set my foote and walked in Gods path, I haue not turned aside, I haue not in any wise stepped out of his ways. Had this rule bin well hild and kept, wee should not haue so great controuersie now adayes with the Papists aboue the seruing of God aright. For what is it that is called Gods seruice in the papacie? It is the inuention of theyr owne braines, whereof God neuer spake one woerde.
VVhat is it that they cal deuotioꝝ? Every mas own liking.
Assoone as a man hath a mind to any thing, by and by he beares himselfe in hād that God is as much delighted with it as himselfe is, and there is no man but he vndertaketh some thing or other. Behold the ouerboldnesse that hath always reynged in the world: which is, that me wil needes be maisters, and make lawes at their owne pleasure, and God must be fayne to accept whatsoeuer they haue forged after that maner. But contrariwise the holy Ghost telleth vs, that we must not lift vp one foote to go fore-ward, but only in the way which God sheweth vs. It behoueth vs to refraine ourselues in that case: for hee that will needes raunge abrode, and make his frisks and outleapes to stray heere and there: may well breake his leggs and his necke, but he shall neuer do himselfe any good: that is to say, wee shall neuer go forward but rather e-uer backward, when we be so desyrous to gad after our owne fancie. Then let vs learne, that the fashion to lyue well and rightly and which God alloweth, is to set oure feete in the way, not which wee ourselues haue made, but whiche hee hath shewed vs by his word. And not without cause doth Job adde further, that bee bad not res-tyred or turned backe. For heereby he sheweth, that men are tempted continually with a tickling lust to start out of the right way: according as in very dede we see that God cannot hold vs vnder his obeyfance, but by force: and euen he that is most desyrous to walke in such singlenes as he wold nother put to nor take away frō Gods word, shall notwithstanding not misse too feele prickings in himselfe, and to be tickled to step out of the way. And specially if we see any man take such libertie, so as wee can say, behold such a man cloth such a thing: then wee be moued at it, and the sight of such examples maketh vs too desyrous to tourne out of the way. To be short, wee be easly caried away from obeying God by any manner of meanes, bycause our wits are curiose and fantasticall, and also bycause wee see thinges euery where that draw vs vnto euill. And therefore let vs take heede that we may be able to protest truly with Iob, that wee haue not swarued from the way that God hath shewed vs. Now, that wee may so do, it behoueth vs to herken well to the thinges that God telleth vs in his law. For men would still beare themselues in hand that God alloweth 20 of their doings, and that they be still in a good way, if it were not for the declaration that Iob addeth: which is, That he gaue himselfe wholly to beare the commandement of Gods owne lippes. VVherefore speaketh hee of the commandement of Gods lippes? It should seeme that that is more than needeth. No, it is to shew that mans life shal alwayes be vnruley and disordered, if it be not framed by the law of God, and all his thoughts and deedes so directed by it, as he presume not to swarue any whit at all from it, be it neuer so little. And this serueth to shew vs 30 the vse of Gods worde, and the profite that wee reape thereof. The vse then of Gods word, is to hold vs in the right way, bycause that if we should looke for new inspirations from heauen. Satan being transformed as hee is, might put many illusions in our heads: but God hath cut off the occasion of his guilefulness, by giuing vs the holy scripture: and therevnto will he haue vs to hold ourselues. Therefore let vs beware that we vse the benefyte 40 which God offereth vs. Now therewithall is matched a profitableness: for is there any thing more to be desyred, than for a man to be sure that he shal not misse? If we walke in doubtfulnesse as the poore Papists do, and as al they do which are led by their owne imagination: I say if we be in doubt whither God will accept our doings or no: what a thing were it? But when we be throughly assured that the way which he sheweth vs is infallible, so as we may well walke in it, and the more we go forward in it, the neerer we come to him and to the poynt of our saluation: such certentie is an inestimable treasure. So then let vs not bereue our selues of the grace that God offereth vs as we see the world do, which is so maliciose 50 and froward, that it had much leuer to give it selfe too it owne fantasticall deuises, that is to follow the vnfallible truth which cannot lye vnto vs. Lo what wee haue too marke in this text, where Iob speaketh of the commandement of Gods lippes, to shew vs that God in ordeyning his word which is preached by the mouthes of me, intended to haue vs to rest therepon, to the ende wee should not seeke vaine gazings heere and there. Now he addeth, that he did set more store by Gods word than by his owne liuing or maner of dealing. The Hebreue word which 60 he vseth heere, signifyeth properly an Ordinance or Decree. And truly about a three verfes after, where he will saye that God hath decreed of him, or had an eye to him: he vseth the same worde that is set downe heere. Yee see then that the proper signification of the word is Decree, Determination, Ordinance, or common maner of doing. And againe sometimes by a similitude it is taken for a mans ordinarie liuing or prouision, bycause it is a parcell of the law that a man should lay for his liuing. For he must not eate so much as to burst himself in one day, but he must take his portion to his nourishment and sustenance, and content himselfe with it. Thus ye see that this worde is also taken for euery mans ordinarie liuing or prouision. And eyther of both ways may stand very well. VVhat is it then that Iob meant heere? He ment that Gods word was a treasure of more estimation vnto him, than all the goodes of the world. VVhat thing is deerer vnto men than their nourishment? For as wee loue our liues, so do we also indeuer to prouide necessaries for the same. If we want bread, what a thing is it to vs? How are we dismayd at it? Forasmuch then as men haue great care to mayntayne their liuing: Iob in preferring Gods word before his sustenaunce of meate and drinke, sheweth thereby that he made not so great account of this present life, as of earnestnesse in obeying God, and that hee had muche leuer to be taught by his word, thā to be fed with the best meate in the world. Heereof we may gather a good admonition. For we see how men are desyrous to liue, and not only desyrous, but also mad of it, so as there is nother meausur nor stay in them. And yet in the meane while they wote not to what end they liue, nor why they desire life. For they haue no regard of God. So much the more therefore doth it stand vs in hand to marke what is sayd here; that is to wit, that our desyring to liue in this world, must be alwayes to serue our God, and to dedicate ourselues to his glory, and to be confirmed more and more in the hope of the heauenly life whervnto he calleth vs. That is the poynt wherevnto we must applie all our wits and indeueris. And if we do so, it will follow immediatly, that we shal preferre Gods doctrine (which is the spirituall foode of our soules) before all the foodes that we can wish for our bodies. For what is it to be fed with bread & water, yea or with wyne, & all other the delicatest meates and deinties that can be deuised? VVhat is that to the purpose if our souls be starued in the meane while? Oxē Asses and horses shuld be in better & more excellēt state thā we. So thē let vs learne to preferre gods word (wherwith our soules are nurished) before all the thinges that concerne this temporal & flightfull life: and let our preferring of it bee not only to say, I am learned, but also too giue ourselues wholly to the seruing of god, as Iob speakest of it here. Now let vs come to that which I haue declared concerning the word when it is taken to signifie the common maner of doing. If we take it in that sense, truly the meening wil not be chaged at al in effect. Howbeit ther wil be one other point very profitable and worthy to be borne away. For by that meanes Iob declareth, that he was not wise after the manner of the wise men of this world, who wil alwayes needes follow their fleshly reason, but that he had quite giuen ouer all selfeliking, to the end he might submit himselfe vnto God. And that is a very needfull thing: according as I haue touched alreadye, that we be but vagabunds and stragglers, if we hold not the way that God hath shewed vs. And how may that be done? Let vs cut off, I say let vs cut off our owne customs, Ordinances, and maners of liuing: let euery whit of it fall to the ground and be done quite and cleane away. For so long as men delight in their owne inuentions, so long as they bee wedded to theyr owne customes, and so long as they sticke wilfully too theyr owne trades of lyuing: it is impossible for them to giue them selues too G O D. It is all one as if a manne woulde put a Frenche hoode vppon the head of a calfe or a cowe, whyche is not theyr nature or kynde, and therefore they cannot away with it. But yet more wood wood are we when it commeth too the poynt that wee should obey God, than the brute beastes are to the things aforesaid. VVherefore that we may be fashioned to obey Gods law, wee must learne firste and formost to rid ourselues of all the gay inuentions that come in oure head, [as when we thinke with ourselues] why should not this be good? VVe have bin wont to do it, and euer man doth so, and it hath continued thus at all tymes. VVe must no more alledge any of these things. And why? For if God once speake the word, it behoueth vs to yeeld vnto it. And so we see it is not without cause that Job hath said, that he sought Gods worde, and the doctrine conteyned in the same, & that he esteemed it more than all other things. And as touching the word lay vp: it cannot be discoursed to day, and therefore we will let it alone till to morrow.
22.</sup>

And in the meane while let vs fall downe before the face of our good God with acknowledgement of oure faults, praying him to make vs so to feele them, as we may learne to humble ourselues, not only in acknowledging the mighty power that he hath aboue vs, but also to glorify him in his righteousnesse, and to know our selues always to be wretched sinners: and specially that when we know the faults that are in vs, we may continually mourne for them, assuring ourselues that God knoweth many mo by vs thā we ourselues cā perceiue: and that forasmuch as we be full of vanitie and enclined to deceir and leasings, let vs desire him to resourme vs in such wise, as our whole seeking may be to profyte in his schole, and as wee may harken diligently too the sound doctrine that is spoken to vs in his name: not with our bodily eares onely, but in suche sorte as it may take good roote in our harts, that we may desire nothing else but to be filled with it, and to haue it for our ordinarie foode. That it may please him to graunt this grace not only to vs, but also to all people and nations.&c.

The xc. Sermon, which is the third vpon the xxijij. Chapter.

This Sermon is yet still vpon the twelft b. and then vpon the text that ensueth.

13. He is still at one poynt, and vvhō can turne him from it? looke vwhat his hart desireth hee doth it.
14. He vvill perfourme of me vwhatsoeuer he hath decreed, and many such things are in him.
15. This is the cause that I am afraid of him, and vwhen I thinke of him I stand in feare of him.
16. God hath softned my hart, and the Almighty hath troubled me.
17. For I am not cut off by the darknesse, but he hath hidden the darknesse of my face.

R.10.b.10
E saw yesterday, that if we will obē God rightly, we must giue ouer al our owne customes and māner of dealing, and not alledge one thing or other too make it go for good: but seeing oure Lord hathe spoken it, we must hold vs simply to his word which he hath giuen vs. Now remayneth to marke the word that is set downe in that place: namely that we must lay vp Gods doctrine as a treasure in oure harts. For vnlesse it be laid vp after that manner, it will never take liuely roote: according as we shall see many, that will bee moued when they heare God spoken of, and be somewhat well disposed: howbeit, that disposition is not throughly planted in them: and therefore we see that the faith whiche appeared in them for a time, vanisheth away. Then let vs marke well, that wee haue never profited well in Gods schoole, till his word be so deeply rooted in our harts (that is to say, till wee haue receiued it with such a mind,) as it is not a flightful motion to allow or like well of the thing that is told vs, but a hartie affection settled vpon it in good earnest. And that is the cause why it is oftentimes tolde vs that the seruice of God is inward and spirituall. For although we had satisfied the whole world, and all men thought vs to be vtterly faultlesse: yet might God iustly refuse all thys goodly outward shew wherein men sooth vs, if the hart go not afore it. So then let vs beare this saying in mind, that it behoueth vs to lay vp Gods word. And how? Not to bury it: for if we beleue with our hart vnto righteouſnesse, we must also confesse it with our mouth that we may be ſafe. Then must Gods word shew it ſelſe: for if we do not ſo, men may thinke that it is not in vs. But yet for all that, the good works whiche the faithfull do, must ſirst proceede out of the ſaide hartie affection, and not of any flightfull and inconstant motion. Furthermore the word lay vp, will be welynough vnderſtoode, if we take the ſimilitude of a treasure, and applie it alſo as our Lord Iesuſ Christ doth when hee ſaiſthe, that if a man bee well ſtored of thinges, hee may fetche foorth whatſoever he hath neede of, both for his owne house-hold, and alſo for other mens vſe. For if a man bee ſo niggardlie, that when hee hath his cheſts full of money, and his garners and cellers throughly ſtored, he wil both ſtarue himſelfe and not releue any other body: will men ſay that ſuch a one knoweth too what purpose it ſerueth to be rich? No: but he is a starke beast. Therefor let vs vnderſtand, that our hoarding muſt be to the end we may vſe it diſcreetly, according as the caſe ſhall require. And when we haue the treaſure of the doctrine of ſaluation laid vp in our harts, we muſt not only proſite ouरſelues by it, but alſo edify our neighbours. Yea and let vs beare in mind howe Saint Paule ſaiſthe, that the mysterie of faith muſt bee kepte in a good conſcience. Thus ye ſee in effect how we haue to note vpon the ſaid text, that if we will be learned in Gods word, wee muſt not only conceiue ſome opinion of it in our brayne, but we muſt lay it vp diligenty in our harts, as an inestimable treaſure. Now let vs come to that which Job addeth. He ſaiſthe that if god be minded to do a thing, no man ſhall turn him from it. This is ſtil a continuing of the matter that he had in hande, namely that God vſed an absolute power againſt him, ſo as there was no going to law with him to obteine his right. But I haue tolde you that this is ouermuch. For although Job knew that God puniſhed hym not for his ſinnes: yet ought hee to haue bin fully reſolute, that God is righteouſe and vnpartiall in all his doings. But he ſurmizeth a lawleſſe power that hath nother rule nor meaſure with it, wherein he doth God wrong. Neuertheleſſe the ſentencē is true, if it bee applied as it ought to be: namely that God is always at one poynt or in one mind, that is to ſay, that he is cōſtant & vnuariable, and cānot be turned one way nor other: according as we ſee that euē Balaā the lier was inforced to acknowledge that god is not like mē, who change their minds and are variable and inconstant. Hath he ſaid any thing (ſaiſthe Ee. iii. Balaam) N. 2. 2. 3. 3.

Balaam which he performeth not? So this doctrine of it selfe is good, and the holy scripture is full of that matter: but now must we applie it to our instruction. It serueth to two purposes : the one is, that when God hath spoken a thing, and promiseth to be mercifull and fauorable to vs, and to succoure vs in all our needes: we must stedfastly beleue it and rest vpon it, without any doutering whither he wil performe his promise or no. VVhy? for his truth is infallible. Likewise on the contrary part, if he threaten vs, wee must tremble, assuring oureselues that it is not for vs to dallie with such a master. Thus ye see to what end al the things tend that are spoken in the holy scripture, concerning Gods constancie and stedfastnesse in executing his determinations. VVe knowe that God vttereth his mind vnto vs when he auoucheth himselfe to be pitifull, and that he receiueth vs to mercy. Seeing then that our Lord doth so call vs vnto him, it is not too beguile vs and too foade vs with some vaine hope. And therefore inasmuch as we haue such assurance of his good will, let vs boldly stay and rest therevpon. And why? For hee chaungeth not, though all the worlde should make sute to him, yet should it not cause him to alter his mind. And by that meanes we may glory against all that the deuill can devise or practise: yea and althogh we see the whole world bent against Gods promises, yet shall we neuerthelesse be always at rest, according also as wee see how the holy Ghost armeth the faithfull with such trust, and teacheth them to defye all their enimies.

Esa.8.b.10 Goto (saith he) lay your heads togither, and do the worst you can: yet shal the thing that God hath promised, hold out to the end. Againe he saith, he will be neere at hand to vs, and that when the deuill and men haue practized their vttermost against vs, he will beate downe all theyr defences. Then seeing it is so, we may despise al that our enimies can practise or devise. And why? For in the end they cannot withstand God, nor let him to perfourme the thing that he hath spoken. Thus ye see in what wise we ought to put this doctrine in vre, cōcerning the stedfastnesse that is in God. Also let vs beare in mind what hath bin said concerning his threatnings: so that if he rebuke our vices, and be so good to vs as too warne vs of them, let vs not stād vnamendable in our misdoings, but let euery of vs humble himselfe, and looke well about him, and with all carefulness indeuer too preuent the curse which God hath told vs of. For to that end dothe he make vs to feele his wrath. I say it is to the ende hee would not be constrained to execute his wrath agaynst vs. Lo what the true vse is of this doctrine, that God is always in one mind, and that no man can turne him frō it. For the same cause also it is said, that God hath spoken once, and that the Prophet herd these two things, namely that there are power and iudgement in God: as if he should say, Lorde thou needest not too repeate thy wordes: for when thou hast once spoken the worde it ought to suffice vs, and it is as much as if we had a hundred thousand witnesses, and that thou haddest never ceasid repeting and rehersing the things that wee had once heard afore: we nede not to haue our eares beaten at so much. VVhy so? For Gods trutn is so certain that

Psa.62.c.12 13. if there were no more but one sillable of it, it wer al one as if we had a great volume of it. And yet notwithstanding we see howe our Lord calleth vs by ratifying hys promises, and is not contented to haue spoken once and away, but putteth vs oftē in remembrance of the things that we haue once heard, and will haue vs taughe hys goodnessse all our life long. Seeing then that he vseth such ouerabundantnesse, it behoueth vs to acknowledge his infinite goodnessse in applying himselfe after that manner to our rudenesse: but yet must we not take such a boldnesse as to call in question the thing that he hath spoken [but once] and to dispute whither a thing bee true or no when God hath witnessed it vnto vs. For we Psa.12.b.7. must rather marke how it is said vnto vs in the Psalme, that Gods sayings are as siluer seven times fined in the fornace, wherein there is nother drosse nor superfluitie. They be not like the words of mortall men, who are dubble, and wil eyther colour the words that they haue spoken, or vnsay them againe, or find some subtle shifte to turne them another way. There is no such thing at al in God. VVhy so? For his words are as siluer throughly fined, wherein there is no superfluitie. This (say I) is the seale, that all the faithfull ought to set vnto all the things which they heare at Gods mouth. So soone thē as God hath spoken any thing, let vs (according to that whiche hath bin touched alredy) set this seale vnto it, that there is nothing but truth and certeintie in it. For there is nothing but vntruth in mans mind, and yet God doth vs the honour to make vs his witnesses: according as saint John speaketh of it; that whosoever beleueith in Iesu Christ, hath set too his his seale that God is soothfast. So then seeing that God doth vs the honoure, too make vs his witnesses although there be nothing but vanitie in vs: so much the more ought we to be inflamed too receive obediently all things whiche wee heare of him, and to warrant oureselues that they be true. It foloweth immediatly, That he doth whatsoeuer his hart desireth. Here is one sentence more which is very true if it be rightly understood. True it is (as wee haue seene) that Job did amisse in imagining that God vised a lawlesse power, and in that he could not imagin otherwise: but that god was minded to vtter his strength with such violēce, as shuld be quite void of all reason. Surely (as I haue erst declared) Job purposed no such blasphemie in himselfe: but heere the eace concerneth his former pangs which wer overheadie. But now let vs consider what profiteth redoundeth to vs of this doctrine, that God doth whatsoeuer he liketh. It behoueth vs firste and formost too know what the things are that God desireth or liketh. VVe know that he cannot away with any vnrighteousesse, and therefore his desire or liking must needs bee righteous and full of equitie. Seeing it is so, let vs learne to glorify him in al respects. And first of all when we see things out of order in this world and all seemeth to go otherwise than it oughte too do: let vs marke how it is said vnto vs, that God holdeth the reynes of the bridle, and that nothing is done which hee hath not foredetermined in his purpose. Oftentimes we may think the things to be very straunge which are done, for our eyes are too weake sighted too comprehend the infinite power of God. VVhat is to be done then? Let vs conclude, that forsoomuch as God is righteous, it becommeth vs to allow of all his doings, although they fall not out too oure lyking. And although it seeme too vs that God oughte too woorke otherwise, yet let vs subdue oure owne reason, and hold it in such bondage, as wee may alwayes confesse, that God dothe not any thing which is not wroughte with justice and vrightenesse. Also let vs heere withall marke particularly, that seeing God hath called vs, he doth also dispose our welfare and saluation. For I speake not now of all men in general: but of the cōfort which the faithful may gather, whē God hath once shewed himselfe to them, & calleth them purposelē to be his childrē, & vttereth his hart vnto them as I haue saide afore. The faithful then must not hang in doubtē, or imagine that their saluation is in a mammering. VVhy so? For it is laide vp as a gage in the

in the hand of God : and who can plucke it away from him ?

Therefore lette the faithfull hardly brag of theyr saluation. And why? For God is almighty, according as it is said in the tenth of saint Iohn: The father who hath giuen you vnto me is stronger than al. To what purpose doth Christ speake so? It is to shew that our saluatō dependeth not vpon ourselues, nor vpon any creature, nor is let looce to all hazards: but that God keepeth it as it were in his bosome, and that forsomuch as no man can ouercome him, we be sure that we shall neuer perishe. And why? Because God hath the ordering of all things, and louerh our welfare in suche wise as hee will surely procure it. And therof we haue a good warrant by the Gospell: and (which more is) we haue a sure pledge of it in our Lord Iesus Christ, who is giuen to vs, to the end that we being in him, shuld be partakers both of his life and of all his goodes. So then if this doctrine bee put in vre as it ought to be, we see it is not only true and holy, but also exceeding profitable to vs. Now he addeth by and by after, God will bring to passe whatsoeuer bee batbe determined of me, and ther are many like things in him. Here Job vseth the word that was expounded yesterday. I said that the word signifyeth two things: that is to witte, laws, statutes, ordinances, decrees, determinations, destinies, fashions or maners of dealing, or doing, order, trade, custome, guize, moont or ordinarie: and also a mans prouision, living, susteinance, foode, or narrishmet. As now Job saith, that god will go through with his ordinance or determination. His saying then is, he will go through with mine ordinarie, or else, he will go through with my determination. Now although the signification of the wordes be dubble: yet notwithstanding, the circumstance of the place sheweth vs what the sense of them is: namely that Job meeneth that God will bring to passe the thing that he hath purposed of him. VVhereby he doth vs to understand, that we be not gouerned here by fortune or haphazard. And why? for God hath determined what shal befal vs. VVhe he did put vs into the world, it was not to let vs looce at rouers, and to let vs walke at all aventure: but he determined what should become both of our life and of our death. Therfore let vs vnderstand, that we walke in such wise vnder the guiding of our God, that (as our Lorde Iesus Christ saith) there cannot one heare fall from oure head, but by his good will. For of his prouidence extend euē to the sparrowes, and to the wormes of the earth: what doth it vnto vs whom he esteemeth much more, as whome hee hath created and shaped after his owne image and likenesse? Therefore it is an article which we ought to inarke well, that euery of vs hath his destinie: that is to say, that at suche time as God sendeth vs into this world, he hath alredy ordeyned what hee will haue done with vs, and guideth vs in such wise, that our life is no more in our hand, than is our death: insomuch that it is to no purpose for vs to yndertake one thing or other, bycause that in sted of going forward we shall go backe except God guide vs. Thus ye see how the faithful may comforte themselues with Gods prouidence. True it is that Job did misapply this saying: for in his first pangys or fits (as a man may terme them) he hath spokē haere as a man in despaire. Behold (saith he) I know I am vtterly forlorne. And why? For God hath determined of me what he thinketh good, and the same shal be accomplished, and it shall not boote me to striue against it. But surely, we must not begin at that ende: but before wee speake of Gods ordinance, let vs first consider his righteousnesse, that we may yeld him his due glory. Then let vs not imagin the said lawlesse power in God, wher-

of I haue spoken heretofore: for that were too make him like a Tyrant, and that were a cursed blasphemie. Let vs assure ourselues that God in disposing and ordering all things, vseth a soueraine rule whereby all other iustice and righteousnesse must bee squared out. Neuerthelesse we must not do as these vayngloriose folke do, whiche argue againste Gods prouidence and beginningless election. For they see not the reason why God doth all things, they imagin it to be tyrannical. And what a blasphemousnesse is that? Are not such men worse thā diuels? They be most ignorant, and yet notwithstanding they be most buzie in serching Gods secrets. True it is that they do perchance bear the countenance of greate clerks: but in very deede they bee starke beasts, and yet they will needes haue God to shew them a reason of all his doings: or else they will neuer graunt him that hee gouerneth all things heere bylow, nor that he hath chosen whome he listed to eternall life before the making of the world. So then let vs keepe ourselues from suche outrage: and in acknowledging that al Gods dooings are rightfull and good, let vs marke that his works shall oftentimes passe our vnderstanding, and yet that we must not therefore encounter his will. If God once do any thing: let vs conclude that it is good. Yea (say they) but we see not the reason thereof. Surely whosoeuer would make Gods will subiect to our reason, what doth he but rob him of his glory? For Gods will is the rule of all reason, and the fountaine of all righteousnesse. Therefore let vs hold ourselues contented with it, and be so mylde as to say, that God willetteth not any thing whiche is not rightfull and indifferent. Furthermore when wee once knowe generally the said iustice and righteousnesse: let vs know also that god is so gracieuse vnto vs, as to ioyne and knit his iustice to oure saluation, like as hee hath matched his mightinesse with it also. VVhen we say that God is almighty: it is not only to honoure him, but also to rest vpon him, that we may be inuincible agaist all temptations. For in asmuche as Gods mightie power is infinite, he can well mainteine and preserue vs. In like case is it with his righteousnesse. Seeing then that there is as it were an inseparable knot betweene Gods iustice and our saluation: let vs begin at that poynt, to the ende that when we say that God bringeth to passe whatsoeuer he listeth, and that he will perfourme whatsoeuer he hath determined of vs: we may also assure ourselues that there is not any thing amisse in it, but that all things are ruled by wonderfull iustice and wisdome. Furthermore if we will haue a breefe and familiar exposition of this saying: let vs marke that God hath foredetermined what he will haue done, both in respect of the euerlasting saluation of our soules, and also in respect of thy present life. As concerning the first, God chose vs for his children before the creation of the world. And whereunto had he an eye in choozing of vs, but only too hys owne infinite mercie? For wee bee of Adams corrupted lump. VVherefore did he preferre vs before the rest of his creatures (as saith Saincte Paule) by sholing vs out to make vs more excellent than our fellowes? VVee deserued too bee cast away and damned: and God hathe voutsafed to draw vs out of destruction.

Ye see then that we ought to glorify God for that determination, forsomuche as it pleased hym too choose vs and too call vs too saluation, and to make vs heires of his kingdome. And thys determination hathe bin vittered too vs in oure Lorde Iesus Chryste: and if we be members of our Lord Iesus Christ, wee be sure of our adoptiō. The neede we not to seeke the registers for it alesi in heauen, but let vs cōtent ourselues with the assurance that he hath giuen vs of it. For if a man that hath but the copie of an autentike register, do content himselfe with it: ought not we when God hath declared his purpose concerning our saluation, ought not we (I say) to rest vpon it? Ye see then in what wise it behoueth vs to settle ourselues, forasmuch as we be sure that oure saluation is vnalterable, bycause God hath made his decree of it which cannot be changed. And as concerning his determination for this present life, let vs vnderstande that God guideth all our steppes, and nothing happeneth to vs by casualitie: but hee foreseeth all things, so as we can nother goe, nor come, nor do any thing else otherwise than he hath ordeined. Therefore let vs assure ourselues, that seeing wee bee so in Gods protection, we shall be well at ease: and seeing that hee watcheth ouer vs and hath a care of vs, let vs not mistrust that the diuell can wind about vs, nor all our enemies beside. For God will prouide for vs, and can well skill too keepe vs from all the attemptes that shall bee made against vs. And this oughte not only to comforte vs, but also to giue vs courage too goe through with our duetie, and to walke every man in his calling, not mistrusting but that God will disappointe all the practizes and attempts that shall bee made against vs, and breake all the snares that men shal haue laide too catch vs in. Is it not a goodnesse that ought to rauish vs and amaze vs, when we see that God hath such a care of vs, and hath determined althings aboue which shal be done heere beneath? VVe be heere as froggs and Grasshop-

but b not bidder: but it is cleane contrarie. This in effect is that which Iob ment to say. First he affirmeth that he is afraid of God: and afterward addeth the reason, namely bycause God made him to feele his terrible maiestie. In what wise? Verely (saith he) because I know I haue to do with him, and he is mine aduersarie partie. I indure not mine afflictions as one that knoweth not from whence they come: but I know it to be the hand of God that persecuteth me. That is the cause that I am so afraid

10 And this text is greatly for our profite, if we can applye it as we ought to do. First and formost it is not without cause, that Iob saith that he is afraid of Gods presence, for that he maketh him to feele his maiestie. For it is good reason, that as ofte as wee thinke vpon God, wee should be touched and striken in feare to stand in awe of his maiestie. Yea and although God shew himselfe looking towards vs, and allure vs to him, and after a maner cocker vs as little babes: yet must we not come vnto him after such a sort, but that we must always do it with feare and lowlinesse.

20 Then let vs marke, that he which hathe a right knowledge of God, will be willing to come too him, yea and come to him indeede, reioycing in that hee knoweth him to be his father: and yet notwithstanding he will always behauie himselfe lawfully and obediently towards him to honoure him. And that is the cause why it is said in the fifth Psalme, Lorde I will enter into thy

Temple vpon the multitude of thy mercies, and there worship in feare. This is it in effect which we haue to note heere concerning the fearing of Gods maiestie.

30 Herewithall let vs know, that our feare must not be such as Iob speakes of: that is to witte, wee must not bee so afraid of God, as to shunne his mighty power as a terrible thing to vs, or to go about to hide our selues from him: but when we haue conceiuied the said feare of him, we must also receiuie comforte, assuring ourselues that Gods minde is not too scare vs from him, but to drawe vs too him. And wee had neede too bee so beaten downe, considering the presumptuousnesse that is in oure nature: for there is suche a pride in vs, as wee will neuer yeeld God his due honoure, till oure fleshe bee vtterly subdued and tamed. And how must that bee done? Euen by plaine force. For of our owne good will wee woulde neuer be humble and meeke. God therefore is fayne too vse violence in that behalfe, and too mortify all that is of our flesh, that we may be as it were broken and broozed to stoupe vnto him. Thys done, he setteth vs vp againe, and is contented too shew himselfe to bee our father, to the end we should honoure hym. Then is it not ment that we shoulde be striken with suche a fearefulnessse, as wee shoulde not knowe where too become: but that after wee haue honoured God with reverent awe, wee shoulde also preache vntoo hym vpon the truthe of his manifolde goodnesse. Yet notwithstanding, that which Iob speaketh heere is very notable: that is too witte, that his conceiving of suche fearefulnessse, was bycause God had softned his harte, and amazed him by persecuting him.

40 For heereby Iob dothe vs too vnderstande, that although he had always feared God: yet notwithstanding forasmuch as he was assaulted with such temptations: he conceyued such a terroure as hee wist not in a manner what God was. Nowe this importeth two poyntes. The one is, that of oure owne nature wee bee deafe and dull, so as wee knowe not what it is to feare God, (as hathe bin sayde already) till hee drue vs too it by force. Ye see then that men become stoutelyke murherers, vntill G O D haue well tamid them. And heereby wee see that it is more than necessarye for

Ef.40.f.22 pers, as the Prophet Esay saith of vs: and to be short, we should be like mice in the straw (as the Proverb saith) if God had not set an order aforehand what shoulde become of vs. Now when we see this: we may well saye, I know that God is my sauoure and father, for he hathe my saluation in his hand, and will not suffer me to perish: and I ought to assure my selfe of it, seeing he hathe promised it me. By and by Iob addeth, that there are many like things in him: as if hee should say, against whome do I bend my selfe? For though all the world shoulde set it selfe against him, they should win nothing by it: and as for me, I am a poore woorme, and therefore it behoueth me to shrinke away. Surely he doth well in so saying, if so be that he yelded God the honoure and prayse of righteousnesse, yea euен in respecte of the afflictions that he indured. But hee is so combered in hys mind, that he acknowledgeth not God to berighteouse and full of equitie as he ought to do. VVhat is too bee done then? On our part, when we haue acknowledged ourselues to be euery one vnder the hand and guiding of God: let vs beleue also that the whole world is so in likewise: for if the deuill were not subiect to God, what a thing were it? VVe see with what rage he commeth against vs: and we see also how furious the wicked sort are: insomuch as it may seeme that they shoulde swallow vs vp: and they are as great and hideouse stormes that come to ouerwhelme vs. Let vs marke therefore that God not only keepeth his children vnder his protection to mainteine them: but also that hee so gouerneth the whole world, that the deuill (do what he can) is not able to bring his practizes about: but that Gods prouidence is always betweene him and home. Thus ye see howe we ought to put this doctrine in vre. Now finally Iob sayth, that he is afraid of God, and that the more he thinketh vpon him, the more he standeth in doubt of him. For he hath softned my hart (saith he) and the almighty hath amazed me. And the reason is, bycause he hath not cut me off through darknesse, but hath bidden darknesse out of my presence. There are that set downe this latter part of the text thus: that he

vstoobee afflicted. For otherwise we would play the looce Coltes, and we woulde not knowe what it is to obey God, or too yeeld him any subiection at all. Therefore he is fayne to make vs afrayd by the afflictions that hee sendeth vs. Marke that for one poynt. The other is, that the faythfull are erewhiles so astonished at Gods justice, as they be ouerraught by it, yea and so ouertaken, as they be vtterly dismayde for a little while, as Job was: howebeit in the ende God relieuteth them. And this is well woorthie too bee noted: For the Diuell vseth two extremities that are in vs. The one is our carelessness, insomuch that if God draw vs not to him by some violent maner: we fall asleepe in our sinnes. If the Diuell may winne that at our handes, he is well apayed: but if God wakeneth vs, then doth the diuell labour to drieue vs to dispayre. But it behoueth vs to preuent such policies. Therefore let vs learne, that if Job were striken with so great feare, the like may well betyde vs, or much more, except our Lorde do mortifie vs. Herewithall it behoueth vs to mark after what maner men are brought to the sayde feare and terror. Experience sheweth, that the same falleth not out alwayes. And for proofe thereof, we shall see manie naughtipackes that ceasse not too gnashe their teeth agaynst God, euen when hee smythe vpon them with manie blowes. There doth God execute his vengeance vpon his enemies: and yet notwithstanding, doo they amende for all that? Haue they their hertes any whit softned by it? No: they become more spitefull and wicked than they were afore, insomuch as therewpon they fall to kicking and spurning agaynst god, like rellie iades. Seeing then that afflictions cannot alwayes tame and subdue men, but that they take the bitte in their teeth too runne a heade agaynst that way whiche God woulde haue them to go: let vs learne thereby that it is not without cause that Job sayth here, that he was afraide because God had not cut him off in darkenesse. He setteth it downe heere, Before the darkenesse, or in the presence of darkenesse: yea and worde for worde it is, Before the face of darkenesse. And men haue misexpounded it in this wise: That God had not cut mee off before this miserie happened to me. Job meeneth not so: but rather thus: God hath not cut me off as it were in couert: the afflictions that I indure are not vnkowne, as men oftentimes (when they haue any greefe or trouble) knowe not whence it commeth. And afterward he addeth: He hath bidden the darkenesse of my presence. But heere some bodie hath corrupted the text, by setting it downe, Hee hath not bidden, whereas contrariwise it is sayd, hee hath hidden the darkenesse, &c. that is to say, he constraineth me to come before him. And like an offender that is led by violence before a iudge, woulde faine scape if he wist howe to shifft himself away, or if he were in some corner alone, he woulde cut his owne throte, and become hys owne hangman in dispatching himself, and yet notwithstanding must spite of his hart appeare before the iudge, and heare his sentence of condemnation: Euen so dooth

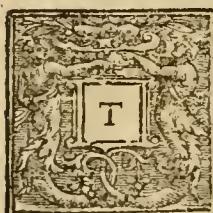

Job shewe that hee himselfe was delt with: that is to say, it is not in hucker mucker (sayth he) that I am afflicted: I cannot say, see the mischaunce: for God sheweth himselfe to be mine aduersarie, and maketh me to feele that it is he to whom I must yelde mine account, and he hath shewed me his hande. And this is a verie notable poynt. For we see oftentimes that men are stnally touched with the feare of god, when he sheweth himself by afflictions. I report me hereof to Pharaon, and the Egyprians. For did God euer vse sharper scourges than those were? And yet notwithstanding, it is to be seene, that they hardened themselves agaynst them. And why? Truely they knew at all times that it was the hande of God: but that knowledge did soone vanishe away, and they were so dazed in themselves, or rather the diuel had so bewitched them, as they thought they had none other enemies but Moises and Aaron. But God shewed them full well, that when he shetteth men vp, they must needes feele his hand, yea and they must be fayne (spite of their teeth) too knowe that he is their judge, & that he is strong ynough to tameth, yea & to ouerthrow them, & breake the al to peeces. And therefore let vs pray God, that if he smite vs with his hande, hee suffer vs not to fall too sturdiness agaynst him, according also as Moyses speaketh: but that we may Leu. 26.e.28 open our eyes, to see that it is he which chastiseth vs, and that we may not be so blockish and stubborne, as not too knowe his hande. For whereas it is sayde by the Prophet, that they looked not to the hande that smote them: it is to shew vs, that that stubborne people was not woon by Gods scourges. Nowe let vs beware that the same happen not vnto vs: but let vs pray God, that when he hath made vs too feele his mighty hande, too humble vs withall: he suffer vs not to bee vnamendable, but graunt vs the grace not too bee so swallowed vp of heauiness, as that we shoulde bee scared away from him too shunne him, but rather so drawe vs vntoo him, that vpon trust that as it is in his power too bring too the graue, so also hee can plucke vs thence againe, wee maye lay wyth the Prophete, The Lorde will quicken vs the thirde daye, and though wee bee deade for a tyme, yet wee shall bee made alyue agayne by hys goodnesse. Therfore, lette vs alwayes repayre vntoo hym that hath wounded vs, assuring oure selues that hee is the soueraigne Surgyon, who will helpe vs for oure Lorde Iesus Christes sake.

Nowe let vs fall downe before the face of our good God, with acknowledgement of our faults, praying him too make vs so too feele them, as wee may alwayes retorne right vnto him: yea euen with suche affection, as all our minde may bee applyed therewntoo, and that we beeing assured that he will be fauourable to vs, may call vpon him, desiring him that when hee hath forgiuen vs our sinnes past, hee will so guide vs all our life after, as all oure whole labour may bee too serue too his glorie. And so let vs all say, Almighty God oure heauenly father, &c.

He matter that is handled heere, hath beene layd foorth heretofore after another maner. Howebeit there is nothing but wee may fare the better by it, if we conider well why God propoundeth this lesson so often to vs. The matter is, that God executeth not his iudgements too the vewe of the eie, so as it might be ſcene, that he hath a care of the good to mainteyne them, and that he is an enemie to the wicked to puniſh them as they haue defrauded. VVe ſee not this: for things are out of order in the worlde. True it is that Job hath hilde long talke of it afore. But we know it is ſuch and ſo great a ſtumbling blocke, as we be troubled with it continually, yea euēn the perfecteſt of vs. If the miſcheife indure, and God remedie it not: euerie of vs is greeued, and wee fall too diſputing, howe it ſhoule be poſſible that God ſhoule be ſo pacient, and as it were diſemblaſe ſo much, and ſeeme to bee aſleepe when he letteth all things alone after that ſort. Therefore 20 we had need to be ſtabliſhed in the leſſon that is conteyned here, and to be often put in minde of it: to the end that when wee ſee things turmoyled in the worlde, wee may alwayes haue ſuch light of fayth, as may ſerue vs to ſee Gods iudgements, although they bee hidden from vs as nowe. And ſo the verie poynt that Job intendeth too ſhewe heere, is that God hideth his iudgements for a time, and neither executeth his vengeance vpon the wicked, nor deliuereſt the godly at the firſt brunt, but ſuffereth them to endure many wrongs. For the prooſe hereof he ſayth. Howe are not the times bidden of the Almighty, and ſuch as knoƿ him, ſee not his dayes? VVe haue ſene heretofore, how Eliphas bare vs in hande, that God did iudge the worlde in ſuſh wiſe, as euerie man might perceyue, that he thinketh vpon thoſe that ſerue him, and hath his eie vpon them, and reaſeſt them his hande continually: and that on the other ſide the wicked are puniſhed at his hande. But it is cleane contrarie, ſayeth Job. And for prooſe hereof, it is ſene, that all is full of robbereſie, might ouercometh right, and they that haue taken paynes, eate not the labor of their handes, but their goodes are plucked from them by force. Seeing then that the good are ſo troubled and vexed, and the bad ſo hardned, and yet ſcape vnpunished, and God ouerſlipſ them, as though he paſſed not for theſe worldy matters: what ſhoule a man ſay, but that he diſemblaſeth & wil not ſhewe himſelfe as a iudge, till he perceyue the time to ſerue for it? But if we would aſke the reaſon why, we ſhoule bee conſounded. Therefore we muſt concludē, that Gods iudgements are ſecret and wonderfull, and paſſe all mans 50 capacitie, ſo as our wits ſhall faile vs in that behalfe, and therfore we muſt reuerēce the leſſons of god that are vnuſtoune to vs, acknowledgiſg him to be righteous, though we find his doings to be ſtroung. Manie haue troubled themſelues greatly aboue the firſt part of this ſentenſe, where it is ſayde, Howe are not the times bidden of God? For it ſeemeth that Job blaſphemeth, in going about too excludē God from the government of the worlde? And it is ſayde that by the tymeſ, are meant the things that are ſubiect to chaunge and alteration: as if Job had meant to ſay, that God gouerneth well the worlde in generall, but medleth not at all with the particular ordering and guiding of things in ſeueraltie. But this is farre off from the naturall meening. And we neede not to ſeeke elſewhere for exiſtation or gloze, than in the text it ſelfe. For there it is ſayde, Howe are not the times bidden? VVhat meeſteth Job by that? He ſheweth it himſelfe in ſaying, Howe is it that they which knoƿ God perceyue not his dayes? VVe knowe that thoſe are termed the dayes of God, wherein hee vtereth and ſheweth himſelfe? For when God puniſheth not the wicked, ne deliuereſt the good, nor heareſt their requestes at the firſt: wee bee as it were in the darke, and God ſeemeth too bee hidden, and withdrawne out of the worlde, and to ſeparate himſelfe from it to let all go to hanocke. Too bee ſhort, except God make vs too ſeele his prouidence, and prooue it vnto vs openly, that he gouerneth both aboue and beneath: we bee as it were in the night, and the tyme becommeth darke: for there is no light but in the countenance of God, when hee ſheweth himſelfe the father of all good men, in preſeruing them by his grace, and on the other ſide puniſheth the wicked, as they be woorthie. This is it (I ſay) which inlightenneth vs: this is the verie day of the Lorde. And ſo ſpeaketh all the holy Scripture: as when it ſayeth too the wicked, Doo you reioyce at the day of the Lorde? It ſhall bee turned vntoo you intoo darkenesſe, and not into light, it ſhall bee full of feare and terror. VVhy ſo? VVhen God appeareth, the wicked muſte needes bee afraide, bycause his preſence is y-nough too overwhelme them. For what cauſeth the wicked to bee ſo ſtubborne, and too mocke at all threatnings, and to go forwarde with their wicked affections: but bycause it ſeemeth too them, that they bee ſcaped from Gods hand? But when God ſheweth himſelfe too them, they muſt needes bee abashed ſpyte of their teeth. But nowe let vs returne to the text. It is ſayde, that Gods dayes are not ſene of them that knoƿ him, that is too ſay, of the good men that truſt in God, wayting for his helpe, and for the ſaluation that hee hath promiſed them, ſo as they cannot at the firſt brunt perceyue that he will helpe them: they ſeeke him, but yet for all that, they dwell ſtill in ſuſpence, as though their calling vpon him had not booted them at all. Thus then ye ſee that the godly cannot ſee Gods preſence: that is too ſay, they cannot perceyue out of hande by experience, that God is neere them in ſuſh ſort as he himſelfe declareth, ſaying that hee is alwayes readye too heare ſuche as call vpon him in truthe. Nowe wee haue the true meening of this ſentenſe: that is too witte, that Gods hyding of the tymeſ, is not for that hee executeth not his iudgements euerie minute of an houre: but bycause he delayeth and prolongeth them, ſo as in the meane while wee perceyue not hys dayes. For nowe adayes it maye ſeeme, that God hath no care of vs, and that hee hath ſeparated and withdrawne himſelfe from vs, bycause his prouidence is not knowne to vs. True it is that God ſeeth and mar- keth keth all things dayly, and hath not his eyes blindsolded. But yet it seemeth so too oure vnderstanding, according as the Scripture is woont too applie it selfe to the rudenesse and infirmitie of men. God therefore hath hys tyme: and then will he shewe that hee seeth things. Not that hee perceyueth not all presently: but bycause that wee on our side, are not able to discerne that he hath care of men as nowe, and that he hath his eyes open to note and marke the euill that is committed, too redresse the same. VVee see not this, as in respect of our perceyuerance. There is some certaine time hidden from men, howbeit well knowne vnto God: that is too say, God delayeth his iudgements, and executeth them not at the first dashe. Thus muche concerning the sense of the letter.

Now let vs aduise our selues to gather such instruction as is giuen vs by this sentence. I haue sayde alreadie, that it is a verie sore temptation too the faythfull, when things are confuzed in the world, so as it may seeme that God medleth no more with them, but that fortune ru-lenth and gouerneth all things. And this hath beene the cause of all these diuelish Proverbes. That all things are tossed by casuall fortune, That things are blidly guyded, That God playeth with men as with a tennisball, That there is neyther reason, nor measure in his doings, but rather that all things are gouerned by a certayne secrete necessarie, and That God vouchsafeth not too thinke vpon vs. Beholde the blasphemies that haue raigned at all tymes. And why? For as (I haue sayde alreadie) mannes witte is dazeled when hee goeth about to iudge of things that are out of order, and which passe oure iudgement and reason. VVhat is too bee done then? Let vs bee armed agaynst such stumblingblocks: and when God sheweth not himselfe as a iudge, but seemeth rather too bee shutte vp in heauen, and to take his pastime there, and too bee vnwilling too deale with our affayres heere: yet let vs holde this for a certaintie, that hee ceasteth not to do his office, howbeeit after a secret fashiō vnknown vnto vs. And further, althogh his iudgements bee woorderfull: yet let not vs ceasse too honour them with all humilitie, acknowledging him to bee righteous, and wayting his leysure paciently, till hee shewe vs the cause why he maketh such delay. And if the same seeme straunge too vs, lette vs bethinke vs of that whiche hathe bin handled heeretofore: that is, that oure mindes are so frowarde and wilfull, that wee turne Gods woorkes quite vpside downe, and can never take any profite by them. If God hilde suche an order, that assoone as a man hathe offended, hee shoulde bee punished according to his offence, and that the good shoulde liue heere in peace and rest: what hope shoulde there bee of the euerlasting life? For it woulde never bee brought too passe, that wee shoulde be plucked from bylowe.

Then if God gaue vs a peaseable and perfect state, wherein there were nothing too bee disliked: there woulde be no fayth at all, wee woulde no more hope for the endlesse life, wee woulde imagine that there were no resurrection. Thus yee see that if men might perceyue Gods iudgements, according too theyr owne desire: they woulde fall asleepe heere bylowe, and bee fast tyed too this worlde. But it is muche better that things shoulde bee out of order: to the ende too wake vs. For if wee might liue at ease, wee woulde fall asleepe, and wee shoulde haue neyther vnderstanding nor any thing else. But when things go amisse, wee bee compelled to thinke vpon God, and too lift vp oure wittes a highe, and to consider that there is a iudgement prepared, which is not shewed as yet: and that is a meane whercby oure Lorde leadeth vs too a longing for the latter day, and for the resurrection that hee hath promised vs. Yet notwithstanding men ceasse not to intangle themselues with many false and wicked imaginations. For(as I haue sayd alreadie,) bycause things fall not out as wee woulde haue them, wee bee tempted too surmize that God thinketh not vpon vs, ne regardeth vs any more, that it is but time lost to serue him, that it is all one too lyue well or yll, and that good men gaine nothing by walking in feare vnder him. Lo, howe men rushe out intoo all vngodlinesse, bycause our Lord ruleth not his iudgements as their appetite might brooke them, and according to their reason and fansie. VVherefore let vs learne, not onely too distrust all our owne fleshly wisedome, but also to know that the same is an enemie too Gods wisedome, and that wee must not giue libertie too that which wee devise of our selues, but must minde well the doctrine that is conteyned heere, which is, that Gods iudgements are hidden from men, and surmount all tht wee can conceyue, and that our owne brayne is too small a measure to conteyne an infinite thing. For that also is the cause why the holy Scripture termeth Gods iudgements an vnsearchable deepe that cannot bee sounded. Therefore it behoueth vs too call this too minde, that it may holde vs in awe: so as wee may bee discrete and sober, too the ende that wee aduaunce not oure selues too muche, but wayte Gods leysure, till he vttre vnto vs the thing that is yet hidden.

Beholde the marke whereat wee must shooote, if wee minde too gather good and profitable instruction of this sentence. But nowe let vs marke also, that if iniquitie raigne, and there bee no redresse of it: the same must not seeme straunge too vs: for it hath beene so in all tymes. It is certaine that if wee compare the state of Iobs tyme, with the state of ours, there was then much more soundnesse than there is now. For we knowe that the worlde growes worse and worse, and men harden in all euill, and corruption increaseth more and more. But yet for all this, the same complaintes were made in Iobs tyme, that are made here: namely, that rich me were as Seagulls too swallowe vp all things: they ate vp the fatherlesse, they robbed the widdowes, there was nothing but crueltie in them: againe, when the poore had taken paynes, yea and pressed outhe theyr Oyle in their houles, yet did not men ceasse too spoyle them of their goodes: and when they had gathered their Grapes, yet were they fayne too go away athirst, for the wine was drawne awaie from their handes: yea and the crueltie extended so farre, that the poore folke were stripped out of their clothes, and were fayne too go awaye starke naked, and in stede of beddes and pyllowes, were fayne to lie vpon harde stones, and to sleepe in the raine, and in the deaw of the night, in winde and colde. Nowe if there were suche cruelties in the tyme of Job: shall wee maruell if there be manie outrages committed, or if the strongest go awaye with things by force, or if there bee no more reason, equitie, and vprightnesse among men, than there is in wylde beastes, nowe adayes when the worlde overfloweth in all naughtinesse, and when wee be come too the full toppe of all iniquitie? I saye wee muste not thinke it straunge too see that there was muche more righteousness in those dayes, and yet that there were such extortions intermedled with it.

True it is that these things are harde for vs too comprehend: neuerthelesse they are not written in vaine: but to the ende that wee shoulde receyue instruction by them, & that when iniquities raigne after that sort, euery of vs of vs should dispose himselfe to pacience, and too beare things quietly, seeing it pleaseth God too exercise vs by them, like as they that liued aforetymes , haue shewed the way to those that should come after. Lette vs learne (I say) to prepare our selues to suche things, yea and too take them paciently. For we must not resemble the wicked by growing hardharted in crueltie: neither must we practife the cursed prouerbe of playing the naughtypacks among naughtypackes. But we must be armed with pacience : which thing cannot be done, vnlesse we first conclude in our selues, that seeng God hath permitted much extortion, outrage, naughtinesse, and crueltie to raigne in all ages : wee must not shrinke if the like bee nowadayes, but paciently tarie till God redresse our harmes, assuring our selues that the same shal not be done out of had. And why? For God dissembleth for a time, & things seeme to be hidden from his sight, and that he will not call ought to account. Therfore it behoueth vs to kepe silence in the meane while : for if we grudge, it is an accusing of God, as though he gouerned not the worlde righteously. And what else were that, than too vsurpe a superioritie ouer him , which is too cursed a blasphemie . Nowe let vs come to another point which we haue to mark : which is too consider particularly the iniquities that Job marketh heere. But there are some things which seeme excusable at the first sight, as when he sayth, that the rich men take the pledges of the fatherlesse, that they take away their Asses by force, and that they take the Oxen of the poore widdowes. Verie well : as it hath beene sayde heretofoore, it is a lawfull matter too take a gage or a pledge , and it is permitted so to doo in all common weales. Yea, but let vs marke, that when God gaue his people leaue to take gages for lending their money , it was with condition that he poore shoulde not bee greeued out of measure , and that they shoulde not be robbed of their goodes by it , as by taking a poore mans bed in such sort as he should bee faine to lie in the strawe, as I haue declared alreadie. Beholde heere a crueltie that is not punished at mens hands, but yet shall it not fayle to come to account before God, and to bee registred vp till the residue that haue had no pitie on their neighbours , shall knowe also that justice shall be executed vpon them without any mercie. Yea and though the poore folk desire no vengeance at Gods hand : yet will not he fayle to do it, according as he affirmeth by Moyses , that the sides of him that is a colde shall crie, though the partie hold his peace, and beare with al things. Then certainly God beholde the poore man with pity, too the condemnation of him that hath bene so cruell. And so it is not for naught , that among the other cruelties which were committed in Iobs tyme, hee rehearseth expressly, that the riche men tooke gages of the fatherlesse and widdowes, yea euen such gages as were necessarie for their sustenance. As for example , a fatherlesse childe hath an Ass to labour withall : nowe if this be taken from him , it is as much as if a man shoulde snatche the bread out of his mouth. Againe, a widdow hath a cow that yeeldes her milke to buie bread withall : if this be taken from her, shee is robbed and left naked. Thoughe this be counted no robbery afore men, nor is punishable among them : yet must it come to reckning before God: and moreouer, although we alledge never so many excuses, yet are we conuicted, and we our selues shall bee our owne judges. Howe then doth God execute his office in comparison? VVhen wee see a poore fatherlesse childe readie to beg his bread , and another man spoylng him of his goodes, or if wee see a poore widow oppressed, we must be greeued and moued to say, what a crueltie is this? VVee that are but mortall creatures and wretched earthly woormes, do perceyue the euil and condemne it ; and I praye you will God bee blinde ? will hee haue his eyes shet? So then although men labour too hide themselues in many startingholes : yet shall they alwayes haue suche an insight in their hertes , as they muste needes discerne betweene good and euill, and euen in their owne iudgements understande, that they must be faine to come before the heauely judge, who seeth much more clearely than wee doo. But by the waye wee muste marke also howe it is sayde heere, that the Boundes, Meeres, or Buttelle <sup>10</sup> were remoued, which is a verie great disorder. For boundes, meeres, and buttelles, serue to seuer landes and heritages, like as money(which is as it were the comō fine) serueth to traffike among men. If there were no money to occupie one with another, what a thing were it? True it is that before there was any money coyned, men might well haue some trade of occupying togither by exchange: but there is no such plaine dealing nowadayes, neither coulde it be put in vre in so vntowarde a time as men see nowe. The money then that is coyned , and goeth abroade from hande to hande, is as a suretie or warrant(as men terme them) that men may occupie one with another. Besides this, there are also boundes , meeres , and buttelles, which serue for the feeldes, and for landes. If these bee not certaine and continuall , there will bee no more good neighbourhod among vs, but our life shall be more disordred than the life of brutishe or wilde beastes. And yet notwithstanding we see that long ago there hath beene such craftiness, and maliciousnesse of chaunging of boundes, and of falsifying the thing which ought to be (as it were) holy among men. Therefore according to that which I haue sayde alreadie, if boundes, meeres, and buttelles, be not kept inviolable, surely all goes to spoile and hauocke , and there will bee nothing in the worlde, but catch who catch may. VVe see that this hath bene aforetymes , too the ende that wee might bee the better strengthned agaynst suche stumbling blockes<sup>20</sup>. Yet notwithstanding the time cannot iustifie such as doo amisse. And it behoueth vs to marke that poynt . For there are many that thinke to sheelde themselues, by alledging that things haue beene woonted to bee so, and that they haue beene of long continuance. But I pray you, doo not wee knowe nowadayes, that such as plucke vp buttelles, are worse than Theeues? VVe may well be of that iudgement. For althouge wee had not Gods lawe, nor the Scripture : yet is it written in our hertes to mislyke vtterly of such falsehood. And if a man alledge, it hath beene vsed afore, it hath beene practised more than this three thousande yeaers : is that sufficient to iustifie such as deface boundes at this day, so as they maye saye they haue beene in possession of it a long time ? No . And therefore let vs learne, not to harden our selues at the examples which we see . If men beginne to doo euill, and too greeue God, and others followe them , so as it shoulde seeme they might doo what they list , and that custome were become a lawe : let vs not fall asleepe vpon it. For god who is the rule of al right, altreth not for al that, loke what he hath once ordeyned, must continue for euer : all mens workes must be layd to that squire, and be squared by it: and a man can no sooner swarue aside from that, but he shall bee condemned. VVherefore let vs marke well, that when mens faultes and misdoings are growne into custome, we must not say, I may follow this,bicause it is a woonted thing among men. No,no : But let vs alwayes haue an eye vnto God, who (as I sayde ) hath stablished a rule that shall not be chaunged. And althouge men turne too and fro, and things seeme vtterly oute of order : yet shall Gods righteousnesse continue euermore inviolable inuiolable and in his full force. And therefore let vs learne to gather our selues home paciently, and to walke in the feare of God, and too haue an eye too the sayde vprightnesse which he commaundeth vs. It is sayde afterwarde, that the poore were shette vp, and that they were made to turne out of the way, and that the wicked had theyr scope, and that in steede of byding tbemselues, they roysted in the streetes, and hilde the pavement as their owne posseſſion.

This is seene more nowdayes than euer it was. But yet notwithstanding we bee warned, that when wee see there is no iustice, so as the verie parties that haue the charge to repreſſe lewde dealings, and ſit in Gods ſeate, and holde the ſwoorde and mace of iuftice in their hand, do not their dutie: wee muſt not bee ouermuch offended at it. True it is that we ought firſt of all to be right ſorie, that the ſeate whiche ought too be conſecrated to Gods ſeruice, is ſo defiled by men: and ſecondly, too knowe also that oure God dooth puniſhe vs iuſtly in not ſuffering iuftice too beare ſway as it ought to doo: for it is a token that we bee vnwoorthie too bee gouerned by him. Therefore it becommeth vs to ſigh when we ſee offences committed, that the Lordes of iuftice and the Magiſtrates ſet not too their handes [ too redrefſe them] nor haue ſuch courage and ſtouenesſe as they ought too haue. Let vs learne(I ſay) that God puniſheth vs by that meanes: and forasmuche as Gods name is blasphemed thereby, let it greeue vs, and let vs be ſorie for it. Howebeit therewithall we muſt concludē in the ende, that ſith God cauſeth not things to bee ſet in perfection preſently, wee muſte needes looke that hee ſhall ſhewe himſelfe a iudge in the latter day. Also wee muſt arme oure ſelues agaynst ſuche ſtumblingblockes, when wee ſee the wicked take ſuche libertie, as to beate one, and bounce another, and to doo many wrongs and outrages, and yet there is no remedie agaynst them, but wee bee newe too beginne againe, and good men are fayne too keepe their mouthes ſhette, and when they go out of their houses, folke mocke at them, ſo as they bee fayne too keepe themſelues as cloſe prisoners. VVhen we ſee all this: well, let vs pray God too vouchſafe too haue pitie on vs, and to vtter his power if we ſee men to bee too colde. Howebeit if hee delay, and things fall not out as wee woulde haue them: let vs honour hys ſecrete iudgements. Yee ſee then that the cauſe why this is written, is for that the rightuous ſhall bee ſhette vp, and ſhall not dare ſhewe their heades abroad, but muſte bee fayne too lyde themſelues, and bee hilde in as prisoners. Therewithall let vs marke what becommeth of the wicked, howe that when men winke at their lewdnesſe, and puniſhe them not in conuenient tyme, ſo they gather ſuch a boldenesſe, as they dare ſhewe themſelues in the open ſtreete, and there make their tryumphes. VVould God wee ſaw not examples hereof nowe adayes. But what? Scarcely ſhall an honest man go abroad in the ſtreetes, but hee ſhall bee flowted and ſcoft at, and vexed and troubled: and if he bee assayled, he dares scarcely maintaine his owne good quarell: and in the meane while what is done to the gallowclappers that ought to haue beeene hanged halfe a dozen yeareſ afore? O, they muſt go perking vp with their neb, yea and that ſo ſtoutly, as they offer shame not onely to eue-rie priuate person, but alſo too the whole ſtate of iuftice.
For when any good man hath a cauſe to go eyther alone or with compagnie, one Ruffian or other ſhall come face him with a shameleſſe countenance, and hee muſte bee ſuffered and indured to ſpite both God and man openly.
So then we haue to marke, that when the wicked are not puniſhed at the firſt as they ought to be, they become ſo ſtately, as they ouermayſter the poore and ſimple ſort, and rufe out intoo all vngraſciousneſſe, becomming ſo bolde, that the good men are fayne too hide themſelues as it were in paſon, and dare not ſpeakē a worde. VVhen wee ſee this (I ſay) let vs tarie paciently till God redrefſe it. Neuertheleſſe this ought too warne ſuche as are in publike authoritiſe, too do their duetie carefully, and too woorke with ſuch ſtouenesſe, as they may not bee guiltie of ſo extreeme diſorder and conuſion as are ſpoken of heere: or elſe theſe dealings muſte returne vpon theyr headeſ. For they ſhall not onely beare a pece of the burthen, but alſo they muſt bee vtterly ouerwhelmed by

it. Thus yee ſee in effect what wee haue too marke.
And by and by it is ſayde, That the wicked ryſe betimes too go to their busiſſe, namely too go too ſtealing and robbing, (ſayeth hee) lyke wilde Aſſes, whiche are light and verie nimble beaſts. Here he cloth vſ to wit, that the feete of the malicious and cankerdhaſted ſort, are ſwift in running too ſhed bloud, and to doo all maner of miſcheefe. Diligence is one of the greateſt vertues that God giueth vnþoo men. Neuertheleſſe it behoueth men too knowe why and too what ende they bee created, that they may applie themſelues therewithal, and bestowe all theyr cunning and abilitie to the ſame. VVe knowe what is ſayde in the Psalme concerning Gods order, that the riſing of the Sunne is more than if hee ſounded a Trumpet. For it ſhyneth vntoo vſ too the ende that euerie man ſhoule go too his worke, and to his busiſſe, ther-by to ſhewe vſ, that hee hath not made vſ to bee ydle and vnprofitable, but too applie oure ſelues too ſomewhat wherein God and our neighbour may be ſerued. Ye ſee then that the Sunne is as a rayſer of vſ vp vnto God, that we may be diligent to doo our dutie. But men are oftentymes too diligent, they bee verie buzie, and they will ryſe early ynough: and what to doo? To quaſſe and to fill the paunche, and too runne intoo all manner of diſorder, as it is ſayde in the Prophete Eſay, that the day is not long ynough for them too make an ende of their riotting. Finally when they be ſo wearie that they can no more, they play the brute beaſtes throughout.
For they ſleepe the daye and watche the night, ſo as the order of nature is turned vtterly vppide downe by them.
An other ſort ryſe early: and too what purpose? Too woorke ſome treacherie or lewdneſſe to their neigborſ, to deceyue one, and to intangle another. Another ſort go to their whorehuntiſgs, and another ſort too theyr wicked buying and ſelling. Thus yee ſee wherein moſt men bestowe their diligence. And this is ſhewed vſ expreſſly, too the endewe might knowe wherevntoo wee ſhoule applie it. Therefore as ſoone as the Sunne riſeth, let vs learne too thanke God for lightning vſ after that ſort, ſo as we may beſtirre our handes; that is too ſay, imploie our ſelues about what thing ſocuer hee calleth vſ too, and wherein ſo euer he will haue vſ to ſerue him. Againē, let the onely marke that we ſhoote at, be alwayes too knowe wherevntoo he calleth vſ, and what be the things that he alloweth: and let vs bee verie ware, that wee abuse not the light of the Sunne, and the diligence that God hath giuen vſ by applying it too the hurt of our neigborſ, or by dooing any man wrong or diſpleaſure. Naye, rather ſiſe wee ſee Theeuſes, VVhoremongers, and Drunkardes ſo forewarde in e-uiill, let vs learne to finde fault with our owne ſlouth in goodneſſe. As howe? Such a one is the ſtirringeſt man in the worlde. And what too doo? To go doo a mur-ther. But if a man bee giuen too drunkenneſſe or too gluttonie: hee layes himſelfe in his graue before he bee dead. For wee ſee howe theſe drunkardes are as ſtinking

king carions [more than] halfe rotten aboue the ground. And good cause why: for it is the wages that they receyue for their double diligence in glutting themselues, and in abusing the good creatures of God. Another sort go to their whorehuntings, and othersom to their theeuing and robbing. Nowe although these kindes of men thinke too aduaantage themselues: yet is their diligence but too their destruction. For when they haue toyled themselues throughly, they shall do nothing else but gather a stacke of wood, and in the end the fire of Gods wrath shall be put too it, to consume it quite and cleane. Therefore when we see the despizers of God, and the wicked sort so diligent in dooing euill: I pray you is it not a great shame for vs, if wee bee lazies though oure armes were broken? Shall not euен they bee witnesses agaynst vs for beeing so unprofitable? Thus ye see that the thing which wee haue too marke in this sentence, is that it warneth vs to be diligent: howbeeit so as we take heede too applie the same diligence where God wyl haue vs to bestowe it. And for the doing thereof, let vs haue an eie too his good will, which is that wee shoulde communicate one with another to helpe our neighbors, and euerie man consider what abilitie and meane hee hath wherewith too succour such as haue neede of him. Lo what our diligence ought too bee. Furthermore, let vs walke as children of the light: and sith that God doth nowe inlighten vs both day and night, let vs call vpon him, and sighe vntoo him in the night. And a daye tymes when hee sendeth vs his Sunnelight, so as wee see what wee haue too doo, and what our duetie is:

let vs applie oure selues saythfully therenvntoo: and at leastwise let vs bee as forward as those that doo so giue themselues too euill, least they become witnessess of our slouthfulnesse. And althoughe wee see not God punishe them out of hande: yet let vs fully perswade oure selues, that there is an horrible vengeance prepared for them, which sheweth not it selfe as yet. But let vs not therefore ceasse too looke a farre of: for it behoueth our sayth to mounte aboue all things that are seene as now, and too beholde things that are hidden. Thus yee see howe we may profite oure selues, even by the misorders that are seene in this worlde, vntill our Lorde bring all things againe to their state and perfection, whiche shall not be till the last day.

Nowe let vs fall downe before the face of oure good God, with acknowledgement of our sinnes, praying him to make vs feele them in such wise, as if hee punishe vs for a tym by the wicked, wee may yet perceyue that he spareth vs and beareth with vs in that wee bee not vitterly ouerthrowne by them: and that although we haue deserued to be so delt with, yet we may not ceasse to haue recourse vnto him, seeing that he calleth vs so gently and freendly: and that we may endeuer to amende the vices that are in our fleshe, and be more and more sorie for them, so as we may wholy frame our selues too his good will, and call our selues fully home vnto him: and that thereby we may proue our selues to be his children, and reuerence him as our father with so much the greater affection. That it may please him to graunt this grace, not onely to vs, but also to all people and Nations, &c.

The.xcij.Sermon,which is the second vpon the.xxvij.Chapter.

10. They make the naked man to go vwithout clothing, & take the gleanings from the hungry.
11. They that presse out the Oyle vwithin their vvalles, and tread the vvineperile, suffer thirst.
12. Me crie out of the citie, the soule of the vvoüded shewveth it self, & god putteth no stop at al.
13. They are among those that hate all light, not knowyng the vvayes thereof, neyther continue they in the path of it.
14. The murtherer ryzeth early, he murthereth the poore and needie, and in the night he is like a theefe.
15. The eye of the adulterer longeth for the euening, saying, no eye shall see mee, and hee hydeth his face.
16. He entereth into the houses by night, vwhich he had marked in the day, and he agreeeth not vwith the light.
17. The light of the morning is as the shadow of death to him: if any man knowe them, they are in the terrour of the shadow of death.
18. They be light vpon the vvaters, their portion is cursed vpon earth, and they see not the frute of the vineyardes.

Eere Job goeth forwarde in shewinge the state that is seene in the worlde, without redresse or prouiding for it by God. And this serueth too proue, that Gods iudgements are not always visible, nor apparant at the first brunt: and that men ought too holde themselues quiet, till oure Lorde stretch out his hande, because he knoweth the fit time to do it, and it is not for vs to appoynt it. Now then Job alledgedeth that the worlde is so full of Rakehelles, that the poore go naked, and such as haue gleaned haue not a bit of bread to eat, but men snatch away eu'en that little from them which they had gleaned of the rich mens leauings. VVhereby he signifieth, that such as haue wherewith, do abuse their credite and riches too consume the poore vtterly. And that is too outrageous a thing: and yet for all that, God prouideth not for it, notwithstanding that he be the iudge of the worlde. This might trouble vs at the first sight, according as we see that many surmize God to be asleepe, when he worketh not after their lyking. But it behoueth vs to be fully perswaded of that, and to haue foreseen it long afore: to the ende we bee not troubled and offended at it when it is come to passe. For it hath euer beeene so: and yet God hath not ceassed to bee the iudge of the worlde. Howbeeit the times seeme to bee hidden, because we see not his day out of hande. True it is that he knoweth all things: and yet for all that, he hydeth himselfe, that is to say, hee sheweth not himselfe willing to haue care to succour such as are afflicted: for he tryeth their pacience for a time. After Job hath sayd so, he addeth, that such as haue taken paynes, yea and haue haue gotten wherewith [to releeue themselues,] cannot inioy their owne goodes. The man (sayth he) that bath pressed out the Oyle within his walles, the man that bath trodden out the wine, shall not cease to be athirst. True it is, that oftentimes this happeneth through Gods iust punishment, according also as we see howe it is threatened in the lawe; Thou shalt plant trees, and not eate of theyr frute: Thou shalt till the earth and sowe corne, and not reapre the haruest: Thou shalt dresse the vines, and not drinke of the wine. VVhen our Lorde speaketh after this maner, it is not because he meeneth too leue things out of order in the worlde, but contrariwise hee threatneth to punish those that haue not vsed his benefites well. But yet for all this, wee on our side cannot alwayes see with our eyes, why God dissembleth the matter. VVhen some pell and poll, and otherosome are spoyled of their substance: wee cannot see the reason of it. For God also intendeth to humble vs, that wee might honour him, and confesse him to be righteous. And verely we be as it were so dazeled, as we cannot discerne what he intendeth. And so ye see whereat Job amed: as if he shoulde say, VVee see those die for hunger and thirst, whiche haue laboured sore: and in the meane while, other men rob them of their goodes. It were easie for God too redresse it, but he doth not. Therefore wee must conclude, that God woorketh not after such maner as is knowne vnto vs, and is within the compasse of oure vnderstanding: but hath a woorderfull purpose, whiche passeth all mans reache, so as wee be as it were blinded at it. And wee must not go about too measure all Gods dooings by our reason: for then shoulde we enter into a bottomlesse deepe. But wee muste pray him to graunt vs the grace, too content our selues with that which hee sheweth vs, and we must haue the sobernesse and modeste, to walke in ignorance, till hee discouer things fully to vs. For it behoueth vs too keepe our selues within our owne tedder: for if we play the looce Coltes, there will bee neyther way nor path for vs. Thus then Iobs intent is, to shewe vs that Gods iudgements are not ruled by mans discretion, but are secret and hidden from vs. For that cause he addeth, that men crie from out of the Citie, and that the soule of the wounded (namely of them that are dying) do lament, and that God putteth no stoppe, or that God doth not any unreasonable thing: for this later part may be taken two wayes. Truely some expounde it, That God receyueth not their prayer. And the two Hebrewe woordes (namely that which signifieth stop, let, hinderance or impeachment, and that whiche signifieth prayer) haue some likenesse, neuer the later it can not be taken here for prayer: for then shoulde it haue beene T'ebphila, whereas nowe it is Thibphla. Surely I confesse, that if the poynts woulde suffer it, that exposition would be most conuenient and agreeable, because hee speakest heere of crying. Then it is sayde that men crie. And wherefore? Because they bee wrongfully vexed, and yet God hath no regarde of their complaintes. Howebeit this translation also, that Ged putteth no stoppe, is verie fitte, notwithstanding that moste men take it in another sense, namely that God dooth not any unreasonable thing. And surely the sayde woerde is commonly throughe all the holy Scripture put in that signification: that is too witte, for a thing that is not well ruled, or which hath no foundation, or whiche hath no truth in it selfe, or rather which is vn honest and to be condemned. True it is then that this signification is most common in the Scripture. But an eye muste bee had too the circumstance of the sentence. Job meeneth not to proue here, that all Gods doings are grounded vpon reason and vprightnesse, how-beeit that hee doo verely acknowledge them too bee so: but the discourse that hee maketh, tendereth too another diuerte ende, which is, that wee bee amazed when wee beholde the state of the worlde. VVhy? If it were in vs, there is none of vs all but he would dispose things cleane otherwise. Therefore in this ordinance and gouernement which wee see, wee haue too remember that God behaueth not himselfe after our fancie, ne executeth his iudgements in suche wise as a man might beholde them, and say, See here, howe it is God that woorketh. No: but rather oftentimes hee will go as it were in couert. That (say I) was Jobs meening. And so, this sentence must bee vnderstoode, that men crie from out of the Citie, and that the soules of suche as are vexed and oppressed doo mourn, & yet that God stoppeth not the doing of those things: that is too say, hee letteth things runne still out of order. Yea for a time: but although hee winke, yetis hee not asleepe (as hath beene sayde afore:) and therefore it behoueth vs too suspende oure iudgements, and not too make it a general rule, that God punisheth men as soone as they haue done amisse, so as his iustice is apparant and visible too vs. VVee see here the contrarie, in that Job sayeth expressly, that men crie from out of the Citie: as if he should say, I will not speake of vnkowne faults, (for there may be many deceytes and wrongs wrought in hudder mudder) but of the iniurys that are notorious, which are knowne ouer all the Citie, euerie streeete rings of them, every man speakes of them. And they that are so misused make such outcries, as many me may be witnessses of the wrongs that are done them. Beholde, the very necessitie of them is so extreme, as it appeereth plainly, that it is high time to helpe them now or never, for they be readie to runne out of their wittes: and yet of all the while, God maketh no countenance that he is minded to helpe them: it should seeme that their crying is in vaine, and that it is but lost time for men too resort vnto God. VVhen men see this, what shall they say? but that God worketh not after our maner, and that all our wittes mult needs be dazeled at it? Therefore let vs learne to honor the wisdome which we cannot comprehend, and to say, Lord, it is true that our flesh & our nature prouoke vs to grudge agaynst thee, but yet must not we rule thee after our appetite. VVherfore we will wayt paciently til thinge houre come, and then wilt thou worke as thou knowest to be profitable and expedient. This lesson is well worthie to be noted. For we see how hastie we be. And besides that, if a man do but touch vs with his finger, we be so wayward, as there is no calling vpon God with vs, if he help vs not out of hand, as sone as we haue but cast forth some sigh, we think he doth vs great wrong. Seeing then that there is such hartburning in vs, and that our passions are so excelsive: we haue so much more neede to marke well this lesson, where it is sayd, That men crie from out of the Citie, yea euen they that are alreadie at the poynt of death, and yet God dispatcheth them not from theyr sighing after that sort, but suffereth men too torment them still. If this seeme straunge to vs, first we must vnderstande howe oure Lorde hath threatened, that suche as haue not pitied their neighbours, shall crie and not be heard thēselues. For he sayth, the poore haue desired you to shew the mercy, but when they came to find any fauor at your hād, you became cruel to the, your ears were deaf to all their requests: & therefore the time will come that you shal cry, & no man shall heare you. VVhen we heare such threatenings of god, it behoueth vs to loke whether those that crie & lament, haue not vsed crueltie towards other men: & if it be so, there is no reson why god should not punish the, so as they might sob & sigh, & yet not be succoured succoured. So then whereas it is sayde heere, that the cries went vp to heauen, and that the parties which cried were put to extreeme paine : let vs consider a little whither they were worthie to be so handled, and therewithall let vs acknowledge that God is a iust iudge. Furthermore if it cannot bee sayde that Gods suffering of vs to bee so oppressed, is to punishe vs : ( As it may come too passe, that such as are so greeued and oppressed, haue always beeene gentle and louing, and not done any such wrong or iniurie too their neighbours, as maye bee worthie of such punishment, that is to say, that is knowne of) then let vs reuerence the woorderfull secrete of God, sith it is not his will that hee shoulde knowe the reason why hee dooth so. Beholde ( I say ) howe wee ought too practize this sentence. Therefore if wee bee afflicted, and crie vnto God, and yet can perceyue no willingnesse in him too helpe vs : let vs not thinke that he hath forgotten vs, neither let vs be out of hart. VVhy? For his prouidence passeth oure vnderstanding. And therefore we must learne to holde our selues quiet even when wee see the graue afore vs, and haue cried and besought God to haue pitie vpon vs. Yea and then also if he seeme to be shet vp in heauen, so as we perceyue not his hande to giue vs any ease : let vs not ceasse to sue to him continually, and we shall not be disappoyneted of our hope. Yet notwithstanding, it behoueth vs too mount aboue all mans vnderstanding. And this is it also why S.

Ro. 4. d. 18.

Paule sayth, that according to the example of Abraham, wee ought to hope aboue hope. VVee haue the like too marke in this text. For so long as men will be selfewise, it is impossible for them to trust in God, or to rest vpon his goodnesse, op vpon the saluation that is promised them. And why? For God to exercise our fayth, will make vs to bee besieged of a hundred deathes, so as we shall bee as good as swallowed vp into the gulfe. VVhat is to bee done then? Let vs learne, not to iudge of our saluation, which we looke for at Gods hande, after our owne mother wit & reason, for that is to smal a measure. But let vs practize this lesson of S. Paules, of hoping agaynst hope.

Ro. 4. d. 18.

Do we not see a whit? God seeth for vs. Is there no mean for vs to escape? God will finde a meane. Is death (to our seeming) readie to catch vs? God is able to remedie it. Although we knowe not after what maner: yet is it not for vs to scaue of it. But let vs do God so much honor, as [to beleue] that hee will scaue vs beyonde all that man can conceyue, yea euen in such wise as we shall be compelled to be rauished with woonderment. For behold also how it is sayd of the welfare of the Church, that when the faythful bethinke them in what sort God hath deliuered them, they shal take it as a dreame, insomuch as the thing cannot be comprehended by mans reason, because it is not according to the order of nature. Beholde (I say) how we ought to kepe our selues quiet, that we may rest vpon Gods goodnesse, and feede our selues with the hope of the promises that hee hath giuen vs. Yea and when wee cri vnto him, and he maketh no likelihode of hearing vs, let vs not ceasse to continue our sute still, & to hope beyonde all hope, that is to wit, beyond all that we can see or discerne. Thus much concerning this text. Nowe it followeth, that such as do euill, shunne the light, and hyde themselues, as a theefe that alwayes seeketh for darknesse and night, and when the day commeth, he thinketh it to be the shadow of death. The aduouterer and whore-hunter watcheth till the euening sherte in, that hee may shrinke into his brothelhouse. Lo how men hate the light in doing euill. And too what purpose doth Job speake it here? To shew vs that God iudgeth not the worlde after such maner as Eliphas speaketh of. For (as we haue said)

Psa. 126. 2. 1.

Ro. 4. d. 18.

Eliphassis mening was, that things are ruled in such wise here bylow, as men may perceyue that God guideth and gouerneth all things. True it is that wee may well perceyue it, howbeit not by our mother wit. Our faith must be faine too reigne in that behalfe, and wee must looke further than to the present and visible things. Then what sayth Job heere? Beholde (sayth hee) howe men condemne themselues when they sinne, and yet they be not condemned by God to the sight of the worlde: that is to say, God executeth not his vengeance vpon them at the first dash, but letteth them alone in quiet. Men therefore are compelled to accuse themselues, and as it were to make their owne indytement: they condemne themselues, and God spareth them. And what is ment by that, but that God reserueth a greater iudgement to himselfe, and that in the meane while he suffereth things too bee partly out of order, to the intent wee shoulde drawe too him aloft, and vnderstand that this is the time wherin we must be exercised with many battels & temptations, this is the time of trouble, and thore is no other thing to lift vs vp withall, but the reposing of our trust in Gods word, so as we walke not after our owne fancie, nor rest vpon the things that can bee seene as nowe: for that were the next way to make vs swarue aside from all right and reason. This is it in effect whereat Job ameth. Therefore let vs marke well how it is sayd, that such as seeke the darknesse of the night to work naughtinesse in, are sorie when they see the day appeare, and it is to them as the shadowe of death. True it is that somtimes men become so shamelesse, as they sticke not to do euill at high noone dayes, and (as it is sayd in the Prophet) they resemble harlottes which vricouer their legges, and haue neyther shame nor discretion to discerne good or euill. They are no more sorie, as sayth S. Paule: and (as Salomon speaketh) when they be once come to the bottome, (whiche is to dispize God and all honestie) they become brute beastes, and discerne no more betweene good and euill: but yet dooth God leaue them some tracks, whereby they be forced to condemne their owne sinnes spite of their teeth. If we had neither Scripture, nor lawe, nor policie, nor anie thing else: let vs but onely looke vpon that which is sayd heere, namely that when men purpose vpon any euill, they will finde some meanes to hide themselues: and we cannot but conclude that euill is euill, and that the same is to be condemned. VVhat maketh a man to shunne the sight of the worlde, when hee woulde take his pleasure in whooredome, in robberie, in drunkennesse, in wantonnesse, and in such other like things? He coulde finde in his hart to glorie in his wickednesse, and to make a vertue of it: and yet neuerthelesse he hydeth himselfe. VVhat is it that constreyneth him to do so? If it be sayd, that there is but some one man that doth so, and no man else will consent with him in his euill: beholde, the whole worlde is full of vngratiousenesse. It is to be seene that verie oft men make compacts togither, and such as be giuen to some vice, desire nothing so much as to haue other men doo as they themselues do: and yet notwithstanding as well the one as the other, hyde themselues, when they go about their naughtinesse, and they woulde fayne that their lewdnesse might neuer bee knowne. Hereby then the wicked do shewe, that there is a certaine law euen in nature, which cannot be abolished, yea and a discerning betwene good & euill. And forasmuch as we se this: we must of force conclude, that God is the iudge. For who is hee that hath printed such feeling in mennes harts, as to be ashamed & sorie for their sinnes? It comes not of their owne good will: and yet they shun the light of the Sun, whereas they ought rather to shun the light of Gods

Pro. 18. 4. 3.

Gods judgement. VVe see how men besoite themselues wilfully, and would faine rock their consciences asleepe, that they might haue no more feeling to think vpō god. But when they haue all done, they must (spite of theyr teeth) enter into themselues, and bee hild fast with this brydle, to say in their consciences, I haue sinned, and wot not how to excuse my fault. Then sith we see it, must we not conclude that God iudgeth the worlde? For that commeth of him: men should never haue any consideration of themselues to be wounded for their sinnes, and to bee sorie for them, except God constrainyd them by force. Nowe if God inforce mens consciences after that sort, and seare them with a searing yron, making them to haue as it were a burning fire within them: thinke wee that he must not one day call men before him, and take a reckening of all things, and lay open his registers, (as it is sayd in Daniell) and discouer the things that as now lie buried in darknesse, as S.Paule sayth to the Corinthians? So then, if there were no more but the shame that the wicked haue: that same alone were a sufficient and infallible proof of Gods judgement: insomuch that we must be fain to come to that which S.Iohn sayth, namely that God is greater than our own consciences. VVhen S.Iohn hath sayd that if every man enter into his owne conscience, he needeth none other witnesse nor aduersarie to accuse him, for he himselfe shall finde his owne misdeed, and be sufficiently conuincyd of it there: My frendes, (sayth he) if we perceyue our owne sinnes, yea euen whether we will or no: what shall God do? Thinke we that he is blinde, when wee our selues are so cleeresighted? Hath not he much more power, than our cosciences can haue? So then if a man condemne himselfe for one sin: he must conclude that he is damnable before God for an hundred. If he find himselfe astonished, and afayde at his euill doing: howe shall hee bee able too beare out Gods horrible vengeance, which is prepared for vs if we continue wilfully in our sinnes? Behold heere a lesson which of all other is most necessarie, and least put in vre. For(as I haue sayd alreadie) if men had but one sparke of reason in them, though there were no more but this remorse & shame that they haue of their sinnes: yet shold they be conuictyd, that they coulde not scape the hand of God. And surely as oft as we see a man wilfully giuen to dō euil, or feele our owne sinnes: it is all one as if God summoned vs to his iudgement, and constrainyd vs to think vpō it. And this is not done once a yeaer: but we haue infinit examinations euerie day, insomuch that we haue no sooner offēded in any thing, but by & by the said remorse, by and by the sayd sting pricketh vs: which is as much as if God shold send a pursiuant to vs to say, ye must appeare before the Lord, he is your judge. VVe see a number of such as haue done amisse, which labor too couer their sinnes, and are verie cunning in it. And why is that, but bycause they know that sinne is damnable? Beholde, God warneth vs, and yet who is he that regardeth it? Do not men wilfully harden their hartes agaynst Gods warnings? And may it not well be sayde, that Satan hath bewitched vs? Yes: but there is yet more. For beside such warnings, God sheweth vs by his worde what our faults are, and maketh vs too feele them, and draweth vs too himselfe. And yet for all this, wee ceasse not too welter still in our owne filth, and too growe as it were senslesse. Heereby therefore it appeareth, that this lesson is verie yll put in vre: But yet is it not written in vaine: and (as I haue sayde) it is well worthie to be marked, as in respect of itself. That is to say, forasmuch as men labor to excuse and iustifie themselues in their euill doings, and yet cannot bring it to passe: it standeth euerie one of vs in hande

to awake, and to consider that we shall gaine nothing by our colouring of things, for that can serue no further but to eschue the reproch of the worlde. If a man haue spent the night secretly in whoredome, if he haue gone a theeuing, if he haue beguiled his neighbor, or if he haue shet the doores to him to practize some treason: truely men cannot condemne him, till his lewdnesse bee knowne abroad: but can hee eschue the presence of God? Furthermore, let vs marke well howe the Apostle telleth vs, Heb. 4.c.12 that the worde of God is as a two edged sworde, and entreth through the bones and the māre, so as there is nothing hidden from it, but God examineth vs in oure thoughtes, and in our affections, when he appoynteth his worde to be preached vnto vs. Also let vs adde the lesson which S.Paule giueth vs: which is, that sith we haue the Gospell to enlighten vs, we be no more the chidren of darkenesse, but of light. Such as haue not Gods worde, thinke they haue made a fayre hande, if their sinne bee once buried, and come no more too their remembrance: But what? God doth so enlighten vs by his doctrine, that we haue daylight in the night, according as it is sayd that the Sunne shall no more shine vpon the Church by day, Esay.60.d. nor the Moone by night, but the Lorde shall bee the 19.20. continuall light of it. Truely, the order of nature continueth alwayes in his state: but yet therewithall, let vs 23.24.25. man lay himselfe in his bed, or shet himselfe in his chamber, or hide himselfe so close as no man maye knowe what he sayth or what hee doth: and yet the doctrine of the Gospell doth alwayes shine vpon him, hee cannot quenche the knowledge that God hath giuen him. And out of doubt, althoughe the scornewfull, and heathenishe sort labour to doo it: (as wee see howe there bee madde beastes in these dayes which seeke nothing but too abolishe all religion:) yet will God haue the sayde Lampe [of his woerde] to burne alwayes before them, that they may perceyue their owne damnation by it. Then seeing that God hath giuen vs the doctrine of his Gospell, the brightnesse whereof we cannot dimme: let vs bethinke our selues and vnderstande, that when theees, whoremasters, and other euill dooers seeke couert: they teach vs howe wee ought too walke; seeing that God is with vs, and wee present with him, and that hee sheweth himselfe as it were with open face, cyther as oure father or as our judge. VVherefore let vs learne to dedicate our whole lyfe vntoo him: and whereas we see that such as woulde couer their euill dooing shunne the light as the shadowe of death, and are glad when night comineth: let vs vse the light that is giuen vs, too keepe vs from straying out of our way, and from swaruing aside, specially seeing that oure Lorde caileth vs, and reacheth oute his hande to drawe vs too him. Thus yee see how wee ought too profite our selues by the grace that God giueth vs, in making vs too knowe our sinnes and wretchednesse, by meanes of his Gospell. Furthermore, let vs marke, that like as the wicked doo hate the light of the day, and coulde finde in their heart that the Sunne were plucked out of the Skie, to the ende that they might alwayes haue freedome to do euill: so do they much more shunne the light of the Gospell. And heere yee see also the cause why the same doctrine of the Gospell is so yll John.5.c.19, receyued of the worlde as our Lorde Iesus Christ sayth. It is a woorder how that men shoulde be so stubborne agaynst God, specially seeing he sendeth his owne sonne to be our redeemer, and offereth vs forgiuenesse of our sinnes, desyring vs with as great gentlenesse and frendlinesse as can bee. Howe can it bee (will manie saye) that men shoulde bee so stubborne, as too forsake the goodnessse of God? Is it not an outragious chur- If. lishnesse?

lishnesse? Yes certainly is it. But beholde, the reason why the worlde hateth the Gospell, is bycause that(as our sauiour Christ sayeth) whosoeuer dooth euill hateth the light. Nowe the cace standeth so , that most men giue themselues too all euill : yea and euen they that are conuicted of their wilfulnesse, ceasse not to harden themselves, but woulde sayne shet their eyes to spight God with all their hart. Then seeing it is so, is it any woondre that men be loth to taste of the Gospell, or to byte of it , but rather play the madde bedlems? Ought it to be thought 10 straunge? No : For wee see that Theeuers, Murtherers, VVhoremongers , and all other euill doers, coulde wel finde in their harter too haue the Sunne darkened , and that it shold no more shine in the worlde. But (as I haue sayde) the brightnesse of the Gospell is yet farre greater. For that serueth not to guide our eies onely, and to shew vs the way outwardely : but it entreteth euen intoo our secrete thoughts, and must examin that which is hidden in the verie bottome of our harter. So then, yee see why the wicked are loth to come to this doctrine, or to frame 20 themselues by any meanes vnto it. But yet must we on our side deale cleane contrarywise, as I haue sayde alreadie. And therefore as touching the order of nature, when God maketh his daysunne to shine , let vs vnderstante that it is to the ende that euerie man should give himself to goodnessse, and do his dutie. Marke that for one poynt. Againe , when wee shall haue walked according to our calling and state, euerie man seruing God and his neighbour all the daye long : let vs assure our selues that wee must not abuse the darkenesse of the night too libertie of 30 doing euill. And why? For the Lampe of Gods worde neuer goeth out, as I haue declared alreadie. Therefore, both day and night let vs be the children of light, and let vs awake and bee inlightned, as Saint Paule sayth. I say let vs not fal asleepe by soothing our selues in our sinnes, neyther let vs thinke our selues too bee innocent before God. But rather let euerie one of vs quicken vp himselfe, and not be drowned in our owne conceytes, so as wee shoulde bee past shame of dooing euill: but let vs bee sober, not onely in eating and drinking , but also in 40 all our desires and lustes; and let vs so bridle them , as we may cutte off all the superfluous concupisances that draw vs vnto euill. Thus ye see in effect what we haue to marke in this sentence. Now herevnto Job addeth for an ende , that the wicked are light footed vpon the water , and glyde awaie : and yet for all that, that they go too the graue. Lyke as the earth drieth in (sayth he ) and the beate of the Sunne sucketh vp the snowe, and all the moysture that is in it : So doth the graue swallow vp the wicked. It seemeth that Job sheweth heere, that God punisheth all the euill 50 deedes that are done in the worlde: and that therein hee agreed with Eliphas. But his meening is farre otherwise. For his intent is to shewe in effect, that the wicked perishe in suche wise , as a man cannot perceyue Goddes hande apparantly vpon them, to say , beholde , God punisheth such a man bycause he hath liued amisse. But contrariwise , that the wicked soke away like water, and leaue no remembrance of themselues behind them. They go to the graue, yea, and so do good men too. So then we see howe Job concludeth heere , that God doth not so execute his justice in punishing the sinnes of men , as it may alwayes be seene. And herewithall let vs call to mind howe it hath beeene sayd afore, that Job blasphemeth not God, to make himself beleue that there no is prouidence, that all things are ruled by fortune , and that God in the meane while sitteth asleepe in heaven. No : but his intent is too shewe , that Gods iudgements are not alwayes visible . It behoueth vs too beare well in minde

Ephe.5.b.8.

this saying, and too set it alwayes before our eyes : for it is a verie profitable doctrine, as I haue shewed heeretoo-fore : but yet hath it need too bee repeated new againe. It is that the good are greatly troden vnder foote. For after long pyning, they die before their time , and yet in their owne opinion they haue liued too long. And why? For their lyfe was nothing else but a continuall consumption. VVe see this with our eyes. But in the meane while what becommeth of the wicked that haue despized God, and beene full of outrage, crueltie, and naughtinesse? Assone as their good dayes are past, they die, yea euen as water that sokereth away. For a man shall not perceyue that God vtereth any certayne marke of his vengeance vpon them , but their death is gentle and easie. VVhen a man sees this, what can hee say ? It is a great stumbling blocke for suche as iudge after their naturall reason , too see that oure Lorde dooth not alwayes punishe the wicked , but letteth them go in their common trayne, and afterwarde when they die, there is no more scene in them, than is common and generall in all men. Yet must we not therefore surmize that they be scaped, or that they shall abyde vnpunished : but wee must haue an eye too the iudgement which wee looke for according to the promises of the holy Scripture , assuring our selues, that our Lorde calleth vs thither when hee executeth not his iustice too the full , but onely in part, too giue vs some inckling of it , which may serue too shewe vs, that things are not yet brought to theyr right order : to the ende wee shoulde hope for the comming of our Lorde Iesus Christ , and so muche the more hertely long for him as our Redeemer.

Thus then ye see what is to bee done. VVhen we see Tyrantes beare sway , innocent bloud shedde, whoredome, and other loocenesse reigne, wrongs , outrages, and violences committed , poore folke troden downe, and mennes feete set vpon their throates, and all things shuffled togither in suche a hotchpotche, as we wote not what to say : let vs confesse, saying : VWell Lorde, if all things were ordered as wee woulde wishe , wee shoulde no more hope for the coming of our Lorde Iesus Christ , nor for the Resurrection that is promised vs, nor for his heauenly kingdome : we should bee alreadie as in a Paradyse. But nowe that wee bee tossed as in a raging sea, and are in the middes of stormes and whirlewyndes : it serueth well too teache vs to long for the rest that is prepared for vs in heauen , and which thou hast promised vs, too the ende wee may haue our sight alwayes fastened vpon the comming of oure Lorde Iesus Christ , thy Sonne, who shall gather vs all too himselfe , according as thou haste committed vs too his charge , protection, and guiding . Furthermore, when wee see the wicked nowadayes hyde themselues in dooing euill : let vs assure our selues , that yet for all that, wee cannot hyde our selues from the presence of our God : and that although they shunne the Sunnelight, yet cannot we shun the sight of him that searcheth all harter. VVhat is to be done then? Forasmuch as we gaine nothing by seeking of lurkingholes, to shun the presence of our god, so as we would not by our good will come in his sight: & whereas the wicked eschue him, and mocke at all the threatnings that are made to them of his iustice : let vs seeke nothing more tha to come before our god. And seing he is so gracious to vs, as to make vs our own iudges: let vs not tarie to be cōdēné at his hand: but to the end we may be quit, let vs yeld our selues guiltie of our own accord. Ye see the that the way to put this sentēce in vre, isto lerne to cōdēné our selues whē we come to shew our selues before God, and to come to him vpō trust of his promise, which is to receyue receyue al such to mercie as are fory for their sinnes, and seeke nothing else but the grace that is offered vs dayly, in the persone of our Lorde Iesus Christ.

Nowe let vs fall downe before the face of our good God, with acknowledgement of our sinnes, praying him to touche vs to the quicke with such repentance, as wee may perceyue the euill that is in vs, too seeke the remedie thereof by sticking too his rightuousnesse and too conuert vs in such wise to himselfe, that in steade of feedyng oure selues in oure owne vices and lewde lustes, 10 wee may seeke too frame our selues wholly too his holy lawe and commaundements: that we knowing what neede wee haue too bee healed of our spirituall diseases, may seeke the medicine where it is to bee founde, that is to witte, in our Lorde Iesus Christ: that beeing renued by his holy spirite, wee maye holde on our way right foorth too the place that hee calleth vs vntoo, euen till hee haue fully clothed vs with his owne rightuousnesse, after wee haue continued in the waye of saluation, which hee sheweth vs nowe by his worde. That it may please him to graunt this grace, not onely to vs, but also to all people.&c.

The.xcij.Sermon, which is the third vpon the. xxiiij.Chapter.

19. As the earth dryeth vp, and as the heate drinketh vp the snowe vватers: so the sinner too the graue.
20. The louing man shall forget him, the vvoormes shall take syweetnesse of him: hee shall no more bee remembred, the vvicked shall be broken as a tree.
21. He misintreateth the barren vvoman that beareth no children, and dooth no good too the vvidovv.
22. Hee dravveth the strong vnto him, so as he distrusteth his ovvne life.
23. Men giue him all for assurance and rest, and his eyes vwatch the vvayes of them.
24. V When they be exalted for a little, they are caught avvay (or die)they be made poore, they be barred vp like tovers, they bee cut off as the top of eares of corne.
25. VVho is hee that vvill make mee a lyer if hee bee not so, and vwho is hee that vvill disproue my vvordes?

Hat we may fare the better by thys doctrine, wee must call too minde how it hath beene declared heretofore, that the cause why these things are repeated vnto vs, is that we should not be greeued & troubled to much when wee see things diuersly disordred in the world. For if wee would haue a perfect state here, where were our hope? Therefore it behoueth vs to beare patiently the disorders whereby it 40 pleaseth God to exercize vs, and to liumble vs: and therewithall seeke the true remedie, sith things are so troubled among men, and that such as ought to put to their hande to the amendment of them, forflow their duetie. Then let vs learne to resort vnto God, and to trust in him: and let vs not doubt, but that in the end he will pitie vs, although we bee sayne too suffer many wrongs and reproches for a time. And like as Job had shewed heretofore the outrages and extortions that were done: so also did hee say that God was not seene to punishe those that had so tormented the poore. And hee addeth a similitude that may bee understande two wayes, by reason that the sentence is verie short and broken off. The similitude is this: The earth sucketh in, and the heate drinketh vp the waters of snowe, to the graue besinneth: for so it standeth worde for worde. And men take it as though it were sayde, that the graue swalloweth vp all wicked men, as the drie earth drinketh vp the snowe water, and as the snowe melteth away at the heat of the Sunne. Heereby Job ment not to say, that God punisheth men apparantly according to 50 their deserts: but that they die as other men, & that there is no suche execution done vpon their persons, whereby men may perceyue Gods iustice, but rather that they go the common tracie, and God permitteth them to die of their naturall death. Therfore when we see not God punish the wicked, and those that haue done so many mischeifes and cruelties: he seemeth to be as it were asleepe in heauen, and the weake and ignorant are offended at it, as though he had no regard of the world, or as though he were not dispozed to gouerne vs, nor too maintaine the good, and to supprese thos that are so vnruley. But(as I haue shewed alredy)Jobs intent is to shew vs, that in such caces it behoueth vs to reverence Gods secrete iudgements, assuring our selues that although we coeeue not the reason of his workes, yet we must not therefore blasphemie him, nor be swallowed vp with sorow, but quietly wayte till God shew himselfe in conuenient time. It is not for vs to set him a day, it behoueth vs to tarie his leyture, assuring our selues that he executeth not his iudgements [in all poyntes] in this life, to the intent that wee shoulde learne to reach out our fayth and hope further than this worlde. But the sens[e] will agree verie well also, when this similitude is applied to another ende, as thus. Like as the earth sucketh in, and the heate drinketh vp the snowe water: so the wicked mens sine euuen to their graue. As if Job had sayde. They be so nuzzled in dooing euill, that their whole nature is gyuen too it, according also as it is commonly sayde, that when men are throughly nuzzled eyther in good or evill, the custome that they haue taken vp, maketh it to become as it were naturall vnto them. For it beareth such a sway with them, as they follow it without any paine. Job then ment to declare heere, that such as he speaketh of, sinne not at a start, or by fittes: as it is to bee seene that some man overshooteth himselfe by reason of some sodein occasion that prouoketh him, and although he haue liued honestly before tymes and without blame, yet ishee caryed at that time as it were with a tempest. Thus wee see then that some men commit some euill or outrage, but they continue not in it. Job declareth that he speakes not here of such as haue done amisse at a sodaine pang or brayd, as overcome by some forcible temptation; but of such as are hardned in their naughtinesse, and haue made it as it were a peice of their nature. Therefore like as the nature of the Sunne is to melt snow and afterward the drie earth sucketh it in: euuen so the wicked continue their euill dooing euuen too the graue, that is to say, Ff.ij. vnto vnto their death. Sith we see such examples, yea and are warned by this sentence, to thinke vpon the thing that is tooo ordinarie in the worlde: let vs learne to resort vnto God, and praye him too giue vs the grace too bowe vnder his hand, and too bee so giuen to serue and honour him, as the same may bee as it were naturall too vs. True it is, that the good shall always haue some stryuing in themselues, for they neuer walke so vprightly, but there is some incomberance and gainstryuing,

Gal. 5.c. 17. according as there is a continuall battayle betweene the minde and the fleshe. Neuerthelesse, the vertue that God hath put into vs must so farrefoorth preuyale, as too make vs loue the good with a free hart, and to cleave throughly therenvto. Then must wee pray vnto God too strengthen vs therein: and on the other side wee muste beseeche him also, not too suffer the Deuill too get suche possession in vs, as too trayne vs hither and thither, and too harden vs so sore in euill dooing, as it might become as it were oure nature. Furthermore, when we see men so stubburne in wickednesse, let vs not thinke it straunge: for it hath euer beeene so, as wee see here by example. Nowe in the ende Job sayth, that the quiet man will forget suche folke, that the wormes shall take sweetenesse of them, and that they shall no more bee remembred. Heereby he sheweth well, that the wicked shall not reigne for euer, but must haue an ende. Neuerthelesse, God letteth them alone in peace vntill their death, and their state seemeth to be no worse than other mens, that haue liued in all equitie and vprightnesse, without doing wrong to any of their neighbours. Then if a man compare these pollers and theeuers that haue eaten vp other mens goodes, and delt merueylous cruelly, I say if a man compare them with such as haue liued in simplicitie: he shall finde their states alike, and that things are so shuffled togither, as it cannot be sayde, but that they are out of order in this worlde: yea truely if wee looke no further, that is to witte, if wee consider not that God reserueth the punishing of the wicked till the life too come, to the intent wee should not nestle heere bylowe, but alwayes haue an eye too the comming of our Lorde Iesus Christ, who must redresse all things that are nowe out of order. And nowe when we beholde the shortnesse of our life, and see such as were giuen to the spoyle of poore folk, go to their graue, and become wormes meat, as it is sayde heere: let vs vnderstande, that we be verie miserable, if wee labour not for the immortalitie that is promised vs. And heere Job setteth vs downe as it were a lively picture and Image of mans life and death, to the ende wee might knowe what we bee, if we haue no better hope than can be seene with the eye. To what purpose then is it too haue liued holily, and to haue endeuered to serue God, and to please him, and to haue lyued among our neighbours without deceyuing or hurting of any man? For yet notwithstanding, we must bee gathered intoo the graue with the wicked, all must bee shuffled togither there, and there must we rot. Lo what men are, when they bee considered but in their owne kinde. But what a wretchednesse were it, if we had not a better hope? So then considering the alterations that are in the world, let vs be warned and prouoked to lift vp our heades, and to looke for the heauenly life that is promised vs. And although we be as wretched carions, subiect to rottennesse: yet let vs liue in hope that our Lorde will send vs the partie by whom hee hath once redeemed vs, who wil not suffer the deare and inestimable price that he hath giuen for our saluation, to perish or to be disappoyneted. Lo wherin we ought to reioyce, and also wherin our glorie consisteth. Job proceedeth to declare how the wieked are fully bent and giuen ouer vnto euill, without any awe or feare of God, yea and without any shame too the worldward. He setteth down but one kinde only: namely, that they beguile and oppresse the barreine women that haue borne no children, and do no good to the widowes. But doubtlesse vnder this one kinde, Job ment to comprehend all poore folke, that are not able to reuenge themselues, nor haue any maintenance or ayde at mans hand. His saying then is, that the wicked fall in hande with such kinde of folke, because they seeme to be a fit pray readie prepared for them. And he speaketh expresly of barrein women. For if a woman haue children, although she be a widow, yet if hit children do their dutie, she hath some succour, and she hath (as they say) a staffe for hit olde age to leane vnto. But if a woman be husbandlesse, and childlesse to, then is she vitterly succourlesse. These therefore are the prayes that wicked men hunt after, because they thinke there is no bodie to withstande them, and that they may do what they list, without regarde of God, who nameth himselfe the defender of the widowes. In likewise deale they with fatherlesse children and straungers, as hath bin sayd heretofore. But as now Job contenteth himself with the giving of one example, as if hee shoulde say, that such men as are not withheld by the feare of God, think themselues to haue libertie to do euill, when they see there is no man that can let them. Therefore when they haue raked other mens goods to them, and none hath withstood them: then bestirre they themselues so much the more, and take leauue to do what they list. VVhy so? For they haue no regard of God. And secondly he addeth, that they draw the strong after them. That is to say, when they haue long time exercised the sayde trade of eating vp, and of misintreating the poore, and such as haue no meanes to defend themselues: they gather a greater boldnesse, & afterward set vpon the rich also, whereby they make themselues so feared and doubted of all men, that men are faine to raunsome themselues out of their handes, as if they were among Outlawes, insomuch that euery man is afraid of his life, yea and is faine to compound with them, and yet speed never the better whē they haue done. And why? For after they are once become traytors & vnfaythfull, they become also like wilde beastes. After they haue devoured and sicced the poore, so as men may see there is no more humanitie in them: yet must men be faine to giue the some ransome, and be never the more in suretie when they haue done. For they lie in wayt for the life of such as haue giuen them, and they thinke that when a man hath presented them with any bribe, they ought too receyue it euer after as a rent. Now then we see in effect howe Iobs meening is, that after the wicked haue misintreated the poore that cannot helpe themselues, nor haue any rescue at mans hande: therevpon they become more hardie, and play the wood beastes, so as they spare no man, but set vpon the riche and strong, and vpon such as are in credite and authoritie, whereby their extortione groweth so extreeme, as there is nothing with the but robbing with beastly outrage, so as (to be short) there is neither manhood nor shame left in them. And this is tolde vs to the ende that we should not be troubled when we see such examples, (as hath bene sayde afore:) but rather that being foreshenced against such stumblingblocks, wee might vnderstande that our Lorde suffereth things to be so intangled, too the ende we shoulde go on to the inheritance wherevnto he calleth vs, and not nestle oure selues heere, as thoughte wee had a sure resting place heere, but rather learne too bee as Pilgrymes and wayfarers in this worlde, that forasmuche as there is no settling for vs in this lyfe, (according as Saint Paule sayth sayth that the state of the Christians is too bee remoued too and fro) wee may haue skill to profite our selues by these things. For except God doo as it were plucke vs out of this worlde by maine force : we will neuer giue our selues too seeke the heauenly lyfe. And this is the cause why hee suffereth so many alterations and remotuings of things too and fro, so as all things go too confuzion, and there is so great disorder, as wee bee amazed at it, and the heares of our heade stande vpright. All this must serue too drawe vs out of the worlde, too the intent we bee not too much wedded too it. Thus then ye see wherevnto wee ought too applie all these things.

Againe, whereas they that haue no defence, indure many wrongs : let them bee sure that God leaueth them destitute of worldely helpe, too the ende they shoulde ooke the more vntoo him. For wee must not impute it to misfortune, when no man succoreth vs at our need.
Then let vs assure our selues, that God hath bereft vs of all mans helpe, to the intent we shoulde be humbled in our selues, looke vp vntoo him, seeke him, and flee one-ly vntoo him for refuge. Lo howe wee haue to practise this doctrine. And furthermore let vs understand therwithall, that our Lorde mindeth to exercise our charitie, when the wicked sort worke any wrong or outrage too such as haue no succour among men. I say it is too the ende, that euery of vs should endeuor himselfe, to helpe such folke according too his abilitie. For beholde, the thing wherein God tryeth whether we feare him or no, is by trying whether we haue any charitie in vs. If wee see any of our owne freendes or kinsfolke, in necessitie and trouble, verie nature moueth vs to helpe them. But when we see a poore man abused, that hath no man too beare him vp : if wee indeuer not too ayde and succour him in his neede, the same shall vndoubtedly be inrolled before God : for it is a token that wee had not one drop of Christianitie in vs. And why? For (as I haue declared alreadie) our Lorde recommendeth vnto vs such as are destitute of mans helpe, and suffereth them to be afflicted openly before oure eyes, too the intent that wee shoulde streyne our selues to succour them. And if wee doo it not, wo bee to vs, because there will be no excuse for vs. For when any are so oppressed, wee must think that the same commeth not by mischance : but rather that God sendeth them too vs. Therefore whensoever God maketh vs witnessesse of any wrong that is done too a poore man, if we steppe not before him, and helpe to sheelde him as much as in vs lieth : surely God noteth and marketh our dooing. For hee watcheth in that behalfe, bycause (as I haue sayde) hee myndeth too take a tryall of our louingnesse. But nowe let vs come too the seconde poynt that is declared here by Job. It is sayde, that the wicked (of whom hee speaketh) drawe the strong ones after them, as a rage of water rooteth vp trees, and beareth downe houses. So then, such as haue of long time beene hardened in euill doing, are like great stormes and tempestes that rende vp all things, yea euен the trees and houses. This appeareth to the eye : and would God wee had not so muche experience of it. For such as are sharpe set, and woulde faine be catching, dare not at the first dashe set vpon the stronger sort, and vpon such as haue talons, and pawes too reuenge themselues with-all : but they beginne with the little ones. But giue them once scope to doo euill : and then haue at the strongest.
Howebeit, this happeneth not without the woond-full ordinance of God. For it is a iust wages to the rich men, and to such as are in authoritie and credite, to bee so vexed by the wicked. VVherfore? For if a man rush-out into lewdnesse, so as he striketh one, strippeth another, and commit any other outrage: well, they that are at ease, and haue wherewith too maintaine themselues, do but laugh at it. True it is that they mislike such men: but for all their misliking of them, doo they seeke anie meanes to redresse it? No. And why? Because the matter seemeth not to touch themselues. O (say they) if he playde so with me, I woulde make him feele that I haue teeth. Lo howe they talke which haue credite and welth, and are so well fenced as they cannot be touched themselues. But in the meane while the poore are extremely misused. VVhen these Roysters that are suffered to do what they list, see they scape vnpunished : they fall to buckling with the greater Cobbes. And who giueth them leue? Suppose we that God doth not order euerywhit of it? For if there were any manhood in vs, woulde it not pitie and rue our hartes to see poore folke so troden vnder foote, and make vs resist it too the vtermoste of our power? But wee do nothing at all. VVhen a poore man is outrageously molested, we make none account of repressing the mischeef, but rather let it looce, giuing the wicked more occasion of such misbehaviour. Must not God therefore touch vs within a while after, and both suffer and appoyn特 the mischeefe to returne vpon oure owne heades? Lo heere a sentence that is well woorthie to bee noted. For therein as in a myrrour the holy Ghost sheweth vs, that wickednesse increaseth more and more, and groweth to full heigh, when men giue it scope, and indeuer not to redresse it in conuenient time.

And this lesson is directed specially to riche men, and to such as are in authoritie. True it is that we see no suche examples heere, as are to bee seene in Courtes of great Princes. For there, if there be three or foure Minions in great credite, they will make the whole realme to quake, insomuch that euen they which haue twentie or thirtie thousande poundes rent, multe bee faine too passe theyr pawes, and couche before them like Lyamhounds, and giue them a good peece of their substance too purchase their fauour, and to raunsome themselues withall. VVe see no such examples here. Howbeit, quantitie for quantitie, a man may throughout all places see that whiche is declared heere. And good reason it is that Gods prouidenace should extende through all the world, both vpon great and small. So then it is apparant, that suche as haue libertie to pill and poll, and to doo many other an-noyances too the little ones, must also in the ende make the great ones afryde. And as touching those that haue the meane and abilitie too ayde and maintayne poore men: God meeneth to doo them too vnderstand, that if they set not themselues agaynst those that doo them wrong & iniurie, they theselues also must loke to be pinched, that is to say, they themselues shall at length an-swere it in their owne persons, and other men shall fleece them, and picke oute their eyes as they are woorthie, and so shall God be glorified in sending such punishment vpon them. True it is, that the disorder increaseth dayly more and more. Netherthelesse the faythfull may therein beholde Gods secrete iudgements, yea euен beyonde the reach of mans reason, because God inlightneth them by his worde. And here ye see how we ought to acknowledge, that we our selues are the cause of all the disorder in the worlde. VVe can skill to complaine when things go not after our appetite: wee can crie out alas, and wo is me, yea and wee will bee readie too blame God himselfe, but in the meane while wee consider not, that the fault proceedeth of our selues, and that we our selues ought to beare the blame of such euill.. For if every man would put to his hand to the suppressing of vices & mis-dealings, and every man labour to stop the doing of any euill:

euill: Surely God woulde blesse such meenings, and we shou'd haue delightfull order among vs, and cause to rejoyce. But what? In steade of seeking to remedie things amisse, all men bring wood too the kindling of the fyre, or rather become fyrebrondes themselues. Beholde the maner of our dealing. So then ought wee too thinke it straunge, if things bee so intermedled, as there is neyther brinke nor brimme, but all is shuffled toghether lyke a hotchpotch? For(as I haue sayde)when the fire is once kindled, wee never leaue throwing of woodde intoo it. 10 VVherefore let the riche, and suche as are in authoritie haue regarde of the poore, and when they see any outrages and wrong done, or the poore oppresed: let them reach them their hande, and indeuer too succour them. Now if this pertaine to riche men, and to such as are able to helpe the poore: howe much more perteyneth it too those that haue the sworde of iustice in their hand? If these be negligent, they be well worthie that all the euill which they winked at, shoulde light vpon their owne heades, and that God shoulde set them as vpon a scaf-folde for men to beholde his iust vengeance in their persons. And therefore so muche the more ought they too marke what is sayde heere. And thus ye see to what end we ought to referre the doctrine that is conteyned in this verse. Therewithall we ought to marke well the wordes that Job vseth. For it is not without cause that he sayeth, that men shall be faine to buie out, and to raunsome out themselues from the handes of the wicked when they haue their scope: and that when they shall haue giuen them such boldnesse alreadie, as to eate vp some, and too 20 30 pill and poll othersome: their crouching to them, & their greazing of them in the hands, shall boote them nothing at all. For they be mad dogges, whom nothing can content. Therefore all that euer a man doth to them is but a sharpening of their appetite, and such bribes do but harthen them, and harden them the more. For they take it as a due rent, and when a man hath giuen them one present, they would haue him hold on still, and never leaue, such is their vnsaciableness. It followeth, that the poore folke distrust their owne life. Yea and I say, that euen those that were rich & in credit before, must be faine to tremble. As how? I see (shall they say) that these wicked men haue the worlde at will, and it will not bee long ere they will seeth me such a broath, as I wote not how I shall be able to shift it from me: and therefore I must be faine to fawne vpon them afore hande, and they must gaine somewhat by me, or at leastwise I must not prouoke them too displeasure. See how they that were erewhile out of daunger, are faine to quake, and distrust their owne life for giuing bridle to the wicked, so as they wot not where they be, till they haue pacified the wicked, and yet they finde no meanes how to do it. Therefore they must be fayne to liue in continuall perplexite and anguish. Herein we haue a fayre looking glaife, to shew vs what it is, not too remedie euill doings in due time and place, and to suffer shrewde weedes to growe so long till they get the vpper hande. For a man cannot pluck them vp when he would, because he tooke them not in due season. VVe see what an inconuenience insueth: yea and euen God maketh the hartes of those to faint, that might easily haue remedied the mischeef at the first, insomuch that they fare as if their armes were broken, and they haue neither corage nor stoutnesse in them, but becom as weak as water. And why? As I said, it is a iust punishment for the negligence that they vsed in forslowing their duetic too represse the mischeef at the first rising. For when men see poore folk harried and misused by crueltie and outrage, and yet redresse it not: the mischeef must needs growe so strong, that such as now faine woulde, and heretofore also could haue disfeated it, cannot afterwarde preuaile, because our Lorde graunteth them not that honour nor that grace. Now then let vs bethinke vs, I say, let vs bethinke vs well of it. And further, let vs consider what a wretchednesse it is, when men rest not themselues vpon God, nor haue regarde to discharge their cares vnto him, whereby they might leane vnto his protection. And why? For the thing that Job describeth to vs here, (namely that men pur not their trust in God) is an ordinarie matter in the worlde. If we see the wicked haue their full scope, what do we? O, we must devise how to creepe into fauor with them: and in the meane while we consider not that it is a feeding of the euill: that is to wit, that we make them much bolder than they woulde be. It is all one as if there were a mad man, that desyred nothing but to kill men, & one should put a sworde in his hand, and another bring him store of stones, and some other give him wherewith too poyson folkes beside. As much do they that fawne vpon wicked men, when they see them in credite. One commes and presents them with a bribe to set iustice to sale: and another commes to wind himself into their acquaintance by some fine device: and all this is but an inflaming of them more and more, and a sharpning of their rage to make it the eagerer. For whereas some misdoubt hild them back before: now they conclude that all which they list is lawfull, and that they neede no more to be afrayd, because all the worlde standes in awe of them. O (say they)suche a man is come to my lure at length, and the residue shall be faine to come vnder mine arme to: I will make them play me an apish tricke. See howe the wicked becom the bolder: when men come to fawne vpon them after that fashon: and yet to the worldewarde men deale alwayes after that sort. For when we haue not a respect vntoo God, wee must needes bee euermore in feare and perplexite, and say, I had neede too beware of such a man, for I see I muste bee fayne too passe through his handes, and howe shall I doo then? If I come to him with reason and plaine proofes, it is in vaine, for he hath his eares to full of them alreadie. Therefore I muste go another way to worke, which is, to fill his wooliush throte with some present, I must carie him somewhat. Or else if I see him full of vaineglorie, and desirous to be aduaunced howsoeuer it be, so as hee standeth vpon his reputation, and gazeth at his owne Peacockes feathers: I winne the gole, if I can skill too couche lowe like a Spaniell: I see none other remedie, I muste go that way too woorke. See (I say) the ordinarie manner. But what is too bee done on the contrarie part? VVhen wee see the wicked so full of courtesiesse and vaineglorie, and so like wilde beastes in destroying all things, let vs saye vntoo God, yet doost thou Lorde holde the reynes of mennes brydle, thou canst restreyne them. For if God woorkes not so soone as wee woulde haue him: let vs understande, that it is his minde too buffet vs for a time. But yet let vs assurde oure selues, that hee watcheth for oure welfare, and will not suffer vs to be vterly cast vp to the pleasure of such as ouershoothe themselues after that sort. For oure Lorde hath vs in hyshande, hee is neare at 40 50 60 hande with vs, and althoughe wee perceyue it not immediately, yet dooth hee garde vs, mainteyne vs, and is our warrant. So then we may boldely despysye the wicked and all their stoutnesse, for somuch that wee knowe that God watcheth for oure welfare, and will preserue vs from their handes, pawes, and throtes. Lo whervnto it behoueth vs to come, when in respect of men we knowe none other shift but to yeld our selues to the euil, and to consent vnto it. It behoueth vs to behold the protection of God,

God, which as nowe is hidden from vs, in respect of our percyuing, howbeit that we haue so good and certaine recorde of it in the holy scripture, as we ought not too doubt of it. Howsouer the worlde go, let vs keepe our selues from purchasing so by vnlawfull meanes. For in so doing we bewray our owne distrust and vnbeleefe. And besides that, we bee guiltie also of the euill, so farreforth as is in vs, because wee feede it. Therefore when a man falleth too flattering of the wicked, and helpeth too set them in a further lustinesse, and redeemeth himselfe out of their handes by rausoyme : what dooth he ? First (as I sayde) hee bewrayeth that he hath no trust in God. For if we could rest vpon Gods promises, surely we would neuer seeke crooked wayes, but wee woulde alwayes bethinke vs, whether God permitted that thing or no. Hath hee forbidden mee it, woulde wee say? Then must I not wade any further in it. And so it is certaine that all suchie as labour to winne wicked mens fauour, by briberie and such lyke dealings: are verie infidelles, and bewray themselves well ynough to be so, and muste in the ende bee payde home for not honouring God as they ought to doo, and for allying themselues with the wicked, by nourishing them in their naughtiness. For it is all one as if they had conspired with them too breake and ouerthrowe all order: and surely they haue done as muche as lay in them, to doo it. Therefore (as I haue sayde alreadie) let vs learne to looke vnto God, and too trust in hym: and then shall we no more bee subiect too the wretchednesse whereof Job maketh mention heere, which is, not to knowe what our life is. For such as defende the wicked after that fashion, and rest not vpon Gods prouidence, must alwayes tremble and neuer bee sure of any safetie or rest. Yea and it behoueth vs too marke well howe Job addeth, that when we be desirous to purchace wicked mens fauour by presentes, or any other vnconuenient meane, they lie so much the more in wayte for vs. Is it not seene that they bee faythlesse folke? And sith there is no feare of God in them, I pray you howe can they bee faythfull vnto men? Naye rather howe is it possible that God shoulde not suffer them too vse treason and all mischeuousnesse, seeing there is no man but hee is warned of them before hande? Then if a man cast himselfe so intoo their nettes wilfully, there is no excuse for him. All this is apparant to the eye: men see that the wicked make their conspiracies togither, and yet notwithstanding, that none of them trusteth other. And howe is that possible? For if two wicked men enter intoo league: a man woulde thinke they bee ioyned togither like two fingers of one hande, so that looke what the one willetteth, the same willetteth the other. But for all that, is that a prooife that eche of them trusteth other? No: It is certaine that eyther of them could find in his heart that the other were hanged, so as he himselfe had no harme by it. At leastwise hee could finde in his heart, that hee were a hundred foote within the grounde: and in the ende all those that fauoured them become their enimies. VVe see hereby that God gouerneth even in the middes of all disorder. Then if we be abashed at the confuzion and mangling of things: let vs lift vp our eyes aloft, and we shall see that God go-uerneh all things. For surely hee suffereth not the wicked to trust one another, but inforceth them to stande alwayes in feare. Yea and even they that vphilide them in thair naughtiness by soothing of them, and were full of hypocrisie, to the intent too fawne vpon them and please them: I say even they also shall alwayes quake for feare. Contrariwise, if we can put our trust in God: surely althoughe wee suffer many extortions at wicked mennes handes, and our Lorde permit them to vexe and trouble vs: yet shall wee bee put too no more than is expedient for vs to indure, and oure God will haue consideration too bring all things to a happie and profitable ende. This (say I) is the remedie wherenvnto wee must bee prouoked too resorte, when wee see things oute of order in the worlde. Nowe when Job hath spoken so, hee addeth, that they bee lifted vp for a little while, and afterward fall downe, they bee cut off as the toppe of an easse of corne, and they be shet vp with others. He sheweth breefly that which hee had sayde alreadie: whiche is, that if wee looke no further than too the present life, wee shall see an orderlesse masse, so as wee shall not discerne one thing from another. For the wicked haue a large scope for a time: yee shall see them vpon the toppe of the wheele (as they say) and by and by they come tumbling down. But good men may also bee well aduaanced, and yet in the ende fayle of theyr footing. VVhat for that? wee see that by experience, according as Job concludeth, saying: If it bee not so, who will make mee a lyer? Then considering suchie experience, let vs learne too retyre vntoo God. For if wee looke but vpon the present things, doubtlesse wee shall not onely bee as a wauering Reede, but as a strawe, and as emptie chaffe that is cast and tossed to and fro with the windes, so as there shall bee no stedfastnesse in vs. Therefore wee must haue the discretion too looke vpon the things that are disordered in this worlde, howebeit in such wise, as Gods prouidence bee alwayes printed in our mindes. True it is that wee cannot reach vntoo it by our owne witte: but yet must wee looke towarde it with the eye of fayth, so as Gods worde may be as a looking glasse, and the holy scripture serue as a light to looke further than the worlde. And although Gods iudgements bee hidden from vs as now: let vs not therefore ceasse to say, that the Lorde is righteous, and to humble our selues vnder him, and alwayes to haue such an eie to his promises, as we fayle not to call vpon him in the middes of our distresse, assuring our selues that hee will succour vs, and make vs feele his goodnessse, so as we may reioyce in the middes of al the temptations of this worlde.

Nowe let vs fall downe before the face of our good God, with acknowledgement of our sinnes, praying him to blot out the remembrance of them, and too bring vs backe to himselfe in such wise, as wee may no more bee tangled in these earthly things, but cleave wholly too his righteousnesse, that while wee liue in this worlde, wee may but passe forward as straungers, till we become too his rest, which shall continue with vs after wee haue passed through the troubles and temptations of thys mortall life. And so let vs all say, Almighty God heauenly father, &c.

The.xciij.Sermon,which is the first vpon the.xxv.Chapter.

Then Bildad the Suite ansyvered and sayde:

2. Soueraintie and terrorre is vwith him that maketh peace in his high places.
3. Isthere any number of his armies? and vpon vyhorne dooth not his light shine?

Ff. iiiij.

4: VVhat

4. VVhat righteousnesse shall be attributed vnto man, if he be compared vwith God? to him that is nothing? and how may he be cleane that is borne of a woman?
5. Beholde he vwill not giuelight vnto the Moone: the Starres are not cleane in his sight.
6. And howe much lesse man of vynde, vwho is but rottenesse, [or] the sonne of man vwhich is but a yvorne?

Orasmuch as we bee so greatly giuen too stande in our owne conseyte, the grounde of which follie is, that wee thinke not vpon God, nor what his Maiestie is: we haue heere a verie good and profitable counsell, that as oft as wee bee tempted too take any glorie too our selues, wee muste cast our eie vpon God, and consider throughly who hee is, what his power and might are, what his righteousnesse is, and what all his glorie is: and then will all our brauerie bee soone layde a water. For in steede of beeing puffed vp with pride, and sotted with ouerweening, the onely regarde of God is ynoch too quayle vs in such sort, as wee shall bee ashamed in our selues. Yee see then for what cause the holy Ghost dooth nowe in the persone of Bildad giue vs this warning, that God ought of right too haue the cheefe soueraintie, and wee too bee afrayd when we do but thinke vpon him, considering the order that hee hath set in heauen, and in all the worlde: and that wee ought to knowe our selues too bee so farre off from hauing any thing that may bee of value before him, as that the Staires whiche shine bright vntoo vs, are darke vntoo him. Seeing the case standeth so, what remayneth for men too doo? For notwithstanding all their brauerie, they bee but woormes and rottennesse. And if they woulde glorifie themselues aboue the Starres, what were it? VVere not their follie ouer great? So then wee see that the end wherevntoo the things tende that are conteyned heere, is that for somuche as men cannot humble themselues so long as they looke downewarde: heere God is set before their eyes with his Maiestie, too the ende they shoulde knowe there is no cause for them too set any store by themselues. For whosoeuer exalteth himselfe before

God, must needs bee brought lowe. And Bildad too make vs perceyue howe greatly wee ought too feare and reverence God, alledgede heere, that bee maketh peace in his high places, that is too say, disposeth the order of heauen in suche wise, as men see there is a feasable, and well ruled gouernment. This may bee referred too the Angelles, according as wee say in our prayer, Thy will bee done in earth as it is in heauen. VVhich doth vs too witte, that God is yll obeyed here beneath, by reason of the rebelliousnesse which is in men, because we be fully fraughted with many wicked lustes, which cannot submit themselues to his righteousnesse. And so we desire, that as the Angelles are wholy conformable to Gods will and seeke nothing but to please him in all respects: so it may please him to reforme vs, and to make his raigne and dominion feasable heere beneath, by correcting the vnrule affections that are in vs. Therefore a man might referre this sentence to the said parcell of the prayer that is spoken of the Angels. Howbeit there is no doubt, but Bildad looked further: that is to wit, to all the whole gouernance that we perceyue in the order of heauen. So then although the Sunne be as it were an infinite bodie to our sight, and moue so swiftly as it might seime that he should confound all things: yet could not any man rule a clocke in like compasse, that is to say, he could not make it to kepe his course so iust. No it is not possibele. VVe see the like in the Moone, and in all the Starres. For although the number of them be infinit: yet is there no disorder, but all things are as well disposed as can be. VVheresore not without cause doth Bildad alledge here, that God maketh peace in his high places: And it is not onely in his heauenly creatures, that we see his raigning: but also he disposeth the whole order of the worlde in such wise from aboue, that although things be disordered and moueable here, and that there be many chaunges and troubles: yet notwithstanding God fayleth not too lead them all too such ende as he hath ordeined and appoynted in hi: self. True it is that if we looke downward, we cannot see this government so feasable as it is set forth here. But if we loke vp to Gods prouidence, it is certain, that euuen in the middes of al the turmoyles and alterations of the world, we shal perceyue that god gouerneth al as seemeth good to himselfe. Now we see what is imported in this saying, that God maketh peace in his high places: that is to say, hee brideleth his creatures in such wise, that for al the chaungings which men see yet fayleth he not too gouerne still, and all things fall out as he will haue them, according as he guideth them by his ordinance. Seeing the case standeth so, let vs conclude, that it is good reason that all power, soueraintie, and feare, should be yelded vnto him: that is to say, that we shoulde honour, feare, and worship him, as the partie that hath dominion ouer vs, and with al reverence acknowledge him to be the mayster and souerain Lord of heauen and earth. At the first blush this talk might seeme superfluous. But when we haue well considered what hath bene touched before: we shall wel see it is not without cause that Bildad reporteth heere the gouernment & dominion that god hath ouer all the world. For that saying runneth roundly out of our mouth, and we can talke of God welynough. But in the mean while we conceyue not his Maiestie, we make as it were an ydoll of that. True it is that we will not be ackowne of it, no, we would euuen abhorre to do it: but yet do we not yelde God the power that is due to him, and which we ought to conceiue in him. For we talke of his maiestie, and his name runs roundly in our mouth, as in way of contempt, and oftentimes wee talke of him in way of scorne, and mockage. It is to be seene that men are out of measure heathenish, and that wheras al knees ought to bow, and al creatures to tremble when mention is made of the name of God: we be so bolde as to yeld no reverence nor lowlinesse at all. To be short, men acknowledge not the Maiestie of God, neither conceiue they his power to humble and submit themselues vnto him, as they ought too doo. Therfore whē there is any speaking of God, he had need to be qualified vnto vs: that is to say, to be vitered in such wise as we may conceyue him. And that is the cause why the holy Scripture doth so oftentimes adde tylies to him, and is not contented with his single name, but termeth him the Almighty, the Alwise, the Almighty, the only immortall in himselfe, the maker of all things, and the governor of all tbings. To what purpose is this sayde, but too waken men, which are ouersluggish, and honour not God as he is worthie? To be short, looke how often the scripture giueth God any names of honor, it is an vpbraiding of vs with our vnhankfulnesse and dulnesse, in that wee yelde him not his due, but as much as we can) do rob him of

Ro.14.6.11
Pbil.2.b.10*

of his power and glory, or at leastwise take him not to be as he is, to honor him, & to huble ourselues before him; and to exalt and magnify him as he deserueth. And therfore when it is said that God maketh peace in his high places, and gouerneth the world in suche wise, as men see that all things must stoupe vnto him, and that notwithstanding the rebelliousnesse and stubbornnesse which is in men, yet he ceaseth not to perfourme the execution of his ordinance: i.e. vs learne not to sit any longer asleepe, nor to dallie with God as we haue bin wont to do: but to tremble before his maiestie. And aboue al things let vs remember the conclusion that is made heere, namely that hee hath the soueraine dominion and awe ouer vs: that is to say, that wee must not only bee subiect to him, but also tremble with all feare, and so stande in awe of him, as wee bee not so foolehardie (or rather mad) as to strike against him, or to dispute against his doings, or to murmur as though there were any fault to be found in his works. Thus then ye see how all mens mouthes are stopped heere, to the end that being bereft of their foolish presumption, they may learne to tremble at the presence of God, and to know how it is he to whome they must yeld all obedience. And that is the cause why Bildad addeth, Is there any number of his armies? and vpon whom doth not his light shine? When it is saide that his armies are without number: it is to shew that men are worse than mad when they match themselues after that sorte against God and bid him battell. True it is, that they will not do it exprefly. But yet is it impossible to murmur against God, and to repine at his iudgements, or too bee displeased with any thing that hee dothe, but wee must make warre against him. And why? For wherein consteth the soueraintie and dominion which he hath ouer vs: In our acknowledging, not only of his power: but also of his infinite goodnesse, wisedome, righteousnesse, mercie, and iustice. When wee haue that once: then do we glorify him. Well then, if men thinke Gods doings vnreasonable, if they blame him of crueltie, if they chafe against him through impaciencie, or if they be offended at any thing that he doth: out of all doubt they go about to bereue him of his diuine glory, and that cannot bee done without making of war against him. And so whensoeuer wee glorify not God in his infinite righteousnesse, goodnesse, power, and wisedome: it is as much as if we made some defyance to him, to rise vp against him. But what is it that mortall man taketh in hand? It is said heere, that Gods hosts are without number. Behold, all the Angels of heauen are warned to defend the honoure of him that formed and created them. Likewise al his creatures are fully disposed to auenge his maiestie, which is so assayled by vs that are but woormes and rottennesse. Therefore let vs marke well to what purpose mention is made heere of Gods hosts or armies. It is to the ende we shuld know, that as oft as men presume to murmur against god, and to blaspheme his iustice: they must haue as many deadly enimies as there bee Angels in Heauen, the number of whome we know to be infinite. Also it behoueth them to know, that all creatures are armed to runne vpon them. For to what end hath God created al things, but that his glory shoulde shine foorth in them? But if men submit themselues to God willingly, and yeld him the honoure that belongeth vnto him: that which is spoken heere of his armies, or hosts, shall not serue to fray them, but rather to glad them. And surely when the scripture telleth vs that God hath many thousandes of Angels about him, redy too do his commaundementes: what intendeth it else, but too make vs understand, that when God hath receiuied vs to his fauoure, he is strong ynough to keepe vs safe, notwithstanding that we be assayled on all sides. Therefore whē men viter all the force that they haue, practizing this and that to destroy vs, yea and when the diuell himselfe riseth vp against vs: wee must not be afraid. VVhy so? Because God hath his heavenly armes to defend vs, according as it is said that the Angels incamp themselues round about vs: and that hee hath appointed his Angels to guide vs, so as the faithfull person shall not stumble. VVe see then that the infinite number of Angels serueth to comfort vs, to the end we might be sure that God will succoure vs at our neede, and that he hath wherwith to do it. But like as the faithfull that leane vnto God, and submit themselues to him with all humilitie, are preserued by the multitude of the Angels: euen so, all they that striue against him, all they that are proude, and all they that are sturdy, must be enforced to feare him, and too vnderstand that when they set themselues after that fashion against God, they haue too do with many enimies beside: in somuch that all the power that is in the Angels shall fall vpon them to ouerwhelme them, and all creatures shall serue to mainteine the glory of him by whose power they haue their being. And therefore let vs remember well this sentence where it is saide, that the armes of God are without number: and therepon let vs assure ourselues, that it is to no purpose for men to conspire against vs: for when they shall haue assembled all their forces together, yet shall they not bee too strong for vs, but God shall always get the vpper hand of them. VVherefore let vs not deceiue ourselues when we see ourselues well accompanied, and a greate number of people gathered about vs. And why? For wee may all be confounded in one moment by the hand and power of God. Againe, although he alone be ynoch, either to sauе vs or to destroy vs: yet moreouer hee bathe his armies redy furnished after an incomprehensible manner, which shall set vpon vs whensoeuer hee thinketh good. Therfore let vs stand in feare, and let vs learne (as I said) not to be proude when wee see the world hold on our side, and a great power to mayntaine vs. For all that geere shall stand vs in no sted, considering the great power of God that is declared heere. And heereby a man may see, how sore the vnbelleefe of men is blinded. For it is put to our choice whither wee will haue the Angels of heauen, to watch about vs, and to gard vs, and too bee seruants of our welfare: or whether wee will haue them against vs, and to be our deadly enimies. Behold, God vseth such goodnesse and grace towardes vs: that hee appointeth his Angels too do vs seruice, as the scripture auoucheth: he will haue vs garded by them, and therwith all he affirmiteth them to be powers, as who shold say, he stretcheth out his hand ouer vs to the entid hee might mainteine vs. Of whome then is it long that we be not guided by the Angels, and that they gard vs not from al harme? It is even long of ourselues who cannot take the benefyte that is offered vs. VVe needed no more but to receiue it: and what do we? VVe are so farre off from receiuing the good turne that God offereth vs, that in derogation of his maiestie, we fall to prouoking of his Angels to armie themselues too oure ruine and confusion. Needs then must we be bereft of our right mind, and as it were bewitched of the deuill; when we had leuer too haue the Angels to be our enimies, than the ministers of our welfare: for they be redy to help vs and to guide vs, so we be members of our Lord Iesus Christ, and yelde obediencie vnto him as our head. And so, as oft as there is any speaking of God, leſ vs learne not too conceiue any dead thing of him, but to thinke in such wise of his glory, as it is set foorth to vs heere: And forasmuch as we be verydul Let vs beare in mind that God hath his armes, and an infinite number of Angels redy too execute hys commandements, and that(ouer and besides that)al creatures obey him as good reason is they shoulde. VVhereas it is consequently said that the light of God shineth vpon al men: it is expounded that God doth so shedde foorth his benefytes vpon all, as men may perceiue some sparks of his goodnessse and wisedome throughout all things: howbeit that specially it is restreynd vnto men: for that is the point wherin the light of God appereth, according as it is said in the first chapter of saint Iohn, that God not only gaue his creatures their Being, at the firste beginning, but also quickened them too maintaine them in their state, euen by the power of his word: and as touching men, togither with their life, he gaue them also a light. Ye see then that all creatures haue life in our Lord Iesus Christ, who is the euerlasting word of God: but we haue a more noble and exquisite life than haue eyther the beasts, or the trees, or the frutes of the earth. VVhy so: For we haue vnderstanding and reason. So then, the light of God shyneth vpon men. And seeing we bee so greatly beholden and bound vnto him: are wee not so much the more blameworthy, if we deface that light? Yes surely are we. For we must com backe to that which

Saint Paule saith in the Acts, that if we went but groping like blind folke, yet should Gods glory bee perceiued. VVhy? He dwelleth in vs, wee nedde not too seeke farre for hiim, it is in him that we haue our life, moving power and being. Thus yee see that the exposition of this sentence hathe bin taken to be, that God hath so bound vs vnto him by making vs partakers of his light, as we bee toto vnthankfull if we go about to deface his glory and yeld him not his due. And wherefore? For a man cannot so much as stirre himselfe, but he feeleth that God dwelleth in him. Of him we hold our life, and it is he whome we may thanke for making vs reasonable creatures rather than beasts. For why are wee of more value than Oxen and Asses, but because it hathe pleased God too preferre vs before them? So then, the saide brightness wherewith God enlightneth vs, is an occasion to vs too exalt his glory, and to submit ourselues vnder his hand. Thus you see one exposition that me make of this text, which cōteineth a good doctrine. But whē al is throughly cōsidered, Bildads meening is not, simply to shew that God hath spred out his light vpon vs, to the end to gyue vs vnderstanding and reason: but to shew that we cannot eschue his presence, but must be faine to walke as it were before him, and that he seeth all things, and hath (as ye would say) his eye vpon vs. Ye see then that Gods spreading out of his light vpon vs, is as much to say, as that we cannot hide ourselues from his presence. And this is according to the matter that he hath talked of al this while. For like as he saith that God hath his Angels as howge hostis redy to do him servitie: so nowe he addeth, that do what we can, we cannot eschew Gods presence. True it is that wee leape about like Grasshoppers, and hope to play the horsesthat are broken looce: but yet in the end wee must be faine to yeld vnto God. And why? For his brightness doth so shine vpō vs, that we cannot eschue him as if we had to do with a mortall man. Therfore whensoever we be tempted to such oversight as to imagin that we may eschue Gods hand, let vs learne to conclude thus: Yea and whither shall wee go? For wee know that his power is spred ouer all, bycause his sighte is endlesse. If wee were gone into the bottome of the earth, yet should not he ceasse to see vs and to marke our doings. Then let vs be no more so foolish as to lift vp ourselues against God, assuring ourselues that it is to no purpose for vs to tosse and turmoyle and to make many enterprises and conspiracies: for they shall not auayle vs, but he will still behold vs and marke vs. And this is as common a lesson as any in the holy scripture: but wee beare it ill away, or at leastwise we do ill put it in vre. For proofe whereof, if wee remembred that God beholdeþ vs, and that he marketh all that euer we do or say: I pray you would we not walke in another manner of feare and warinessse than we do now. But tush: we feare none but men, we be safe ynough if wee haue no witnessses heere beneath. Thus yee see that the cause why men give head to all their wicked lusts, is for that Gods spirite beareth no sway with them, and for that they passe not too conceiue cursed things, and to purpose vpon them in theyr harts, prouided alwayes that no body can accuse them. So are there very few that set Gods shining vpon them, before their eyes. For if they bare that shining in remembrance, surely it would be ynough to supprese all theyr wicked affections, and too riddle them of all the fancies wherwith they be puffed vp. And truly if we be ashamed of men: how much more ought he to moue vs that is the iudge of all men? For if men iudge vs, it is not of theyr owne authoritie, nor in their owne name: they do but only perfourme the iudgement of God, to whome alone all judgement perteineth. But behold, God seeth vs, and yet for all that, we yeld him no reuercence: wee passe not of the prouoking of his wrath against vs. And howe may that be borne? So then, if we remember well this lesson, that God sheadeth out his light vpon all men: surely it will be a good bridle to make vs walke in all purenesse of conscience, not only for amending the faultes that wee commit outwardly towards men: but also for amending of all the euill and hipocrisie that is hidden within vs. Thus ye see in effect what wee haue too marke in thy streine. And after that Bildad hath said so, hee addeth: VVhat righteousness then shall be attributed to man in comparison of God? word for word it is, with G:d. And how can be that is borne of man cleere himselfe? This is as an authenticall summoning of vs, to shew vs that we be starkē fooles to set store by ourselues, and to beare ourselues in hand that we haue any righteousness or vertue, or any thing else in vs that is worthy of praise. The theefe that is abrode in the woods stands not in awe of iustice, nor of any thing else. True it is that he alwayes carrieth a fearesfulness about him: according as it hath bin seene heretofore that God ingraueth such a feeling of mens sinnes in their harts, as they must needes be their owne iudges and condēne themselues. But yet for all that, the theeuers runne rojot stil, so as they passe not to cut as many poore wayfarers throtes as they meeete with, if they can catch them at auantage. Yet notwithstanding afterward, whē they be laid vp, and see their payment at hande: then all their hardnessse is laid awater, the rage is quite gone that made them so beastly before. Euen so is it with vs. For so long as we know not that we must yeld an account afore God, ne conceiue his infinite power and the soueraintie that hee hathe in himselfe: there is suche ouerweening in vs, as we sticke not to magnify ourselues aboue the cloudes. And if a man speake to vs of righteousness, we will eally find it in ourselues, for our vices are vertues to vs. Lo how men are besotted with such a loftinesse as they cannot know themselues, till God summon them before him, and draw them to it as it were by force. For if they knew themselues: there would bee no more self estimation with them. That is the cause why Bildad sayth expresly, can a mortall man iustify hymselfe before God? This saying is of great weight: as if he had said, Goto, so long as men are among themselues, they they may haue good opinion of their owne vertues, and every of them may saye, I am an honest man : yea and when they shall come too the putting of themselues in balance, they will esteeme much more of themselues tha of other men, saying, This man hath such a fault in hyuin, and that man hath such a vice. VVe can maruellously well skill to controll other men, and to abase them : but in the meane time we will not be aknowen of our owne infirmitieis, we couer them as much as in vs lieth. And if there be neuer so little a drop of vertue in vs, or at leastwise if there seeme to be any : (for all is but smoke as we shal say anon) we would haue God to set such store and estimation by vs, that he should vncloth himselfe to cloth vs. Ye see then what the pride of men is, so long as they looke no further than among themselues. But when we come before God and know what we be, and enter into the examination of our owne life : then for feare of hys maiestie which suffereth vs not to wrap vp ourselues in hipocriste and vntruth: we forget all these foolish braggs, wherewith we were abused for a time. And so according to that which is declared here, whensoeuer we be tempeted with pride, and imagin ourselues to haue any vertue in vs worthy of estimatiō: let vs learne to cite ourselues before God, and let vs not tarrie till he draw vs too it, but let euery man do his duetie towards himselfe. For ye see how our Lord sheweth vs the manner of proceeding which we ought to hold vs to. Then if a man do at any time beare himselfe in hand, that he hath I wote not what to vaunt himselfe of: to correct that follie and statelessness, let him but only consider with himselfe, what he is. And to know what we be, let vs go vnto God. For a man neuer knoweth himselfe, so long as he looketh but vpon himselfe, or doth but compare himselfe with hys neighbours. But we do then learne to know ourselues, when we lift vp our eyes a high, and make accounte too come before the iudgement seate of him that knoweth al things, and is not like mortall men that content themselues with pety trifles, before whome we cannot make our cockleshels go for painement, as in deede all the things that are of much estimation heere, are nothing woorth there. Therefore when we perceiue that all these things vanish away before God: then we learne to submit ourselues vnto God, and to bee no more so puffed vp with pride. And for that cause it is saide, How can man (namely that he is borne of woman) iustify himselfe in respect of God? Howbeit forasmuch as there is nothing harder than to bring men to reason, and to rid them of the saide vayne selftrust wherewith they are abused: heere Bildad addeth, that bee will not shine vntoo the Moone, and that the starres are not pure before God; and therfore what is man who is but a worme, or the sonne of man who is but rottennesse? True it is that this saying may bee expounded diuers wayes: that is to witte, that God will not shine so farre as to the Moone: or else that he will not streine his tent so farre, that is to say, that hee will not voutsafe too come neere it: and that the starres are not pure, that is to say, al creatures (in which neuerthelesse we see great noblenes) must be as it were estrangd from God, and there is a great space betwixt him and them. And this is sayd expressly, bycause the creatures aboue are excellenter tha the creatures heere beneath. But how soever it bee, Gods is so farre off both from the Moone and from the starres, as there is an endlesse distance betwixt them. And how then shall we come neere him? This exposition is fit ynough: and in good sooth, whether a man conster it Shining or streyning of bis tent, it commeth all to one end. To he short, Bildads meening is, That if our Lord listed to call his creatures before him, he shuld find no bright-nesse in the Moone, and the starres should be darkned. Neuerthelesse, they bee the thinges that enlighten the world: and yet notwithstanding they must all needes be vtterly drowned when the maiestie of God commeth in place. Now lette men stand in their owne conceite and boast themselues. VVhere bee the wings to carrie vs so high as we may take the Moone in our teeth (as they say) or as we may stye aboue the starres? VVhen wee thinke too haue any thing in ourselues, assoone as wee 10 come before God, allis swallowed vp and brought too nothing by reason of his incomprehensible glorie.

Nowe then wee see in what case men are when they will glorifie themselues. Needes (say I) must Satan haue bewitched them: for it is all one as if they would flye aboue the starres. And are they able to doo that? If a man woulde caste himselfe but foure paces downewarde, it were ynough to break all his sinewes, yea and his necke too. But as ofte as wee haue any thing too boast of, wee make suche leapes as were ynough too break the neckes of menne, yea and of Angels too, as ye would saye. Then muste wee not needes be worse than madde, as I sayde afore? Lo what Bildads meening is.

Furthermore, where as some expounde it concerning the Eclipses of the Moone: that can by no means agree. For the sense is more simple: namelye, that the noblest creatures, which seeme too haue euen some godhead, are nothing at all when they bee compared with God. All of them must be abased, and God alone continue in his state: so as it behoueth vs to knowe, that there is nother righteousnesse, power, nor wisedome, but in him only, and that all the reste is but vanitie. Yea, but for all that, experience sheweth that the Sunne is not darkned, nor the Starres neyther. Yes surely too our sight. Again, it behoueth vs too marke, that the brightnesse whyche they haue, is borowed of another: they are as it were little sparkes, wherin God sheweth his glorie. And so there is neyther Sunne, Moone, nor Starres that can glorye in aught of their owne.

Besydes thys, if God shoulde sette hymselfe against them: their lyght with the lyght of all the reste, muste needes bee darkened. For if the Sunne take awaie from vs the light of the Starres: I praye you what wold Gods infinite bryghtenesse doo? Nowe haue wee Bildads meening: Euen in the Moone (sayeth hee) there shall bee no bryghtnesse, neyther shall the Starres bee pure in Gods presence. As if hee hadde sayde, True it is, that wee see lyghte sheade thorough the whole worlde, oure eyes receiue it, and wee are glad of it. But yet so farre off is the same from being anything before God: that if we come, euen too the body of the Moone, and too all the Starres of the skie: all the lighte of them (saith hee) shall bee darkned and vanish away in comparison of Gods glory. And now lette vs come vntoo men. VVhat are they? VVhat are they able too do? VVhat is their power? VVhereof can they boast? They bee but woornies and rottennesse: and yet will they needes iustify them selues. Now remayneth too put this lesson in vre, and to applye it to our vse.

Heere it is shewed vs, that when wee come before God, wee can bring nothing that is woorthy of prayse. Men then are vttered heere too bee voyde of all goodnessse, and that they haue not so muche as one drop of righteousnesse, whereby too purchace themselues estimation, but must bee fayne too yeilde them selues giltye, acknowledging that ther is nothing else in them but wretchednes and miserie. Now if men were wel acquainted with this doctrine, we should not now adays haue so many iarras and braules as wee haue with the Papistes.

For

For they on their side esteeme highly mans own free wil, as though men had some power to dispose themselves to Godward. True it is that they can welynough confess that we be weake, and that wee be not able too do any thing withoute Gods help, and withoute the direction of the grace of his holy spirit. But what? Therewithall, they attribute a certaine preparation to men, and afterward that they be workfellowes with God in furthering his grace, working in common with him as his companions. And when they haue laid that foundation, they fall to attributing of this and that to men, so as there is none other talke among them, but of magnifying men for their vertues and merites. For although they graunt alwayes that wee haue neede of Gods mercie, yet do they blow the bladder full of wind to stuffe it out withall: that is to say, they imbrew it with their diuelish dogtricks, to beare me in hand that they merit, and that God accepteth them after as they be worthy of his grace, and hath always respect to their vertues. Lo how men are puffed vp with wind through the diuelish fancies that reigne in poperie. And furthermore (say they) if we do amisse, we haue works of supererogation or ouerplus, wherwith to make amends vnto God for our sinnes. And although we haue offended him, and know that he will not forgiue vs our sinnes, yet can we bring him some recompence and satisfaction, and that is a meane to make him at one with vs. But if the things that are shewed vs heere by Bildad, and which we haue seene heretofore were well knowē: all those disputationes would be laid downe. But what? It is an easy matter for the Papists to rudge so at random of mens righteouesesse, merites, satisfactions, and free will. And why? For they looke not vnto God, but are falne asleepe in that vaine imagination which they haue conceiuied of the iustifying of men by their owne good deedes. And therefore it behoueth vs to marke well thys verse. Then for a conclusion let vs note, that if wee can cite our owne consciences before God: it wil humble vs in such sort, as there wil be no more seeking to presume: but we shall acknowledge ourselves to be but woormes and rottenesse, and that there is nothing in vs but filthynesse and stinch. VVhat is to be done then? As oft as men speake to vs of the meane of our saluation, lette vs learne to consider where it is that we ought to repose all our trust: which is, that our God receiuing vs of his own meere goodnessse, do by his holy spirite purge and clenze vs from all our spots, and wash vs in the bloud of oure Lord Iesus Christ, the which he hath shed too clenze vs withall, thereby to make vs so pure and cleane as we may be able to stand before his face.

Now let vs fall downe before the face of oure good God with acknowledgement of our faults, praying him that whereas he hath shewed himselfe vnto vs heretofore, it may please him too increase our knowledge further and further, and to make vs so too profyte in ir day by day, that in drawing towards him we may be touched with such reverence, as we may desire nothing but to be subiect vnto him, and to do him seruice, and specially that sith it hath pleased him to call vs to his seruice, we may determine to employ ourselves wholly therein, not presuming vpon our owne vertues, nor vpon any thyng that can be in vs, but acknowledging that he of his owne meere grace hath chosen vs too bee of his Church and people, and that in receiuing that benefyte we may draw of the fountaine whiche hee hathe giuen vs, that is too witte of our Lord Iesus Christ, and acknowledge that it belongeth too him too gyue vs the full perfection of the thynges whiche wee still hope for. That it may please him too graunt this grace not only to vs, but also to all people and Nations of the earth, bringing backe al poore ignorant soules. &c.

The.xcv.Sermon,which is the first ypon the.xxvj.Chapter.

1. I Ob ansyvered and said.

2. VVhome hast thou succoured? him that hath no povver? Hast thou sauued the arme that had no strength?

3. Hast thou giuen counsell to him that vvas destitute of vvisedome? Thou sayst as it is.

4. To vvhorne tellest thou these vvords, and vvhose spirite is gone out of thee?

5. The dead things are formed vnder the vvaters and in their neere places.

6. The gulfē is naked before him, and destruction hath no couering.

7. He stretcheth out the northern coast vpon the vvast places, and the earthe is founded vppon nothing.

Declared in the beginning of thys booke, that the propertie whiche is required in a good teacher, was wanting in those that came to comforte Job: which propertie is, too deuide Gods word rightly, and to applie it to the right vse with suche skilfulness, as he that is weake may be strengthened, he that is sorowfull may be comforted, he that is cold may be warmed, and he that is gone astray may be brought home againe. Now verely(as it hath bin said) jobs frends handled a doctrine, that in generalitic is good and holy: howbeit they failed in misapplying the same to the person of Job. Then let vs marke well, that it is not ynoch enough for vs too speake of God in common, vnsesse euery of vs can referre our sayings to a good vse. This will be the better vnderstoode by laying foorth the text poynt by poynt. Job demaundeth heere of Bildad, what any man hathe

50 fared the better by al his woords. And first he saith, whom hast thou succoured? hast thou succoured the feble? hast thou helped the arme that bad no strength? As if hee should saye, good doctrine ought not to be cast foorth into the ayre but to bring fit instruction to the partie that it is spoken to. As how? VVhen wee see a man that is vtterly ouerthrown, and so dismayed as he hath neede of comfort: if we should be rough with him, or if we should storne at him, I pray you were it not the next way too cast him into despaire? Contrariwise when we see a man hardned in his sinnes, or a despiser of God, yea suche a one as holdeth scorne of all good warnings, or if wee should speak him faire, and handle him with gentle words, were it not better for vs to hold our peace, than too set Gods word to be a scorning stocke too suche a man? Yes: for it were more neede to strike him hard as if a man shoulde smite with a hammer ypon a stith, seeing the partie is become so sturdy. Job then sheweth heere, that Bildads talking talking of Gods prouidence hath bin to no purpose. As if he shuld say, marke in what plight I am, and seeing that thou tellest thy tale to me, it were meete that thou shuldest haue an eye to that which might be for my profyt: and therefore thou oughtest too deale discreetely, and not to cast foorth thy words at all auenture. Now wee understand better what Job meant to say. But by thys streine it behoueth vs too marke, howe available Gods word is, when we can skill to applie it to our profyte. It is sayd here, that it ought to strengthe such as are weake, and to releue such as are feeble and vtterly cast downe. And this said vse is well noted by the Apostle in the Epistle to the Hebrues, wher he alledgedeth the text of Esay that a man oughte to stay the trembling knees, and too strengthen the weake armes: for the Prophete Esay appointeth that office to such as haue the charge to preach Gods word. Go your wayes (saith he) and hold vp the poore weakelings, and strengthē the quaking knees and the leggs that cannot go. And how? VVe know that those whom God hath appointed teachers in his Church, haue nothing but the word whiche is put into their mouth. No surely, but yet that worde hath such a power, as it is able to redresse the feblenesse that is in men: In somuch that if we quaked in such wise as we could not stand vpon our feete: yet when our Lord speaketh to vs, he gyueth vs such a lustinesse as wee be after a manner made new again: & whereas we could not stirre one toe afore, now we walke abrode: and whereas our armes were erst as good as broken, now we are able to put them too the doing of any thing. Thus ye see how we ought to serue our turne with Gods word. For if we be not strengthened by it when we be weake, nor take it for a remedie of our feblenesse: it is certaine that we knowe not the value of Gods worde, but it is vtterly vnprofitable too vs through our owne fault. So then he that hath the charge and office to teach, ought to haue good respect what his hearers are to whome he speaketh. For if hee see them negligēt and cold, it behoueth him to quicken them vp: and if they be out of hart, he must cheere them. According as in very deede we see many so sore shakē, as they distrust themselues, and though a mā speake to them of Gods prouidence, to the end they might leane vnto it: yet they ceasse not too starkle: in somuche that if they heare but the falling of a leafe, they start and are afryd: so that vnlesse a man strengthen them day by day, hee shall never be able to hold them vp from falling downe or froni staggering. Therefore he that is ordeyned to be a teacher in Gods Church, ought to haue such consideration and skill, that if his hearers bee faintharted and slow, he must exhort and incourage them, by telling the that God never faylēth those that are his, to the end that they may call vpon him, and when they haue called vpon him, inioy his help, and walk on boldly. Furthermore like as we that must teach others, ought to shoote at the said marke: so also behoueth it every man to do the like in his owne behalfe, according as the Apostle saith. For he applieth the aforesaid text too every priuate person, saying: My frēds, the prophet Esay telleth vs, that al they whome God hath chozen to preach his word, ought to giue corage & strēgth to such as are weake, & make the to go a good pace. Now looke to yourselues: whē any of you seeth himself weake, or cold, or plucked backe with distrust & ouerfearfulness, frō the seruing of God & his neighbor: let him streine himselfe, let him gather strēgth, and let him come and seeke corage in the word of God. Flatter not yourselues in your sins. VVhen ye feele your selues weake, do not only say, I am weake, but when ye know what ye be, seeke the remedy of it in Gods word.

Go reade, & giue eare to the promises that are cōteyned there. Mark how God telleth you, that he wiil mainteyn those that are his, & that if they taint, his spirit is strong ynough to recouer the: wayt for such succoure at his had & with your waiting walke on stil in the same trust. Now the we see how we may profyt ourselues by Iobs vpbraiding of Bildad, that al the talke which he had vittered in the aire, had bin but an vnprofitable soūd. And why? For (saith he) it was not to strēgthē the weake, nor to saue & 10 preserue the arme that was as good as broken. And so let vs mark wel, that we haue greatly profyted in gods word whē we cā be nimble & weldisposed to do good, & haue no brokē armes, nor trēbling knees, but a lusty cheerefulnesse to apply ourselues to the seruice of God and oure neighbor. Lo how we may become good scholers of the holy Ghost. But so lōg as we be faint & cold, and cannot go one step without stūbling or reelinge: let vs mark that we haue smally profyted in the heauely schoole, and that the same cōmeth of our own fault. For it is certaine that 20 gods word hath the nature & propertie so to strēgthē vs, as we shal no more be feeble, except the fault be in ourselues. So the let such as haue the charge of teaching, tend always to that mark: and let every of vs haue the discretion to cōsider on his owne behalfe, that whē we reade the holy scripture we come to a sermō. Now the if I be weak and haue neede to gather strength: it behoueth me to be heedful, that I may receiuē the remedy which gods word giueth me. To be short, according to the diseases that euer mā knoweth in himself, let him learne to do whatsoever God hath ordeined, and let him imbrace his promises for the remedy therof. After that Job hath said so, he addeth: To whome hast thou giuen counsell? To such a one as bad want of wisedome! It is expressly said of gods law, that Ps.19.c.6. 7.8. it serueth to instruct the ignorant and little ones: which propertie is extēded to the whole scripture, which is nothing else but an expositiō of the law. The purpose therfore wherevnto our Lord will haue his whole word too serue, is that forasmuch as we be blind and ignorāt wretches, we should bee taught faithfully, so as we might not stray, but know what path we ought to take. And that is not for two or three men: for who is hee that can boast that he is skilfull and wise ynough to gouerne himselfe? True it is that men will be foolish ynough to presume so farre vpon their own naturall wit: but God laugheth such ouerweening to scorne, and sheweth plainly how ther is nothing but vanity in all their gay brauerie. For he ouertaketh the wise in their owne wilinessse, shewing that they beguile themselues, whē they intend to walke after their owne imaginatiō. Then let vs assure ourselues, that al of vs both great and small, are as poore blind buzzards, and there is nothing in man but ignorāunce, vntill wee haue profyted in Gods schoole. And therewithall lette vs know that God is our guide, and that in his word is all perfection of wisedome, and that the title of teaching the ignorant is not giuen to it in vaine. Lo heere the cause why Job vpbraided Bildad, that he had not giuen counsell to him that was destitute of wisedome. As if he should saye, he blemished the doctrine for want of knowing howe to applie it wisely as he ought to haue done. 60 VVherefore to the end that such reproch light not vpon vs, let vs learne too vse Gods worde after suche a sorte, as it may serue vs too good instruction, that by receyving suche doctrine, wee may ceasse too bee any more as wretched beastes that go astray. Also lette hym too whome God hathe committed the office of teaching others, consider well, that whatsoeuer come of it, mē must be gouerned by the hand and mouth of God. True it is, that vntill suche time as God hathe conuinced them of their

their ignorance, they glory in them selues:and therefore he is faine to pull downe such pride, according also as Saint Paule speakest when hee saithe that the Gospell ought to serue to pull downe all loftinesse that aduaunceth it selfe against our Lord Iesus Christ:and according to his saying in the first Chapter of the first Epistle too the Corinthians,that it behoueth vs to become fooles,if we will become wise in Gods schoole. Truly this seemeth strange to vs:but it is our Apgee, and it is a lesson wherein we must continue all the time of our life. And so the ministers of Gods word, must tell men that there is nother discretion nor wisedome in them, to the ende they may no more trust in their owne strength and reason,nor be so selfe weening as to say,I know welynough howe I oughte to liue. No:but let them esteeme them selues as fooles,that is to say, let them acknowledge that there is nothing in them selues but vanitie. For if there were but one drop of wisedome in vs, God would not trouble vs at all, but let vs alone in our state. But nowe he intendeth to pull downe our pride, to our owne profite, that we may be humbled and become little and lowly,to exalt him alone and to submit ourselues wholly to that which he shall say. VVherefore let vs not bee afraid that we shall not be sufficiently taught in all perfection if we suffer God to declare his will vnto vs, and desire the same at his hand, being redy to receiuie what soever he shall say vnto vs. Then if we haue the wit to suffer ourselues to bee gouerned by Gods mouth, wee haue the perfection of all wisedome,wherein there is no fault to be found. And why? For the holy Ghost lyed not in saying,that the proper and very naturall office of good doctrine is, to teach men wisedome and reason that want it. Now in the ende Job rebuketh Bildad for speaking at rousers. For in saying, thou hast said as it is: he meeneth that Bildads words were not ruled and directed to the doing of that which he had to deale withall. And it is a saying well worthy to be noted. For such as flitter in the aire after that sort in their talke, know not what the right deuiding of Gods worde is, but go about the bush, only turning about the pot, according as wee see many that discourse in generalities, and wote not howe to applie the doctrine profitably as they ought to do. To what purpose wer it if I shuld stād here a whole halfe day togither, and expōid vnto you the one halfe of a booke, soaring in the ayre and intreating of many things disorderly, without regard of your profite and edifying? Eucry of you would go home to his house, as wise as he came out to Church:and it were but a defacing of gods word, so as it should stand vs in no stead at all. VVhat is too bee done then? Let vs remember well what is saide heere:namely, that we must referre our doings to some certaine end: and that when we take a matter in hand, we must speake to the purpose, as they that are skilfull to set things in their right order, so as there may bee no confusion. As how? According to that which I haue said, if wee mind to comforte such as are sad and sorrowful, and find them selues distressed in their cōscience, or haue any great trouble:it behoueth vs to seek meanes to comfort them, by setting Gods mercie before them, and too know their disease that we may applie the fit remedies vnto it. If we mind to abate the pride and rebelliousnesse that is in men, it behoueth vs to shew them what Gods vengeance is, and too make them feele (spite of theyr teeth) that it is no sporting matter:for it is able to drown all things with a blast, and is as a lightening to consume all too nothing. If a man willexhorte those too pacience which are tormented, and cannot paciently suffer the afflictions that God sendeth them, or which are in wanhope and despaire:it behoueth him to seeke the reasons that are fit for it. For to what purpose were it to speake much out of order? It is all one as if a man came too a Phisition, and desired a medicin for some disease:and the Phisition shoulde go discourse and debate of his art in generall termes, and so the poore sicke man shoulde yeld vp his Ghost in the meane while, whereas he might easilly haue bin cured if hee had bin helped out of hande. And to what purpose then hath all histalke serued? If a man come too a Mason too put some building into hys hand, and the Mason fal to discourse of building Castels, and tell him of the rearing of buildings in the aire, disputing how it may be brought to passe, and in the meane while regard not the present work:what a toy were it? If a man should come to a Lawyer to aske counsell vpon some case, and the Lawyer should fall to disputing vpon the Lawes in generall, and not applie the things too hys present case:it were to no purpose. So then let vs marke, that when we deale with Gods word, it behoueth vs too set some certaine marke before vs, that we wander not heere and there, but deuide it aright,as they that knowe to what end they speake, that our talke be not rouing & gadding too and fro. For else we may speake many good words, but none of them shal serue to any purpose. That is the thing which Job meant to shew heere,in rebuking Bildads vnauidenesse, for not hauing the discretion to applie his good doctrine to the right vse of it. And nowe he vittereth a saying that weyeth yet more. To whom (saith he) tellest thou thy tale? And whose spirit is it that is come out of thee? In saying to whome is it that thou tellest this tale:he sheweth vs that we ought to haue a regard of the persons to whome we direct our doctrine, as I haue declared already. I am not heere for my selfe alone:surely al of vs ought to profyte in common. And when I go vp into the pulpit, it is not only too teach other men, and too withdraw my selfe away from the rest. For I my selfe must be a scholer, and the word that proceedeth out of my mouth, must serue me as well as you, or else it is ill with me. But in the meane while if I contente my selfe with estimation, and haue no respect of you to make the doctrine that I bring, too serue youre capacitie: what a fondnesse were it? So then it behoueth vs too haue the skill to applie the doctrine to such as God putteth vs in trust with. For when hee putteth vs in office too bee his messengers:he bindeth vs to his people, and so linketh vs to his Church,as it behoueth vs to haue our eyes always fastned vpon the same. VVherefore if wee should cast foorth our words into the aire, and shut our eyes, without hauing consideratiō of those to whome we speake: it were to sore an abusing of God word. Then let vs mark well, that such as haue the charge of teaching,must consider what doctrine may be good and profitable whē they speake to the whole congregation, that they may deale it foorth faithfully and with good discretion,so as it may be to the common profite of all. If we haue not this consideration,we shall make such a minglemangle and such a hotchpotch of Gods word, as there shall be nother tast nor sauoure in it any more. And why? For the cheefe poynt is to know, what it is that he demaundeth whiche commeth to be taught. I meane not that he should demaund according to his fleshly lust:but that hee should demand deaudmud the thing that is fit for him, and may do hym good. Now let vs come to lay foorth that which Iob setteth downe heere. VVhose spirit is it that commeth out of thee? True it is that this sentence hath bin expouned, as though it had bin saide, Of what spirit speakest thou? Is it of God, or of men? And that interpretation is not to be vtterly misliked. For surely when any man taketh vp pon him to beare abroade the doctrine of saluation: it behoueth him too take good heede that hee vaunt not himselfe of his naturall wit, assuring himselfe that that is not a matter for men to purchase estimation by: but that he ought to bee gouerned by the spirit of God, and too haue the vertue whereof Saint Paule speaketh, too the end he may know that it is God whiche hath sent hym. That thing therfore is very requisite. But if a man marke well the processe of the text: Iob folowing that which he had touched afore, intēdeth rather to shew, that Bildads words were not wel disposed, bycause they did not quicke[n] his soule, which is the principall poynt that we haue to marke in Gods word. I said afore, that Gods worde serueth to teache the ignoraunt and too strengthen the weake: and that is bycause it incourageth suche as are faint, cold, and slothfull, wakeneth such as are asleepe in their sinnes, spurneth suche foreward as lag behind, and raizeth such as are falne downe: and yet ther is one thing more, namely that it quickeneth such as are dead. And this is it that Iob meant to shew whē he said, Of whome is the spirit that is gone out of thee? that is to say, in the power of thy words. Therefore let vs marke, that the worde of God is then well handled, when it giueth vs courage to go forward, and strēghtheneth our feblenes, making vs nimble whereas our leggs were broken, and making vs stout and lusty, whereas we were destitute of all valiantnesse afore: but yet must it also giue vs lyfe when we be as good as dead. And this is verified specially of the Gospell. For behold how our lord Iesus Christ speaketh in the fift of Saint Iohn. The time is come (saith hee) that the voice of the sunne of man shall bee heard, not only of the liuing, but also of the dead. And who be thole dead? Surely no man can be exempted. For whereat beginneth God to make his doctrine auayable in vs? Euē at the drawing of vs out of the spirituall death wherein we were all hild. For till such time as God inlightneth vs by his word, we bee blind, till he open oure eares wee be deafe: till he giue vs faith, wee haue nother soule nor hart. True it is that we may well seeme to haue some outward shew of life: the vnbeleeuers do eat and drinke as well as the faithfull: againe, they can go about their businesse, yea and oftentimes there seeme too bee great vertues in them. But all that is nothing, bycause that in asmuch as they be straungers from God, all that is in them is but deathe and vtter confusion, God then must be faine to draw vs out of death vnto himselfe, as the point whereat hee must begin too make his worde auayable in vs. And in good sooth, let vs see what strēgh there is in men till God haue strengthened them by his word. They trust in themselues, that is to say, they leane vnto a reede, that shall make them breake their necke. Yea and it is all one as if a man would gore himselfe vpon a pike. For in asmuch as it hath a sharp point, and is armed with yron, if a man leane vpon it, ye see it pricketh him through. And such is the trust that we haue in oure owne strength, that it must needes bee our deathe. Therefore let vs marke well that there is not one drop of life in vs, till God draw vs out of death, yea euen by the power of his word. And therin wee see how wretched the state of the vnbeleeuers is. True it is that they be so sotted in their outrages, as they perceiue not their owne harmes. But yet will the holy scripture always shew it selfe true, in auouching vs to be dead & vterly forlorne, and that there is nothing but cursednesse in vs, so long as we be straungers from God: And yet for all that, we see how thanklesse the world is. How many are there to bee found, that will suffer themselues to be rayzed and quickened? God offereth vs this benefyte when hee willeth his word to be preached and published to all men. Thus ye see then that life is offered vs, and we forsake it: that is to say, the great multitude shrinketh away from it, and thrusteth away the benefyte which they might inioy by it. See ye not a shamefull thanklesnesse? Must not men needes be out of their right wits? Yet notwithstanding we see there are fewe whiche submit themselues to the Gospell, and giue eare to it. VVe see they raile against it, and mocke at it, and slander it, and lift vp themselues against God with such rage, as there is lesse to be gotten at their hands than of wild beasts. Then sith we see the number of them to be so small whiche receiueth the doctrine of saluation, and that the greatest parte withdrawe themselues from it, some(as I said) making none account of it, some mocking at it, and some outrageously setting themselues against it, so as they shew full well that there is nothing in them but wickednesse against God: therby it is seene how mightily Satan hath bewitched them. But howsoeuer the world go, wee ought to marke well thy sentence, where it is said, that the spirit ought too passe out of vs: that is to say, that whereas we were dead afore: assoone as wee heare the worde of God, the same must giue vs such a liuelinessse, as our spirite may shew it selfe, whiche had not onely bin in a swound, but also vtterly quenched before. True it is that the word of God cannot do this thing in that it is vttered by the mouth of a mortall man: for it must first be quickened it selfe, that it may quicken vs. How is that? VVhen I speake, it is not in me to touch folks harts, nor to make the doctrine that I preach, to enter so into every man, as they may be moued to come vnto God. How then? Our Lord had neede to make his word auailable by the working of his holy spirit, and too quicken it before it enter into vs, that it may take roote there, and be vnto vs incorruptible seede of life. Ye see then that God must bee faine to worke by his secret power, ere his doctrine can auile that is preached to vs by men. That is true: But whereof commeth this fault? Euen of our selues. For God must be faine too boare our eares, or else we will neuer heare him: and hee must be faine to soften our harts, and to make them fleshly: for of themselues they be as hard as flint, and full of rebellion. Yet notwithstanding the word of God ought to conteine in it the said power and propertie of mortifying our soules. And let vs not maruell at it. For to what end hath God ordeined his word and appointed it to be preached: his intente is to bring vs too himselfe, and too come neere vnto vs, and not only so, but also too dwell with vs. For hee is the welspring of life, and there is no-thing in vs but death.

Seeing then that hee maketh vs partakers of hymselfe and of his graces, by his worde, and seeing that hee myndeth too dwell in vs, yea and too liue in vs, too 60 the ende that wee may lyue in hym : doo ye not see the sayd rising agayne too life whereof I speake afore?
And therfore let vs vnderstād at a word, that as lōg as we be strāgers frō god, how goodly shewes so euer we make, we be toto wretched, ther is nothing but cursednes in vs & our wretched soules are dead, although there appeere some liuelines in the to our imaginatiō. VVhat is to be done the: Euē to be quickened by Gods gathering of vs to himself, which thing he doth by the mean of his word.

Seing that this treasure is such and so inestimable: let vs set muche store by it, and let vs value it as it deserueth, and let not vs by our vnthankfulnesse stay God from making vs to feele the power and workfulnesse whiche he offereth vnto vs. Thus then ye see in effect what wee haue to marke in that saying of Iobs. Now hee addeth consequently, That hee may say many things of Gods prouidence: but it behoueth him to consider to what end he referreth them. For if his words wauer so in the aire, it were better for him to hold his peace. So then it behoueth men to bethinke them well, to what end they dispute of Gods word, that the parties may bee edifyed by their doctrine. Iob therefore sheweth heere, that Bildad came not to the pith of the matter, but only wandered aloofe in words. VVherefore? He ought (saith Iob) too haue come to the point, as shall be declared heereafter. But in the meane while he sheweth, that he is not ignorant of the same vertue whereof Bildad speaketh when he saith, that God gouerneth al things, and that the great power and maestic which are in him ought to be terrible to vs, and that we ought to come and submit oureselues to him with all reverence to do him seruice. True it is that this doctrine is of it selfe very profitable, and we may not despise it when it is preached in general: but yet notwithstanding it is needfull to looke well to the handling of it when it is to be applyed particularly, assuring ourselues that it is to no purpose to tell a long tale of things that belong not to the matter which is in had, but men ought too come too the very pointe as they say.

Thusthen the thing wherin Iob found fault with Bildad, was that in his disputing of Gods prouidence, he had no respect whereto his words might serue. And that is the cause why Iob saith now, I am not ignorauant that god hath created the world, that he gouerneth al things, that he holdeth all things in his hand, and that his maestic ought to be honoured. All these things I know. But for the better vnderstanding of the matter, Let vs marke that there are some persons to whom it behoueth vs to shew Gods mighty power, too bring them to a feare of his maestic, that they may stand in such awe of him as they ought to do. VVhy so? For wee see many sauadge folke, which haue much ado to conceiue that there is a God in heauen that gouerneth all things: they be little better than brute beasts. Verely if a man speake to them of God, they make a trifl of it, and say, yea marrie there is a God. But yet they never wist what his glory is, neither had they euer any feeling of the wonderfull power that is in him. Also it behoueth vs to shew them that Gods seruice is spirituall, and that we must come too it soundly and roundly, and be cleane purged from all hypocrisie. As for to know what Gods will is, tush, they never enquired after it, for they haue bin letted too much by worldly things. Ye see then that most men are heathenish, and so snarled in the delights of the present life: as they thinke not at al vpon God. Such manner of men had neede to haue the former matters told the at length, to make them feele what Gods maestic is. No doubt but all of vs haue neede of it, euery one according to his measure. But I say, that these matters must be laid forth at length, to such as haue neede to be called to the knowing of God, that they may be forced to tremble vnder the maestic of him whome they had scoffed at afore. This is one point which we haue to marke. Also ther are other men that had neede to be brought to this consideration, I meane euen of those that haue a right feare of God. Euen they (say I) must be taught and put in mind what gods maestic is, to the end they may always quake vnder it, and be meekened as becommeth them. But yet is not that all that they haue to do: they must not generally rest heere. And why? For when they haue learned that: they haue but laid their foundation: they must afterward build vpon it: yea and that in suche wise, as the building may be skilfully applied to the ground worke, that is made already vnder the earth. Then if a man speake to such as haue the feare of God in them, and a bace and humble themselues vnder Gods mighty hand: he must not rest vpon those generall matters, but particularly consider what is for each mans behoofe, that hee may build well vpon the foundation that is laid already. This is it that Iob meant to declare heere. Now lette vs com to the words which he vseth. He saith, that the dead things are formed vnder the waters, and in the places neere about. As if he had said, Goro, thou hast talked to me of Gods mightinesse, and told me that his armes are without number, and that all creatures are in his hand. All this I confesse: yea I looke yet further. For I looke even into the bottomlesse deepes, euen into the nauill of the earth: I see how God bringeth soorth things that were not before, and quickeneth the things that were dead. VVhence commeth the life of all creatures? It is as a thing that is hidden in the deepest gulfes. If it bee demaunded by what meanes we be serued in our state: or out of what place God hath sought the life that he gyueth vnto men: it is as much as if he would go fetche it out of the bottomlesse deepes. How commeth it to passe that the earth bringeth foorth frutes? How commeth it to passe that the corne which beareth such a blade, doth afterward yeld the graine? Now these are secrets of God which are hidden. From these things Iob commeth vp a loft and saith: I know well that God hath spred out the heauen, yea euen in a wast place where there was no settling. This is as much as if some body would hang the aire with Tapistrie: and that were impossible with men: but therein God meante too shewe his wonderfull power.

True it is that Iob doth set downe the north coast precisely, & yet he speaketh of the whole heauē. And that is because the skie turneth about vpon the pole that is there. For like as in the wheeles of a charior, there is an extree that runneth through the midds of them, and the wheeles turne round about the extree by reason of the holes that are in the naues of them: euen so is it in the skies. It is manifestly seene: that is to saye, they that are well acquainted with the course of the firmament, doo see that the skie turneth so about: For on the North side there is a Starre apparent to our eye, which is as it were the extree that runneth through the naue of the wheele about the which the skies are seene to turne. There is another pole hidden vnder vs, whiche wee cannot perceiue, and that is called the Antartik. And wly? Because the skie turneth about that also, as though one extree were put through both the wheeles, as hath bin said afore. VVhen I speake of this course of the Heauen, I meene not the dayly course of the sunne that we see: for the sunne hath a peculiar mouing by it selfe: but thys is an vnuerfall mouing for the whole cope of Heauen. And the said two starres are as it were fastned too those places, so as they do not remoue nor stirre. Thus yee see why Iob sayth, That God hath spred out the Heauen vpon the Northside. And why speaketh he so of it? Because it is suche a miracle, as ought to amaze vs. True it is that men haue some experiance of it, whiche causeth them to speake of it. But yet doth this so weldisposed order shew, that there is suche a wisedome in God, as we must of force confess that the same surmounteth allrea-

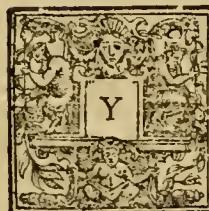

all reason of man, and that wee ought to do nothing else but honour our Gods greatnesse, which is so vittered in the creation of the world . And that is the cause why he sayeth, that he bath founded the earth vpon nothing. For wherepon doeth the earth rest: vpon the ayre . Like as we see the ayre aboue vs, so i, it likewyse on the other side of the earth , so as the earth doeth as it were hang in the midds of it . True it is that the philosophers make much disputing why the earth continueth so, seeing it is in the verye bottom of the world , and they say it is 10 a maruell that it sinketh not, considering that nothing vpholdeth it . Neuerthelesse they are able to yeld none other reason than is seene in the order of nature, which is so woorderfull a thing, as men are forced to bee abashed at it, and to mount aboue themselues too glorie God, acknowledging that there is an infinite wisdome in him . So then we see wherevnto Iobs woordes tend: namely too shewe that hee was not so beastly, as to denye Gods maiestie , but that he acknowledged his glorie . Howbeit his meening is to say, that the whole 20 cace standeth not in treating of it generally : but in applying of it too ryght vse , according as wee will speake more fully of it too morrowe , if God giue vs leaue.

Now let vs fall downe before the face of our good God with acknowledgement of our sinnes, praying him to make vs so to feele them, as wee may come with all humilitie to seeke help in his mete mercie, and not wander to and fro, but be so cast downe in ourselues, as wee may seeke altogether to bee releued by the grace of our Lord Iesus Christ, & dayly profit in him more and more, till we bee fully restored by him: assuring our seluesthat as he hath already begonne the good that is in vs, so will he also continue the same, and correct all the faults and imperfections of our flesh,euentill he haue brought vs to the perfection wherevnto he calleth vs after he hath rid vs cleane from all the letts which hinder vs and drawe vs backe from comming vnto him: That it may please him to graunt this grace, not only to vs but also to all people and nacions of the earth, bringing backe all poore ignorant soules from the miserable bondage of errour and darknesse,&c.

The.xcvij.Sermon,which is the second vpon the.xxvj.Chapter.

8. He bindeth the vvaters vpon the Cloud, and the Cloud sinketh not vnder them.
9. He holdeth backe the face of his throne, and spreadeth a Cloud vpon it.
10. He hath set bounds about the vvaters , vntill that lyght and darknesse be consumed.
11. He maketh the pillars of heauen to shake, and maketh it afryd at his threatening.
12. He clyueth the Sea by his povver , and appeaseth the prude of it by his vnderstanding.
13. He hath garnished the heauens by his spirit, and vwith his hand hath he formed the slipprie serpent.
14. These are [but] the outleets of his vvayes: and hovv little heare vve of them? and vwho is he that can vnderstand the terriblenesse of his povver ?

Esterday I began too shewe after what sort wee ought to profit ourselues by that which is conteyned 40 in the woorkes of God : which is to consider them reuerently and too yeld him the honour that he deserueth . For if wee think neuer so much vpon the miracles that God doeth, and yet in the meane whyle honour him not: what shall wee bee the better for it? Then let vs lerne, that as oft as Gods works are set afore vs, it is to the end that we should knowe his maiestie, and yeld him his woorthise prayse . Job hath told vs that the earth is sounded and settled vntoo this day by a woorderfull meanes. VVe go vpon it dayly, and yet there are verye fewe of vs that thinke vpon that which hath ben spoken, that we myght fare the better by it . Again when it is sayd vnto vs, that God byndeth the waters in the Clouds, and yet the Clouds sink not: behold, it is a miracle that wee see dayly with our eyes, and yet no man thinketh vpon it but verye slenderly, so as it lippeth away from him, and the sayd power of God is not honored at our hands . For this cause, Job mynding to protest, that he was none of the number of them, that passed brutishly through the world without knowing their maker, sayeth: I knowe that God byndeth vp the Waters in the Clouds . But forasmuch as this is a woonted thing to vs , we make no greate reckoning of it, howbeit that in the meane whyle God ceaseth not too shewe vs a maruelouse power in so dooing. Is it not a miracle that the waters shuld hang after that sort in the ayre, and abyde fast there ? VVe see that the waters doo flowe, yea and that the ayre is so fyne and thin, as it gieth place cotinually to them, and the waters are of their owne nature heauier than the ayre. And therfore the waters ought of reason to fall downe. Neuerthelesse we see they are hild there as it were in Tubbes, according as it is sayd in the Psalmes. For the Prophet meening to expresse the miracle which is misknowne of men, vseth that similitude . Now then wee see what this verse importeth where it is sayd, that God byndeth vp the waters in the cloudes, yea even without sinking of the cloudes. This is to shewe vs, that as oft as the cloudes gather in the ayre, and wee see the waters inclozed in them, and yet the earth is not drowned by them: that commeth to passe bycause God stretcheth out his hand . And therby let vs knowe, that he sheweth himself too vs, and would make vs to perceyue what power he hath, namely an infinite power, and meeneth to wake vs, bycause that when the wether is fayre and cleere, we regard it not, neither perceyue his glorie that sheweth it self after that maner. And therfore he myndeth too teache vs after another new fashyon , by sheeting vp the waters in that wyse, 60 and by lodging them in the ayre, so as they hang there, and are hild as it were in a bottle, tub, or barrell . By the sight hereof God vpbraydeth vs with our vnthankfulnesse, and calleth vs home to him, shewing vs that in all cases he hath a woondefull power. But wee see, and see not . If any man aske how the thing that Job speaketh of is possible. VVe bee conuincyd by verie reason, and it is a thing that appeereth euidently, that God is aboue the order of nature: and yet for all that, there is none of vs all that is touched at it, nother do we acknowledge him but by compulsion. Heerin therfore it is to be seene, that men (as much as in them is) do darken Gods glorie, and thrust it vnder foote. And so much the more ought we to bee warned to marke the thing that is told vs heere, when we see the alterations that are in heauen and earth. God could well make the ayre alwayes close, or alwayes fayre, that there shold never bee clowde. But it is his will too haue chaunges. For if things continued at one stay, we would fall asleepe, and wee would imagin that fortune gouerned. But now in such varietie, we bee constreyned whither we will or no, to think that Gods had woorketh, and that he is not ydle in heauen, and that he hath not onely created the world once, & afterward let it alone there, but also that he disposteth all things, and guideth his creatures after such a sort, as he will haue vs to knowe that he is neere at hand to vs. Lo then whervpon we ought to muse when we see the skye troubled, and clowds thickeined in the ayre, and rayne and alteracions of seasons: namely that by that meane our Lord sheweth himself to vs, and draweth vs vnto him bycause we consider it not y-nough of ourselues. Thus ye see what we haue to marke in this streyne. And it is sayd, that he withholdeth the face [or sight] of his throne, and putteth a cloud before it when it pleaseth him. The Hebrew word that Job vseth, signifieth sometimes to set vp, and somtymes also to ioyne or close together, as whē a man maketh Barres of yron for a building, to ioyne the timberwoork and the stones togither, sherting them one within another, that they may hold fast with the mortar. It is sayd then that God maketh such a barre at the foresyde of his Throne, for heauen is termed his seate. Not that he is inclosed in it (for wee knowe that he filleth all things, and that his béeing is so infinite, that it is spred through the earth as well as through heauen:) but to teache vs to looke vpward whē we intend to thinke vpon God. For such is our insimilitie and rudenesse, that in stead of exalting God, we dayly abace him. So then, as oft as there is any speaking of him, it behoueth vs to lifi vp our mynds to worship him with al reuerence, and we must not thinke vpon earthly things to surmyse aught of him after our owne deuyce and fanzie. Lo why Gods throne is in heauen, according as the scripture sayeth. It is not (say I) for that he is shet vp there: but to shewe vs the hyghnesse of his maiestie, too the end wee should not surmyze of him after our owne fashyon, and after our owne rude, grosse, and beetleheaded wit, as menterme it. To be short, it behoueth vs to mount aboue all creatures, if wee intend to thinke vpon God ryghtly. But now let vs come to the sentence where it is sayd, that God hath made a barre in his Throne.

And truly if wee marke well the order that is in heauen, it is a thing that ought to rauish our wittes. All the Philosophers haue ben very inquisitiue and curiose in searching what the heauen should be, and of what nature it is. But all is but coniectures, so as the best conclusion that wee can make, is too acknowledge that God hath made there such a principall peece of woork, as it behoueth vs all to woorder at it, confessing our selues vnable too comprehend so hygh, so profound, and so secret a thing. And so it is not without cause, that Job intending to magnisie the maiestie of God, speaketh heere of the sayd Barre which he hath made in the foreside of his Throne. Afterward he addeth now again, that God spreadeth out a cloude vpon it when he listeth. When we see the sayd alteration, it is not to the end wee should knowe, that God hath stablished an order in things, and that whē

he had once created the world, he meant to bee ydle euer after: but that he dayly guydeth and gouerneth all things that he hath once created, holding his hand continually bothe vpon heauen and earth and vpon al things else, and shewing himself to be our father, and making vs to feele it. So then let vs not bee so blynd in looking vpon the skyes, as not to perceyue the liuely image of Gods maiestie, and of the wonderfull power that he sheweth there. For it were better for vs that our eyes were picked out, than to haue the fruition and sight of these goodly works of God, except we procede to turne them to our behoof, by mounting vp to the authour of them. The brute beasts shall bear no blame for their hauing of the lyght: and that is bycause they haue no reason to knowe the woork-mayster. But on our part, it is certaine, that there shall neede none other thing to condemne vs before God, and to take all excuse from vs, but that besides our eyes, he hath also giuen vs some reason and vnderstanding, too comprehend the woonderfull things that he sheweth vs bothe aboue and beneath. Ye see then wherof we haue neede to be warned. And for the same purpose is it, that the holie Ghost setteth before vs this varietie which is in heauen, wherof we will speake yet more hereafter. To be short, the cheef point of our life is, that being partakers of all the things which God hath created to our vse, we should lerne to magnisie him that hath giuen vs such grace, and not possesse his creatures without dooing him homage for them. Lo in effect what is shewed vs heere. Job addeth immediatly, that he bath set boundes to the waters, even vntil lyght and darknesse come too an end. Behold yet another woork of God well woorthie to bee remembred, namely, that the waters bylowe are bounded, and that God holdeth them fast, so as they cannot passe their bounds: and that the saue indureth and shall continually indure vnto the worldes end. He had spoken afore of the waters aboue, that is, of the waters that God draweth vp in the clouds, and are hild in the ayre till he make them poure downe in rayne: and now it is certaine that if God did not bound the sea and the other waters, all the earth should be couered with them. If a man aske the Philosophers and such as serche the whole order of nature: they will confess that if the Elements had their full scope through out according vnto their nature, the earth should bee hidden vnder the water: and in good sooth, experience shewes it to be so. For why is the earth in the middle of the world, but bycause it is firme and substantiall by reason of his weyght? For the waters are lyghter, and therwithall they shedde, so as they are not so firme. Consequently the ayre is aboue the waters: and the fyre is also aboue the ayre. VVee see then that the Elements are distinguished according too their properties. Seing that the ayre inuironeth the whole earth (as wee see:) the waters also ought too goe round betweene them bothe, that is to say, betweene the earth and the ayre. For that is their propre place and situation. And like as the fyre ouerspreadeth all: so also would the waters not leaue one foote of dry ground: the very mountaynes, yea eu'en the hyghest of them shuld be couered vnder the. But now we see lowe & holowe places abyde drie, and yet the Sea mounteth aboue the. And so a man may perceiue the reason that I shewed before. For whē we consider what a thing the sea is, specially whē it riseth aloft: it is a wonder that the earth is not ouerwhelmed by it. VVee see heere a notable miracle: yea, if men did not shet their eyes through their owne vnthankfulness. The verye heathen men (as reason driveth them therewnto) acknowledge, that whereas it pleased God to haue some place vnyld, the same was too plant mankind in it in it : and that he had a respect vntoo men when he or-deyned a part of the earth to abyde drye : the verye infidelles speake this. And why? For the truthe is so strong, as they are inforced too confess it. But in the meane whyle, who is he that glorifieth God? How doo wee acknowlede the good that he hath doone vs? wee be dumb for any praysing of him: and (which woorse is) wee defyle the earth which he hath giuen vs too dwell vpon. He hath made the waters to withdrawe themselues, and he hath as it were fettered them vp in cheynes : and although he give vs roome heere to dwell vpon : yet (as I sayd) we defyle the earth with our filthiness and sinnes. Verely, all the acknowledgement that God receyueth at our hands, is that no man openeth his mouth to glorifie him. And so it is not without cause that these things are told vs, considering how our witts are so dull as wee think not vpon them. Specially wee must marke that which shall bee sayd new againe according also as it is spoken of cheefly by the Prophet Ieremie : which is, that the Sea is so violent a thing, as there Lev. 5. 12. seemeth to bee no meanes to hold it in: and yet for all that, it is barred within listes. The sea seemeth to threaten to drowne the earth, and it seemeth that the earth should bee swallowed vp at the rushing forth of euery wawe.

Considering then that wee see so greate a violence in the sea, which is so terrible a thing as it maketh the heares to stand vp vpon our head: must wee not needes behold there the mightie and invicible hand of God, and confess that his power which is spoken of heere, is 30 more than manifest? So much the more then ought we to be touched to the quicke with it. But what? when God maketh the Sea to remoue after that sorte: we haue not the wit too knowe Gods infinite goodnesse towards vs, and his like power, to yeeld him thankes for it, and to confesse our selues beholding to him diuerse wayes for our lyfe: not only for creating vs and putting vs intoo the world, and for nourishing vs heere: but specially for that the earth is not drowned vnder the waters, and that there is some drye ground left for vs to dwell vpon. Behold (I say for what purpose heere is speciall mention made of the sea, and of Gods withholding of it, so as the waters are after a sorte shet vp in it, which thing no cheynes nor cordes could bring to passe.) All the wyld beasts of the world myght easlyer be tamed than the Sea: and yet God ruleth it, yea and ouerruleth it after a won-derfull and incomprehensible maner. And it behoueth vs too marke the saying that Job addeth heere: which is, that the same shall continue till lyght and darknesse come to an end, and bee meddled togither. This is to do vs to vn-derstand, that God doeth not this miracle for one day or for a short tyme, but alwayes, so as the same hath and shall continue for euer. For although the often surges rush forward and backward. Yet notwithstanding, God doeth always restrayne the Sea from winning any further than it pleaseth him too threaten men withall, to the end they should lerne too humble themselues and too walk in greater warinessse. Thus yee see how Job ment too augment the commendacion of the power that is declared heere too bee in God, when it is sayd, That the waters are bounded and bordered till the world come to an end, and till lyght and darknesse be mingled togither: that is to say, till the order of nature ceasse: for that is it that is imported in this maner of speche. If any manne alledge that not onely the Sea, but also the ryuers do some tymes get the vpper hande and so passe their boundes, as they teare vp al things before them, so that bothe howses and vineards are ouerwhelmed, and exceeding greate and excessiue breaches are made by violence of the Sea: The answer thereto is, that yet notwithstanding, God ceaseth not too perserue the worlde in generall, and his suffring of the Sea too passe his bounds in that wyse, is to make vs to thinke vpon his power which is shewed vs here. For if we were well aduyfed, (yea or if there were but a little reason in vs,) it is certain that we would daylye honor God for our lyfe, in that he preserueth vs euen in the graue. How are wee here vpon earth. Surely euen as in a graue.

For beholde, the sea and the waters are ouer vs. And of whome is it long that they swallowe vs not vp, but of God who holdeth his hand betwixt them and vs?
But wee bee so farre off from marking this, that wee become like swyne, filling our bellyes and pamper-ing our selues with Gods benefites, and not thinking one whit vpon the things which he sheweth vs to the eye: that is to witte, that we cannot lyue one minute of an houre, but by miracle: For it is he that brydeth the sea in such wyse.

God therefore to stirre vs vp to knowe his power, doeth well suffer the sea too passe his bounds. At the reporte hereof, wee thinke (or ought too thinke, (if wee bee not too blickish)) what leiteth that the lyke happeneth not too the whole world, but bycause God maynteyneth the order of nature which hee hath set for our safetye? So then all would become one gulfe and lake were it not that Gods hand ruleth it from aboue. Lo how wee ought too profit our selues by the souereintie which God hath ouer the sea and the waters: too the end wee may knowe what fatherly care hee hath of our lyfe: and feeling how muche we are bound vntoo him indeuer too serue and honor him, and too walke in his obedience with all warinessse. Furthermore if any manne reply, that these are common things and needlesse to be preached of as nowe, bycause euen yong children doo knowe them: it is so much the woorse.
For if wee neede not too haue gone to schoole, nor to haue learned anye deepe cunninge for the knowing 40 of a thing that is so common and ordinary with all men, and yet shewe in effect, that wee beare it not at all in remembrance: are wee not so much the more vnexcusable.

Thus then wee see, that the cause why our Lord telleth vs such things as every man seeth and beholdeth, is bycause it is as much too say, as that wee doo wickedly abuse the sight that hee hath giuen vs, forasmuch as wee profyte not by the beholding of his creatures, too magnifie him in the power that he sheweth there.
Therefore although it bee no greate matter (too our seeming) too knowe that the sea and the waters are so restreyned, that the earth perisheth not: yet notwithstanding it is greate wisdome too conceyue well thereby that God therin declareth him selfe too bee our father and protector, giuing vs such experience of his goodnesse and power, as it becommeth vs not too be asleep at it. VVhen wee haue these things well printed in our myndes, wee haue profyted well, not onely for a day or two, but also for all the tyme of our lyfe.
60 For as the scripture sayeth, it is perfect wisdome too marke well Gods woorks, and too refer them too their ryght end.

Now it followeth immediatly, that the pillars of beauen shake, and that he maketh them afraide at his voice. After that Job hath spoken of the order that is daylye seene in the world, he addeth immediatly, that me see such mouings in the thunders and tempests, and that God maketh the heauie and ayre so to shake, as it seemeth that all should sink:

which thing is done after an other diuers maner, to make vs perceyue his mighty power and strenght, at leastwise if we had wit and reason to consider it. Surely heuen is not vpheld with any pillers, but it is a similitude that Job vseth heere, bycause, greate palaces and houge buildings which cannot stay vp themselues, are borne vp vpon pillers: like is if a man should builde a greate temple, it had neede to haue pillers to beare vp so greate a weyght. Euen so is it with the heauens, which see me to be as a building that requireth to haue pillers, and yet it hath none: but the power of God suffiseth this building wherevnto men cannot attayn. And in good foorth what power haue men to build, but by following that, which God hath shewed them? and yet is the same but a small spark of the infinite power and wisdome that are in him. Men then cannot make a hall of an hundredth foote in length and bredth, without pillers: but beholde the heauen is of infinite space in comparyson, and yet we see it is borne vp by the only power of God. Therfore where as Job speakeketh of pillers: his meaning is, that if it please God too send any tempest or thunder, the ayre roreth with it, and it is after a sort as if the foundations and pillers of heauen were shaken, to the end we might knowe, that God is hygh aboue all, and dwelleth there too gouerne all things. Not that he is shet vp there (as I sayd) but to the intent that therby wee might take warning to lift vp our harts and myndes, and to think vpon him to honour him with all reuerence and humilitie, and not imagin any fleshly and earthly thing of him. VVe see then that Iobs meening is, that like as God on the one side, sheweth vs his power by holding the Sea as it were in Cheynes, and by limiting it within bounds which it cannot ouerpasse, so on the other part, when it pleaseth God to make the thunder to rattle, and to moue any tempest in the ayre, then it seemeth that all should go to wrecke, and that nothing should be able to stand any longer. Thus ye see another particular wherin God maketh vs to perceyue his mightie power. And truely the heathen men had good skill to confesse the same, not through any finesse of wit, but only by common experiance, saying that when men heare the thunder and tempests, they must (maugre their harts) bee fayne to feele some inckling of the Godhead. Lo how the heathen men haue spoken. Yea and euен the despizers of God, filthie and beastly folk, which seeke nothing but to mocke al religion, bleating out the toungh at God and at all that can be sayd concerning his gouernement in the order of nature: euен they (I say) are abashed at the hearing of the thunderclappes, as experiance sheweth vs. VVhyso: Because our Lord giueth a token of his excellent power. And that is the reason why Job, (besides his discourse of the cōtinuall order of nature,) addeth now further the tempests, thunders and lyghtenings, to shewe that although men despise God wilfully, and be so hardharted as they wil not perceyue what God sheweth them: yet when God maketh the pillers of heauen to quake, shooting forth such thunderclappes as it seemeth that all shall go to wrecke: men are then inforsed to conceyue some feeling of the Godhead, and that there is some soueraine power aboue, which ouerruleth all. For things passe not at aduenture, and therfore there must needs bee some will and wisdome that gouerneth them. Lo to what purpose this sentece is alledged to vs. And therby we be warned, first how brutish our nature is. Is it not a pitie, nay rayther an ougly thing, that whereas wee bee reasonable creatures, yea and see me to haue such wisdome as wee shoud bee able to comprehend all things, and thervnto God giueth vs so greate signes of his maiestie bothe aboue and beneathe, manifesting himself vnto vs, and being always at hand with vs, yea and vttering himself after so familiar a maner vnto vs, as wee can wish no more, yet notwithstanding, we ouerpasse it, so as the thing entereth not into vs, no not although we be warned of it neuer so much: See yee not a greate and outrageouse frowardnesse? So then let vs vnderstand, that wee be so vntoward of nature, as all our seeking is to deface Gods glorie, and when the same is manifested vnto vs, we shet our eyes against it, and wil not perceyue it. VVherfore let vs assure our selues, that as oft as God lighteneth or thundereth from heauen, it is a playne vpbrayding of vs, as if he shoud say: ye cursed creatures, I haue planted you in the world, I haue giuen you the earth to dwell vpon, and I haue furnished you with all good things there: and yet notwithstanding wheras I haue ben liberall towards you to shewe my self a louing and mercifull father: you knowe mee not, you haue quenched all that beneficialnesse through a certaine spitefulnessse and wilfull stubbornnesse of your owne, and ali your seeking is to darken the lyght that is before your eyes. Seing the case standeth so, I must bee fayne too come too you after a terrible maner, and too summon you to make you to feele (spite of your teeth) that yee cannot eschew the incomprehensible maiestie that is in mee. Thus ye see that the thing which we haue to marke when thunders rise in the ayre, and when there is any other tempest: is that it is as much as if God should cast vs in the teethe with our frowardnesse and vnthankfulnesse, in that wee take no profit by the common and continuall order that is seene in heauen and earth, as in verye deede wee cannot open our eyes, but God sheweth himself to vs in all things. And heere yee see also to what intent these things are rehersed vnto vs, and that whereas the scripture hath spoken to vs of the generall order which is in the world, and which is seene ordinarily of all men: it setteth downe also the extraordinarie, according as heere is mention made of the thunders. And byandby after it is sayd, that he clyueth the Sea by his myghtie power, and appeaseth the prude of it by his vnderstanding. Heere Job repeateth that which he had sayd afore. True it is that it is another spycie of Gods power, when he sayeth that he clyueth the sea. For when the waues haue vp themselues, it seemeth that the sea should rush vppon vs and swallowe vp all. But when a man is in the middes of it, hee seeth a dreadfuller sight. For the waues seeme to be as mountaines, and the space betwixt them to be as a gulf, and yet there is no bottom to bee seene. That is it that Job ment in saying, that God clyueth the sea, and afterward appeareth the prude of it. And that suddeyn chaunge serueth too shewe Gods myghtie power the better. For if a man be in the middes of the Sea, in a greate tempest, and see so houge and hygh mountaynes of water: he thinketh not that the sea may bee calmed, not onely within the space of twoo or three hours, but also not within a whole yeaere after. It seemeth an impossibilitie, that so greate and contrarie a chaunge, should insue so shortly. And yet for all that, a man shall see that after the Sea hath ben so turmoyled, it becometh calme and quiet within a whyle. Seing then that things do chaunge so suddeinly, cannot men see the wonderfull power of God? This is it that Job met to vtter here. And therupon we may gather, that his intent was to expresse more cleerly and to aduaice more highly the thing that he had sayd afore. For generally he had sayd, that God had hounded the Sea: and now he sayeth that he clyueth it by his myghtie power. Thervpon he sayeth further, that God bath garnished the heauen by his spirit, and shapeth the flipperie Serpent. VVhen he speaketh heere

of the Serpent, he meeneth not any of the Serpents that are on earth: for to what purpose should he haue matched them with the heauen? But he speakest of the number of Starres which are commonly called the Serpent, because those Starres stand in a writhen rowe, after the maner of a Serpent that wrytheth his tayle. By reason of that wrything, that figure or shape hath ben termed by the name of a Snake: and that is, to the end that men might the better discerne Gods woorkes asunder, one from another. True it is, that folk haue intermeddled fables, yea euen wicked fables. For the diuell hath alwayes had this knacke with him, too turne men aside from the creation of the world, where they haue a singular auouchment of Gods maestie. Neuerthelesse the verye first vsing of the terme Serpent or Snake, was but only to teache men to looke the better vpon the order of the Starres. Again when as Job sayeth heere, that God garnished the heauens by his spirit, vnder one kind he comprehendeth the whole. And what are those Ornaments? what are those beautifyngs? They are (sayeth he) the Staires which giue fashyon too the heauen: for without them it were a waste thing, and our sight should be confounded. But forasmuchas we haue the Sunne by day, and the Starres by night: therby we know the better, that God thought it not ynough too haue made the welkin only in respect that it was necessarie for vs to haue ayre wherby to breathe, and also brightnesse to giue v. light from aboue: but also ment morcous to adde ornaments therunto. Therfore his setting of the Starres in the skye, and his decking of it with such beautie, is to the end that we shold be the more prouoked to magnifie him in his goodness, wisdome, and myghtie power, and finally that wee shold glorifie him by all meanes.

So wee see now, that Iobs setting of Gods woorkes before vs, was to witnesse, that he on his part had not liued in the world as the heathenish and skornfull sort do, which yeeld God no reuerence ne acknowledge his power and might to honour the same: but that he had priuied it every whit in his hart and mynd. Herewithall also we be warned, not to shet our eyes when God sheweth himself after that fashyon vnto vs, least the same vnthankfulness be cast in our teethe, namely that we be worse than brute beastes for our inioying of Gods incalculable benefits without yelding him any honour or seruice for them. And now for a conclusion Job sayeth, that the outleets of his wayes are there: and yet what peece of them doo wee conceyue? Or who is he that can comprehend his dreadfull power? Lo heere a conclusion that is woorthie to be well marked, according to the greate weyght thereof. For it is to no purpose for vs to behold Gods woorkes, except we conclude determinatly, that they passe all our vnderstanding and reache, and that they be so greate and hygh things, as we must of necessitie be dazeled at them. For when a man applyeth his whole studye too knowe God bothe in heauen and earth, and would fayne glorifie him in all his woorkes: if he thinke it possible to know all, surely he dishonoreth God. Can we do God a greater dishonour, than to go about to incloze his myghtie power within the capacicie of our wit? It is more than if a man would take vpon him too shet vp bothe sea and land in his owne fist, or to hold them betweene a cupple of his fingers: surely it is a greater madnesse. For the

heauen, and the earth, are not so greate things as the Injustice, power wisdome, and goodnesse of God: they bee but little marks of them. So then although men bee never so diligent in searching Gods woorkes: yet if they think themselues so sharpwitted as to atteyne to them, or so selfwise as to say, I knowe as much as is to be knowne, and I see now perfectly how good and wise God is: behold there is shamefull wrong offered him. VVherfore let vs marke well, that the cheef point which wee ought to beare in mynd in considering Gods woorkes, is to be-think vs of our owne weaknesse, and to knowe that our owne wit is to feeble to mount so hygh, so as wee must bee fayne too confess with Dauis, woonderfull are thy woorkes ô Lord, and who can recken them vp vnto thee? True it is that Dauid reckeneth them well, instructing Psal. 8.4.2. others to thinke well vpon it. Howbeit, after he hath b.10. & 104.24. sayd what he can: he addeth in the end, Lord who is it that can atteyn to them? Euen so is it sayd now in this streyne. Behold the Owtleets (sayeth Job): these (sayeth he) are but the suburbs. For if we will enter intoo the hart of Gods woorkes, wee shall neuer atteyne too it. VVe bee to flowe and to lumpish to mount vp so hygh. VVe bee not so lythe as to retch out ourselues so farre and wyde: nother haue wee such a liuelynesse in vs, but that all our wits must bee fayne to be ouerwhelmed. So then, when we haue applyed all our indeuer throughly to knowe Gods woorkes how excellent they bee: if wee atteyne not to the perfection of that knowledge, let vs remeber ourselues, that wee haue found but only the Owtleets, and that it is impossible for vs to come to the depth of them. For our capacicie wil not serue vs thereto. VVe bee to grosse and weake, and there is but a small peece of that in vs which is in him: insomuch that if the Angels of heauen came and preached vnto vs, yet could they shewe vs but a small part of Gods woorkes. And what shall mortall creatures then do heere bylowe? Sith it is so: let vs lerne too magnifie God in such wyse, as nothing may lette vs too yeeld him his due prayse. For although wee should all the tyme of our lyfe, imploy our whole witte too the glorifying and magnifying of him: yet were it impossible too discharge ourselues of the hundredth part of the dutie that we owe vnto him.

Now let vs fall downe before the face of our good God with acknowledgement of our sinnes, praying him to make vs so to feele them, that with hartie repentance and desire of forgiuenesse, wee may beseeche him to amend our misdooinings, and to ridde vs more and more of our vyses, too the end that whyle wee liue in this world, wee may inioy the greate good that he doeth vs, in applying the same to ryght vse, namely to the seruing and honoring of him in such wyse, as wee may not haue our eyes shet when he sheweth his maestie after so euident a fashyon. And forasmuchas wee bee as it were dazeled in our owne vnderstanding: let vs beseeche him too inlyghten vs by his holie spirit, and too waken vs from the drouziness wherein wee bee, that wee may not seeke any thing else, than too spend our selues in his seruice, and to incorage others thereto by our example, so as he may bee exalted and magnified of all men with one common consent, as he deserueth. And for performance thereof, let vs pray him to rayse vp true and faithfull ministers of his woord &c.

The xvij. Sermon, which is the first vpon the xxvij. Chapter.

Iob tooke vp his parable againe, and sayd.

1. Godliueth, vvhō hath take away my ryght, the almighty vvhō hath set my soule in bitternes.
3. So long as my breath shall continue, and the spirit of God is in my nozethrills.
4. My lippes shall speake no vvickednesse, and my tong shall vitter no deceyce.

Eere we haue stll the same matter that hath ben treated of heretofore.
For Iob vpholdeth, that he was not 10 afflicted for the faults which he had, committed, but that there was some secret reason, and that if he listed to debate and pleade the matter, he could justifie his case, not against God, but against such as would beare him downe that hee was a wicked man, and conclude that the afflictions which he indured, were bycause of the greatnessse of his sinnes. Iob then vpholdeth, that the cause which moued God to punish him, was not that he was wickedder than other men: but for 20 some secret and vnkownne reason to men, and therfore that it behoueth them to mount hygher, than to the or-dinarie justice of God that is shewed in his lawe. Now we see what the groundwoork of this chapter is. And therfore it is sayd, that Iob tooke vp his parable new again.
And to the intent that the thing which he sayeth may be of the more authoritie, he beginneth with a protestation that importeth an orthe. God (sayeth he) liueth, who bath taken away my ryght, even the Almighty bath set my soule in anguish: and yet for all that, I will neuer swarue. 30 And wheras I haue maynteyned my self too bee ryght-tuouse: that was not through any prude, nor for any hy-pocrisie, nor of any sturdinessse, nor for that I knew not that God myght afflīt mee after that sort: but by-cause I am not such a one as you make mee to be, nother will I euer graunt that Gods punishing of mee is for my deserthes, at leastwys if I be compared with other men. For you pretend a false and wicked thing: which is, that God handleth men in this world and in this present lyfe according to their woorthinessse and de- 40 seruings. But it is not so: for God doeth oftentimes de-ferre the punishments which he intendeth to lay vppon men, so as they be not perceiued till after their death. And on the contrarie part, diuers tymes he pretendeth signes of greate rigour against those whom he loueth, & which haue serued him faythfully. Therfore we must not make too much haste of Gods iudgements, nor think them to be executed at the first brunt: for then should God bee vnust. VVe see things disordered at this present: and what a thing were it if we looked and hoped not for a redresse hereafter in tyme too come? God were worse than blind. For we haue skill ynoch to say, that things go not as they ought to do. Then doeth it followe that eyther God knoweth not what he doeth, or else that wee must hope that he will one day iudge the world. And where as we hang in suspence, and our minds are hild in doubt, by reason that things are so confuzed: therin it is Gods will to exercise vs, and to shewe vs that as now is the time of our warre fare. Therfore like as in a battell a man knowes not who hath wone or lost so lōg as blowes 60 are given on bothe sides, and men are yet afrayd, but it is the victorie that sheweth who getteth the vpper hand, euen so must all things needs bee confuzed in such hurli-burlie of the world, insomuch that to mannes iudgement it cannot be perceyued nor hoped that God will set things in their ryght state again. No verely: and yet must wee wayt that he will do it neuerthelesse, howbeit nother to day nor tomorrow. Now doeth Iob hold an opinion here which seemeth straunge: which is, that God bath taken and plucked his right from him. For he seemeth heere to pleade with God in defence of his owne rightuousnesse: and secondly to accuse God of crueltie and outrage. Thus see yow two things which might bee verye straunge, if Iobs intent were not knowne. But let vs marke, that when he sayeth that God bath bereft him of his ryght, he meeneth not that God vseth a tyratnicall maner of dealing with him, nother meeneth he that himself is so righ-tuouse that God had not cause to punish him yet more rigorously: but rather he hath an eye too the ordinarie rightuousnesse that is written of in the lawe, and too the purpose of such as had condemned him. For (as I haue sayd) Iobs freendes went no further than thus: namely, God punisheth such as haue doone amisse, and is the father and Sauiour of good mē: Therfore it foloweth that Iob is a wicked man, and a despizer of God, and that all his life is out of order. And why? For men see he is punished with extremitie. If ye marke all the aduersities that happen commonly in this world, they bee not so greate as this is: and therfore it must needes be concluded, that God hath found this man to bee an outrageous sinner aboue all the rest. Lo what conclusion Iobs freendes made. But they delt yet worse: for they rested vpon the curses that are in Gods lawe, imagining that all of them must be accomplished in this present life, and that there is no more reward for the good and for the seruers of God after death, and that it is not to be thought that the wicked shall be punished any where else than here.

This is an ouerthwart expounding of Gods lawe. For although our Lord threaten that he will punish offendes: he meeneth not to restreyne himself to any certaine time.
True it is that this is ordinarily seene in this present lyfe, howbeit not continually: wee must not make a generall rule of it without exception: for that were a bringing of God to much vnder coram. So then we see, that Iob had the better ende of the staffe against his freendes: and therfore let vs beare in mynd how it hath ben told afore, that it standeth vs in hand to haue greate discretiō in iudging of the afflictions that God sendeth, as well vpon ourselues as vpon our neyghbours. For if we should conster Gods loue towards vs, according too his present hadling of vs: it were inough to make vs despaire at euery blowe. True it is, that if he punish vs, wee be always well worthie of it: but howsoever the world go, if we should i-magin that God hateth vs bycause he hadleth vs roughly: alas, what a thing were it: VVe could not call vpō him, we could not haue any cōfort to assuage our sorow: & so ye see we should be vterly vndone. VVherfore it behoueth vs to be so wise as to know that Gods affilting of men is not always for their sinnes, but bycause he is minded to exercise their paciēce, to tame their fleshly lustes, to bring thē wholy vnder his awe, & to teach thē, that in this presēt life they must no more but iourney through this world, as if he told thē that their rest & heritage is not here. And if we deale otherwise, it wil be ynoch to cast as many of vs in despaire as do suffer aduersitie. like as it was not lōg of Iobs freends that they vterly ouerwhelmed him not by standing vpon this point, that God punished him for some greate sinnes. For Iob at the hearing of such words, might haue bē caught with such a feare, as he should not have knowne what to do else, thā to haue takē himself for a dined & cursed mā. And so ye se how we also shuld do.

VVere

V Vere there no more but this pryde in condemning of innocents, what a thing were it? So then let vs remember well how it is sayd in the Psalme, that blisſed is that man which iudgeth discreetly of him that is in aduersitie: so that if we ſee Gods chaſtizementes, we may profit our ſelues by them, not looking only vpon ſuch as ſuffer hardneſſe, but also vpon our ſelues. Moreouer let vs not alwayes meaſure mennes ſinnes by their affliſtions: for oftentimes the good are handled roughlier than the bad. Therfore it behoueth vs to examin mennes liues 10. throughly before we fall to concluding too ſay, Such a man is puniſhed of God for ſome greate ſin that is in him. But we do know who be wicked: do we fee that God puniſheth them? Let vs stand in awe, knowing that God ſetteth them before vs as a looking glaſſe and as a lyuely image to ſhewe vs what ſhall befall vs, and what we haue to feare, if we returne not vntoo him. But if a man haue liued well, and wee perceyue not why he is puniſhed: let vs hold ourelues ſhort, and tary Gods leſure till he ſhewe vſ his iudgement, and let vs not bee 20 ouerhaſtie in the meane whyle. For whosoeuer holdeth not himſelf ſtill, it is certayn that he may peruerſe Gods iudgements at euery turne by miſiudging them, and conſequently he ſhall vſurp the authoritie that belongeth to God alone. And ſo let vs come again to that which Job ſayeth now: which is, God haſt bereft mee of my iudgement. VVhat is the meening of theſe woordes? As I haue ſayd a-fore, Job meeneth not that God vſeth a tyrannicall faſhyon in dooing ſo. Marke that for one point. And again, he meeneth not that he hath ſo good right on his ſide, as 30 that he ſhall be able to get the vpper hand, and to cleere himſelf not to haue doone amifle, when the matter ſhall come to debating. But he declarereth only, that the affliſtion which he indureth, is as a thicke and dark cloud, which bereeueth him of the knowledge of the vprightneſſe that was in him: and therfore that his aduersities are not the punishments wherewith God manaceth the transgrefſers of his lawe. And for the well vnderſtanding hereof it behoueth vs too call to remembrance howe it hath ben declared alreadye, that the threatenings which 40 are conteyned in the lawe, (as that God will puniſh men bothe in their perſones, and in their goods, and in their houſhold, and in their cattell,) are not cotinuall: that is to ſay, although God puniſh with diſeases, with warres, with deaſth, with famin, with droughe and with other ſuch like things: and although he puniſh the offendres, and diſpyzers of his woord: yet doeth it not happen ſo alwayes after one rate. VVhy? For oftentimes affliſtions are common bothe to good and bad. And why then doeth God threaten afterthat ſort? It is to ſhewe that he hath a iudgement to come. As now he giuereth but ſome ſig- 50 nes and tokens of it, ſor if he ſhould perorme all his iudgements perfectly heire beneathe, what would become of it? There would be no more hope. To what purpoſe ſhould the coming of our Lord Iefus Chrift ſerue? Or what would become of the confeſſion of our fayth, where we ſay, I beleue the Resurrecſtion of the fleſh, and the life euerlaſting? Now we knowe that our pre- ſent lyfe is tranſitorie and corruptible: and not only that, but alſo that it is ſubiect to manye miſeries. Then have we not the felicitie that God promiſeth vſ: but that is hidden from vſ. And therfore it behoueth that the wicked alſo be puniſhed but in part as now, and that God giue them reſpit, and refue the damnation which they haue deſerued, vnto the laſt day wherein Iefus Chrift ſhall iudge the world fuliſhly. And then ſhall this ſaying 60 of Eſay bee fuliſhed, that all knees ſhall bow before the maieſtie of God. The ſame thing is doone now, how-beeit but partly. Then is it ſufficient that as now he giueith vſ but ſome inckling that he is iudge of the world. But let vs returne too Iobs woordes. How doeth God bereue men of their right? It is by puniſhing them in ſuch wyſe, as they may ſeeeme to be viterly reiected, and by bending himſelf againſt them as his mortali enemis. For then (too outward apperance) it cannot bee ſayd but that men are wicked and accuſed. And why? For wee muſt hold this for a maxime and generall rule, that God is good. And ſo it muſt needs bee ſayd, that ſuch as are his enemis, are euill. Now then, if wee ſee a man affliſted with ſuch extremitie, as it may ſeeme that God is viterly inflamed againſt him, and his wrath is preciſely bereit againſt him: according to our naturall reaſon wee can conceyue none other, but that ſuch a one is the enemy of God. Iob therefore meeneth that his ryght was bereft him, becauſe God had ſet his ſoule in anguylh as he himſelf addeth: The almyghtie (ſayeth he) hath ſet my ſoule in anguylh. For ſo long as wee perceyue not the cauſe why God hath puniſhed him ſo, ſo long his ryght is as it were buryed, inſomuch that he may ſeeeme to the world to bee a wicked and detestable perſone. But let vs marke well, that he ſpeaketh heire after the common opinion, and meeneth not that God hath not ryghtfull reaſon ſo too doo, ſpecially in his owne ſecret purpose, but that it behoueth vſ too mount vp hygher, and too ſtye aboue all the thicke and dark clouds that darken the lyght, or else wee shall neuer knowe Iobs ryghtuousneſſe. So wee ſee there is a double ryghtuousneſſe in God: the one which is manifest vnto vſ bycauſe it is conteyned in the lawe, and alſo hath ſome agreement with the reaſon that God hath giuen vſ: and the other which paſteth all our vnderſtanding. Therefore we comprehend not this but by fayth, and wee muſt rather honour it as a thing hidden from vſ, wayting for the comming of the latter day, wherin wee ſhall ſee the things face to face, which are now dark and hidden from vſ. The ordinarie rightuousneſſe of God which is conteyned in his lawe is his voutsafing to ſuccour vſ at our neede, and his ſhewing that he hath a care of our welfare when we feare him and ſerue him. For if wee walk in his obedience, accounting him for our father: then doeth he alſo ſhewe, that he auoweth vſ to bee his. All the benefits that the faythfull receyue at Gods hand in this world for walking in his feare, are as it were ratifyings of the ſayd ordinarie rightuousneſſe that is conteyned in the lawe. True it is that wee can neuer deſerue that God ſhould pitie vſ. For whatſoeuer wee doo, yea even when wee bee gouerned by his holiſt spirit, it is certain that our woorkes are still ſoyled, and that God may of good ryght reieſt them. As for oure ſelues, wee are not able to thinke one good thought: But although God gouerne vſ, and although he woork in vſ: yet is there alwayes ſome faultineſſe in vſ, and we mingle our owne infirmities in ſuch ſort with the grace of his holiſt ſpirit, as al that euer proceedeth from vſ is defiled. Then can wee not deſerue aught at Gods hand.

Howbeeit forasmuchas hauing once called vſ, he ſpareth vſ, and forgiueth vſ the vices that are mingled with the good deſire that wee haue too ſerue him: he doeth ſtill reward the faythfull that haue indeuered to followe him and his wiſ, I ſay he rewardeth them in this world, and ſheweth that he did not ſhet his eyes at the good zeale that they had to ſubmit theſelues to him, but aloweth it & liketh wel of it. Ye ſee the how God manifeſteth his ordinarie rightuousneſſe by fauoring thoſe that are his & haue fully ſubmitted theſelues vnto him, at leaſt wife so farreforth as the weakenesse of their flesh will beare. For when I say fully, I meene not perfectly in all points, but vnfeynedly, according also as the holie scripture speakeith. But contrarywise when God punishethi whoremongers, theeuers, and drunkards : euen that also is his ordinarie rightuousnesse. If wee see a wicked man that shall haue fleeced his neyghbours, and playd the cruell beaste in eating vp and deuouring other mennes goods, and God bloweth vpon his substance , so as nothing remaineth to him: the same is a true shewe of Gods Iustice, 10 and an assured warrant that euill gotten goods waste away: and it maketh vs too acknowledge that God is a judge. Again when murtherers be punished likewise, we

Psal.55. d.24. consider how it is written , that the cruell man shall not liue out half his dayes . and so is it also with other misdoers. VVe see how skorners skoffe at God, and repine at him, and aduaunce them selues against him with excesse rage:and God ouerthroweth them. Sith then that wee see the wicked so punished already in this world: ought we not to thinke that it is God which sheweth him self to be the iudge in so dooing ? Ought not the heare to stand vp vpon our head when wee perceyue him too stretch out his arme so mightely to execute his Justice? Thus ye see Gods ordinarie Iustice, that is to wit, the Iustice which we perceyue [to be executed] according as it is conteyned in his lawe. But herewithall wee see also that good men are afflicted, that God impouerisheth such as haue indeuered too walk soundly, and that the man which is not giuen to any wickednesse, doeth neverthelesse linger in peyne all his life long, so as he hath much 30 a do to go vpon his leggs . And how comes that to passe? what is the cause of it ? VVe cannot tell, nother are we able to determine . And why ? For God reserueth the reason to himself. This therfore is no point of his ordinarie Iustice, nother must it be measured all after one rate.

Again, we see the wicked in prosperitie, and that not only for a day or twoo (as hath ben sayde afore): but for all the time of their life. Yea and euen whien they die, it is as it were with laughter , and they go away as it were in a sleepe. For they bee taken out of the world in the turning of a hand, without any long pyning or suffering of much peyne. And what meeneth that ? Truly we must not blame God with vnrightuousnesse, wee must not sharpen our tong against him. But it beloueth vs to knowe that he hath a hygher kind of Iustice or rightuousnesse than our wit can reache vnto, and wee can neuer atteyne vnto it, but the reason must still bee hidden from vs. Neuerthelesse we must not ceasse too honour his secret iudgements, and to submit our selues vntoo him, in wayting till he discloze the thing vntoo vs, which he reserueth as yet to him self in his owne secret determination . Lo how God hydeth mennes right from them . So then according to that which wee haue sayd, if a man be punished after that sort, what will bee sayd, but that he is a wicked person ? And yet for all that, he is not so . True it is that all men are sinners, and God might iustly destroy vs and damne vs when he listed: but he will not doo it . For he reknowlegeth his owne for rightouse, and layeth not their sinnes to their charge. 60 True it is also that to bee acquit, it behoueth them too condemne themselues before God : and yet will he acquit them howsoever the world go. Notwithstanding, he chastizeth them in the meane whyle. Too what purpose? Is it to destroy and vndoo them? No: but he hydeth their right, that is to say, he sheweth not openly that he accoueteth them as his children, nor that he hath forgiuen their offences: and yet hath he doone it, notwithstanding that our wit be not able to comprehend it. Furthermore let vs mark also, that Job hath a further eye to the vntoward misweening and false opinion that men conceiue in being ouerhaultie when they tarrie not patiently till God shewe them wherfore he afflicteth those that are his. For if we were so discrete and modest as not to giue sentence of condénacion vpon such as are afflicted, we shuld not find Gods proceedings straunge, nother should wee say that God withholdeth the right. But as soone as wee see a poore man greatly afflicted: byandby every one of vs rush at him and condemne him. Such perplexities therfore are a cause that a mannes right is buried . For to our seeming God ought at the first dash to maynteyne the cace of such a one as is rightmynded before him. Neuerthelesse he doeth it not, but maketh countenance otherwyse. So he reserueth the iudgement to him selfe in suffering men to iudge amisse of vs, and to speake amisse of vs , and as it were to abhorre vs, and in letting vs alone in that pliight as good as ouerwhelmed . And marke the cause why it is sayd that he will make the Psa.37.4.6. ryghtuousnesse of his seruants too shyne foorth as the breake of the day . The giuing of this promis is not as much to say as it shall alwayes bee performed to eysight: for it behoueth vs oftentymes to abyde shame and reproche . Yea and Sainct Paule himself sheweth it, I say euen he that had liued in angelicall perfectnesse, sheweth that he was subiect therevnto, and not only that he was cast vp too many flaundrouse reproches, touching his owne pryuate life : but also that he was misreported as touching his office : insomuch that wheras he had handled the doctrine saythfully and purely, yet notwithstanding men were so vnthankfull, as they ceassed not to report euill of him . VVell (sayeth he) I appeale to the day of our Lord which is to come. He sheweth that oftentimes in this world thare shal be the troubles that are mentioned heere, so as a man shall not bee able too discerne betweene whyte and blacke , but the best scruers of God shall bee flaundred and wronged . And why is that? Because that when men see them afflicted, they alwayes conster it in euill part, according to mannes inclinacion which is giuen to misdeeming . Then let vs mark well, that God doeth then bereue men of iudgement, when he appereith not at the first brunt, eyther to defend vs or to shewe that he holdeth vs for rightouse: and when he taketh not our cace in hand , but suffereth vs too bee condemned by men : and finally when he increaseth our afflictions more and more, and therevpon men harden themselves against vs, that is too say, become so peruerse, as to iudge all things contrarie to the ground of them , and to gather so much the more boldenesse too them saying : O, I may well say it, for may not men see still how he is handled ? Thus ye see the good men are ouerfore oppressed, and God shrinketh aside, and maketh no countenance of accounting them for rightuous, but rather seemeth to warre against them, and to intend to condemne the aboue all others. Now then we see that Job blasphemeth not God in saying that he had bereft him of his right . And we see after what sort it behoueth vs to make our profit of this excellent doctrine . Then let vs vnderstand , that God may oftentimes bereue vs of our right, and yet wee shall not haue wherof to accuse him, or to complayne of him, nother shall we amend our cace by pleading against him. For he hath his secret rightuousnesse which it behoueth vs to honour, till he make vs to know it. His mind is to exercise vs at yet in loweliness: and when he woorketh after so straunge a fashyon towards vs, as we cannot understand it : he doeth it too keepe vs in awe , and too make vs too glorie him in saying,

saying, True it is Lorde that I am here as a poore blinde soule in the darke, and I see not a whit in this behalfe: but yet art thou rightuouse. Although thy iudgements bee a bottollesse pit in this cace, so as I cannot enter into them: yea and although I be as good as buried in death, yet will I confess thee to be rightuous ô Lorde. VWhen we go so to worke, the haue we profited by the afflictions that God sendeth vs, whereof the reasons are not apparent vnto vs. Furthermore let vs practise that which Job sayeth here: which is, that if God bereuee vs of our iudgement, wee muste not therefore forebear to holde him alwayes for our God, and to humble our selues vnder his maiestie, according as it is sayde, the Lord liueth who hath bereft mee of my iudgement, euen the Almighty who hath set my soule in anguish. Here Job playeth not the restie horse. For al-though he haue doublet anguish: yet knoweth he well that God hath all dominion and superioritie ouer him. For he would not say God liueth, except it were to honour him, as if he should say, Lord I am thy silie creature, and thou haft all power ouer mee. I sayde he was in doublet affliction, which thing we ought to marke well. For wee haue scene how he was persecuted both in his goods and in his perfone, so that he indured as much as was possible for a mortall wight to indure. And yet had he another affliction, which is, that he was tormented by such as came to moue him to despayre. For it passed all other miseries, to haue it sayd to him, God hateth thee, thou seest well ynough that thou haste no more access to him, it is in vayne for thee to looke for any easse at his hande: for he is against thee, and he giueth thee a sure token of it in afflicting thee after this manner. VWhat shouldest thou do but condemne thy whole life afore passed? if thou wilt haue any mercie at Gods hande, thou muste chaunge altogether, and acknowledge that hitherto thou haste bene starke naught, a mocker of God, and a man full of hypocrisie and lewdnesse. Thus then ye see the two afflictions that Job indured, and yet notwithstanding honored God still. For he sweareth by his name: howbeit not as men do now adayes which blasphemie God in swearing. For doubtlesse what else are the othes that are sworne now adayes for the most parte, but reproches vnto God in despizing his name? Like as if a man sweare at aduenture, he sheweth well that he regardeth not the name of God, which ought to be holy in our sight, that when soever we heare any speaking of it, wee ought to caste downe our heads, and acknowledge the infinite glory that is in him. But contrarywise the name of God runneth roundly in our mouthes in way of mockage. And therefore looke how many light othes a man maketh, so many are the reproches and iniuries wherewith he disgraceth the name of God. Againe there are also forswearings, which are yet more heynous: in so much that after a man hath invred himself to swaire foolishly, he goeth forward with it to falsifie the truth & to turne it into a lie, and the name of God shall run in such wise with it, as it shall be a pleasure for me to thinke vpō it. But Job in his swearing had an eye to the principali poynt: which is, that when wee sweare by the name of God, we must acknowledge him to be our iudge, yelding him his due authoritie, by setting our selues before his throne to be cōdemned by him if we haue done amisse. VVe see then how Job acknowledgeth his afflictions to come of Gods hande, and dea-leth not stubbornly. He kicketh not agaynst his mayster like a restie lade, but humbleth himselfe and sayeth, God liueth how soever the world goeth. True it is that I see my selfe to bee a forlorne man, and I indure so much, as it is impossible for mee to be so patient as I ought to be. Yet will I not be so desperate as to play the mad bedlem, and to say, I know not what God is, I would he would let me alone, and that he had no more power ouer me: but contrarywise I know him to be my iudge, and to haue all au-thoritie: I will not imbase the mightie power which he hath ouer me, but I will holde me alwayes vnder his hād, acknowledging my afflictions to be of his sending. And therfore not without cause haue I sayd, that we haue here an excellent doctrine. For we be taught, first to acquaynt our selues with chastizement and correſtiō at Gods hād. VWherefore when we happen to be tempted to despayre, and feele such a fearfulness in our selues as wee thinke our selues to be alreadie in hell: let vs acknowledge our owne frayltie, & leane vnto this, namely that God hideth our iudgement, and bereueeth vs in such wise of our right, as we seeme to our selues to be forlorne, and paste all recouerie. VVel then, God hideth away our right. And what is to be done? wee must cast downe our heads, and tarie till God lift vs vp by the chin, and redresse our state, and set vs vp againe, and maynteyne our cace: so that if wee bee oppressed and turmoyled by men, if folke bleare out their tungen at vs and make a iestingstocke of vs: yet must not we lose our courage. And why? For we see the example that is set downe to vs here. Behold then how the faithfull ought to come to this practize to profite the selues by it. And although they cannot conceyue the reason of the things that God doth to them: yet neverthelesse they must alwayes become so lowly, as to say: Lord deale thou with vs as it shall please thee, and therewithall giue vs power to prayse thee alwayes in thy workes, and to say, the Lord liueth although that we be confounded. Thus yee see what we haue to marke in this streyne: and now it will bee easie for vs to knowe the things that are contayned in it. And sith we haue compryzed the whole summe, wee neede no more but to ioyne and cloze the sentences that follow, vnto it. For Job sayeth, that so long as he liueth there shall not passe any deceyte nor wicked woord out of his mouth. Hereby he sheweth, that he speaketh as in the presence of God. And that is a thing well woorthis to be noted. I haue tolde you oftentimes in expounding this booke, how there is a ouercommon vice among mē which marreth them: which is, that they be so wedded to the world, as they never come in the presence of God to examine themselves there. As how? If menne blame vs falsly: we rest so much vpon them, as wee enter not into our selues to examine our selues before God. But what is to be done? The cleane contrarie: if we will answer men well, let vs first accuse our selues, and let vs be fully resolu-ed vpon it in our coscience before God, without hauing an eye to one man or other. For the cause why we be hypocrites in all our doings, and take so much payne to couer & colour our faults, is for that we would fayne keepe still the good reputation and credite that we haue among men. But contrarywise Job sheweth, that he setteth himselfe as it were in the presence of God, and that although he speake before men: yet is he not forepossessed with so foolish ambition, as to pretende to be vitterly blamelesse. No: but he iudgeth himselfe before God, and according as he findeth in his coscience, so layeth he forth the matter openly. So then let vs marke, that it is as euill a thing as can be deuized, to rest so vpon men, and not to begin at this poynt, that is to say, when we judge not our selues as in the presence of God, ne haue our eyes shet to the worldward, in respect of any opinion that men can conceyue of vs, or of any other thing that can be layde vpon vs. Therefore without hauing respect of any such thing, it behoueth vs to consider our selues in such cace as wee are in before God: and then shall we be rightly meeke ned, & not speake faynedly nor disguize things, knowing well that we can gayne nothing by so doing. Marke that for one poynct. And further let vs marke well this maner of speach which Job vseth. So long (sayeth he) as there shall bee any vnde or breath in mee, and so long as the spirite of God is in my nozethrilles. For he speakest not of his life as though he hilde it without the grace of God. True it is, that we may say, it is a thing common ynough, and no man will denie but we be beholden to God for our breth and for all the liuelenesse that wee haue: but yet for all that, howe many are there that acknowledge it in good ro earnest? menne liue here after so brutish a fashion, as it might be sayde that they take themselues to be susteyned of themselves and of their owne power. To be shorte, there are very fewe that know rightly, what S. Paule mea-Act.17. f.28. neth by saying, that we haue our life, mouing, and being in God: there are very fewe I say, which know that. And therefore let vs marke well how Job sheweth vs here, that he was not caried away as many men are, who are so dazed with their passions, as they haue no more skill at all, nother know what they say. True it is that vndiscrete woordes escaped him, (as wee haue seene, and shall see hereafter:) but yet neverthelesse, he alwayes hilde himselfe vpon the good fundation, and although the buyling were not suteable to the same, yet I say he hild himselfe in the feare and awe of God. And further lette vs marke well this circumstance, that Job speaketh not at his owne leysure and ease. Yee see he is in such afflictions, as God seemeth to be fully determined to destroy him vterly: & yet he honoreth him still for his life, acknowledging him to be the partie of whom he hath his lyfe. 30 And I pray you, what excuse shall wee haue if we be not fully resolued thereof, sith that God giueth vs releace too make vs mindefull of his grace, or if wee do not acknowledge and confesse that our life and all that ever dependeth therevpon, proceede of his grace and power? Shall wee not be the more vnexcusable? As oft then as wee think vpon our life, let vs remember that it behoueth vs to make the same confessio that Job maketh here: namely that there is nother blaste nor breath in me of mine owne power, but it is God that hath giuen me euerywhit 40 of it. True it is that when Job speaketh here of Gods spirite, we must not imagine as the phantaſticall sort do, who thinke that the very substance of Gods spirite is in them: for there is not a more abominabler heresie than that is. And it behoueth vs alwayes to marke ſuche maner of speaches in the holy Scripture, to the ende we fall not into ſuch heresie as to ſay, that Gods spirite is in vs as touching his very ſubſtance. For what a thing were that? It ſhould iſſue that Gods spirite were ſubiect to ignorance, to chaunge, and to mutabilitie, yea and that he were de- 50 filed and stayned with our ſinnes and vices. And yet neuertheleſſe (as I haue ſayde) it is a poynct that hath foretroubled the Christen church: like as the vnhappie Heretike that was puniſhed here, had a conceypt to ſay that mens ſoules were partakers of the ſubſtance of the Godhead. But that is a thing ſo horriblie and againſt nature, as a man muſt needes be vtterly growne out of kinde, ere he can come to it. So then let vs marke, that the ſpeaking of Gods spirite here, importeth not that the ſubſtance of him is in vs: but it is ment of his breathing, that is to ſay, of that which he infypreth into vs by his power according as wee ſee howe the Sunne abideth in the ſkie, and yet the brightnesſe of his beames doth in ſuch wife come to vs, as wee inioy his light and heat. But is that as much to ſay therefore, that we holde the Sunne here beneath? And in good ſothe, when as we ſee, that the Sunne by his power which he ſheadereth downe hither, cheereth the earth in ſuch wife, as it beareth frute and yeeldeth ſuſtenance to the nurriſhment of men: what ſhall the incōprehensible power do which is in God himſelf and in his ſpirite? Cannot the ſame ſpredde out it ſelf euen vnto vs, and yet notwithstanding, wee nothauſe any of his ſubſtance? So then let vs marke well, that the very ſubſtance of Gods ſpirite is not in vs: but his power is ſhedde forth in ſuch wife, as we liue by it, and are confirmed by meanes thereof, knowing that it behoueth vs to holde our life of God, according as it is he onely of whom wee holde all things, by the grace of his holy Spirite. VVherefore lette vs conſider, that if we ought to acknowledge Gods grace in the things that concerne this preſent life: much more ought wee to ſeeke in him the things that belong to the endleſſe lyfe, as the thing wherenvnto he calleth vs, ſhewing vs that wee muſte alwayes labour thitherwarde, till he haue deliuereſt vs from all the bandes and lettes of this preſent life.

Now lette vs fall downe before the face of our good God with acknowledgement of our ſinnes, praying him to bring vs ſo too his loue, that when wee knowe our ſinnes, wee may alwayes giue him glorie and prayſe, not doubtiſt but that if he ſcourge vs, the ſame is for our welfare and ſoulehealth. And yet notwithstanding lette vs leарne to ſubmitte our ſelues ſo farre vnto him, as wee may ſuffer our ſelues to be brought to nothing in our ſelues, that we may be ſtrengthened by his hand, yea and that ſo ſtrongly and mightily, as we may be able to withstande all temptations through the power and meane of our Lorde Iefus Christe, ſo that both in life and death he may alwayes finde vs obedient children, according as he ſheweth himſelfe a mercifull father towards vs. That it ſo may please him to giue this grace not only to vs, but &c.

The xcviij. Sermon, which is the ſecond vpon the. xxvij. Chapter.

5. God forbid that I ſhould iuſtifie you: I vvill neuer giue ouer mine innocencie till I die.
6. I vvill keepe my rightuousnelle, and not forſake it: and my heart ſhall not vpbrayd me vwith my dayes.
7. Cursed be he that gaynesayeth mee, and vvicked be he that tyzeth vp againſt mee.
8. For vvhat is the hope of the hypocrite, vwhen he hath heaped vp, and that God plucketh avvay his ſoule?

After that Job hath declared his minde concerning that which hee had ſayde, and ſhewed that he had not blaſphemed God, but onely meant that the afflictions which befell him came not by reaſon of his ſinnes, but for ſome extraordinarie purpose of God which was hidden from menne: he protesteth that he will ſtandē ſtedfastly in the ſame minde. And it behoueth vs to marke well this dealing: which is, not to ſettle our ſelues determinately vpon any thing, whereof wee bee not well assured aforhand. For that is the poynct wherin the wilfull ſort do differ from the good and allowable conſtant ſorte. If an vndiscrete person and ſuch

Such a one as weyeth not things by good reason and aduisement, conceyue a toy in his head : he can never bee remoued from it. But yet shall not such a one be named constant therefore : nother deserueth he to be commended. For there is not a worse poynt, than to maynteyne things without knowing what they bee. It is commonly sayd, that a fool's bolt is soone shotte. But as for him that not onely is hasty in iudging, but also wilfull in maynteyning : he muste needes bee an vnrecouerable foole. Therefore let vs marke well Iobs proceeding here. For first of all he declared his intent, and shewed himselfe not to be imbrewed with any false opinion, nor to haue any errore in all that he sayde, but that he had spoken the pure truthe. After the declaring of that, nowe he addeth this protestation, that he will never be remoued from his purpose which he knoweth to be rightfull and iuste. So then, whensoeuer we come to the iudging of any thing, let vs looke nearely to it and sift it throughly. And if we haue not skill ynoch to do it, (as it behoueth vs alwayes to acknowledge our owne rawnesse and infirmitie:) lette vs pray God too giue vs the spirite of skilfulness and discretion. But when a thing is well knowne to vs, so as we be fully resolued of it: lette vs not wauer any more. For it is a great shame that wilfull persones should sticke so faste to their fonde imaginacions, as they cannot bee drawne from them : and that wee should be so soone remoued from the truth when wee know it. There neede none other witnessesse nor judges too condemne our rashnesse and vncionstancie : than the very wilfull sorte that haue bene so wedded to their owne wyrte. And why? For if they, after they haue once allowed a thing, doo sticke stoutly to it, and cannot by any meanes be wonne from it: I pray you what is to be done by those to whom God hath giuen the knowledge of his truthe? Ought they not at leastwise to imbrace it, and too sticke stedfastly to it, yea and to stande fully resolued vpon it, howe much soever men labour to drawe them from it? Lo here the two poyntes that wee haue to marke in this streyne. The one is that wee should not bee hasty too maynteyne the thing that wee haue no skill of, and whereof wee he not well assured: but that wee should firs looke through it, and bee discrete to iudge well and rightly. Is it so? that is to say, do we know the matter perfectly? Are wee sure of the truthe? Then lette vs take courage to sticke to it, what soever come of it, and letvs not be shaken from it. And this declareth to vs the true nature of fayth. For wee beleeue not vpon a fickle opinion: at leastwise if we be well grounded in Gods truthe. As for such as say, I beleeue: and in the meane whyle haue no certaintie of Gods truthe, but onely some imagination: it is certaine that they be as it were bewitched by Satan, at leastwise if they be wedded to it, as men say.

Beholde the Turkes, they be sufficiently hardened in their errores: but ought that fastnesse or rather that steeplinesse of theirs too bee counted a fayth? No. And why? For there is no certaintie in it. Then behoueth it vs too vnderstande of whom wee holde our doctrine, that is to witte, that wee holde it of God: and wee must be fully perswaded, that it is he which hath called vs to his schole. VWell then, haue wee the fayde certaintie? VVee muste immediatly marche it with a purpose too perseuer in it, that wee bee not as many are, whiche bowe with euery blaste, and forgette what they haue learned afore, as soone as they heare any newe thing I wote not what: whereby they shewe that they never did so much as once taste of Gods truthe. VVhat is too bee done then? As I haue sayde, the thing that wee knowe to be good muste never escape vs, nother muste wee by any meanes bee turned from it: but wee muste so print it in our hearts, as wee may stande in it to the ende. Thus yee see alreadie what wee haue to remember in this texte. And furthermore whereas Job sayeth heere, God forbiddeth that euer I shoulde iustifie you: lette vs marke also, that it is no small fault before God, too make countenance of consenting too suche as maynteyne an euill cace and go against the truthe. For although a man do it not with his heart, but bee otherwyse minded in himselfe: yet is God blasphemed therein, for wee knowe howe great store he setteth by his truthe. So then, if there be any that maynteyne an euill cace, or set themselves against the truthe too deface it, or go aboue any wicked practyze: if wee doo but onely make countenance too cleave vnto them, or to their partakers: it is certayne that wee bee guylie of the same wickednesse before God. And so muche the better ought wee too minde this lesson, for as muche as now adayes wee see that moiste menne make no bones to agree with the wicked, or at leastwyse to beare them good countenance, although they millike of their euill doings. And although they would fayne that they were amended: yet notwithstanding, for auoyding of displeasure, and to shifte off such batteiles as are seene, they make a countenance to bow and yelde vnto them. As oft as they see the wicked astore and haue their full scope: they bee fayne too vale their bonnyttes too them. And although they vpholde not their euill with full mouthe: yet are they so farre off from speaking against it, as a man would thinke they were adherents and consenters to it. VVee see this so ordinarie in the worlde nowe adayes, as it is very rufull. There is no man that steppes vp to maynteyne good quarelles: but rather it is a common excuse too say, I will not meddle ouerhastely, I see I shall but bring my selfe in the briers, euery man will bee in my toppes, I will not make it mine owne cace. No? And are wee not woorthie to bee shaken of at Godshand if wee bee loth too maynteyne his truthe? But is it not a wilfull renouncing of God, and a separating of our selues from him of sette purpose, when wee giue any token that wee iustifie the wicked, and like of their euill cace? And what thinke wee to doo, or where to become? So then, it is not without cause that Job speakest heere with suche vehemencie as to say, God forbiddeth, and that he abhorreth the iustifying of vnrighousnesse as a thing that is exceeding haynous. And why? For it is as muche as to overturne the whole order that God hath sette. And heere yee see also why the Prophete Esay pronouncteth so terrible a curse agaynst suche as call good euill, and euill good: for hee sayeth it is a turning of the light into darkenesse. That then is another poynt which wee haue too marke in this streyne. God forbiddeth (sayeth Job) that euer I shoulde iustifie you. And he confirmeth his matter yet better by adding anon after, that curſid mought his aduersarie bee. True it is, that betweene those twoo verses there is a third: neuerthelesse it wil be good too matche these twoo sentencis togither. Curſid (sayeth he) mought myne aduersarie bee, and wicked be: be that ryzeþ vp agaynst mee.

Firs he sheweth himselfe to bee full sure of his hold: for he spireth all such as shal intend to striue against him, and defieth them as if he were at warre with them. True it is that a harebraynde person will peraduenture vse the like stoutnesse, and aduaunce himselfe agaynst the whole worlde without shrinking awhit. But I haue tolde you afore, that Job buylded not without laying of a sure and steadie foundation, but was fully esolued in Gods truthe. So then, whereas hee nowe defieth all suche as woulde fight agaynst him: hee sheweth that in such caces there is no playing on both handes, nor no being of neuters to rowe betweene two stremes: but we must be eyther on the one side or on the other, without fleeting too and fro, and marche on in true soundnesse, saying is this Gods cace? Then must all of vs bee aduocates in it and maynteyne it. Haue we conceyued any wicked quarell? Is there any token that the matter is against the truth? Let vs labour to thrust it downe, and let it not be suffered. For if we dissemble, we cannot denie but we be traytors to God. So then wee see the zele that ought to be in vs, not onely to confesse the truthe when we know it, and to shew that we holde it for good: but also to withstand all erours, and all false and wicked opinions. For it becometh vs to be inflamed with such a stoutnesse, as is shewed vs heere in the person of Job. Then let vs marke well, that when the doctrine of saluation and the thinges that belong to Gods seruice and religion do come in question: we muste not onely admittie that which we know to be good and true, yea euen with a teachable and obediēt minde: but also we must shunne all false opinions that are contrarie to the truth and not lyable vnto it. I say wee muste resist them fierly, and declare that al such as gaineſay vs, and agree not with vs are wicked and cursed, that is to say, to be hilde at our hand as enimies of rightuousnesse and truthe, because they refuze to joyn with vs in the obeying of our God, and are become rebelles, and reiect the truthe. Seing then that they separate themſelues in that wise from God, and so breake the true band of all vniue: it behoueth vs to haue open warre with them, & in no wile to agree with them. For as for them that are desirous to pleasure the wicked, and would fayne holde in with them, and therfore (as the Prouerbe ſayeth) do hold with the hare, and hunte with the hound: they shewe themſelues to beare two faces in one hood, and to play two partes in the enterlude without chaunging of their apparell. But God can abide no ſuch counterfayting. And therfore let vs remember well what is ſayde here: namely that the matter standeth not onely in ſaying, I am contented that ſuche a thing ſhall paſſe, and I will not ſtrive againſt the truthe: but if we wil ſhewe oureſelues to like well of Gods truthe, wee muſt maynteyne it out of hand, and all ſuch as ſet themſelues againſt vs, muſt be our enimies, & we muſt detest them, affirming oureſelues that there is no more agreement betweene truthe and vnruth, than betweene fire and water. Marke then what wee haue yet to note. Job addeth further, Tbat his heart ſhall not vþbrayde him with his dayes, or that he will not ſtep aside, or that he will not go backe. As touching the Hebrew woordē, it may be taken to offer reproche: and it may also be taken to wexe yong againſte: and therepon it commeth to be taken to recycle, or to returne backe. And this ſignification agreeth very well, when he ſayeth, My heart ſhall not retyrie backe, as though it waxed yong againſte. And how? Of my dayes: that is to ſay, of all the time of my lyfe that I haue paſſed. To bee ſhort, Job ment to betoken, that he would neuer ſwarue: but like as he had continued vnto that day to ſerue God, yea euen in all soundnesse: ſo he would not thenceforth ſtepp aside nor runne backe and become another man, but would be alwayes founde the ſame that he had bene knowne to be. And this is according to that which I haue declared alreadie: namely that for alſmuch as God hath bene ſo gracious to vs, as to inlighten vs in ſuche wile as we diſcernē betweene good and euill, and know what we ought to followe: it behoueth vs to take heede that wee be not fleeting, nor like wauering reedes, but that wee hold our owne ſtedfastly. So then, let vs looke well to our oureſelues, and when ſocuer God ſhall haue ſet vs in a good way, let vs not turne ſayle backe againſte, but let vs go forward ſtill. Yea and looke howe much the more that any man hath gone foreward, let him know that God hath bound him to be ſo much the more ſtedfast, and that it is the more to his shame and the heynouler vnruthenesſe in him, if he turne his backe and forſake his good way. Verely as ſoone as God ſheweth vs his will, it behoueth vs to bee taken in loue with it, and to indeuer to profite more and more, and neuer to ſtep aside. Therfore even at the first day, wee ought to be inflamed to follow Gods truthe, as ſoone as it is ſhewed vs. But when God hath bene ſo gracious to a man, as to leade him forth, not for a moneth onely, but for a yeaſe; three, or ten, ſo as he hath liued a long while in the knowledge of God and of his owne ſaluation: if he afterwarde become a rebeſl and a renegate, and holde not out to the laſt ſteppe: is it not a farre greater fault, than if a man that hath not yett taken a good and ſufficient deepe roote, ſhoulde turne away and overſhoot himſelfe through ſome lightenesſe? For if a man haue taſted what is good, and anon after do turne awaie from it: verely he ſhall not be excused before God: but yet wil men haue pitie vpon him for that he is ſo turned away before he haue receyued full iſtruction. But when a man hath folowed the right way a long time, and hath ſeemed to be of the conſtanter ſort, and yet is withdrawne frō it: what excuse can there bee for him? Thus ye ſee what Job ment to exprefſe in this ſtreyne, by ſhewing, that ſeing God had giuen him the grace to walke a-right, and he had of long time knowne what is good: his heart ſhould not now turne backe againſte. Then let euery of vs leare by his example, to conſider well the free fauour that God ſheweth vs when he vouchſafeth to draw vs to the pure ſayth of his Gofpell. For it behoueth vs to thiſke, that he hath bound vs more vnto him in ſo doing, than if all the ſolemneſt couenants in the worlde were paſſed betwixt vs. VVherfore let vs ſettle oureſelues to hold out to the ende when we haue begonne well, and let vs follow the way that God hath ſet vs in, affirming oureſelues that it is he that hath reached out his hand vnto vs. And further lette every of vs recken well the time, how long it is ago ſince we knew Gods truthe. How? It is a yeaſe, three, ten, or twentie ſince God diſclozed himſelfe vnto mee: and how haue I profitid ſince that time? Although I haue not gone ſo farre foreward as were reuiſite: yet for alſmuch as my God hath taken me into his house, and not ſuffered me to runne quite away, but hath graunted me the grace to holde out hitherto: what a thing were it if I ſhould nowe renounce him and give him ouer? were not that an ouerdaſnable vnruthenesſe? Lo howe euery man ought to call himſelfe to account, that he may conſirme himſelfe in the ſtedfastnesſe that Job ſheweth vs here in his owne perſone. And that is the poynſt which wee haue to marke. To be ſhort, wee ſee in this ſtreyne, that it is not lawfull for Christians in any wile to diſsemble, by making countenance that they beleeue a thing which notwithstanding they condemne in reaſon, and whereof they are affiſed that it is euill. Nother muſt we vſe ſtaſtingholes. For what colour ſo euer wee pretend, wee ſhall alwayes be condemned in our hypocriſie. And why? For God loueth truthe, and setteth ſo great ſtore by it, that he wil haue vs to ſtiche to it, what ſoever come of it. For even in common matters, although a thing ſeeme to import no prejuſcie, harme nor wrong: yet if a man ſay that he beleeues it to be ſo, and in the meane while findeth it cleane contrarie in his heart: he is not to be excused. But whensoeuer the doctrine of our ſaluation, and of the ſeruing & honoring of God (which are the highest things that can bee) do come in question:

wee muste not take leaue nor libertie to swarue in that behalfe. For euen in worldly matters it behoueth vs to acknowledge our selues faultie, if we make countenance of consenting vnto that which we mislike. But if we vse such shifftes when Gods truth is impugned by facing it with false & wicked things: besides that we betray God, wee do also indener(as much as in vs lieth,) to robbe him of the thing which he hath so knyt vnto himselfe, as it can not be separated from him, except he renounce himselfe: that is to say, of his truth. And so let vs marke well what is shewed vs here by the example of Job: namely, that when our Lord hath bene so gracious to vs, as to giue vs fayth in our hearts: it behoueth vs to haue our mouth open to make confession of that which wee beleue and are sure of, and to preach the same in due time and place. And if wee see that men set themselves agaynst the doctrine which wee know to bee true: let vs resist them to the vttermost of our power, and maynteyne Gods quarrell, except we intende to be false to him. And although this doctrine deserue to bee set out more at length: yet notwithstanding, that which I haue compryzed alreadie in small roume, is sufficient. Now let every man bethinke him how he may fare the better by it: for all the whole matter consisteth in the practizing of it. Let vs come now to that which Job addeth. VVhat is the hope of the hypocrite(sayeth he) seeing that for all his keping vp [of goodes] God plucketh awaie his Soule? Here Job protesteth, that he is not of opinion, that God punisheth not mens sinnes in this worlde, or that he is asleepe and openeth not his eyes, but letteth things slippe in such wize here bylowe, as all things vniuersally are turmoyled. All things (sayeth he) must come to account in the end, howbeit that men perceyue not Gods iudgements by eyesight at the first dashe. This is in effect the matter that Job declareth here. It behoueth vs always too beare in minde, what wee haue scene afore: which is, that the parties which stroue against Job, vphilde that men are handled here according to their deserts, and that God doth euermore shew himselfe good, louing, and mercisull towardes suche as seeke him and loue him: and contrarywise that he foorthwith vttereth his rigour and vengeance against all such as despzye him, specially which bende themselves against him, and stray out of the good way. But wee see the contrarie: namely that the good are afflited, and seeme to haue God their enemie, because he dealeth exceeding roughly with them, when in the meane while wee see the wicked live in their delights and pleasures, triumphing as though God hilde them nicely in his lap. VVhat meeneth that? It is to the ende that by that meane wee should perceyue, that God doth not execute his iustice fully here, but referueth as well the reward of good men, as the punishment of wicked men, vnto the last day, and out of this life. Job therefore as now declareth, that although he sayde afore, that God punisheth not the wicked, but afflitteth the godly & seemeth to vse excessiue crueltie against such as haue not deserued it, and contrarywise to flatter the vngodly: yet notwithstanding he intendereth not to robbe God of his office, that he shoulde not always be iudge of the worlde, and watche too gouerne the state of the earth. And how is that? There muste no certaine day be set to him, nether must he be summoned to do his duetie by an houre. But it behoueth vs to tarie his leyture paciently, and he will make vs too see examples of his Justice one way or other. This is the summe that Job ment to declare here. And although wee haue seene this doctrine heretofore: yet must it not irke vs to haue it oftentimes repeated, considering that it is one of the chiese poynts that we ought to sticke vnto: namely that euen in the middes of the troubles of this world, wee ought neuerthelesse to assure our selues, that God suffereth not things to runne to hauocke, nor holdeth with the wicked: although he spare them and forbear to punish them for a tyme, yet are they in neuer the better taking for that, but are always vnhappie, and there is a secrete vengeance prepared for them, so as it were farre better for them, that God should punish them at the firste pushe, than so deferre their punishment which appeareth not presently. VVherefore let vs learne (which is a thing as needfull as may bee) to be throughly perswaded, that although the godly be afflited, yet ceasse they not to be happie, in asmuch as they haue recourse to God, and bow downe their neckes too the bearing of the yoke that is layde vpon them, and are sure that though God trie their obedietnesse, yet he ceaseth not to loue them. VVhen we be once perswaded of this: wee haue profited greatly for the whole time of our lyfe. And in good sothe, let vs looke vpon the infirmitie that is in vs. For as soone as we haue any temptation, we be abashed and dismayd, as there is no comforting of vs. If wee see the wicked prosper, and that God beareth with them more than wee would he shoulde: there is nothing with vs but grating of our teeth, and it seemeth to vs that there is no more hope for vs, but that wee be vtterly deceyued in calling vpon God and in seruing him. Againe if our state be not such as our fleshe would wilfe it: our courage quayleth, yea and we fall to fretting and chafing against God: and finally we be so combered, as wee cannot assure our selues, that it is for our behoofe to resorte vnto God in the middes of all our miseries, nor asswage our sorowes in that we know that he will alwayes be our sauour and father. VVherefore lette vs fight against our infirmitie, that we may be fully resolued thereof. Also on the contrarie, when we see the prosperitie of the wicked, let vs not faynt for it, but let vs alwayes plucke vp a good heart, assuring our selues, that God doth but fat them, as an Oxe or a Hog. For when a man intendeth to kill an oxe, he will fat him: and he will bestowe more cost vpon him when he prepareth him to be drawne to the slaughterhouse, than when he purposeth to labour him in the plough. The like will he do with a hogge. Our Lord then handleth wicked men in this worlde as Oxen or Swine: he fatteth and pampereth them till they burst againe. But it is to their destruction: and for asmuch as they abuse his goodnesse and paciēce, they do but heape vp the store of wrath whereof S. Paule speakeith, by defiling all the benefites which they receyue at Gods hand, during the time that he is so bountifull to them. Then seing that this doctrine is so profitable vnto vs, and that on the other side it is very harde to bee comprehended: lette vs not thinke straunge of the often repeating of it. For wee haue neede to record this lesson oft, because we understand it not at the first sight. Yea and wee haue profited very well, if of all our life long we haue but begonne well to conceyue it: and we forget it againe by and by, though it be dayly rehersed vnto vs. But now lette vs come to Iobs woordes. VVhat is the hope of the Hypocrite when he shall haue heaped vp, and God shall take awaie his Soule? By these woordes Job signifieth, that wee must not inclose mans happiness within his present lyfe. How then may we say that men are happie or vnhappie? we must not haue our eyes fastened vpon this world (for that is a very narrow boundes:) but we must go to death: for that is the poynct where our Lord sheweth vs, that it is to no purpose for vs to haue liued here in case, to haue hoorded vp much goods, to haue bene in honour and credit, to haue crammed our selues with quietnesse, and (to be shorte) to haue had all our wishes here. God(I say)sheweth in death that, althis geere .

geere was but as a flightfull and vanishing shadow. And therefore if we will iudge rightly of mens states, whither they be happie or vnhappy: lette vs not looke onely to their liuing here, or how they be dealt withal for a twentie, thirtie, or fiftie yeeres: but lette vs consider that when men passe hence, God calleth them to him, according as Psalm. 90.4.5. it is sayd in the ninetith Psalme, that God causeth them to make but one turne as though they ranne in a ring, and then come home to me yee sonnes of menne sayeth he. Marke what we haue to conceyue in the first place, to the end we be not ouertaken with a false opinion, as all they bee which thinke no further than vpon this present lyfe. For they are rauished incontinently as soone as they see one that is riche, and they say, he hath so much goods, he hath so much of fayre lands, there is nothing but triumphing with him, he is well housed, he hath monie in his purse: againe, such a one is of great credite, well frended, greatly allyed, and another is counted very wise, so as every man stoupeth to him. Lo how our eyes shall be dazed, or rather scceled vp, so as we shall discerne no more, when wee thinke no further but vpon this worlde. And therefore let vs beare in minde what is sayd here, namely that God sheweth by death, that it is to no purpose to haue liued at ease in this world, and that the state of men is not to be esteemed thereby: for that were too fonide a iudgement. And Iob sayeth expesly, that although a wicked man haue heaped vp neuer so much, that is too say, put the case that in this life a man had all that euer were possible to be wished: yet must we not thinke him to be in the better case therfore. And why? For what shall become of him (sayeth Iob) when God shall plucke away his soule? The woorde plucke sheweth that the death of the wicked is alwayes forcible. Yea truly: although they be as good as rotten in this worlde, so as God suffer them to liue till very age consume them, and they do but droupe half a score yeeres before they die, and although they die exceeding old and full of yeeres: yet are they plucked away. VVhat is the reason? Firste because they cannot yeeld themselues to Gods will: and secōdly because they neuer knew to what ende they were put into this world, that is to wit, to the ende that they should be called away againe vnto God: and much lesse are they sure of the heauenly life and everlasting heritage that is prepared for vs. Thus do all wicked men want three things: whiche are, that they haue not the skil to obey God, and to suffer themselues to be gouerned by him: they know not the end of their creation, that is to wit, that they were put into this world vpon condition that they should but onely passe through it: and finally they wote not what the heauenly life is, nor that it is the place where wee must haue our rest. And for asmuch as the wicked haue not comprehended these three things: it is no maruell though they be plucked out of the worlde, and that God is fayne to hale them hece by force, so as they go not to him with a willing minde. Contrarywise, the faythfull being contented to haue liued in his knowledge, departe out of the world willingly, to receyue full fruition of the things that are promised liere, and which we hope for. The wicked therefore are plucked away. And yet if we wey the matter well, it is a thing against nature to be plucked away so. And although the sayde sturdinessse that I speake of, be in all vnbeleeuers: yet notwithstanding, God hath diuerse times inforced the very Paynims to vtter such woordes, as declare vs to bee vnexcusable, if wee shunne death in that wise, and be to much wedded to this present life: And like as a iudge will inforce an offender to confess what he will haue him, by holding him vpon the racke: Euen so (as I sayd afore) God hath as it were by force wrested a confession out of the Paynims, to shewe that all suche as die not willingly and with a quiet heart, are as monstres that turne nature quite vpside downe. There is a Heathenman that never heard one woerde of good doctrine, who when he was tolde of the death of his sonne, answered, I know that I begate him mortall. Lo here a confession made by a Heathen man, which is ynoch enough to condemne the whole worlde. It is as much as if he had sayde, sith that God hath set vs here: it behoueth vs to wayte after what sorte it pleaseth him to dispoze of vs: so as if he list to take vs hence, we ought to acknowledge that our lyfe must bee subiect to his will. Another Heathen man sayeth, Beholde, I am in this worlde, as if I were sette too be a watchman in a castle, or as if it were sayd to a souldier, come hither, go thither: so hath God set vs here in this worlde with condition to call vs hence when he listeth. The Heathen men that haue spoken after that sorte, are too sufficient witnesses to condemne all such as will replie to set any colour vpon their lewde affections in that case, and to excuse them. And furthermore (as I haue sayde alreadie) lette vs marke that those Heathenmen speake not so, but by constraint of God: which thing was done, to the ende that we should haue our condemnation written and pronounced by them, if wee agree not too his will. But now what is to be done? If wee will dispose our selues to die willingly, and go to rest our selues in God: lette vs learne to knowe the vices that hinder vs, and the remedies to redresse them. Then firste of all lette vs learne to submit our selues vnto God, and let vs not bee so frowarde and madde, as to wiſhe to exempt our selues from the subiection of him that created and shaped vs.

 Beholde, the firſte thing wherevnto it behoueth the faithfull ſort to apply theſelues, is to acknowledge to what end wee be created and shaped. Beholde, God hath all ſoueraine dominion ouer vs: therefore it behoueth vs to ſubmit our ſelues vnto him, and to dedicate our ſelues ſo wholly too his ſeruice, as wee may bee alwayes his, bothe in life and death. VVhen a man can ſo ſubmit himſelfe to God with all reuerēce and lowlinesse, and ſo renounce himſelfe as to ſay, it is meete that thy Creator ſhould haue the vpper hande of thee, and bee thy mayſter: that is a good beginning. Truly this lesson might hold vs taffe three dayes, yea and three moneths too. But it is ynoch enough for vs if wee knowe the effect of that which I haue touched, that every man may thinke vpon it at leysure. Yee ſee then that the firſte lesson which it standeth vs in hande too muze vpon if wee minde to liue and die quiety, and not to bee plucked out of the worlde by force and violence: is to ſubmit our ſelues to Gods good will. And the ſeconde is, that wee knowe to what ende and intent wee bee put into this worlde: for without that, are wee not as brute beaſtes? An Oxe knoweth not wherefore God created him, nother do all other beaſtes alſo. But man cannot bee excuzed. For he hath wit and reaſon, and God calleth him further than the worlde, to the intent he ſhould knowe that this lyfe is but a wayfaring. The brute beaſtes knowe not what death is till menne haue brought them to it, and cut their throtes, or till they die of ſome mischaunce. Then doo not they diſcerne betweene lyfe and death: but men haue the vnderſtanding thereof: yea and our Lorde doth dayly ſet mirroors of our frayltie before our eyes. Nowe if wee thinke not vpon them, I pray you are wee not too too brutiſh? Nay, which worse is, the brute beaſtes muſte condemne vs. For although an Oxe knoweth not wherefore he is created: yet doth he ſtill followe ſome order of nature. VVhy holdeth he downe his hornes and boweth his necke to bear the

the yoke, but bycause our Lorde hath giuen him his lesson without will and without vnderstanding, so as the poore beast hath an inclination too do that which is his duetie? And is it not a shamefull thing, that men in the meane while are more stubborne than Oxen, Horses, or Asses? So then lette vs learne wherefore God hath set vs in this worlde, and to what purpose we liue here: that is to wit, to the ende wee shoulde knowe that wee bee set here but as in a iourney, and that wee be lodged and susteyned here on earth at Gods coste, and that therefore wee must hang wholly vpon his grace, feeling him to be our Saviour and father, according as he sheweth himselfe towardes vs by his doings, when wee bee giuen to serue him. Thus then yee see the second poynt that wee haue to beare in minde, if wee purpose to die willingly, and not to bee plucked hence by violent force of Gods hande. There is a third, which is the chiefest of all; and that is the heauenly life. For death is alwayes terrible to vs of it selfe: and we cannot but be afrayde when a man doth but speake to vs of it, and wee be stryken with some astonishment if wee do but thinke of it. And therefore Sanct Paule sayeth, that we desire not death, and that it is impossible for a man to bee brought to desire to die: we shunne it as much as is possible. And why? For God hath imprinted a feeling in vs, that death is a curse and as it were a disfeating of nature, and a chaunging of Gods order from that which it was before man sinned. So then, wee cannot but shunne death, euen bycause it is contrarie to our fleshe, and the terror thereof dismayeth vs by reason of the knowledge that God hath giuen vs. 30 And therefore Sanct Paule in the forealledged chapter sayeth, that wee desire death, not in respect of it selfe, but bycause we know that as yet we are but as it were in tristorie dwellingplaces. VVhat is our bodie? It is so corruptible a thing, that the leaues of a tree are not so soone rotten as wee bee. But wee knowe that there is a house prepared for vs, and that when we be restored to the heauenly glorie, wee shall be lodged, not as in a little shedde vnder leaues that are soone rotten, but in an euerlasting house that is full of glorie. Seing then that wee knowe that God calleth vs to so happie a life, and giueth vs assurance of it in our Lorde Iesus Christe: wee neede not to shunne death, sith that thereby wee enter into the full possession of our saluation.

To be shorte, wee come not to death as the vnbeluers do. The vnbeluers say, I knowe not whither I go. If they haue any opiniō of the immortalitie of their soules: eyther they multe needes be dismayed at it, when they know that God shall be their iudge: or else they shall be sotted in such wise, as they shall thinke there is no better lyfe than this. But for our part, it behoueth vs to knowe, that God hath created vs after his owne image and likeenesse, to the intent to gather vs vp to himselfe, and that we shoulde be sure that he will do it, if wee refre our selues wholly vnto him, folowing the example that our Lorde Iesu Christe sheweth vs. Father (sayeth he) vnto Luke 22:46. thee do I commend my spirite. Then lette vs learne to say freely vnto God, Lorde I yeelde my soule into thy handes. Thus yee see howe wee shall be safe when wee know that God is the keeper of our Soules. Thus ye see how we shall go gladly and with a good will vnto death, because our Soules are in Gods keeping, till he knit them to their bodies againe in his comming at the last day. VVhen wee be at thi poynt, then to confirme the sayde prayer withall, thou mayst adde, Thou hast redeemed me o Lord God of truth. Lo howe Dauid speaketh: and Iesus Christ hath vsed the same, to shewe that it is a request which ought to bee common to all members of the Church. So then, to the ende that we doubt not of Gods receyving of our soules into his keeping, when we betake them to him vnfaynedly: let vs know that he is the God of truth, in so much that he will not suffer vs to perishe what soever befall vs, so we haue the heart and minde to put our selues into his handes.

Nowe let vs fall downe before the face of our good God with acknowledgement of our sinnes, prasing him to haue pitie vpon vs wretched creatures: and because wee be so loth to folowe that, which he sheweth vs, that it may please him to stablish vs in such a zele by his holy Spirite, as wee may neuer swarue, nor be turned from the right way wherein he shall haue once set vs. And for asmuch as so long as we liue in this worlde, we be inclined, yea and giuen vp to many vices and imperfekteions: let vs pray him to graunt vs the grace to resist them in suche wise, as he may bee glorified by our confessing of his name, whither it bee in lyfe or death: and that in the meane whyle wee may bee knitte to him by fayth and hope, so as wee may persiste therein to the ende, and vntill he haue gathered vs into the euerlasting heritage which is purchased for vs by our Lorde Iesus Christe. That it may please him to graunt this grace not onely to vs, but also to all people and Nations of the Earth, bringing backe all poore ignorant soules from the miserable bondage of error and darkenesse, to the right way of saluation, for the doyng whereof, it may please him to rayse &c.

The xcix. Sermon, which is the third vpon the xxvij. Chapter.

8. VVhat is the hope of the hypocrite vvhén he shall haue heaped vp, and God shall haue plucked avvay his Soule?
9. VVill God heare his crye vvhén trouble commeth vpon him?
10. VVill he set his delight on the Almighty? vwill he call vpon God at all times?
11. I vwill teach you vvhatis in the hand of God, and I vwill not conceale from you vvhatis is vwith the Almighty.
12. Behold, ye haue scene all thesethings, and vwhy do ye vanish avvay in vanitie?

E sawe yesterday, that if wee will judge of the state of men, we must not rest vpō this present life, but we must go further: for if we looke no further than to the life of man: we shall see that it is but as a shadowe, and alough it were graunted that he had al his own hearts desire, so as God would giue him whatsoeuer he wold wish: what were al that but a smoke that passeth away out of had? Therfore it behoueth vs to come to the hope that Job speaketh of here, that wee may haue skill to discerne whither a mas life be happie or unhappy. And he bringeth vs purposely vno death, declaring that sith the vnbeluers or despisers of God are plucked out out of this world by violence : it behoueth vs to conclude, that they be all vnhappie, and that the pleasures, riches, honour, and such other like things which they haue, are but deceytfull vanitie, and we must not busie our heades about them. Therfore when a man liueth after such a sort in this world, as he knoweth himselfe to be in Gods hand, so as he resteth and reposeth himselfe vpon his goodnesse, and therewithall is readie to remoue hence as oft and whensoeuer God shall call him, assuring himselfe that his everlasting abiding place is not here but in heauen : then is he in the case that he may be deemed a happie man. But as for him that regardeth not God, ne trusteth in his goodnesse, ne knoweth himselfe to be in his keeping, but woulde fayne dwell euer in this worlde, and cannot bee gotten hence but by force and constraint : although such a man haue all that he can wish for a time : yet is he but a wretched creature. And for the better confirmation of this matter, Job addeth as nowe, That God will not beare the wicked when they pray, no not euen in the middes of their distresses. This deserueth to be well marked. Job sheweth wherein the chiefe weale that wee can haue or wishe to haue consisteth, namely in hauing recourse vnto God, and that he be mercyfull to vs to succour vs at our neede. Let vs put the case that a man had al things else that could be imagined, and yet wanted this : surely all the rest were nothing woorth, but shoulde bee turned into his bane. VVhat if a man laugh, what if he liue in ioy and pleasure, what if he haue goodes ynoch and to much, what if all men honour him, and (to be short) what if he seeme to be a Petigod here bylowe as in a Paradise? yet if he haue not this priuiledge of resorting vnto God, with full beleefe that his resorting to him shall not be in vayne, but that his requestes shall be graunted : al that euer he can haue besides, shall bee but a curse to him, and an increase of his decay. Then lette vs marke well, that it is not for nought that Job bringeth vs here to the principall poynt of our whole life, as in respect of the weale that wee can wish : which is that God shoulde be at hand with vs, and that we should resort vnto him : that he should heare vs, and that wee should obreyne our requestes and be ayded at his hande according to our neede, and as he knoweth to be conuenient for our welfare. And this is not done here onely : but if we looke vpon the whole doctrine of the holy Scripture, we shall see that men are alwayes vnhappie if God looke not vpon them, and bee readie to heare them. True it is that wee conceyue not so much : by reason of our great dulnesse : but surely if wee had but one sparke of good vnderstanding, there is none of vs but he should perceyue, that this doctrine is totoo true. So then let vs open our eyes, and learne to inioy this happiness, and know wherevpon the same is chiefly grounded, so as we may vnderstand, that if we haue not God so fauorable vnto vs, as wee may resorte vnto him with assured trust and certaintie that he will be readie to help vs at our neede : we be totoo wretched. And furthermore if we be in so good case, as that we can haue recourse vnto God : there is nother affliction nor miserie, that can hinder vs from being happie. For beholde, the remedie that ought to suffize for all our miseries, is that God promiseth to strengthen vs vp when we be as good as beaten downe, to deliuere vs in time conuenient, yea and to turne all our miseries to our welfare and saluation, so as they shall become as many furtherances to helpe vs forewarde to the everlasting lyfe, and he will make vs perceyue that he sent vs not any thing, which was not conuenient and behouefull for vs: Such promises serue to asswage our sorowes : and morcouver, every one of vs may glorie in them, according also as S.Paule speaketh in the fift to the Romanes. For vnder the peace that he maketh mention of there, is comprehended that which Job speaketh here. VVe ca haue no peace with God except we be sure of his loue, so as the gate be open for vs to haue accessse vnto him. VVhen we haue that once (sayeth S.Paule:) we be sure and fully perisued that wee be the children of God, so as wee may glory of the euerlasting heritage which he hath promised vs. This in effect is al that Job ment here by saying, will God heare the prayers of a wicked man? yea though he call vpon him in his trouble? But here it may be demaundered, howe it happeneth that God refuzeth a man that calleth vpon him, seing he hath promised that he will alwayes be inclined to succour vs, yea and that he will not tarie till he be intreated, but will preuent our sute: or at leastwise we be sure that as soone as we open our mouth, God will be readie to succour vs, as he sayeth by his Prophet Esay. Howbeit in the other Esay.65. d. sentence that I touched afore, it is sayd, I will heare them before they crie: But here we see a threate which is cleane contrarie, which is that although the wicked haue their recourse vnto God, & desire him to haue pitie vpon the: yet will he not heare them. The solution is very easie, if we wey wel what is sayd in the Psalme: namely that God Psalm. 145. d.18. is neere vnto all such as call vpon him in truth. There the Prophet sheweth, that many seeke God, howbeit faynedly. By reason whereof we be conuinced, that there is none other meane to rid vs of our miseries, but only that God should take vs to his mercie and be pitiful to vs. The very vnbelineuers do cal vpō God without regard of him, notwithstanding that they haue mocked at the religion, and at al things that are spoken to vs in the Scripture concerning Gods prouidēce, and the mercie and grace which we must looke for at his hand. Therefore if they be pinched with aduersitie, they crie out, alas my God. And what is it that driueth them therenvnto? Euen their mother wit. So the hypocrites and despizers of God may well haue some forme of praying. Not only to pray from the teeth outward while their minde is otherwise occupied : but oftentimes (as men may perceyue) even with some hartie affection (for they be forced to it:) but yet is it not in truth. For they haue not the knowledge to say, my God calleth me and allureth me to him, and I shal not be disappoyned in coming to him. Seing it is his pleasure to recken me in the number of his children: I will go to him, not vpon a foolish rashnesse and presumption, but with obedience to the voyce of my God, trusting to his promise. The hypocrites cannot speake that language : and therfore they haue no truth in them. For it stādeth them in hand to haue fayth, and fayth dependeth vpon Gods promises, which the vngodly never tasted of. Againe, we ought to haue a feeling of our miseries, so that whē a man approcheth vnto God, he must be abashed in himselfe, he must be sorie for his sinnes, he must hate himselfe, and he must acknowledge himselfe to be exceeding wretched. But the wicked and hypocrites haue none of all this. Although then that they haue their mouths open to call vpō God : yet doo they but vnhallow his holy name, because there is no right meening in them. And therefore they fulfill that which the Prophet Esay sayeth in his nine and Esay.29. d. twentith chapter : which is, that they preache vnto God with their mouth and their tung, but their hart is alwayes a great way off. So then let vs marke well, that when our Lorde sayeth and auoucheth, that he will heare all such as call vpon him : he meeneth that their prayer must proceede of fayth, and men must haue bethought them well of his promises aforhand, thereby to take boldnesse to come vnto him : and yet that therewithall they must acknowledge themselves to be as they bee, that is to witte, forlorne, forlorne, damned, and destitute of all goodness: and this must we be throughly perswaded of, to the end that wee may resort too the fountaine of his goodness and grace. Now can wee not thinke it straunge though God put backe the hypocrites and wicked me whē they come vnto him. For they come not with a willing minde, nor with a pure affection, but they would faine shun God if it were possible. Howbeit forasmuche as they cannot shift themselues from him: they come too him by compulsion. But what a comming is that? Therefore whē we pray vnto God, let vs learne to offer him freeharted sacrifices, and let vs come to him with a willing mind: assuring ourselues that without him we be destitute of all that we haue neede of, and of all that perteineth to oure welfare. Furthermore, let vs not doubt of his fauoure and mercie towards vs, seeing he hath promised vs them: but let vs always beleue that he is euer redy to receyue vs, and will not be deafe to our desires when we come to craue them at his hand. Lo how we shal be herd at gods hand. And Iob setteth downe purposely, Vvhen trouble commeth vpon the hypocrite: because that then we knowe and feele how auayable our prayers are, and what frute they yeld vs. True it is that God sheweth his goodness towards vs every minute of an houre: and although we perceiue it not by and by, yet doth he preserue vs from the miseries that hang ouer our head, & putteth his had betwixt vs and them. So then, we cannot but be acquainted with gods grace in the time of prosperity, and know that wee bee maintained by the same: but yet haue we not so certaine and euidēt experiance of his fauoure and help, in prosperitie, as in aduersitie. For whēsoever miserie pincheth vs, and death threatneth vs, we haue the wit to discerne that we were forlorne and foredone, if God shuld not step before vs to reskue vs. And in good sooth how shoulde we be troubled, if we had not that consideration? Ye see then an euident demonstration, that God hathe had pitie vppon vs. And so, affliction is the thing wherein God sheweth himselfe cheefly to be our sauour. And heere ye see why it is said in the Psalme, Thou shalt call vppon me in the day of thy trouble, and I will heare thee and thou shalt glorify me. But is it therfore to be said that we must not seeke vnto God, but when we be in necessitie and at the last cast? No: for we shoulde be tooretchlesse if we shuld tarrie til such constreint came. Then behoueth it vs to call vppon God at all times, as shall be shewed anone. But yet doth our Lord prouoke vs by scourging vs, and in so doing hee correſteth oure flouthfulness, and quickeneth vs vp to com vnto him. It is expressly said, that that is the time wherein wee must call vpon him, and that that is the very due and conueniente season, according as it is said in the two and thirteenth Psalme, that the righteouse shall seeke God in due time: that is to say, when their aduersitie presseth them. Not that we haue not occasion to do so continually: but because wee haue more occasion then, than at any other time. And heereby we be warned, that whensoever wee be pinched to the vttermost, so as we can abide no more: we must not faint, but rather take courage to come vnto God, knowing that he allureth vs, not only by worde of mouth, but also by his doings: and that hee not onely reacheth vs his hande and willetteth vs too take it: but also doth as it were draw vs by force, by reason of the greate sluggishnesse that is in vs. Lo what we haue to marke in this streine.

Now heerewithall let vs understand, what is the frute of our faith. It is, that in all our aduersities wee be righte happie, and that all the curses which God sendeth vpon me for their sinnes are turned to our welfare by meanes of faith, when we pray vnto God, and haue our recourse vnto him. And why? For in the middes of our troubles hee sheweth himselfe our Sauoure, and maketh vs too feele that hee is neere at hand with vs. After that Iob hath said so: he addeth, that the vngodly will not delighte in the Almightie, nor seeke always vnto him. VVhē he saith that the wicked man will not seeke always vnto God: it is a confirmation of that which hath bin touched already: that is to wit, that wee must not only pray when wee can none otherwise do, but also that we must do it ordinarily, as in very dēd we cannot passe one minute of an houre without Gods help. And surely the fauoure that we looke for at his hand, consisteth not only in deliuering from death when we be as good as at the pits brim: but also in preseruing vs and in turning away euill from vs. For we see that in this life we be continually besiegēd with a hundred deatthes, and the miseries whereto we be subiect, are without number. God therefore must befaire to gard vs, and to be our wail and bulwarke, according also as he saith by his Prophet Esay, that hee is our fortresse and shield, and so is he also named often-times in the Psalmes. Ye see then how wee ought to call vpon God, not only when hee toucheth vs, and smiteth us, as it were with hard strokēs vpon vs: but even when we be at our ease and rest, and perceiue no daunger toward: even then (say I) behoueth it vs neuerthelesse too consider, to how many miseries our life is subiect: that being perswaded that wee cannot escape them excepte God preserue vs, we may runne vnto him and say, Alas Lord, keepe vs thou vnder thy protection, and by thy prouidence make vs able too passe through so many deatthes which hem vs in round about. And this must bee done bothe euening and morning. Moreouer wee knowe: (without going any further) what temptations assayle vs dayly. And therefore when we pray vnto God, it must not only be that hee should preserue vs from the daungers wherein we are concerning this present life: but the cheefe poynēt is, that hee should reach out his hand too deliuere vs from Satans temptations, and not suffer vs to fall into euill, according as there are deadly downefalles whereinto we may tumble every minute of an houre, if we be not hild vp by his power. So then let vs marke what need: the faithful haue too bee so defended and sheelded by Gods hand. For when Satan cannot ouercome vs on the one side, he vndermineth vs anew both before and behind, and he assaulteth as well at one side as on the other, and as well aboue as beneath. He hathe so many fyre and burning darts, that he would wound vs to the death, were it not that God doth defend and preserue vs. So the it is not ynochough for vs to pray only once a day, or when the neede it selfe constreyneth vs: but it standeth vs in hand to do it continually, and to make an ordinarie exercise of it. And thus ye see why it is sayde, that the Wicked prayeth not at all times vnto God. But there is yet one poynēt more which wee ought to marke well. For Iobs intent is to do vs to witte, that whereas the wicked man dothe nowe and then make countenance too pray, yet doth he not continue in that mind, he proceedeth not constantly and after one continuall rate. And heere ye see wherein the prayers of the hypocrites differ from the prayers of Gods children. For an hypocrite, without examining of his owne hart, will welynough do the same thing that Gods children do: to outward sighte hee will pray vnto God, yea and hee will acknowledge that hee hath the neede to do so. But if the least temptation in the world light vpon him, hee freuteth with himselfe and meddleth no more with calling vppon God, but grunteth agaist hym, and someth vp such rage, as hee sheweth

sheweth well that hee nother depended vpon God before, nor trusted in him, nor sought him with a right-meining mind, and that al was but counterfernes. Thus ye see how the hypocrisie of the faithlesse is discouered, when our Lord handlith them not after their owne lyking, but holdesthem shut vp in some distresse. For they fret and fume against him. But contrariwise if god scourge the faithfull man that hath prayed to him in his prosperitie and in the time of his rest: he ceaseth not to hold out still, in beseeching him too play the surgiour in healing of the wounds that he hath made. To be shorte, Gods children continue in prayer, and haue the sayde perseuerance or holding out, in somuch that although God affliet them, and seeme to turne his backe to the; and to be deafe to their requests: yet neuerthelesse they hold on still, and never giue ouer cleane. Contrariwise, if God graunt not the faithfull their request as soone as they pray vnto him, if he pleasure them not by and by, if hee perfourme not their desires withoute delay: they thinke they haue lost their time. And so we see that the fashion of praying aright, is first, not to tarrie till extremitie compell vs: but rather to be doing aforehande as neede is that we should, praying God to preuent vs with his gracieuse goodnes. Take that for one point. Ageine, if we be in trouble and distresse: let vs not cease to pray, as well as if we were in prosperitie. For although God seeme not as then to fauoure vs, but rather to be an aduersarie and an enimie vnto vs, by the estimation of our fleshly vnderstanding: yet behoueth it vs to exercise our faith in calling vpon him: and whereas it may seeme too vs that we haue not awyed awhit by praying, but rather that God is deafe to our requests: yet notwithstanding let vs hold on still, and not leaue off. But when we haue sighed and sobbed to day, if we feele no assuagement by it, let vs retorne to the same remedie again tomorrow. In good faith, ye see that although a sick person perceiue not that his Physician hath done him good at the first: yet will he not cease to beleue his counsell stil. And is it meete that we should put more trust in mortall men, than in our God? So then, let vs wey wel this saying that is set downe heere for praying continually vnto God: and let vs thinke, that it is to no purpose for vs to go too god at starts, to desire him to haue mercy vpon vs: but that we must doo it diligently, and euery man stirre vp and taske himselfe to it both euening and morning, saying: VVhat? wretched creature, sleepest thou heere? Knowest thou not what neede thou hast that thy God shuld ayde thee? And againe, if we be afflieted, and suffer aduersitie: let vs not cease to call vpon God, nother let our harts faile vs, assuring ourselues that our afflictions shall turne to our welfare and soulehelth. But let vs hold on, all the days of our life, yea & let our holding on be such as we may be importunate, according as our Lord Iesus Christ sheweth vs in the parable, where he exhorteth vs to pray without ceassing, although God shew not by effect at the first, that he heareth vs. But there is yet further, that the wicked man will not set his delighte in God, which is a notable saying, and conteyneth a good lesson. For heere Job putteth a difference betwixte the pleasure or ioy that Gods children and the faithfull sorte haue: and the pleasure which the faulesse take. Hereby we vnderstande, that all skorners of God, all maliciouse persons, and all loose liuers, (although they seeme to be the happiest folke in the whole worlde) are vnhappy, and there is nothing but wretchednesse in them. On the contrarie part, although the children of God be taken to be forlorne, wretched, and as it wer damned creatures: yet are they right happy because they set their des-light in God. Thus see we a sentence right worthy to be well marked, and to be called oftentimes too remembraunce. There is none of vs but hee desireth to haue ioy: and yet in the meane while we know not what the true ioy is, or wherein we ought to take it, nor wherevnto we ought to referre it. And that is the cause why the ioy of this worlde is cursed by the mouthe of Gods owne sonne, who saith: wo be to you that laugh. And why? Will God haue vs to be always sad? Is God greeued and offended that we should make any mirth? To what purpose serue the texts where it is said that God would faine haue men to be merrie, and giueth them wherwith to be merrie? For he not only voutsafeth too giue them nourishment and sustenance: but also giueth them abundance wherwith to be merrie. How commes it to passe then, that our Lord Iesus Christ curseth the laughter of the world? It is bycause men besotte themselues in their mirth. And what is their ioy? It is a cleane forgetting of themselues, and a turning away from God, according as wee see that most men cannot bee merrie, vnlesse they thrust God a good way off, and runne riot, and gyue themselues to such superfluitie, as there remaineth no more wit nor reason in them. For somuch then as n̄e do so passe their bounds, needes must their mirth be cursed. To bring examples heereof is needeleſſe as now: would God the thing were not so much knowne and practised as it is. But what? There is not that man of vs all, that finneth not the same vice in himselfe. For if there bee any talking of God, we would fayne that it were quickly at an end. I say[ it were il with vs] if our Lord made vs not to feele the sweetenesse that we find in him. For he that hath once tasted of that, can never haue his selue talking of God, but will preferre the minding and muzing vpon God, before all the pleasures in the world. But as for those that are giuen to vanities, they stand vpon thornes till they bee gone, when there is any speaking of God. And why? For that is a melancholike matter too them. And truly wee see, that both in feasting and in talking, and in suche other like thinges, it is but a trouble too the whole companie to haue mention made of God. Therefore let vs not think it straunge, that God pronounceth this horrible curse against the mirth of the world, seing it is so foward that it runneth quite out of square from the righte way, and keepeth not it selfe within any boundes, nor can be merrie but in all wantonnesse and disorder. So then let vs come backe to that whiche is said in the Law. Thou shalt be merrie in the presence of thy God. This lesson of being merrie in the presence of God, is of great importance. And it cannot bee done, without acknowledgning, that althe good things which we haue, do come of him, and that he giueth vs them, too the intent that wee should take him for our father, and yeld him thanks, acknowledging him too bee the fountaine of all goodnesse, and that wee oughte too sticke vntoo him. To be shorte, they that reioice in the presence of God, sticke not too creatures, nor to any of all these corruptible thinges, but doo knowe that it behoueth them too impute all thinges too Gods fatherly goodnesse, and too receyue the benefytes whiche hee bestoweth vpon them, as a confirmation of hys loue and fauoure. Thus yee see what it is too bee merrie or too reioyce in the presence of God. Contrariwise howe fare the vnbeleeuers? As I haue shewed already, They cannot so muche as laughe or bee merrie, but they muste as it were separate themselues from God, and turne their backe vpon him, yea and quite and cleane forget him. But suche manner of mirthe is cursed. And so wee see nowe what Iobs meening is.

For he iudgeth of mens happinesse as he ought to do, he resteth not vpon the things that are seene: for it hathe so falle out, that the very heathen men could skill to say of this imaginatiue happinesse, that it is like a fayre picture. Looke me vpon an Antike of timber, it is well gilded ouer, and it glistreth maruellously: but within it shall bee eaten with mo. hes or other wormes: even so is it with all the braue laddes of the world, which laugh at God, to sport them selues withall. For they may well haue both credite, and riches, and pleasure: and they may be thought to haue the happiest life of the world: but in the meane while they be wormeaten within, and their wicked conscience playeth the hangman, and ceaseth not too torment them, so as they wote not where they be. And forasmuch as they cannot call vpon God, they must needes be without hope of mercie, and without certaintie too stay vpon, and always in feare, bycause they knowe not how long they shall abide in that plight. To bee shorte, they must needes be as blocks and brute beasts. But on the contrarie part, ye shall see the faithfull ones merrie even in aduerſtie. For when we haue cast our eye vpon God, and beheld his fatherly countenance towards vs: this only saying will comfort vs, wherein he assureth vs that he will not lay more trouble vpon vs, than we shall beable to beare, but will giue vs a good end of all oure aduersities, and that when wee shall haue indured them paciently, wee shall feele that they haue profited vs too our saluation, bycause it was expedient and profitable for vs to be chastized at the hand of our father, too the end hee mighte draw vs away from the vanities of thys world. Now we see that which I glaunced at afore: that is to witte, that although the faythlesse haue all thinges that men are wont to wish: yet is it but vanitie and leazing: and contrariwise that although the faithfull be opprefsed with many aduersities, yet they ceasse not to bee right happy, bycause they call vpon God, and are able to reioyce in him, for somuch as they know them selues to be in his fauoure, and that hee chastizeth them after such a sort, as he turneth all things to their welfare. And heerewithall let vs beare in mind, in what manner men ought to be merrie, as hath bin said afore. True it is that our Lord giueth vs cause and occasion of mirth, in that we haue bread to eate, and wine to drinke, and other benefyts necessarie for this life. For there are diuers sortes of the liberalytie that God bestoweth vpon vs: as when he giueth a man issue, when he sendeth him goodes, and whē he maketh him to prosper in such otherlike things: behold, it is alwayes a matter to be glad of. But after what sort must wee be glad? Euen as in the presence of our God, as I haue alledged afore. VVould we then bee merrie in such wise as God should blisse our mirth, and like well of it, and that it might be as it were in his sight? Let vs haue an eye vnto God, and acknowledge oure selues to be beholding to him for al our goodes, and honoure him for them. Furthermore let vs haue such a longing after him, as we may learne, not too beate oure braynes about these present things, nor to set our hartes vpon them: but to assure ourselues that this world passeth away, and that wee ourselues must passe away too, yea and that right swifly, and therefore not to tye ourselues to them, but to go still forward vnto God as too the very end of our race. Now Job addeth immediatly, That he will teach them what is in the hand of God, and what is with the Almighty. Yea and he addeth, that his frends were very vnwittie, sith that they had seene all those things, and yet neuerthelesse did speake so aukly, according as we haue seene before. But Job hath already put a sufficient difference betwixt Gods children and the vnbelecuers, shewing that wee ought not to deeme any mans life vnhappy for the outward shew that appeereth for a day or twayne, or for a lit. le time: but that we must enter innermore, and search what is in the harte, yea & we must come to the hope that is in them at their death, and looke whither while they may liue heere, they bee ioyned vnto God, and call vpon him and flee to him for refuge, and yeeld them selues wholly to him, and rejoice in his goodness: and whither that at their death they be able to committ them selues to his keeping, and to betake their soules to him, beleeuing that they be safe whē they be in his hand. For these are they that are happy. Contrariwise, such as are esteemed to be honorable, such as are in authoritie, such as liue in delight and pleasure: such are alwayes vnhappy, bycause they separate them selues from God, who is the welspring of all welfare: and when they come to death, they trust not in him, but are as it were haled away by force, whereas they oughte too put them selues quietly into his hands. Job then hathe sufficiently distinguisched all these things alreadie, but yet his intent is to confirme his matter better. And therfore he vseth this preface, that he will shew what is in the hād of God, and what is with the Almighty: and hee continueth still the same matter which hee dealt with before: which is, that if we intend to iudge rightly, we must not rest heere bylow: but we must passe beyond the world by faith, and looke vpon Gods iudgements after another fashion. For behold, the thing wherein Iobs counterparties were deceiued, is that they iudged after the presente state, and would needes rest vpō these inferiour things. Job therefore sheweth, that it behoueth vs to go too the hand of God, yea and to marke that his iudgements are secret: as if hee should say, suche as rest only vpon this world, and cast no further but how thinges are disposed presently: shall always haue an vntoward and misordered iudgement. And why? For our Lord calleth vs to him, and telleth vs that although hee execute his iudgements in part, and disclose them to vs after such a sort, as we may perceiue some incling of them: yet doth he reserue many things in his owne hand still: like as a prince will not disclose all his minde at once, but will publish so muche by proclamations, as he knoweth to be expediet for the gouerning of his people. Also a man in his owne priuate house will say so much as shall be for the good ordering of his household, and keepe the rest to himselfe whiche is not necessarie to be declared. Now if mortall men take such libertie: what shal God do? Is it mee that our Lord shoulde shew vs all his iustice and wisedome heere, and make all his ordinances knowne and apparant to vs, and keepe nothing to himselfe? VVhither were that to goe? Now then we see what Iobs meening is. Hee rebuketh the froward pride of men. For that they will needes inclose Gods mighty power, rightfulnesse, and wisedome within the state of this present world, so as it might bee discerned. But on the contrarie part, no no(faith Job)it is the hād of God that we must looke vnto, to know what is in him. And how shall we know it? By faith, & not by our motherwit: for we shall never reach so high by that. But by faithe wee may espie, that God reserueth many things, yea & that he reserueth the in such wise as it behoueth vs to be paciēt whē we see al things troubled and turmoiled, & to tarry til god make vs to behold the thigs that are cōcealed frō vs as yet. Thus we see that the doctrine which we haue to gather of this streine, is in effect that we must so profit ourselues by all gods works while we be in this wōrld, as we may be able to apply them to our vse. As for example, when wee see God shew hym selfe mercifull in one case and rigorouse in another:

let vs learne to trust in his goodness, and to walke in his feare: howbeit with such regard of his apparent woorks, as we may in the meane while assure ourselues, that hee reserueth things to himselfe which are not seene yet. As how? As now good men are afflicted: and although they haue their recourse vnto him, yet hee seemeth not minded to helpe them. It is seene that the plainmeening sorte and such as haue liued without doing any man wrong, are troubled with extremitie, and as it were laid open to the spoile, and God maketh no countenance of deliuering them: and that contrariwise the wicked sort do triumph and harden themselves in their naughtinesse, bearing themselves in hande, that they may misuse God without feare: and God winketh at all these things. Neuerthelesse let not vs be greeued and offended when we see things in such disorder, and that God redresseth the not at the first push. And why? For it behoueth vs to call to mind how it is said heere, that God hath many things in his hand, which he reserueth to himselfe. VVhy doth he so? Though we know not the cause, yet must we hū-
ble ourselues. For all our wisedome consisteth in submitting ourselues too the good pleasure of oure God. Howbeit forasmuch as hee intendeth to exercise oure faith by it, and that we should learne pacience by experience: let vs not refuze to submit all our whole vnderstanding therewnto. Agayne, seeing that God sheweth vs his works in part: let vs not be so blind as not too see that which is apparant. For wee neede not too make any far search to get some tast of things: if we list too looke vpon them, there is ynough to teach vs. So then, let vs not shut our eyes wilfully, nother let vs plonder away in vanitie as they do of whome Job speaketh heere. VVhe God wakeneth vs, let vs be sure that his miind is, that we should so know his works, as we might yeld him his due honoure, and not rest vpon present thinges, but fall too concluding that there is a iudgement which it behoueth vs to hope for, and that there all things shall be brought into their right course. And therefore let vs not vanish away in vanitie, that is too say, let vs not bee turned nor drawen away by worldly things: but let vs recouer oureselues to the hope that God setteth afore vs, which is, that Iesus Christ will come to gather vs to himselfe, and that wee shall then see howe our trusting in him and in God his father is not in vaine.

But now let vs fal downe before the face of our good God with acknowledgement of our sinnes, praying him to humble vs in such wise, as we may haue our recourse vnto him only, and that forasmuch as it pleaseth him to handle vs so gently, and to make vs feels his goodness so many ways, to the end we might be moued to come vnto him: he will not suffer vs to gad after our owne delights and lusts, but that when he hath once broughte vs into the right way, we may neuer be turned out of it, so as we may alwayes go forward more and more, till wee be come to the heauenly heritage wherevnto he calleth vs. And so let vs say, Almighty God our heauenly father we acknowledge and confesse according too the truth, that wee bee not woorthy too lyfte vp our eyes too Heauen, to present our selues before thee, nor too presume so farre as that our prayers should be. &c.

The C. Sermon, which is the fourth vpon the. xxvij. Chapter.

13. Behold vwhat is the portion of the vwicked vwith God, and the heritage that the extortioners receiue of the Almighty.
14. If his children be multiplied, they shall be put to the syword, and his offspring shall not be satisfied vwith bread.
15. Their remnant shall be buried in destruction, and their vvidovves shall not vveepe.
16. Though they heape vp siluer as dust, and gold as clay.
17. The righteous shal cloth himselfe vwith it, and the innocent shal deuide his siluer.
18. He shall build his house as a moth, and as a vwatchman maketh his lodge.
19. VVhen the rich man slepeth, he shal not gather aught: he shal open his eyes and nothing shal appeare.

T should seeme at the first blush, that Job speaketh another language heere than he had done afore, and that he says and vnsays, and agreeth with his counterparties: neuerthelesse we haue seene already that his meining is not so. How the shal we take the things that he speaketh heere? For yee see, that the cause why he hath striued with those that came to comfort him, is that God doth not alwayes punish me in such wise in this world, as that it may bee throughly discerned and seene by eyefight: and now he holdeth the selfesame opinion that the others haue hild. But lerte vs
marke, that Job in this place speaketh not after his owne meining, but putteth the case that it were as the other haue said at leastwise in part. And surely we shall see in the nexte Chapter, how he ouerthroweth these things, and sheweth breefly that Gods iudgements are hidden from vs (as he had said heeretofore) and that wee cannot comprehend them: for hee will compare gold and siluer likewise be a metall full of drosse, and can hardly be discerned of what value it is of before it be fyned: and althogh it be hard also to find the veines of it, bycause they bee hidden in the earth: yet are the mines both of gold and siluer found out. But as for wisedome, she dwelleth further of from men, they cannot find her by digging deepe downward, nor climb so high vpward as to come to her, vnlesse God give her: heereby Job meeneth, that it is a very harde pointe of wisedome, for vs to comprehend Gods iudgements, and that wee muste not make a grounded rule of them, as though wee had the perfect and full knowledge of them here in thys worlde.

So then wee see in effecte, that Job is not contrarye too hym selfe, ne condescendeth too the talke and doctrine of those that haue hitherto resisted hym: but rather declareth, that that which they haue spoken is partly true, howbeit not altogether, bycause Gods iudgements are not executed ordinarily in this present lyfe, although we haue now and then some signes of them, and that is all. Now we see what Jobs intent is: and it remaineth that wee make oure profitte of this doctrine.

VVe

WE haue two things to marke in this sentece. The one is, that the contents hereof, are a declaration of the punishments that God executeth vpon the wicked, that is to witte, when he listeth to punish them in this transitorie life. And for the other, we haue to marke, that when God thinketh it good, he deferreth those punishments, and reserueth them in such wise, as they be not seene at all in this present life: and yet that we must not be out of quiet for it, as though God were asleepe and executed not his office. For hee knoweth wherefore he delayeth. The reason is vnknownen too vs, but yet it pleaseth him too doo so, and his will is the rule of all equitie and righte.

Thus ye see the two points whervnto it behoueth vs to bring backe all that is cōteined here. Now as touching the first point, let vs marke (as I haue said already) that it is not without cause that God hath threatened to punish the wicked and the transgressors of his lawe, after such a fashion as they shall euen haue their portion and heritage with him. Heereby wee vnderstand, that if men scape vnpunished heere bylow, and no man taketh vengeance of their misdeedes, and of the outrages and extortions that they haue committed: God who is aboue will not misse them. Therefore at length they shall come to their account, and that shall be as their portion or heritance. For although they bee not punished at the firsste day, yet will God worke in the end. According too that which I haue declared already, I say, we must not make it a generall rule, but yet shall it fall out so oftentimes. Then let vs learne to haue an eye vnto God in all oure life, and let vs not thinke ourselues discharged whē we be escaped the hands of men, nother let vs flatter oureselues therevpon, as though we had made a faire hand: but let vs haue an eye to this heritage which God telleth vs that he hath prepared for such as haue liued amisse. Like as the sonne and heire of a man shall not possesse his fathers goodes and lands at the first day, but shall bee owner and master of them in time: so on the contrarie part God pnnisheth not the wicked sort incontinently when they haue offended: but yet is their possession kept for them in the end, and shall be reserued certaintely for them, as an heritage whereof they cannot be disfeated. Marke that for one point. And now it is said, That if their children be multiplied, they shall go to the sword, and their offspring shall be overthrown, so as it shall be buried in destruction without any remedy. By these sayings we vnderstand, that God not only punisheth the wicked & the despisers of his maiestie in their owne persons: but also extendeth the same vengeance euen vntoo theyr children. Truly we will thinke this straunge to our owne vnderstanding. But it hath bin declared already heretofore, that God may punish the children of the wicked, without doing them wrong. And why? For we are all cursed in Adam, and bring nothing but damnation with vs out of our moothers womb. Now then if God leauie vs in oure owne state, all of vs both great and small are alredy appointed to destruction. If God should rend vp the whole world and plunge it into the bottomlesse pit: might he be accused of crueltie? No: For his gentle handling of vs commeth of his owne meere goodnesse, and not of any desert of oures. Then if he withdraw bys grace from the offspring of the wicked, and to punish the fathers, do wrap their children in the like destruction, so that for somuch as the father hath run further & further into wickednes, his childre must be fain to fill vp the iniuitie of their auncester, and to haue his punishment cast into their bosome, as the scripture saith: let vs not think it straunge, for God knoweth wherefore hee dothe it.

Truly if we shold stand reasoning after our own imagination, wee woulde thinke there were some reason that he shold not do so. But it is a diuelish malapertnes too measure Gods works by our owne reason and vnderstāding. And herewithal let vs beare in mind also what hath bin declared: that is to witte, that all mankinde is foredoone and damned in it selfe, and that God may deale rigorously with them without blame. For our saluation commeth not of ourselues, and when God assueth vs of it, he doth it not for our desert or woorrhyngesse, but of his owne meere mercie as I haue shewed afore.

And so wee see that God ought too bee glorifyed in the rigoure that he executeth vpon the wicked, when he punisheth them in the person of their children. And it serueth to cast the greater terroure vpon all the despisers of God, when they be threatned that they shall be punished euen in their offspring: like as on the contrarie part, when our Lord saith that he will be gracious and pitifull, to shewe mercie in a thousand generations too Exo.34.c.7 Ier.32.c.18. such as loue him and obey him: he meeneth thereby to assure vs the better of the infinite loue which he beareth vs. For when wee know that God thinks it not ynochough to loue vs and to take vs for his children, but voutsafeth also to call our children for our sakes and fauoure: is it not a substanciall prooef of his singular goodnesse? Haue we not so much the more cause to reioyce in our God, seeing that he not only receiueth vs to himselfe, but also maketh our Children partakers of the same grace? Furthermore forasmuch as men are dull vpon the spurre, and bow not easly when God threatneth them: it causeth him to say, that when he hath punished them in their owne persons, the same rigoure must be faine too extend euen vnto their posteritie, yea and that euen after their deceasse he wil not cesse to shew how sore he hated and abhorred them, by punishing their offspring. Sith it is said so, needes ought the wicked to be terribly afraide, yea though they were harder than stone. How nowe [may they say] How greate will Gods vengeance bee vpon vs, seing that euen our children shall be wrapped in it, and that the fragmants thereof shall flie to our prosperitie euen after our deathe? If oure issue must perish through our fault: how great and terrible shal our owne destruction be?

Thus the ye see why our Lord doth expressly threaten the wicked, to punish them euen in their children. It is to the ende that wee shoulde bee touched neerer the quicke with feare, seeing that regne are so dull and hardharted of their owne nature. But let vs come now to that which was touched in the beginning: that is too witte that Gods justice may be seene, howbeit not alwayes. WE see then that the children of the wicked do soone melt away: and if they haue goodes, those wanze away too: and when they seeme to haue wherewith too feede, yea and too fat themselues throughly: men are abashed to see how sodainly it wasteth away, and no man can tell how, but that it is seene to be so. Sothen if wee looke wisely vpon Gods iudgements, we may well see by experiance, that it is not for nought that the scripture sayth, that God will punish the wicked in their offspring. Looke vpon a man that shall haue indured great vnuquietnesse and paynes all his life long too gather goodes: In deede hee heapeth vp a greate hoorde, and it shall seeme that his riches shall never faile in his successours: and yet all is consumed to lesse than nothing. To whome or to what cause may suche chaunge bee imputed? Let vs conclude that God putteth too his hande. WHerefore let vs not bee blinded when oure Lorde worketh after that fashion: but let vs learne to take warning by examples, that we be not caried away with couetousnesse, ne imagin that mans welfare consisteth in much gathering: but rather let vs make account only of Gods blissing as of the thing that nurrishest vs, and wil continue to nurrishe our children also. If God reach out his hand to feede vs, it is ynough for vs: let vs pray hym to continue it still: and that in such wise as we may perceiue him to be a louing father, and assure ourselues that he will not faile our children after our decease. But forasmuch as the wicked do take so greate paine to enrich themselues: the riches that they heape vp, shall be an occasion to cast their children into deeper destruction than their fathers. And when they thinke themselues to haue done maruellously well in gathering much: they do but twine the halters that shall draw their children to destruction. For had they made them to learne but some simple handicraft that they might haue walked conscionably: the same would haue bin a good heritage to them. But when they leauem them possessions: they become so blind with them, that they giue themselues to all naughtiness, and so their riches must needs be an occasion to make them abhorred both of God and man. For God cannot beare their pride. And men also are prouoked against them, bycause that vpon trust of their riches, they take vpon them to do euery man wrong and annoyance. God therefore is forced to bend himselfe against them. Againe, if they bee accustomed too deyntie fare and dronkennesse, they cannot get out of it: and that is a cause to make them giue themselues ouer to all euill in the end. Now looke as the wickednesse increaseth and augmenteth: so also must Gods vengeance growe whiter and riper. Then let vs marke well, that when wee see such chaunges, and that the goodes which are wickedly gotten by the fathers, are scattered and wasted away in the handes of their children, thereby God sheweth vs, that his denouncing of suche threats is not in vayne. Marke that for one point. But yet therewithall lette vs marke also (as I began to say already) that that is not continuall. For diuers times God taketh away the goodes of the godly and of their children, so as they bee quite stripped. And why doth he so? Euē for some reason that is secret to himselfe, and vñknownen to vs. Neuerthelesse we know that the same is for their welfare. For by that meane he intendeth to inure them too pacience, or too take away the occasion of falling asleepe heere bylow, or else (to be short) hee mindest as it were too minister some purgation to them or to let them blud, bycause he seeth well that the abundāce which they possesse, wold be as a noysome superfluitie to them. VVhen a surgion letteth a man blud: it seemeth too bee to his hurt, and in very deede it is the selfesame way wherby a theefe murthereth a man: but yet the letting of him blud by the Phisition, is for the curing of his disease and for a good cause. Euen so it happeneth oftentimes, that God bereueth the righteouse men of the goodes and substance whiche hee hath giuen them: or else that hee impouerisheth their children: and his so doing is not to the ende that wee should take it for any punishment: but cleane contrariwise, it is (as I haue said) a purgation that hee vseth towards his children: and thereby also hee draweth them backe frō being intangled in these worldly goods, least the same might be an occasion to bring them and all their offspring too destruction. Ye see that the execution of Gods iudgements whereof wee haue spoken heretofore is not continuall: and therefore wee cannot make a generall rule of it without exception.

But let vs come backe too that which wee haue spoken of so often already: and which shall bee declared in the next Chapter folowing: whiche is, that Gods iudgements are not always visible so as we might point them out to say, God dealerh always after this manner. So then, whensoeuer God punisheth any man, be it in hys owne person, or in his offspring: let vs looke well vpon such examples, that we may profite ourselues by them. And if hee winke at others, and punish them not at the firste: let vs tarrie paciently till the day of the Lorde apere. For so long as we be in this world, wee bee as it were in the nighte, by reason that thinges are so darke. But at the comming of our Lord Iesus Christ, all bookees and registers shall bee laide open, and nothing shall bee hidden any more: and therefore let vs tarrie paciently for that day. Furthermore if God scourge vs, yea euen in such wise as wee may suppose that hee hateth vs, and persecuteth vs as a mortall enemie: yet let vs not therefore ceasse to humble ourselues vnder him, and too acknowledge the same to be a meane whereby he woulde draw vs vnto him: but let vs suffer him too handle vs as he thinketh good, determining with our selues, not too be wedded too much to our owne fansie. For what a thing were it if every mans life were in his owne hand, so as he might say, I will haue this thing to be thus, and that thing to be so: VVhere wer our obedience? Ageyne let vs consider what wisedome there is in vs too couet the thing that is good for vs. Nay rather, cleane contrariwise, we be tempted to wish the thing that serueth to our vtter vndoing.

Thus then ye see what cause we haue to bridle ourselues, and to put ourselues wholly to the good pleasure of our good God. Now it followeth, that when the wicked man shall haue heaped vp gold as dust, (as of treasure, apparrell, household stuffe and such other things, and also of Lande: ) the righteouse shall cloth himselfe with it. This may come too passe many a time and often, and when it happeneth, we must not be blind so as we shuld not discerne the hand of God to fare the better by it. It is said that a man may well turmoyle himselfe, hee may rise early and go late to bed, &c yet shal be neuer the further forward for it, but rather the more backward, except God blisse him: and contrariwise that he gyueth his faithfull ones whatsoeuer is meete for them, euen while they lye asleepe. Lo heere a threate, Lo heere a promise. VVee see it is not for nought that he said so. For he will make the faithfull to prosper: and sometimes he will adauance them in such wise, as that their goodes shall growe betweene theyr handes. Ageyne wee see there are a number whiche neuer leauem gathering all their lyfe long, and yet for all that, God ouerthroweth them vpon the sodaine, in somuche that when they haue taken greate peynes, all slippeth away. VVee see it too bee so: but doo wee see it alwayes? No. Then let vs learne too looke vpon Gods temporall iudgementes in suche sorte, as wee constreyne him not to do at all tymes alyke. For there is greate differences betwixte the thynges that concerne thyss presente life, and the secrete iudgementes of God.

After the same manner must wee iudge of his promises. For there are promyses that belong but too the presente lyfe: and wee see not those promyses perfourmed alwayes after one rate, but after as GOD knoweth them too bee expediente for vs. As touching the Spirituall promises, that belong too the welfare of our soules, they bee certayne, and it behoueth vs too conclude, that God will neuer disappointe vs of them. So then let vs put a difference betweene the thynges that concerne this transitorie life, and the things that concerne the hea-

the heauenly life and the euerlasting kingdome of God. As for this presente life, wee may generally well looke that God shalld guide vs in it, and hope that as long as he mindeth to keepe vs heere, we shall be nurished by his goodnesse, and continue alwayes vnder his shadow and shelding: but wee cannot particularly determine, that hee will giue vs abundance of goodes, that hee will graunt vs helthe, that hee will deliuer vs from oure enimes, or that he will help vs by this meanes or that. VVe cannot precisely point vpon any thing: but it behoueth vs to haue our eyes seeld vp: for God will haue vs too be heere as in a batrell. But when all is done, we cannot fall but vpon our feete as they say. For all the troubles of this worlde shall not let God from leading vs too the saluation which he hath promised vs, and wherevnto he calleth vs. The like is to be said of punishments. The curse of God is euermore vpon the wicked: (that is certayne) and although they bee rich, although they triumph, although they be in credite and estimation: yet are they not able to call vpon God, and therefore they haue no rest in their consciences, but are continually disquietted, nether can they asswage their greefe by the knowledge of gods goodnesse, for they haue no drop of such knowledge as was declared yesterday. So then although God execute not his vengeance vpon the wicked, to the open sight of the world: yet ceasse they not to be cursed in the middes of their prosperitie: and as for the last punishment [at the day of doome,] they cannot misse of it, they must needs come to it though they tarrie neuer so long. Yea and when they haue liued a long time, in such wise as God may seeme to haue bin favorable to them, to be willing to follow their lure in all things: the same is farre worse for them, than if they had bin chastized in the world. For they must be faine to pay a deare shot for the goodes that they haue crammed vp in this world, for their sotting of themselues in all riotousnesse, for abusing of his gentlenesse and pacience, and for mocking at him and at his doctrine and at all religion. So then the last punishment whiche God denounceth againste the wicked, cannot misse them. But yet in this world it may welyngough fall out that they shall not be punished at the first dash, at leastwise that we can perceiue. Now let vs come to that which Iobsaith. The wicked (saith he) shall beape vp money as dust. For God to shew his vengeance the better, suffereth the wicked to enrich themselues after such a sort, as they seeme to be Seagulfes that swallow vp all the goodes of the world. And certesse if a wicked man should neuer prosper: men should not perceiue the punishmente that is spoken of heere, namely that when he is growne rich, and hath gathered much: yet he cannot afterward enioy it. If a man shoulde aske those that take such paine to heape vp riches, what their intent is; O (say they) I cannot tell what may befall me: for I shall grow olde, and I shall haue neede of succour, many ouerthwaris do befall men, I will haue wherewith too help my selfe at my neede: and besides that, I haue children, and I will not leau them poore.

To what their answer is which take so much paynes to enrich themselues. Yea, but in the meane season, whither it be by reaon that they restrayne themselues from them (as diuers of them bee so niggardly, as it greeueth them too doo themselues any good, and they dare not helpe themselues with their owne, when they want) or whither it fall out that God snatched their goodes out of their hands, (as now and then it happeneth that after he hath suffered them to haue their full scope, he strippeth them quite and cleane of them in one momente, and it is seene that they and their offspring are become poore, and no man can tell how:) wee see they cannot inioy the thinges that they haue heaped togither. And so we see that this threatening is executed vpon many: namely, that the wicked shall heape vp gold and siluer and moueables, and yet in the end good men shal come to be clothed with them. True it is that bycause Gods chidren walke simply and plainly, they may want many thinges, and it may seeme that pouertie threatneth too attach them within a day or twayne: but yet God prouideth in suche wise for them, as they alwayes keepe on their way still.

VVe see then that the godly shall sometimes be clothed with the spoile of the wicked: but yet for all that, what a thing were it to make a certaine rule of it, and to bind God to it continually? VVherefore it behoueth vs to beare alwayes in mind, that Gods iudgements are not euer apparaunt and visible to be seene with mens eyes. VVhen we see a wicked man rich, we stumble at it, saying what meeneth this? And when wee see the wicked and the despisers of God honoured: it seemeth too vs that God gouerneth not the world, and that thinges are guided by Fortune. Behold how faish is vtterly defaced, when we go about to measure Gods iudgements by the thinges that wee can presently see with our eyes. And therefore let vs learne too suspend oure iudgements. Verely if God plucke the wicked mens goodes out of their hands: let vs understand that he fulfilleth the threat whiche wee haue spoken of in this place. And if he do not: let vs marke that he reserueth the execution of hys iustice vntill the last day, and that he wil not bring things to perfection as now, bycause he will nurish oure hope still, and not haue vs wedded to this world, nor seeke our felicitie heere bylow as in a Paradise of pleasure, but too lift vp our eycs aloft, and to passe as lightly through thys world as through a iourney, knowing ourselues too bee wayfarers and wanderers in this world, and that therefore it behoueth vs too trauell continually too the heauenly and euerlasting heritage. As much is ment by that which followeth, which is, That the wicked man shalld build his house as a moth, and that it shalld be as watchmans Caban, even such a watchmans Caban as Watcheth the vineyardes. VVhen the vnbeleeuers and the despisers of God do build, they beare themselues in hand that they shal dwell in them a thousand yeares after their death. For dothe not the statelinesse that is seene in the buildings that are made by the despisers of God, shew that they imagin an immortalitie in this worlde? They beare themselues in hande, that they shall prolong their life by their palaces. VVhen a man hath buildd his house to continue for a thousand yeares, hee beleeuers that his house is tied too him, and that he shall by that meanes be renoumed. But God scorneth such ouerweening.

For this cause Job compareth the houses of wicked men, to the houses of mothes. How so? The moth marreth and wasteth all things, to make himselfe a lodgynge: he eateth cloth, he eateth furre, he eateth all that he findeth, and to be shorte, wheresoeuer a moth lodgeth, it is always too another bodies cost and hinderaunce, and yet notwithstanding there is nothing but corruption and vermin in his lodgynge. VVhen a vinekeeper maketh his Caban too watche the vineyardes, it is but for three moonethes: for as soone as the vintage is done, downe goes the Caban: and although no man set hande too it, yet it falleth downe of it selfe. Euen so it is sayde heere, that the wicked men do make them stately houses, and beare themselues in hande that when they haue buildd after that manner, they shall dwell in them for euer. But what? VVhat are they themselues? Euen as Hh. iiiij. a moth, a moath, that is to say, they haue nothing but corruption, and that must they be faine to carrie with them continually. Seeing it is so: surely their houses will not continue long. True it is that they shall make a great shewe for a time: but in the ende God will beate downe theyr houses, so as they shall not abide in them any long while.

Thus see yee a notable iudgement that God executeth vpon those that wil make such estimation of themselues in this world. And forasmuch as we see examples therof: we ought to marke them well, and thereby learne, not to nestle ourselues in this world, nor too build by guile, wrong, and extortion. Let our building be according to the goodes that God hath giuen vs. And let not such as are well houed, besotte themselues in their owne lusts to nestle themselues heere. For let me nestle themselues vpon earth as much as they list, and yet shall it not barre God from plucking them away. Then let vs keepe ourselues well from making our nest heere bylow: according as it will be said in the nine and twentieth Chapter, 20 that Iob made his reckening that his state should never chaunge. But men beguile themselues in behighting themselues such euerlastingnesse, and God also laugheth their fond presumption to scorne. And therefore if the godly be lodged after their owne mind, yet let them count themselues as straungers in this world, and let them be always redy to part hence whensoeuer it shall please God. And if they haue not the commodities that were too bee wished: yet let them go forward still, and learne to know that God aduertizeth them by eyesight, 30 that this is not the place where they must abide, but that it behoueth them to passe further. Thus the ye see what we haue to remember when we perceiue that our Lord will not haue men to set their minds vpon the things heere bylow. Therfore let vs trauell the right way where hee calleth vs: and then shall wee bee blissted, then shal euery of vs dwell in rest al the time that he hath to liue, because we shall not be trembled with the vnquietnesse which the wicked and the despisers of God haue. Thus much cōcerning that point. And furthermore, although 40 that both we ourselues, and also our houses be nothing but corruption: yet haue we this promise to comfort vs, that when wee bee restored fully to the heauenly glory, we shall haue no more neede of these material buildings heere bylow, yea and that our body it selfe shall be another manner of thing than it is now. But yet therewithall let vs learn also, not to build with snatching and catching and other lewd dealings. For that is the cause why oure Lord doth so destroy the great palaces that are builded, and throw them quite downe. According also as we see the Prophets threatē, that they shal be the dwelling places of shreeke Oules, of wilde beastes, of birds of pray, yea and of nightcrows and wilde woodwards. Our Lorde then doth it not but to auenge himselfe of the robberies and extortions that are committed for the building of great palaces, according as it is said in the Prophet Abacucke that when such as haue bereft other men of theyr goodes do build, there is as it were a quire betweene the walles, so as one wall shall crie out I am builded vpon blud, and another, I of murther. Therfore let the faythfull aduise themselues well when they build, that it bee not vpon goodes wrongfully gotten, if they minde too haue ioy of their dwelling. And therewithall how soever the world goe, let them not rest there, to make their nest of it: but let them bee redy to remoue, whensoeuer it shall please God. Now furthermore it is said, That the wicked man shalldie, and not be buried honourably, and that he shall open his eyes, and see nothing. This serueth to conclude the matter that hathe bin treated of: for Iob mea-neth, that it may well come to passe (and so it doth indeede) that the wicked shall stumble, yea euen after hee hath bin aduaunced. For the thing whereat he looketh, is that oure Lorde exalteþ the wicked, and afterwarde letteþ them fall, yea euen a deadly fall. For as touching their death, they are not buried honorably: and agayne, when they looke about them, they find no succoure, but are disappointed of their longing. Here we haue a fayre looking glasse of Gods iudgements, sobeit that wee play not those which held argument against Iob: (that is to witte) that we go not about to inforce God to sette things in their perfect state. For that shall not be done till the last day. Yet in the meane season, it behoueth vs to be warned, to looke vpon Gods hand, as oft as oure Lord ouerthroweth the wicked and beateth the downe. VVe must not in this pointe seeke any chaunce as the children of this world do, whiche imagine a wheele of Fortune, whereas men are hoysted vp aloft: and afterward let fall againe. For the changes and returnings which we see in the world, are not things that happē by aduenture, but it behoueth vs to fater them vpon the hand of God. As howe? Some times hee punisheth them that haue abused his grace, and sometimes hee beareth with them, so as it is not perceiued that he mindest too punish them: but yet they shall haue so much the more terrible account to make, as I haue touched alredy. Notwithstanding, if we see the wicked fall, it behoueth vs to know, that God did not aduaunce them without cause, but that the same was to the end that their fall shoulde be the greevouser, euen to breake their necke. Then after they haue bin hoyed vp aloft, God must make them to fal after that fashiō. Furthermore, it is not for nought that their buriali is spoken of heere. For although it bee neyther heere nor there in respect of our saluation: yet are there two things to be considered. The one is, that the wicked do at their deathe defye God and nature, and thinke too prolong their greatnessse and pompousnesse still in spite of nature when our Lorde conueyeth them into rottennesse. Yea euen then do I say the worldly and fleshly men make much more brauerie than in all theyre life afore. For their sumptuous buriali is to saue theyr memoriall from perishing, that men might speake of it for ever. So the we see, that the foolish curiositie which the worldlings and vnbeleuers vse in being buried with great pomp, is to continue their pride in despite of God. But God laugheth such presumption to scorne. For he disappointeth their expectation, (in somuch that wheres as they purposed to be buried honorably, diuers times he hath giuen them a cleane contrarie buriali. Marke that for one point.

But yet it is also too bee considered, that buriali was brought in by God. It is no inuention of man withoute good grounde: but it is Gods ordinance, too the ende it should be a witnesse vnto vs, of the resurrection and euerlasting life. VVhen men be buried, they are layde vp in the earth as in a store house, vntill they may bee rayfed vp againe at the last day, and so our buriali is vnto vs as a looking glasse of the resurrection. Therefore when the wicked are disappointed of buriali, it is as much as if our Lorde vttered hys curse vpon them after a visible manner, yea euen as well in deathe as in life, according as it is sayde heere. And yet notwithstanding, lette vs marke, that if the wicked bee buried honourably, wee must not bee troubled at it, nor thinke that God hath forgotten hym selfe, or that hee executeth not hys iudgements in conueniente tyme, for wee see what the scripture saith of the rich man: namely that he was buried. And

And what sayeth it of Lazarus? There is no mention made of his burial: insomuch that it is not knowne whether he were eaten with dogges, or whether he were cast abrode into the feeldes. The Scripture speaketh not of it: it speaketh but of the buriall of the rich man. Contrarywise, if Gods children happen sometimes to lie vnburredis it to be concluded therfore, that they are accursed? No: like as when the wicked are buried, it is not too bee sayd that they are blessed in their death. But it is to shewe vs, that God executeth not his temporall punishments after one egall rate in this worlde, but reserveth the cheef to himselfe till the latter day. As much is to be sayd when wee see good men burned, and put to open shame, and Gods children perishe wth the wicked, yea as touching the bodie, so as they be caried to the gallowes. For although they be the martyrs of Iesus Christ, and that that slander be more honour too them before God, than all the preferments in the worlde: yet notwithstanding, god giueth them not buriall. And howe commeth that too passe? Howe falleth out the threatening agaynst the wicked, that is spoken of here? It behoueth vs to come back to that which I haue sayde: (namely) that they be suche iudgements as are hidden and incomprehensible as yet, and that it behoueth vs to tarie till our Lorde bring vs to that day, wherein all things shall bee discouered. In the meane season, let vs knowe that the heauen shall serue for a tumbe too suche as are so martyred, I meane to the innocents that are put to reproch by the wicked and the persecuters. And that if they had the honourablest buriall in the worlde, it were nothing in comparison of the 30 benefitte and priuiledge, that God giueth them. For can a man finde a more honourable tumbe than the heauen? But our Lorde maketh that to serue for a tumbe for his children, when he bereaueth them of comon & ordinarie buryall. And so if it please God too haue vs buryed: let vs know that the same is as a record of his goodnesse. And if hee bereue the wicked of their buriall: let vs also beholde his vengeance, both in their life and in theyr death. Yet notwithstanding, let vs learne to refrayne our selues, and to haue our eyes as it were closed vp in respect of his secrete judgementes, vntill wee be come vnto the last day, where he will shew vs the things perfectly, which are now out of order.

Nowe let vs fall downe before the face of our good God with acknowledgement of our sinnes, praying him to make vs feele them more and more, that we may bee sorie for them in such wise, as we may desire nothing but to bee gouerned by his holy spirite: and therewithall let vs beseeche him humblie, too vouchsafe too vse his infinite mercie towrdes vs, in releasing the offences wherby wee bee bounde before his iudgement, and that wee may so passe through the worlde, as wee maye not bee wedded too worldly things, but stablished in fayth and hope, vntill oure Lorde haue called vs into his Kingdome, where wee shall fully see the things of which we knowe but a small portion as nowe: and that in the meane while wee maye bee strengthened agaynst all the stumbling blockes of the worlde, and neuer ceasse too giue glorie to our God, notwithstanding that our fleshly reason comprehendeth not the huge depthes that are in his woorkes. That it maye please him too graunt this grace not onely to vs, but also to all people and, &c.

The Cj. Sermon, which is the fift vpon the. xxvij. Chapter.

and the first vpon the. xxvij. Chapter.

19. VVhen the riche man sleepeth he shall not gather ought: he shall open his eyes and nothing shall bee seene.
20. Troubles shall come vpon him as vvater, and a tempest shall carie him avvay by night.
21. The East vvinde shall beare him avvay, and hee shall bee gone, and it shall hurle out his place like a vvhirlevvinde.
22. He shall rushe in vpon him, and not spare him, hee shall flee from his hande.
23. Men shall clappetheir handes togither agaynst him, and hisse at him out of their place.

The. xxvij. Chapter.

SIluer hath his spring, and Golde hath a place to grovve in.

2. Iron is taken out of the earth: and Brasse is molten out of the stone.
3. God hath set an ende vnto darkenesse, and vnto all things that tende vnto ende, the bounds of darkenesse, and the shadovve of death.
4. He ouerflowveth the ryuer agaynst the inhabiter, the vvaters are forgotten of the foote, and vwhen they haue risen aboue a man, they sinkeagaine.
5. Out of oneselfsame earth commeth bread, and vnder it there is a chaunge as it vvere fire, 6. There is a place vvhерeof the stones are Saphyres, and the moulde is golde.
7. Nobirde hath knovvne the vvay of it, neither hath the eye of the kite scene it.
8. The Lions vvhelpes haue not vwalked there, neyther hath the Lion pasted by it.
9. He lieth his hande vpon the rocke, and turneth vp the mountaynes by the rootes.

Cording to yesterdays talke, it is sayde heere, that the rich man shall 60 open his eyes and finde nothing. VVhereby it is ment that the riche men shall bee safe for a time, and thinke that they shall never wante any thing. But in the ende al shall bee hidden from them, and there shall be no more hope for them: they shall awake and seeke succour, but not finde it. The summe is, that although riche men sleepe in their wealth for a time bicause they thinke they shall never want, and haue their eyes blinded with ouerweening: yet notwithstanding God doth afterwarde inforce them too seeke helpe without finding it: and then they perceyue, that their trusting in their riches was in vaine, and so they are confounded. This iudgement of God is dayly scene: and therefore, wee bee warned, that althoughthe God giue vs all that wee can wilhe, so as wee thinke we shall never wante: we must not fall a sleepe in it, knowing that our life is subiect to so many chaunges, as you woulde wonder to see it. Therefore let vs watch in calling vpon God, let vs watche that we rest not vpon the things that wee haue in oure owne handes, let vs watche too knowe that wee haue neede to bee succored many wayes : and by that meanes let vs learne too returne vntoo God, and to settle and grounde our selues vpon his onely prouidence and goodnesse . This is the warning which we ought to gather of this sentence. But this is not seene alwayes . Therefore (as I sayde) let vs learne , not to make a generall rule of it: and althoughe 10 the riche men overflowe in wealth , and haue a greate trayne aboue them , and euerie man laboureth too doo them seruice : And finally that they want nothing : let vs not thinke that God hath giuen ouer his office , but that hee reserueth too himselfe the iudgement whiche hee executeth vpon some, too the ende wee shold not thinke , but that hee is able too accomplishe it in thy worldc if it pleased him. Other men take this sentence somewhat otherwise : that is to witte , they referre this saying (hee shall open his eyes or looke aboue) not too the riche men, but to all men. And [ so the meening shoulde bee] that men shall looke aboue them where those folke are become that liued in wealth, and bare so great port in the worlde, and not see them any more , according as it is sayde in the seuen and thirtie Psalme, I sawe hym perking vp as a hie Ceder in Mount Lybanus , and hee touched the clowdes with his heade. But anon after I came backe by hym, and founde his place no more. Ye see then howe God maketh the wicked to vanishe away in suche wise , that the remembrance of them is wyped oute of the worlde : and this sense will agree well too this text.

Furthermore , there are othersome whiche vnder- stande not this sentence, neyther of deaht, nor of buriall as was expounded yesterday: but as though it were sayd, that when the wicked man layeth him downe to rest, hee shall finde none. Yet notwithstanding the easiest interpretation is too say , that the wicked shall not scape, but that God will shewe his iustice vppon them: and (as I haue sayde) this commeth to passe; howbeit not alwayes. 40 So then, we must not ever seeke the execution of Gods iustice in this worlde: for that were an euill principle, and it woulde trouble vs , (as I haue declared afore) if wee sawe not these things with our eyes which we haue imagined vpon. Then let vs vnderstande, that oure Lorde delayeth his iudgements when he thinketh good, and maketh them not manifest too the worlde. Nowe it is consequentlye, Hee, that fearefulnesse shall ouertake the wicked man as a rage of water. Hee speakest heere of waters : but hee meeneth , that it is as a sodaine storne; 50 when a tempest or a whire winde commeth by night. As this judgement of God is common, so is it also notable: that is to witte , that God sendeth suche fearefulnesse vpon the wicked , as they knowe not where to become; and that the same commeth as a storne, and as a tem- pest in the night, which a man foresawe not, ne yet tooke heede of.

This is spoken purposely , bycause the wicked doo bear themselves in hande ; that God ought to let themi alone in rest : and yet notwithstanding, thoughte they be 60 not troubled , they cannot bee throughoutly in quiet ; by- cause they haue an euill conscience : but yet they be- bright themselves woonders.. And as it is sayde in the Prophete (specially in Esay.) they make a couenaunte with death; so as they thinke themselves to be in such league and attonement with the graue , that althoughe the earth were couered wyth a floudde , and vitterly drowned, yet the mischeefe coulde not come neare

Yee see then howe the wicked are puffed vp wyth pride , when God pincheth them not, and howe they harden themselves thereby. And surely if a man threaten them, and tell them what shall be the ende of theyr attempts : they are so little moued therewith , that they doo but mocke at it. Thus yee see why it is sayde, That fearefulnesse shall come vpon them as a rage of water: according also too the saying of Saine Paule too the Thessalonians, that when they shal say peace, and all is safe : then shall they bee sodainly ouerthrowne, and the destruction whiche they thought not of, nor once doubted, shall come vpon them. So then when there is anie talke of suche alteration whiche God sendeth vpon the wicked , ( whiche is that hee destroyeth them sodeynly, as if he sent a storne or tempest in the night:) let vs learne, not too bee so sotted in foolishe presumption, as too thinke that God will let vs alone in rest : neyther let vs flatter oure selues, but rather let vs knowe 20 that our Lorde intendeth too keepe vs vnder in lowelinesse, too the ende wee shoulde haue oure mindes the freer too come vntoo him , and not bee drawne awaie by the vanityes of this worlde , but rather bee prouoked too giue oure selues wholy vntoo him. Yee see then howe it behoueth vs too seeke peace in God, and not in worldely goodes. If wee doo so, let vs not bee afraide that wee shall bee ouerthrowne wyth anie sodaine tempest, or that God will sende anie suche fearefulnesse vppon vs , as shall trouble vs : but con- trarywise, all suche as presume vppon their earthly prosperitie , muste bee fayne too feele the hande of God: And althoughe not in this worlde, yet in the worlde too come , they muste bee fayne too come too an ac- counte : and theri can they not escape the hande of the heauenly ludge . VVheresore lette vs walke ad- uisedly.

Furthermore, though the wicked bee nowe and then without feare, let vs not thinke that God hath forgotten their wickednesse: for wee do not alwayes perceyue his iudgements presently, as I haue sayde. Therefore it behoueth vs too tarie for the discouerie of them , vntyll the last daye : assuring oure selues , that God will sometimes trie oure fayth , by holding his hande as it were hidden from vs. And further, it behoueth vs too note, that althoughe the feare whiche God sendeth vpon the wicked, and vppon the despysers of his woerde, bee not perceyued heere: yet notwithstanding, they feele a secrete feare continually in theyr heartes, as it is sayde by the Prophete Esay, That there is no peace for the wic- Esay.48.d. ked , but that they are lyke the waues that beate one a- 22 gaynste an other. So long as there is any violent winde, wee see the water is so turmoyled, that the waues breake one agaynste another. Euen so the wicked (withoutte trouble at other mens handes) doo torment themselves, and are hangmen too theiselves in all their thoughtes and affections. They shall quake at the falling of a leafe when no bodie followeth them. But this fearfulnessesse shall Len.26.r. bee secrete : for outwardly they set a good countenance upon the matter, and also they knowe not themselves, but are dulled in theiselves, and chafe at God , and admit not the warnings that hee giueth them too moue them too repentance. Therefor let vs learne too seeke this peace that I haue spoken of, whiche is too haue a good and pure conscience, so as wee leane vntoo God and call vpon him! And theri althoughe hee sende vs troubles: yet shall wee, not bee so vterly ouerthrowne , but wee shall haue whereof to reioyce in his goodnessse. But it is said finalliy, finally, that they shall bee caryed away by the Eastwinde, driven out of theyr place, and overwhelmed with miseries, and shall flee away. These similitudes of the Eastwinde, and of VVhirlewindes are added, all too one purpose. For in respect of the Countrey of Iewrie, theyr Easterne winde was boystousest, as all the holy Scripture sheweth. And so it is ment, that when the wicked haue prospered, and are become riche and mightie, they shall nevertheless bee caught awaye or throwne downe, as if there rose a great tempest, and that there came sodainly such a winde as shoulde beare downe all things, so as they shoulde bee compelled too flee a waye. And whereas they thought themselues well fenced, yea and trusted also theruntoo: they shall well feele, that all that cannot restreyne the execution of Gods iustice vpon them. Although then that they scarre poore men, and bee a terroure too every man: yet muste they bee faine too runne awaye themselues. And why? For there shall bee no more power in them too withstande the inconuenience: they shall well knowe that they muste needs bee vtterly ouerthrowne, bycause it is the hande of God that persecuteth and punishmenteth them. Too be short, it is shewed vs heere, that such as bee so bolde in troubling others, shall bee so daunted by the hande of God, that they shall forget the stoutenesse that was in them, and the Lionlyke courage, and all their pride, and shall become as cowardely as Curres. And why? For they shall feele Gods hande which they had despoyzed afore.

Heereby wee bee warned too foresee Gods iudgements a long while aforehande, that wee may wayte for them paciently. So then although God let vs alone in rest, yet let vs not ceasse to examin our sinnes, and to acknowledge our selues worthie too bee beaten with his roddes. In so doing let vs cast downe oure heads, and learne to bridle our selues, and not bee so bolde as to doo amisse. Let all our boldnesse be in calling vpon our God, and in despising of sin, the deuill and the world through his power, in that we be vnder the protection of our god. But yet theerwithall let vs walke alwayes in lowlinesse and modestie, knowing that such as haue after that sort beene a terroure vntoo others, shall bee constreyned too hide themselues, and shall finde no safetie, according as it is certaine, that the wicked shall be forced to flee. For needes muste that thing bee fulfilled in them whiche is sayde in the Psalme. Lorde, where shall I become, that

Psa. 139.4.7 I maye scape thy handes? If I shoulde flie aboue the clowdes, thy Maiestie is there aboue too stoppe mee. If I get mee ouer the Sea, thy hande will ouerrake me. If I go downe intoo the deepes, thou art well able to fetch mee backe againe. So then, the wicked may desire the Osee. 10.6.8 Mountaynes too fall vpon them, but it shall not boote Luc. 23.4.30 them: for the hande of God shall take holde of them, Apo. 6.6.16 wheresocuer they hyde themselues. VVherfore let vs assure our selues, that they are in a wrong boxe, that seeke peace when they bee persecuted by the hande of God: they may well shunne it, but they cannot escape it. Nowe although this bee not seene in all matters presently: yet dooth not God ceasse too bee the iudge of the worlde still: that is the poynt wherevntoo wee muste continually haue recourse. And finally, it is sayde for conclusion, Tbat every man shall clappe bis handes, when he seeth the wicked after that fashion, and every man shall biffe at them in the way of scorne and mockerie, out of his place. That is to say, the poore folke that had beene oppressed afore, and durst not shewe themselues abrode in the streetes, bycause of these Robbers that fleeced them, and were readie too eate them vp, shall reioyce when our Lorde dooth after that maner destroy such as had beene in credite and authoritie, insomuch that they shall clap their handes, and mocke at the pride and ouerweening that is in such despisers of God. Here it might be demaunded, whether it bee lawfull for the good and faythfull, too bee glad when they see the fall of the wicked.

This were as a superfluous question in this place, bycause it is not tolde vs that it is lawfull so to doo: but onely barely shewed vs, that the worlde is glad of it, according also as it is seene by experiance, that when the pillers and pollers that haue molested all men, as well great as small, do die, and are beaten downe by the hand of God: it is a thing that all men reioyce at. And why? For they haue beene the enemis of the worlde. But yet wee muste marke this caueat, that if our reioysing were not fleshly, ne proceeded of a desire to reuendge, it were good and holy, and allowable before God. But if wee bee prouoked too reioyce through aduengement, or throught fleshly affection: then is our gladnesse cursid, and too bee condemned. And so when men are moued by theyr passions, whether it be to gladnesse or too sorrowe: surely their ioy, or their sorrowe is commonly sinfull. VVherefore if a man will reioyce at the fall of the wicked, hee muste not doo it vpon any fleshly desyre, but onely in allowing Gods iustice, and in agreeing too that whiche hee sheweth: and yet in the meane while he must always be stablished and grounded more and more in his feare and loue, and also haue good government of his owne affections. Thus you see that it may bee lawfull for vs too reioyce in the destruction of the wicked. But let vs take good heede that we bee not stirred therenvnto by our fleshly affections, ne intermeddle any thing of our owne. Yet notwithstanding as touching this present text, let vs marke how it is shewed vs here, that the wicked which are full of ambition and vainglorie, and seeke to haue the estimation of the whole worlde, wist nedes become lothsome, and God wyll bring them so intoo hatred, that euery man shall reioyce at their destruction. Ye see then that they shall be disappoyneted of their expectation. Although this happen not at all tymes: yet lette not vs thinke that oure Lorde hathe therefore forgotten his duetie, but let vs tarie for the reuelation whiche is promised vs at the laste daye.

And heere ye see why Job declareth many of the secretes of nature that are seene in the worlde, and therevpon concludeth, that if a man had the vnderstanding of all the things that are hidde, yet notwithstanding, Goddes wisedome, surmounteth and is farre higher. Some take this as though it were sayde: things chaunge in this worlde, and wee see no continuance in the order of nature: for where frutefull seedles haue beene, that haue borne good corne, there men see fyre: that is too saye, barreynnesse. And where a man woulde haue thought there had beene but grauell or sande, there oftentimes hathe beene Golde, and precious stones.

VVee see then manie chaunges in the worlde, as it is sayde in the hundredth and seventh Psalme. That is the matter whiche the Prophete treateth of there, shewing that by reason of mennes sinnes, the earth becommeth barreyn, insomuche that it seemeth that menne haue sowne Salte there: And the places that were well inhabyted, become desert, so as menne are constreyned to eschue them for famine, and for the heate and colde, which greeue them in suche wise as they wote not where to become: And also that God with his goodness, nesse ouergoing the naughtinesse of man, maketh the feede:s frutefull which were barren before, and maketh store of sustenance, where grewe not one graine of corne before. Some then are of opinion, that Job ment here to make suche a description, as is conteyned in the sayde Psalme. But I haue alreadie shewed you his meening: that is too wit, that there are many things in the worlde whiche are secrete, and wherein there seemeth too bee no reason: and yet notwithstanding men shall finde reason in them at the last, and also fynde the things that are hidden: but as for Goddes wisedome, menne shall never attaine too it, nor reache so high. And this comparison holdeth from the smallest to the greatest: as if Job shoulde say, go to my frendes, it is a verie harde thing to mans vnderstanding, too seeke out the meanes howe to finde out golde and siluer, and precious stones. True it is that men do neuerthelesse bring it to passe: but yet may it well bee called a secrete of nature. Also there are other things wherein men are grauelled, and can doo no more but woonder at them: for that sometymes ryuers run out of some place where none was euer thought to be before: according as there be waters which sometymes rise, and sometimes fall, so as a man may sometimes go through a place on drie foote, and anon after the water shall swel vp to his chinne, and one while the brookes shall drie, and another while increase. Verely there seemeth to bee no great secrete in this: for the brookes increase by the melting of the snowe, and by great raine: but you shall sometimes see springs dried vp, and anon after gush out water so abundantly, as a man cannot say, but that God mindeth to shew his power in such chaunges. These therefore are things which are scene in the world, and serue for this present life, and yet are darke. But it is yet further true, that mans reason may well inquire of them, and studie vpon them, so as hee shall finde some reason. But Gods wisedome is another maner of thing.

VVhen we come to his iudgements, let vs not thinke to conteyne them in our brayne, or to compasse them with our wit: but let vs reuerence the things that wee knowe not, confessing that the Maiestie of God is ouer hic for vs, and that it becommeth vs not to go about too abace it in suche wise, as too imagine too determine of it as we thinke good: but let vs content our selues with that which God sheweth vs, assuring our selues that there is an ouerlong distance betwene God and vs, and that he must bee fayne too come vnto vs, or else we shall never come vnto him: howbeit in comming too vs, his meening is not that we shall yet knowe the things that he wil shewe vs at the last day. Thus ye see what Iobs meening is. Notwithstanding, it is not necessarie as now to stand vpon all the things that are spoken here. For the intent of the holy holy ghost, is not too shewe vs the cunning of such mynes. It woulde be a verie small profitie, if I shoulde bestowe three or four Sermons too teache you to seeke out the mynes of golde and siluer: For it is not the thing that wee haue too seeke, and every man would not occupie himselfe in that trade. So then we must not stande vpon euery peice when wee finde mention made of mynes of golde and siluer, or when it is sayde vnto vs, that there is golde or graynes of mettall to be founde in the sande or in some ryuer. But it ought to suffice vs, to see that God hath put such secretes in nature, to the end to be magnified by vs. Thus ye see the effect that wee haue to beare in minde: which is, that if we ought to acknowledge Gods infinite power and wisedome, yea euen in the least things in the worlde. Much more ought wee to doo it in the secretes that are so straunge too vs, as is golde and siluer, and suche like things. For then ought we to bee more moued, and our mindes ought to be better wakened, that wee may the better perceyue and vnderstande the inestimable power of our God. For our Lorde will not haue vs dullardes like blockes of wood: but hee woulde haue vs too beholde the woorke:s of hys hande. And indeede it is good reason that wee shoulde knowe them, and thinke vpon them: yea euen in suche wise, as wee may ycelde him his due glorie, and be moued thereby to knowe what the worker is, so as wee become not like the vnhaippie wretches, that walke in the worlde, treading Gods workes vnder their feete, and knowing not his Maiestie. Therefore let vs not bee so brutishe, but at leastwise although we bee not so heauie and grosse as not too consider Gods Maiestie and power in common and base things: yet when we come to things that are straunge to vs, let vs be moued in that case, and beginne to consider that there is a God that worketh by wonderfull meanes: Or otherwise our vnthankfulness will be vnxcusable, if we thinke not vpon it. But therewithall let vs marke, that God will not haue our mindes tied too the things of this worlde: he had leauer that we shoulde come vnto him, and that we shoulde know how too profite our selues by the warning that hee giueth vs. VVe see then that the principall poynt which we haue to marke in this streyne, is that when we meeete with any of Gods highe and excellent workes, wee shoulde set oure mindes vpon them, too consider them well, and that in considering them, wee shoulde also glorifie God. It is sayde exprefly, that God hath bounded the darkenesse. Yee see howe darkenesse hydeth all things. In the day time men may discerne white and blacke asunder: but when night commeth, beholde, all things are defaced, our sens:es fayle vs, we discerne not a man from a stone, we discerne not a man from a stone, wee discerne not a house from a hill. But yet for all this, the darkenesse which berecueteth men after that sort of their sight and discerning, is bounded, and God setteth it a stint in the ende. Hereby Job meeneth, that although there bee great diuersitie of things in the worlde, yea euen vnto the verie darkenesse that hydeth away the sight of all things: yet notwithstanding men do go through with them: for anon after, God sendeth light, and the darkenesse continueth not for euer. And here we haue a good and very profitable lesson: which is, that mans reason may haue some abilitie to vnderstande and iudge of these lower things, which concerne the present transitorie life: but as concerning the things that are heauenly, and belong too the kingdome of God, and as concerning his iudgements: al those things are hidden from vs. I said that this doctrine will bee verie profitible, yea verely if it bee well vnderstoode as it ought to bee. Truly there are many euen of the smallest and lowest things, whiche wee cannot conceyue, except God giue vs abilitie: according as wee see howe there are many simple idiotes (as men terme them) which knowe no more than brute beastes. Such maner offolke are set of God before our eies as looking glasses, to humble vs withall. VVhen we see a starke idiot that hath no wit nor reason, it behoueth vs to looke well vpon him, for he is a mirrour of our nature. VVhence come the reason and vnderstanding that wee haue? Is it not the singuler gift of God? Then let all those whiche haue reason and vnderstanding, know that it is God which hath indued them with such grace, and therefore that they bee the more bounde vntoo him. Marke that for one poynt. And surely whereas our Lord hath made some more sharpe witted than others, and giuen them more handesomenesse to compasse the things that they vndertake, so as they forecast, and conclude, and bring bring all their matters to passe wisely, and compasse many things in short time: and otherfome are so slowe and dull witted, that a man must be faine, as it were to beate it into their heades with beetles, if hee will leare them any thing: such diuersitie among men sheweth evidently, that if we haue any power too iudge and discerne aright, it is the special gift of God, & it must not be fatered vpon nature, so as we shoulde not acknowledge that our Lorde dealeth to euery man according as hee himselfe thinketh good. Lo what we haue to marke. Furthermore, when he sayth that mans wit is by nature able to conceyue the things that are here beneath, and which concerne the present life: the worde Nature barreth it not from being Gods gift, but serueth to do vs to understand that the thing is giuen to the viibeleeuers also, & to those whom God hath not forgotten againe by his holy Ghost, who is named the spirite of adoption, bycause he is the marke that God imprinteth vpon his children. So then, although we haue not the holy Ghost, too bee regenerated, and to haue the earnest pennie and pledge of the hoped saluation, yet may we well haue vnderstanding. For it is a common thing both to the beleeuers and vnbeleeuers, too iudge of the things that are heere beneath, yea and oftentymes the wicked, and the despisers of God, to be the sharper witted, and skilfuller in their dooings, according also as our Lorde Iesus Christ speakeith of them. Yee see then howe wee muste beare in minde, that wee may well after a sort comprehend the things that are heere beneath. Not that wee haue the same abilitie, of any other than of God, as I haue sayde afourse: neyther that men haue it all in like measure: for God distributeth it to every man as hee thinketh good. Yet notwithstanding, God putteth not men into this worlde, without giuing them some portion of Reason, so as they may be able to iudge of these inferior things, and moreouer also discerne betweene good and euill. VVhere shall we finde so beastly men, that will not condemne robbery, murther, and whoredome? For verie nature teacheth vs so to do. Againe, all men haue some lawes and forme of common weale, and they see well that they cannot breake order, and guide well the matters that perteyne to this present life of man. Furthermore, they haue also trades and handicrafte: as, one is a Baker, another a Plowman, another a Shoomaker, and another a Clothyer: and all these trades are the gift of God, and they be common, as well to the vnbeleeuers, as to the faythfull whome God hath inlightned by his holy spirite. Howbeit, such giftes serue but for men, bycause mankinde coulde not bee mainteyned in his state, without such helpe and meanes. Ye see then in effect, that the thing which we haue too remember, is that althoughe there be a great number of secrets in nature, and that the things be high which belong to this present life: yet hath God giuen men abilitie to attaine vnto them. As for example: to speake of some handicraft: before a man come to be cunning in the occupation, he shall find straunge things: yea there are some woorkes that require such cunning, as ye would woonder. Howe is this possible to be done, will men say? Howe coulde men know where Golde lyeth in the earth? Beholde men make Salt of water. Howe commeth that to passe? Surely euuen bycause God hath giuen men the skill. Againe, what is the Golde and the Siluer that are spoken of here? Beholde, the metall is mingled with earth, it hath not so much as colour, yea and it seemeth to be vtterly vnprofitable. And howe can a man discerne it? Howe can he fine it so as it should serue his turne, and become a preciuos metall, and a meane of traffike betweene man and man, according as we see both golde and siluer applyed to that vse? Howe might that be done? Againe, as touching other artes, there is no handicraft so base and common, but that at the first men are to seeke how to worke in it. Specially when we see howe men sowe corne, how can it growe will some say? Howe doo men make wine and such other things? VVhen wee once knowe these things, wee thinke them not straunge at all, but yet is it God that hath giuen vs the skill of them, for otherwise we shoulde be too seeke. The thing then that I meane, is that there is some capacicie in men to comprehend naturall things, notwithstanding that they be darke at the first enterance. And although men be harde and grosse of vnderstanding: yet do they attaine to the cast of this earthly life, because God giueth them the aydes and meanes wherewith too passe through the worlde. But when it commeth too mounting aboue this transitorie life: then we finde that all of vs come too short. Here ye see wherin all proude folkes misbehaue themselues. For they beare themselues in hande, that bycause they bee sharpe witted and subtle in these lower things: they are able also to iudge of all Gods secretes, of the whole doctrine of the lawe, of the Prophetes, and of the Gospell. But God maketh them double blinde, when they bee so presumptuous. For fayth is a spirituall light. The insight of Gods iudgements groweth not in vs, neither haue we it in respect of kind, but we haue it giuen vs from aboue by Gods good pleasure, ouer and besides the order of nature. Yea, and we see howe God punisheth the pride of such as trust in their owne wisedome, in these base and inferiour things. Beholde these lustie worldlings: if they come once to a finenesse in their suttillties: they can finde in their hertes to mocke both God and the world: yea and they be so poltyke, as (too their owne seeming) nothing shall escape them: and therupon they deuyse wonders, they vndertake enterprises aboue their abilitie, and God suffereth them too runne a heade after that fashon, and in the meane while so blindest them at theyr neede, that little children can laugh them to scorne. For oftentimes it commeth too passe, that the craftiest and such as take themselues to be peerlesse in polycie, are destitute of all reason, and put to the foyle, according as the Scripture sayth, that God catcheth the wise in their owne wiliness, as in a pitfall. VVe see this. And howe is it possible that a man which was so well aduisyd, shoulde as nowe be so overtaken, and dazeled in so small a matter? Hath he no wit in him? Verely as though God were not in heauen, too blinde suche as thinke themselues too see cleerely, and trust in their owne skylful wisedome. It standeth him in hande too punish suche pride. For inasmuch as they presume vpon themselues: they rob God of his honour, and he must be faine to reuenge himselfe of such trayterousnesse. Againe, for somuch as men applie their wittes to naughtinesse rather than to goodnesse: it behoueth our Lord also to punish them for misusing the gifites that he hath bestowed vpon them. For it is a singular gift when God giueth vs a good and sharpe vnderstanding: and if we turne the same to craft and naughtinesse, is it not reason that God shoulde punishe vs for it? For we defile the thing that he had appoynted, not onely too our owne welfare, but also to the common benefit of our neighbours. Nowe if God punishe suche pride when men trust to much too their owne wit in these base and transitorie things: I pray you must hee not needes cutte their combes, and plunge them into the bottome of hell, to reuenge himselfe of their pride and statelynesse, when they bee so loftie as they woulde faine mount vp into heauen, and be priuie to all the heauenly secretes, and knowe

Iob.5.b.13.

knowe the things that God hath reserved too himselfe, and ought to belong to him alone? So then let vs learn, that although our wit serue vs well ynough too discerne the things that concerne and belong here to this earthly life: yet it is not to be sayd, that we be able to mount vp into heauen, and to enter into Gods secrete determinations, and to conuey that thing into our wit and braine, which our Lord hydeth in himself. To be shoit, let vs assure our selues, that all things which concerne the euer-lasting life, are farre aboue our reach, and that our Lorde must be faine to worke in vs (yea even supernaturally) & not only to inlighthen vs after the maner of men, but also to give vs the new light, which is hidden from vs, because it proceedeth of the sayde spirit of adoption, whereof I haue spoken. Furthermore, sith it is so: let vs consider what mans free will is, and howe mad they bee that will mainteyne themselues by it. For if we haue freewill too guide our selues to Godwarde, and to attaine too euer-lasting life: it woulde follow of necessitie that first of all, we shoulde haue sayth, rightuousnesse and holinesse. But we see that the Scripture condemneth vs as blinde wretches, and telleth vs that wee must not aduaunce our selues so high, as to thinke to atteyne to Gods secretes: but that wee muste confesse our selues to be destitute of wit and reason. Thus then ye see that the first lesson which wee muste learne when wee come too Gods schoole, is to become fooles, as Saint Paule sayth. Truly this seemeth straunge too vs: but yet must wee passe that way: so that if we intende too bee taught at Gods hande, and that he shoulde play the schoolemastery towards vs, we must become fooles: that is to say, we must acknowledge that there is not so much as one droppe of reason or vnderstanding in vs, but that wee bee more destitute of it than the brute beastes are, and haue lesse skill and discretion in vs than they haue. And therefore let vs learne to humble our selues, to the ende that God may reach vs his hande. Sith the cae standeth so: what must wee do nowe? First let vs vnderstande, that too comprehendre Gods secretes, hee muste bee faine too giue vs his holy spirite, and to inlighthen our darkenesse: and for somuch as wee bee so farre too seeke, hee must shewe vs what is for vs to know, and we must not presume to haue any knowledge, other than he giueth vs. Marke that for one poynct. But wee must also consider further, that when we haue receyued this heauenly light, and gift of vnderstanding that commeth of the holy Ghost: we must also come to the holy scripture, and not take vpon vs too search further of Gods woorkes and iudgements, than is conteyned there. Then let vs content our selues with the knowledge that God sheweth & teacheth vs, and let vs haue the mildenesse to say, well Lorde, whensoeuer thou telllest vs what thou wilt haue vs to knowe: let vs receyue it quietly. And when thou goest no further, let our minds stay also. The two things therfore which we haue to marke for our owne behoofe in this doctrine, are first not to thrust forth our selues with fond presumption to know more than is permitted vs, but to pray God to gouerne vs in that behalf, and to inlighthen vs with his holy spirit: and secondly to hold our selues to his word, and to suffer our selues too be taught by the same, coueting too know nothing but that which is conteyned there: according also as oure Lorde sheweth vs there whatsoeuer is meete and necessarie for our welfare.

And nowe let vs fall downe before the face of oure good God with acknowledgement of our sinnes, praying him too make vs feele them better than we haue done, that in beholding his iudgements, we may always be prouoked to walke the more in his feare: and that when we haue profited in sounde vnderstanding, it may please him to make vs to go forwarde more and more, so as we may not hereafter bee wrapped in the vtter destruction which is prepared for the wicked that are hardened and stubborne agaynst him, but that by correcting our vices, we may preuent his judgement, and obteyne grace and mercy: and that after he hath afflicted vs in this world, he may giue vs the rest that he hath promised to those which are his: that is to wit, that being deliuered from all the miseries which we haue to indure in this worlde, we may bee gathered vp into his heauenly glory, to be made partakers of all his goodes, and to be reformed to his Image in true perfection. That it may please him to graunt this grace, not onely to vs, but also. &c.

The Cij. Sermon, which is the second vpon the xxvij. Chapter.

10. He cutteth the riuers in the Rockes, and his eie seeth euerie precious thing.
11. Heebindeth the Riuers that they ouerflowe not, and bringeth too light the things that are hidden.
12. But vvhether is vvisedome founde, and vvhether is the place of vnderstanding?
13. Man knovveth not the value of it, neither is it founde in the lande of the liuing.
14. The depth sayeth, it is not in mee: and the sea sayth it is not vwith mee.
15. The fine Golde shall not bee giuen for it, neyther shall Siluer be vveyed for the exchaunge of it.
16. It shall not bee valued vwith the vvedge of Golde, nor vwith the precious Onix, nor vvyth the Saphyre.
17. Golde and Christall shall not matche it, neyther shall it bee exchaunged for plate of fyne Golde.
18. There shall no mention bee made of Corall, nor of Gabish: VVisedome is more vvoorth than Pearles.
19. The Topas of Aethyop shall not be made equall vwith hir, neyther shall she be pryzed vwith the vvedge of cleane Golde.
20. VVhencethen commeth vvisedome? Or vvhether is the place of vnderstanding?
21. It is hid from the eyes of all that liue, yea and it is hid from the foules of the ayre.
22. Destruction and death say, vve haue heard the renoume of hir vwith our eares.
23. God knovveth the vway of vvisedome, he can tell vvhether hir place is.
24. He beholdeth the endes of the vvorlde, and seeth all that is vnder heauen.

25. It is he that hath vveyed the vvyndes, and measured the vvaters.
 26. VVhich hath set a lavve vpon the raine, and appoynted the vvay of the rotting tempestes.
 27. Then did hee see it and knowe it, he dispozed and ordeyned it.
 28. And hath sayde vnto man, the feare of the Lorde is vvisedome, and too eschue euill, is vnderstanding.

Hau declared alreadie what Iobs intent is here, and what he meneth by the worde VVisedome. His intent 10 is to shewe, that men are too farre ouerseene when they wil comprehend all Gods secretes, and be ignorant in nothing. And that wee may knowe what the woerde VVisedome meeneth, hee taketh it for the knowledge of all things, and specially of those which God concealeth from vs, till hee giue vs the full discouerie of the things whiche hee dealeth to vs nowe by measure, according as hee knoweth to be for our profite. And nowe (as I haue sayde) Job sheweth 20 heere, that there are manie secrete and darke things in nature, and yet men attayne too them, yea and wee see some reason of them, so farre foorth as oure Lorde graunteth vs. For too that poynt must we alwayes come backe. Furthermore, let vs marke well, that the same is by measure: and therewithall let vs vnderstande, that our reason and vnderstanding extende no further, than too the things heere bylowe, and which concerne the present life. But if we woulde mounte vp too the kingdome of heauen, and seeke the things that perteyne 30 too the euerlasting life: there wee fayle and are vtterly blinde. And so yee see why it is demaunded here, where wisedome shall bee founde. It is not to be founde (sayth hee) among men alive or deade. True it is that many may take vpon them to be wise, and also bragge that they carrie wisedome in their selues: but yet for all that, God holdeth it in couert: and euen they which are departed, althoughe they bee no more wrapped in this mortall fleshe, nor sotted in this worlde, doo notwithstanding not comprehend the things that are in the secrete purpose of God. So then wee maye well go aboue heere and there, and seeke aboue and beneath: but wee shall never come where wisedome is, by the diligence of man, or if God holdeth it in his owne hande. Agayne, if a man intende to purchase it by riches, hee beguileth himselfe: men maye beare themselues in hande that they can well become riche by their owne trauell: but too become wise, it is not in theyr power. Ye see then that wisedome is so excellent a treasure, that a man cannot finde an equall thing too exchanng for it. Let a man 50 heape vp both Golde and Siluer: Let them gather togither all precious stones: and all this shall not match it. So then wee see in effect, that Iobs meening heere, is too humble vs, too the ende wee shoulde not thinke oure selues able too comprehend Goddes secretes: but rather shoulde willingly bee ignorant of the things that passe oure capacite.

And furthermore if wee intende too knowe what is meete for vs, let vs desire God too shewe it vs by hys holy spirite: for too that poynt muste wee come. By 60 the waye also let vs come too the conclusion that is set downe heere: that God hathe all wisedome in himselfe, as hee hath well shewed, if it were but in the creation of the worlde, when hee ordeyned the counterpeyng both of the windes and of the water. Therefore like as onely God hath all wisedome in himselfe, and is the welspring thereof: So also hath hee ordeyned men too bee wise, by fearing and seruing him. Yee see then in

Iobs conclusion, that the wisedome of men, is not to bee inquisitiue to knowe all things through fonde curiositie: but to keepe themselues within their boundes, and too knowe that it behoueth them too serue God, and too submitte themselues vntoo him. That is the true wisedome, and there muste men holde themselues as it were bridlede and at a stay. Thus much concerning the letter of this sentence.

Nowe let vs consider howe wee may profit our selues by it. And first of all let vs marke well, that when hee sayeth, that wisedome is not too bee founde among the living. It is alwayes to admonishe men, that they may not trust too their owne reason, nor attribute so sharpe and subtle witte too themselues, as too comprehend the reason of God woorkes. And this admonishment is verie needefull considering the prude that is in vs. For if wee bee so proude and presumptuous in naturall things: muche more doo wee overshoote oure selues in other things, so as euerie one of vs taketh himselfe too bee so wittie as nothing maye scape him: and wee contende not anie more who shall beare the Bell amonst vs, or who shall bee wyser than his fellowes: but wee fight agaynst God, whiche is a horrible thing, and yet wee bee so madde, that wee doo it. For prooife whereof, if men trusted not too muche too theyr owne witte: wee shoulde not haue so muche adooe too bring the worlde in order: For both greate and small doo mounte vppe intoo suche presumption, as there are verie fewe that yeelde themselues pliable vntoo God, too suffer themselues too bee gouerned by him. But specially when God intendeth to teache vs, the vnskilfullest, yea I saye the veryest Idiottes of vs all, will carpe agaynste him. And why? Because euerye man taketh hymselfe too bee wyse, saying: Tushe I knowe howe too gouerne my selfe, I trowe you take mee for a beast. Beholde, G O D dooeth vs the honour too shewe vs hys will, and yet notwithstanding wee can not abyde that hee shoulde teache vs.

Seeing then that men cannot abyde that God should bee theyr mayster and teacher: muste they not needes bee worsse than madde? And whereof commeth this but of the sayde ouerweening, that wee woulde all of vs seeme wise? And therefore I sayde, that thys admonishment is woorthie too bee borne well in minde, and too bee practized of euerie man, considering that wee haue thys vice rooted in vs by nature, so as wee woulde fayne haue God too let vs alone too oure owne fancie, and not too meddle with teaching of vs? And why is that? Because wee thinke oure selues too bee of sufficient abilitie of oure selues.

Therefore let vs marke well, that whereas it is sayde heere, that wisedome is not too bee founde among men. Job (or rather the holy Ghost by Iobs mouth) meeneth here in effect too beate downe all the loftinessse that is in vs, when wee imagine oure selues too haue so good and so sharp vnderstanding, that we can comprehend all things. Here the holy ghost auoucheth, that men beguile themselues in vaunting after that sort: for they want wisdom. And what wisdom? The wisedom to know gods secretes.

For

For (as it hath beeene sayde) we may well haue some vndirstanding of the things that are heere beneath : And although they bee darke, yet God discouereth them too vs : and that knowledge is called naturall, bycause wee see all men partakers thereof, althoughe it bee not in egall measure. But when the case concerneth the knowing of God and his iudgements: There all mans reason must needs be dazed: and so muche the more, as men thinke too aduaunce themselues, so muche the more must they bee beaten downe and confounded. Marke 10 that for one poynt. But Job sayth exprely, that wisedome is not purchased with Golde nor Siluer, nor precious stones. And that is to bereue men of all their vaine presumption: for if a man bee riche, hee thinketh himselfe a huge and meruayous man, and vtterly forgetteth himselfe, bycause hee is esteemed of other men. And so Job sheweth, that whatsouer excellencie there is in vs, we are not therefore the wyser, neyther muste wee grounde oure selues therupon. Nowe then, this is no more than needeth: For wee see howe the wretched worlde is beguyled with the riche men, and men of great estate which are in authoritie, when they speake any thing. Saying, what? VVee may not replie agaynst it, for beholde such a one sayde it. Men are forepossessed with suche an estimation of them, that they discerne no further, if it bee a riche man that hath spoken it. And althoough hee bee a verie beast, yet are men so dazeled at his authoritie, that they are as it were amazed at it.

And nowe adayes what hindreth so many simple 30 folke too come vntoo Gods truth, and too frame themselues thereafter: but bycause they looke vpon the great ones of the worlde, saying, beholde them that governe all, beholde the riche men, beholde all the Noble men: none of all them wil receyue this doctrine, and therefore it is a token that it is nothing woorthe, and that it is doubtfull, and not for vs too meddle wi. hall. VVee see howe riche men are put intoo the ballance, so as men thinke that wisedome is as it were tyed too them. But (God wote) it is cleane contrarie. For yee shall often see the riche men so blinded wylde vaine presumption, that their ryches bring nothing but follie too rocke men asleepe, and too make men vtterly brutishe. As much is too bee sayde of great estate and dignitie. A man of meane and small degree wil knowe himselfe, and gather his wittes too him, when oure Lorde giueth him discretion: and contrarywise, hee that is lightly aduaunced, forgetteth himselfe, and is blinded. For lyke as hee spreadeth ouer his VVings in imagining hymselfe too bee more than hee is: so oure Lorde suffreth all his reason too vanishe awaie, and him too become as an Idoll. VVee see this with our eyes, but wee consider it not: wherefore let vs weigh well that which is sayde heere: (that is too witte) that wisedome is not purchased wylde Golde or Silver, least men should trust too muche too the things whiche they may attayne too heere beneath: and let vs assere oure selues, that too vnderstande Gods secretes is a speciaill gift of hys, and a treasure that is shette vp from vs, till God of hisowne meere goodnesse come too infligten vs, and giue vs thercof what seemeth good too him. And heerewithall, let vs marke well howe in conclusion Job sayeth heere, That God hath seene, bad, and disposed wisedome from the creation of the worlde, and afterwarde bath sayde too man, Beholde, howe you shall become wyse, that is too say, by fearing mee. Hecre Job comparreth God wylde vs, bycause it is vnpossible too abate or tame oure prydē otherwise than by force. And the onely meane of that is by bringing vs too God: for men may well y-nougue shewe vs the infirmite and ruderesse of oure witte: but yet will wee euer drawe backe, nor never come to that poynt, nor ceasse too kepe still some pride in secrete.

Although then wee bee conuincid that oure wit is so weake as is pitie too see it: yet notwithstanding wee will not giue ouer this foolish opinion that wee haue of beeinge wise. But when wee bee brought vntoo God, then are wee driven too knowe that wee are nothing, and that wee muste not deceyue oure selues by oure owne selfswreening. See howe Job setteth God before vs heere: and too the ende wee shoulde knowe the wisedome that is in him alone, hee setteth the creation of the worlde before our eyes. VVellsayeth hee, are men so sharpe witted, as too comprehend all Gods secretes, as howe he disposeth the order of nature, and how bee bath as it were weyed the windes and waters, and other things? True it is as I haue sayde, that the Philosophers haue well conceyued the reason of the things that are seene in this worlde. But if men come too the Creation, it is so woorderfull a thing, as they muste needs bee abashed, and reverence the infinite wisedome of God, and confessе themselues vnable too comprehend it.

Thus ye see Jobs meening in this sentence. And therepon hee sheweth vs that wee muste throughly beleue, that our wisedome consisteth not in searching, examyning, and seeking out of all tylings: But in knowing that which is profitable for vs according to Gods ordinance. Beholde heere an excellent sentence. For it is all one as if it were sayde, that Gods secretes are knowne to none but himselfe, and that no bodie is of counsell with him, as it is sayde in other textes of the Scripture: and therefore that wee muste not presume, too enter into his secret determination, nor too knowe more of hym than is lawfull for vs, but muste learne onely what pleaseith him to shewe vs in his schoole, and assure our selues that all our wisedome is there. And this is the cause why I sayde that this is an excellēnt sentence. And why? For there are two vyees in men which are harde too correct. The one is ouerboldenesse, and the other foolish vanitie. As touching the Ouerboldnesse, it is in that men are desirous to knowe more than God hath appoynted: and too bee short, that they woulde be wise whether God woulde or no, whereas God onely is the fountayne of wisedome.

Thus then ye see an outrageous vice, and yet notwithstanding it is verie hard too correct it. For we see that men proceede with a furious outrage too saye, I wyll knowe this or that, what soeuer come of it. Yea, but God permitteh it not, hee setteth a barre in the waye, the gate is shutte agaynst thee, and whiche waye then wilt thou enter? But go too: yet will men bee inquisitive of that whiche is not lawfull for them, whatsoeuer come of it. Furthermore, they thinke too attaine therenvto by thair owne power. Yea, for they bragge alwayes of their owne reason and witte. So then it standeth vs in hande too fight agaynst this boldenesse and prydē which are in our nature, and to learne that we are able too doo nothing, and that it becommeth vs not too knowe more than our Lorde will haue vs. Marke that for one poynt. The seconde vice is the sayde fonde vanitie: whiche is, that men doo leaue the thing that is for their profite, and wherevpon they ought too rest, and wherevntoo they ought too applie theyr whole studie, making none account at all of it: and in the meane whyle fall too tormenting themselues wylde vayne things things that are nothing to their profit. That is all their traueling and discoursing. I would knowe this (say they). And why wouldest thou know it? For it liketh mee. Behold how we be led with fonde desire to know the things that are nother for our profit, nor can edifie vs, eyther in faith or in the feare of God. And the cause why our Lord concealeth many things from vs, is first for that he intendeth to humble vs. For he knoweth our prude, and that we would be intollerable if we knew all things, seing that notwithstanding our ignoraunce, yet men see there is no hold of vs, but that we would seeme to be otherwise. Loe how God abaceth vs: and when wee desire to be wiser, we become so fonde, that euen little children may mocke at vs. But although our Lorde holde vs so in awe: yet cease not we to bragge still, & to beare our selues in hand, yea and to perswade other men also, that there is no wisdome but in vs. And why? doth God keepe vs ignorant of the thing which is hidden from vs, bycause he enuieith vs. No: but he meeneth to learne vs humblenesse thereby. And the principall poynt of our wisedome, is to be modest and sober: yea and to feele our owne infirmite, that we exalte not our selues. Yee see then that God hideth many things from vs, to the end we should learne to be lowly: which thing we would not be, if nothing were vñknowne to vs. Againe, he discerneth what is good for vs: and that is the thing wherein he intendeth to occupie vs and to hold vs wholy. For wee finde not in the Scripture, that our Lord is minded to feede our curiositie, & to let vs know what we would desire. Our eares are alwayes itching and tickling in our desires: & would fayne know what is this, and what is that. But all these are fond things that can do no good: and God, to redresse this vanitie & foolish longing that is in vs, sheweth vs only those things that are for our behoofe. And so let vs remember wel this sentece where it is sayd, that God disposeth wisedome, yea and keepeth it to himself: and yet notwithstanding hath sayd vnto men, feare yee mee and you shall be wise. For hereby Job meeneth, first that menne beguile themselues when they be so desirous, & that they do but breake their neckes when they flie so hie: for it is asmuch as if they would flie without wings. So then let them learne to content themselues with that which it shal please God to opē vnto them. Marke that for one poynt. And for the second poynt, lette vs acquaint our selues well with that which God sheweth vs, and wherein he will haue every one of vs to exercise himself: which is, that we must know such things as may edifie vs in his feare. For he will not haue vs wise to be heauengazers, and to flitter in the ayre: but to know how we ought to liue, & to match our wisedome with the knowledge how to rule our life as becometh vs. Now then we see, first that wee must let God alone with his secrete iudgements, & not presume to know the things that are aboue vs: but content our selues to discerne the things that God sheweth vs, knowing that many things are reserved to the latter day, at which time wee shall see the things fully and perfectly, and that as now it must suffice vs to know the things in part which our Lord vouchsafeth to distribute vnto vs. This is it that is shewed vs here. Now when I say that we muste not couet to know aught of Gods secret iudgements: my meening is, that we must not desire to passe beyond that which our Lord teacheth vs by his word. For when wee know that God will guyde vs, wee neede not to be afayde that we shall erre. But if we fal to gazing after our own fancie for the things that God hath hidden frō vs: we enter into a bottomlesse depth, & it is reason that we should be ouerwhelmed. Loe how God punisheth the pride of many me that cannot be cōtēted with the knowledge of the things that are meete for thē. And so Job, to correct the two vices that we speake of, sheweth vs that God hath spoken this vnto men. This saying, that God bath spoken it vnto men, is of great weight. For it is all one as if he shoulde say, that God intended to cut men off from al occasion of searching his secretes and determinations, further forth than he sheweth them, and therewithal declareth that the doctrine which he wil haue men to learne in his schoole, is profitable to edifie them in holy life, that they might learne to submit themselues vnto him that created and formed them, and walke in his obedience. Thus ye see the wisdome that God hath ordyned for vs. To be shorte, Job in setting the feare of God before vs as our whole wisdome: meeneth that our Lord plucketh vs backe from that which we haue moste minde vnto: that is, from our vayne speculatiōs which cā serue vs to no purpose, but to puffe vs vp with foolish vainglory to haue the sayd windie knowledge which will make vs presume ouer far, and yet hath no profit nor instruction in it. Job then hath set those two things one against another, one on the one side, and an other on the other, saying: will men be wise, they must not make themselues wise after the manner of God. Behold, God hath all perfection of wisdome in him, the neerer wee preache vnto him, the more shall we be confounded: for it is not for vs to make our selues like vnto God in wisdome, but rather to submit our selues vnto him. Lo what our wisdome is. VVe see what happened to our father Adam & our mother Eue: for God was not so niggardly as not to indue them with such wisedome as he knew to be good for them. Yee see then that Adam was formed after the image of God, to haue vnderstanding of all things that pertayned to him, in such wise as he could not wilhe any thing more, if he had had a modest and well ruled desire. But what? Satan blowed him in the eare, that he should be like vnto God in knowing all things. Therepon he ouershot himself, and playd the horse that is broken loose, [thinking with himselfe,] ô, then shall I be ignorant of nothing. VVe see howe he caught him in that poynt: for wherof cometh the beastliness that we haue at this day? If a man speake to vs of God, needes must wee (spight of our teeth) know that we are wretched beasts, and that all the delight which wee suppose our selues to haue, is but darkenesse as the Scripture also sayeth of it. VVhereof cometh it that the sense of man comprehendeth nothing of Gods misteries, & that if God call vs on the one side, wee shrinke backe on the other side, or else are so lazie, as we cannot finde in our hearts to come to him? wherof commeth this? It is the paymens of Adams prude, in that he was not contented to be so farre foorth inlightned in the knowledge of things by Gods spirite as was expedient for him to his welfare, but would needes become like vnto God. And when he was so lifted vp, he coulde not but meete wi. Gods mightie hande to cast him downe into this horrible gulfe of cōfusion, wherein we are at this day. Ye see then why Job sayeth exprefly, that God sayd it vnto men: as if he shoulde say, go to, advise your selues well what way you take to become wyse. It is not to bee desirous to mount aboue the clowdes, and to search out many things which ought to be vñknowne vnto vs, as to say, why did God delay the creating of the worlde so long? what hath moued him to do this or that? wherfore dispositeth he things after this sort? why suffereth he things to passe after this manner? your wisedome consisteth not in those things: for when you shall thinke your selues wise after that maner, you shall but go astray, and ye shall never be able to gette out of that maze, you shall but shrinke aside in such wise as you shall be shamed foreuer. VVhere then will you finde wisdome? It belongeth too Gen.3.1.5.

me(sayeth God) to discerne and determine what is good for you. Learne to be cōtent with that which I tell you and teach you: for it is my charge to see what is for your behoof: and that is, to feare and honour me: Therefore hold you there and passe not your bounds. Nowe we see the meening of Job, or rather of the holy ghost. And so let vs learne, not to giue heede to this our foolish and tickling lust to know the things which can stande vs in no steade, and to enter into Gods secrete determination, of purpose to search out the reason of all his iudgements: that is not the thing wherein we must occupie our selues, and wherevpon wee must set our mindes. VVherevpon then vpon suche things as may serue to true edifying.

2.Tim.3. d. 16. And that is it which S. Paule meeneth by saying, that all holy Scripture is profitable. But how is it that God hath sayde vnto men, that it is wisdome to feare him? he sayd it and also shewed it in deede, when he published his lawe and expounded it, first by the Prophetes and lastly by the Gospell. Yee see then how God sheweth vs, that our wisdome is to feare him. But nowe, to make this doctrine the more profitable: let vs note first what the goodnessse of our God is, in that he maketh vs partakers of the wisdome which he knoweth to be good and expedient for vs, notwithstanding that wee be bereft of it and shet out from it by nature. It hath ben sayd already, that wisdome is not to be found, nother amongst the liuing, nor amongst the dead, and that a man may go into the deepe for it and tarie there foreuer confounded, without finding it. For there is no wisdome but in God. The dead may say, we haue hearde speaking of it, but that is all: we know it not, nother haue wee any familiaritie with it. But now beholde, our Lord doth vs the honour and grace to offer vs this wisdome, which is a secrete and inestimable treasure. VVee haue no accesse to it of our selues, and God offereth it vs after such a sorte, as wee neede not to make any long circutes for the finding of it. And why? Let vs but onely suffer our selues too bee taught of our God, and this treasure shall be put into our handes. Then is it a singular benefite of God, when he vouchsaueth to communicate that thing vnto vs which we were so vnaquainted with, and from which we were vtterly deprived and banished. And here yee see why he vpbraydeth men with this vnthankesfulnesse in the eight Chapter of the Prouerbes, where he sayeth, that wisdome crieth out in the Streetes and in the open places, come yee to mee, I am readie to shew my self to you. She knocketh at the gates, shee declareth that hir desire is to dwell among men, and yet no man receyuyeth hir, men mocke at hir, and make none account of so greate a benefite that is offered them.

Ye see then that the blame which God vpbraydeth vs withall, is that we may well know that wisdome is such a precious thing, as nother golde nor siluer may be comparable to it, and therefore that wee must needs say wee be worse than straught, and that the Diuell hath bewitched vs, if wee make none account of the sayd wisdome, seeing that shee offereth hir selfe vnto vs. There needes no great seeking and rāsacking for hir, there needes no great paynes taking or farre going: wee neede but to receyue hir when shee is set afore vs, and yet for all that, wee see that noman makes accōut of hir. VVhy so? The weyght of a pinne (as they say) will occupie our heads, and there is not any one of vs all, but he is so wedded to his owne selfe profite, as wee sette more by the gayne of a penie or a shilling, than wee do by the wisdome of God.

Agayne it is no one thing that letteth vs: but according as every man is giuen to one vice or other, so is he eally turned aside and drawne away from God. A whore-hunter will bee so weltred in his filthinesse, that his eares shall bee stopped, yea and he will bee vitterly deafe, so as it is no speaking to him: God may crie out alowde vnto him, but hee will not heare aught at all. The couetous persone doth the like, and the drunkarde as muche. To be shorte, we seethat the lettes are many which turne menne aside from suffering themselues to bee taught by God.

But yet for all this, the vyee that God findeth faulte withall in this texte of Salomons, is ouercommon and ordinarie: that is to wit, that when he sendeth this treasure of wisdome which ought to bee common to all menne, knocking at their gates, and bidding them to the feast: every man doth rather shrinke away, than drawe neerer. Furthermore, as God in that place accuseth and condemmeth men for their beastly carelesnesse and vnthankfulness: so sheweth he all the faythfull, howe greatly they ought to esteeme to be taught of him: according as it is sayde in the fourth of Deuteronomie, behold, thy wis-
Dent.4.a.6. dome and vnderstanding is to haue thy God come vnto thee, and to shewe thee his will, what is good for thine instruction, and to edifie thee in him. Lo wherevnto our Lorde calleth vs, when he intendeth too bring vs to himselfe, by shewing vs that all our true wisdome and vnderstanding, is to hearken vnto him, namely by conceyuing what he sheweth vs in his woerde. As if he should say, yee wretched soules, deceyue not your selues by setting your mindes vpon vayne things as the worldlings and vnbeleeuers do: but hold ye to that which I tell you, assuring your selues that that onely is your true wisdome and vnderstanding, and that you are but fooles, yea and mad men, if yee attempt to steppe out of those boundes. And therewithall he vpbraydeth them newe againe, and in vpbrayding them sheweth, that wee be vtterly without excuse if wee walke not aright, seeing we haue his woerde. And why? Say not any more (sayeth he in the thirtith of Deuteronomie) who shall climbe vp into heauen? or Deut.30. c. 12. who shall go downe into the deepe? or who shall passe ouer the Sea? Beholde, the woerde is in thy heart and in thy mouth. Our Lord then declareth, that we cannot alledge that it is ouerharde for vs too conceyue the things that are aboue vs. For if we alledge the dulnesse of our vnderstanding, or the highnesse of the secretes of heauē: No no (sayeth God) I haue prouided for all that, I haue made way aforehande: for by giuing you my lawe, and by shewing you my will, I haue so taught you wisdome, as the same would very fayne dwell among you: according also as it is sayde in the eyght of the Prouerbes, My Pro.8.d.3L delight is to dwell among men. Ye shall not neede therfore to make long iourneyes to come vnto mee, ye neede not to stie aboue the clowdes, yee neede not to go downe into the deepes, nother neede yee to go ouer the Seas. For when my woord is giuen into your mouthes, and put into your hartes: behold, that is all your wisdome, that is the thing that you must rest vpon. Now then, first of all, seeing the cage standeth so: if menne disprise this grace of God when it is offered them by communicating his woerde vnto them: they make warre against him asmuch as in them lieth. Therefore lette vs take good heede to our selues. For wee see heere a saying that ought to wey greatly with vs, when it is sayd, that wisdome delighteth to dwell among vs. God in that place bringeth in his owne wisdome which he sendeth vs, as it were in his owne persone. So then seeing it delighteth God that we should receyue his wisdome: let vs assure our selues, that in refuzing, it we make warre against him, as I haue sayd, and that it is all one as if wee woulde spite him of sette purpose, and driue him quyte and cleane away from vs.

And

And is not that an ouerheynouse thing? Furthermore whereas we desire our own welfare, and God is readie to shewe vs the way, and calleth vs to him, to the ende wee shoulde finde the fulnesse of all welfare in him: wee vouchsaue not to come, but turne our backes vpon him. Againe when he teacheth vs: it is to the ende we should knowe him, and be as it were transformed into him. And wee know that his image and glorie are to be preferred before all things. Therfore, when we cannot abyde to be taught, it is as much as if we would turne light into darkness and deface Gods glorie, that it might not be seene nor knowne any more. And muste not men needes be become terrible monsters and Diuelles incarnate, when they labour so to abolish Gods glorie and to quench the light, euen the light that was their whole welfare, soule helth and ioy? But yet is this vice ouer common. So then let vs learne to esteeme this benefite that God doth for vs when he vouchsaeth to call vs too his schoole, and openeth vs the doore to the end wee shoulde learne of him: & wheras of nature we were bereft of the sayd wisedome, he cometh to set it before our eyes, and offcreth it vs familiarly: yea and tarieth not til we seeke it, but knocketh at our doores, and calleth vpon vs, desiring nothing but to winne vs to himself. Seing then that our Lord vs eth such gentlenesse towards vs, as to allure vs so curteously: lette vs learne to make account of that honour, and let vs not be so vnkind when he would haue vs to come vnto him. And specially let vs remēber what hath bene sayd: namely what our own nature is. For it is not requisite that God shoulde teach vs as the Angelles of heauen. Astouching 30 the Angels of heauen, although they bee of a noble and excellēt nature, although they be partakers already of the heauenly glorie, although they holde still the soundnesse which they had in their creation: yet notwithstanding, they be exceedingly bounde vnto God, in that it pleaseith him to make them priuie to his will, & needes must they be rapt into astonishment at the grace that he hath giuen them. But the cace standeth not with vs as with them. For firste, as in respect of our bodies wee be earthly creatures: and although God haue giué vs immortall soules: yet dwell wee here in houses of myre and clay, as hath bene declared heretofore: there is nothing but corruptiō in vs, and we are here with brute beastes, with woormes, and with things so base and heauie, as there seemeth to be an infinite distance betweene vs and Heauen. But there is yet a worse thing: which is, that we be bereft of the vnderstanding that was giuen too our father Adam: and therfore we bee as forlorne creatures. VVhereas Asses and Oxen keepe still their owne nature: men are so corrupted & marred, that when God calleth them to him, in steade of being in loue with such goodnesse, they be lesse moued with it than the brute beasts. Beholde, God desirēth earnestly, that wee should be partakers of his glory, yea and of all the good things that are in him, and that we should enter aforehand into the possession of them when his woerde is preached vnto vs. Now then if we profite not our selues by these things: I pray you what a matter is it? Therfore seeing the time will not suffer me to speake any more of it as nowe: let vs advise our selues, firsē to be ignorant where God will haue vs, for he onely knoweth what is meete and conuenient for vs: and therefore let it suffize vs to bee taught in his schoole, and to learne the things, that he sheweth vs. And secondly let vs learne to know his will in such wyse as is conteyned in the holy Scripture. And therewithall let vs not be so thankelesse, as to reiect the benefite that he mindeth to bestowe vpon vs and offereth vnto vs: but let vs be attentiuē, and indeuour to put away all our euill affections, and suffer our selues to be so taught of God, as we may be edified by the things that he sheweth vs, and profite in them more and more, & be desirous to be stablised in them all the time of our life.

Job. 4. d. 19.

Nowe lette vs fall downe before the face of our good God with acknowledgment of our sinnes, praying him to make vs feele them better, that wee may returne vnto him with true repentance and acknowledge the miseries wherewith wee bee fraught, that he may vouchsafe to cleane vs of them, and to bring vs fully backe vnto him, and to reforme our frowarde nature: and that seeing wee be helde in the darkenesse of ignorance, so as there is nothing but blindnesse in vs, it may please him so to inlighthen vs by his holy spirite, as wee may dispise all worldly vanities, and keepe on our way to the heauely life, wherunto he calleth vs. And furthermore that wee may haue the modestie, to keepe vs to his woord, & not to couet to know more than he thinketh good for our edifying. And that whyle wee be here in his schoole, wee may profite more and more, vntill that hauing taken vs frō this earthly pilgrimage, he gather vs into his kingdome, to giue vs full and perfect fruition of the things which wee know now but in portion and measure, according as our capacicie doth bear. That it may please him to graunt this grace, not onely to vs but also to all people and Nations of the earth, bringing backe all poore ignorant &c.

The ciij. Sermon, which is the third vpon the. xx viij. Chapter.

This Sermon is yet still vpon the former texte.

Hauē told you already that Iobs intent was, to shewe menne that they ought to holde thēselues in such sobrietie, as not too couet to knowē more than God permitteth them: and also that they muste not runne gadding astray, but followe the way which is poynted to them. For this cause Iob setteth a difference betwene God and vs, and sheweth that it is no reason that a mortall man shoulde presume to seeke the things that are in God, and be contented to be ignorant in nothing. Let vs be contented to be subiect vnto him to whome wee cannot atteyne furtherforth than it pleaseith him to lift vs vp to himselfe, and specially which is so gracious vnto vs, as to abace himselfe to the ende wee shoulde know him. For it were impossible for our infirmitie to mount vp to the highnesse of God: and therefore he muste be fayne to come downe vnto vs. And so let vs not thinke that our wisedome is to know all things: but let vs understande that it behoueth vs to be in farre lower degree vnder the highnesse of God, and to worship that which is hidden from vs, that is to wit, the wonderfull secretes of God.

60 Yee see then in effect what we haue to marke vpon this text, where it is sayd that God in creating of the worlde, hath well shewed that there is an other wisedome than wee can attayne vnto. For it is not in our power to measure the windes or the waters, or to dispose of the whole order of the world and of nature. Now seeing these things surmount our capacicie, let vs learne to hūble our selues, and to be contented with the vnderstanding that is giuen vs. And now accodding to that which hath bene declared

alreadyc let vs wey well this saying, that God bath sayd to man. For it serueth to shew that it is not lawfull for vs to know more than is giuen vs frō aboue. And furthermore let vs marke well the grace that God graunteth vs aboue other creatures. For where as Job sayeth exprely, that God turned himselfe vnto men to giue them some wisdome by measure: therein he sheweth, that we be not like brute beastes that liue without discretion, but that God hath giuen vs an excellent priuiledge, which is that wee shold haue vnderstanding and some light of reason, to know what it is to liue, so as we might haue some modestie and honestie in vs. Therefore let vs learne to esteeme this grace of God, & to honour him, for that it hath pleased him to do to vs, in separating vs after that sort frō the brute beastes. And this is well worthie to be noted, because we see two extreme vices in men, by reason whereof they can neuer keepe any good measure. Such as would fayne be wise and full of vnderstanding, do giue themselues to many vaine curiosities, they gaze about them, they trudge vp and downe, they are vnfaciable, they are desirous to 20 knowe this and that, and they are neuer at any rest, because they labour alwayes for vayne and vnprofitable things. Behold here a very euill extremitie, when menne cannot knowe their owne abilitie, but flitter in the ayre, and plundge themselues into so deepe dungeons, as they can neuer get out agayne. On the contrary parte, what do such as minde not to trouble theselues in vayne after that sort? They become brutish, as we see by experience: specially in the papacie. I pray you, haue we not there a fayre mirrour of this doltishnesse which is in men, that to hold 30 themselues within modestie, they will knowe nothing at all, but shet theselues frō that which ought to be comō to all men? To be short, for feare to overshot themselves in curiositie, they become as Calues or other brute beastes without any other vnderstāding. And we see that such as vnderstand no woordē of latine (to the intent to play the beasts) speake thus in latin: Mitte arcana Dei: the meening whereof is, that they must not inquire of Gieds secrete. See how men do retch their boundes continually, and cānot keepe a good meane Therfore let vs remember how 40 it is conteyned in this streyne, that God sayeth exprely vnto men, This is the wisedome. Job then magnifieth this knowledge which God hath giuen vs in separating vs frō other creatures: according as it is sayd in the first chapter of S. Iohn, that we not onely haue life to eate and drinke, and to exercise our bodie: but also that we haue the light of vnderstanding. And forasmuch as this benefite deserueth to be magnified: let vs take good heede that wee be not depriued and b̄gref̄ of it thorough our owne unthankfulnessse. VVhen God openeth our eyes, & we shut 50 them, are wee not worthy to be blamed as peruerters of the order of nature? when God giueth vs discretion to know good from euil, and setteth vs here to beholde his workes, to the end wee should approch vnto him, and be partakers of his image in respect that wee be reasonable creatures: if we desile all this, & will not know any thing: is it not a manifest fighting against God, and an eter renouncing of the benefite which he would bestow vpon vs, yea, and of such a benesite as is most principal & highliest to be esteemed of al others? ye see then in effect two 60 things which we ought to haue in minde. The one is that God hath not set men in this world to bereue them of al vnderstanding. For he will not haue them like Asses or horses: he hath indued them with reason, and would haue them to vse vnderstanding: and therefore when he sayd, this is the wisedome, he speake purposely vnto them? VVhy speake he not also vnto other creatures? Because he listed not to do them the like honour that he hath done to vs, nor to aduaunce the to so high degree. And therfore (as I sayd) al they which passe not to profite in wisdome while they liue, do well shewe that they go about to withdraw themselves wholly from their creator. Marke that for one poynt. And for the second also, we haue to beare in mind, that our Lord hath set vs boūds which we may not passe, and that such as will be wise and politike, must not stray at rouers, and give theselues to fond speculations and doctages, but hold the first to this lesson of not coueting any 10 thing which God sheweth them not. Lo what our wisedome is: let that be alwayes our entraunce: and when we intend to shew our selues wise, let vs herkē to this voyce, namely that our Lord holdeth vs within such listes, as he will not haue vs to run out here and there, but to receyue that which he thinketh good to teach vs. And now let vs come to the fearing of God. It is our wisedome to feare God. It seemeth here, that Job restrayneth mās wisdome to much, when he incloseth it wholly within the feare of God: for we know that our Lord teacheth vs other things also in his woord. But yet so it is, that our whole wisdom is to harken vnto God when he speaketh, and to beare in minde whatsoeuer he sayeth, and not to make our selues wilfully deafe: but to haue our eyes & eares open when he sheweth vs his will & speaketh to vs: according as it is sayd in the 4. of Deuteronomie, behold thy wisdome and vnderstanding is to profit in the schole of thy God, seeing he vouchfauth to be thy schoolemaster. Then had it rather bene meete to haue sayd, that the wisdome of mē is, not to be inquisitiue of whatsoeuer liketh theselues: but to come to Gods woord wherevnto he will haue them to hold theselues, and to submit theselues all wholy without passing of their bounds. In steade hereof Job sayeth: that our wisedome is to feare God. But wee muste briefly marke that besides the modestie whereof mencion hath bene made, he sheweth vs here, that our wisdome is the thing which edifieth vs to walke in the feare of God, and to obey him. Then his meening is not to withdraw vs from fayth and frō that which dependeth therepon, that is to wit, from knowing the infinite goodnessse of our God, to rest therepon, so as we should not doubt but he is merciful vnto vs, because he pardoneth our sinnes for our Lord Iesus Christ sake, and also hath adopted vs & will loue vs as his children to procure our saluaciō vnto the end: Job (I say) excludeth nor fayth in this place when he speaketh of the feare of God: but he sheweth briefly, that the true wisdome, is not speculatiue, as we see many men trouble and disquiet themselues very much to know this or that, & they wote not why, there is no certaintie. If a man aske them saying, when wil you haue cōprehended the things which are hidden from you? To what purpose are they? what shall they profite you? It is certaine they shall not profit the at all, nother shall they be a whit the better for them. It is not inough to feede theselues with winde and with foolish fancie, nor to be puffed vp as S. Paule speakeith of them, saying, that knowledge puffeth men vp. See what mēs fondnesse is. But contrarywise Job sayth, that if we be wise after the māner that our Lord hath ordeined, we shal be well edified to walke in the feare of God. Here ye see also why it is sayd in the first and 9. chapters of the Proverbs, that the feare of God is the enterāce or begin- 1. Cor. 8.4.1. ning of wisdome. True it is that some mē take this beginning to be as an apcee. VVhy is the feare of God the beginning of wisdome? Because it is the thing that we must begin at: like as men will not at the first dash set a yong childe to the hie and profound sciences, but muste firste teach him his entrances or principles. But they which take Salomons wordes in that sense, do ground theselues vpon that which is sayde in the Canonicall Epistle of S. Iohn, where

I. John. 4. d. where it is sayd, that true & perfect loue doth driue away feare. But in that place, S. Iohn speaketh of the feare that the Infidels haue when they shunne God trembling at his Maiestie, because they know not in what case they be. For who soeuer haue not caught holde of Gods goodnesse to come vnto him and to trust in him, (of whiche number all they be which know not that God intēdeth to be at one with vs in our Lord Iesus Christ, and therewithal that forasmuch as he hath adopted vs, we must not doubt but that he will alwayes shew himselfe louing toward vs, and receyue vs to mercy:) all they (I say) that haue not taſted of this, are afraide and astonied when men speake to them of God, and are like a wretched offender that could finde in his heart that all Justice were abolished. Yee see then what the state of all vnbeleeuers is, how they be half besides themſelues, and ſchewe God asmuch as is poſſible. But when we be once perfwaded of Gods mercy: we be drawne to him by that gracious goodnesse, to ioyne with him, and wee come vnto him as it were with our heads vpright. Not that we do at any time omit our reuerence and humilitie: but because wee are fully resolued, that God liketh well of vs. And ſo wee are no longer in the doubt and vnciuitenesſe where with the wretched vnbeleeuers are tormented. S. Iohn speaketh of the ſayde feare: but when it is ſayde in Salomon that the feare of

I. John. 4. d. God is the chiefe or beginning of wiſedome: it is to ſhew Prov. 1. a.7. that it is the chiefe poynt. And to be ſhort, the very meening of all the things that are taught vs here by Iob, is that if men wil be wiſe, they muſt leарne to walke in the feare of God, and be edified to rule their life accordingly, and 9. c. 10. not giue themſelues to ſpeculations which hold them in a manering without any certaintie. And ſurely here you ſee also why Salomon in an other text ſayeth, that the ſelfe ſame feare of God is the fountayne of life. He would not call it the fountayne of life which draweth men out of deſtructiōn (as he addeth there): except it behoued vs to holde vs wholly to it, and that it were our perfeſt felicitie: So then we ſee, now what is the meening of this text: Namely that ſuch as are edified to feare and obey God, are men of right underſtanding: and that the ſame is the thing wherepon we muſt ſet our mindes, and not vpon wandring ſpeculaciōn: this will be the eaſer to vnderſtād, if we add one other goodly text of the Prophet Eſay in

Eſay. 33. a.6 the 33 chapter: There he ſpeaketh of the true reſormaciōn of the Church, that was before the ſcattering and deſtructiōn thereof. Therfore he ſayeth, that the things which were ſeen to be turned vppide downe as then, ſhoule come to their ſtate againe in the time of Ezechias, verely in asmuch as he was a figure of our Lo:d Iesus Christ: for no doubt but the Prophet Eſay treateth there of the perfection which ſhould be at the comming of Iesus Christ. For he ſayeth that ſtefastneſſe, ſtrength, and ſaluation ſhall be the wiſedome and underſtanding of the tyme of Ezechias, and that the feare of God ſhall be his treasure. Here wee ſee howe the Prophet declareth, that where God is not knowne, there all things muſte go to hauock and vter deſolation, like as it is alſo ſayd in another text,

Eſay. 5. a.13. where the Prophet complayneth, that all was turned vppide downe, because there was no knowledge of God in the lande, and men were giuen ouer to all euill. And is it any wonder when men abuse themſelues wilfully after that forte, if God giue them ouer to a lewde minde, ſo as they be no more ashamed to caſte themſelues into ſo outrageouſ and haynous things as are euen lothſome to the worlde? Yee ſee then why the ſame Prophet Eſay ſayeth, that the people were caſted into deſtruction becauſe they had no knowledge. So on the contrary parte, in the texte which wee haue alledged, he ſheweth that when the Churche is ſet in her perfect ſtate agayne, and things brought into good order: then ſhal wiſedome and underſtanding be the ſtabliſhment, welfare and strength of them. As if hee ſhould ſay, that the Churche cannot otherwiſe ſtande in good caſe, than if menne be taught purely, to knowe what is for their proſtie. And here it is to bee ſeene, what the popiſh Churche is. For they haue pompe ynough, and wee ſee alſo that they dare as it were face God with a Diueliſh prude, and ſtrayne no curteſie at all in attributing theſe braue titles to themſelues, that they haue the holy gouernement of Heauen amonſt them, and the auſſuredneſſe of Gods truth and doſtrine, and that they carrie the holy ghost in their ſleeue, and holde God locked vp betweene their walles. But yet for all that, what maner of knowledge is it that they haue? Cleane contrarywiſe wee ſee that they ſeekē nothing, but to make the wretched worlde brutiſhe. And ſo wee may well conclude, that all the buylding of Gods Churche is ouerthrowne by them, and put too horriblie conuſion. And why? for they want the wiſedome which the Prophet Eſay auoucheth to bee the welfare, ſtrength and ſtabliſhment of the Churche. Thus much concerning the firſte poynt. But to ſit the ſayde texte to that which is conteyned here, it foloweth that the feare of God was the treaſure of Ezechias, and of all his people. Eſay therefore doth well ſhewe there, that which Iob meeneth here: that is too witte, that ſuche as knowe the things that God teacheſt by his woordē, wil not bee wedded to theſe ſmall and fonde ſuttleties, but will bee well grounded in knowledge howe to rule their lyfe, and too walke in the feare of God. For vnder the woordē Treasure, hee ſheweth that that is the thing wherepon men muſt wholly ſetle themſelues, as vpon their full and perfect felicitie, and wherein they muſte take their full contentation and reſt.

Nowe wee ſee that the thing which is ſpoken heere, is very true, that is to witte, that men ſhall then bee wiſe and ſkilfull, when they ſhall haue profited ſo farre, as to walke in obedience to God and in holinesſe of lyfe. And furthermore leſte vs come backe to that which hath bene touched already: that is to witte, that therewithall wee muſte applie our whole ſtudie, and ſette our whole minde, vpon the things that are conteyned in the holy Scripture, becauſe there is nothing there which is not for our proſtie. And ſurely it is vnpoffiſible to feare God and to gyue our ſelues to his ſeruice, vntiſſe wee be acquainted with his geodneſſe: according as it is ſayde in the hundred and thirteth Psalme. Lorde thou arte good and Ps. 130. b. 7. there is mercie with thee, to the ende that menne ſhould feare thee. VVee ſee then that men cannot bee groundeſ in the feare of God, vntiſſe they haue knowne Gods mercie, and taken holde of it, to the ende to come to him with a free heart and to ſeekē him. For ſo long as wee ſhunne God, we are fierce agaſt him, and conſequently rebelleſ. But men ſhall neuer conceyue a right taste of his geodneſſe, except they bee taught it by the Scripture. And that alſo is the place where true feare is. For wee muſte not thiſke that vnder this woordē Feare, the Scripture meeneth onely ſome bondage that men ſhould yelde vnto God, as though they were enforced therewnto. But this feare here, importeth that wee muſte bee fully minded to ſuffer our ſeiuſ to be gouerned by Gods hande, and aboue all things knowe what his geodneſſe and mercie is, and yelde him ſuch reuerence as wee may be truly ioyned vnto him. And vndoubtedli when he ſpeaketh of the honor that belōgeth vnto him, he net onely alledged his maiestie, nor onely ſayth that he is master and Lord: but therewithall alſo ſayeth that he is a father.

For he crieth out by his Prophete Malachic, If I be your mayster, where is your feare? And if I bee your father, where is your loue? True it is that in that place he putteth a difference betweene loue and feare. But afterward he sheweth that those twoo woordes come bothe to one ende: that is to wit, that forasmuch as wee ought to acknowlede him both as a father and a mayster: we ought to loue him, howbeit with suche reverence as in all our lyfe wee desire nothing, ne secke nothing but too obey him.

So then we see now, that Job is so farre off here from intending to reiect sayth : that he rather leadeth vs vnto it. For that also is the poynt whereat wee muste beginne to walke in the feare of our God. And this is the cause why Sainct Paule (when he speakeith of wisedome) prayeth God to open the eyes of the Ephesians, to the ende they may know how to hope for the salua.ion that God hath prepared for them in Heauen by the resurrection of our Lord Iesus Christ. And afterward in the third chapter he sayeth, that it behoueth vs to knowe the kindnesse of 2 our Lord Iesus Christ, and the loue that he hath shewed to assure vs of our saluation: in somuch that he is our length, bredth, heighthe, and depth. As if he should say, wee might well creyne our selues on all sides, but if wee would mount vp never so high, wee could not be able to go beyond the cōprehending of the loue which hath ben shewed in the person of our Lord Iesus Christ. Also wee may well sceke all depthes, but yet must we hold this for a certaintie, that when we haue gone to & fro, all that euer it behoueth vs to knowe, is but to conceyue howe God 30 sheweth himself a father & saviour, according as he hath adopted vs in the person of his Sonne, minding to make vs partakers of his goodnessse and mercie, wherin our welfare consisteth. Now then we see, that to feare God it behoueth vs to be sure of his goodnessse. But here lo! hath set downe one particular for the whole, purposely to condemne the fond toyes wherevnto men giue themselues, when they haue not the affection & zeale to be edified in the feare of God. Furthermore wee haue to gather vpon this text, that the worde which is given vs, and also con- 40 teyned in the holy Scripture, is so excellent a treasure, as we cano set store ynough by it. VVe know that wiſdom shall be esteemed, yea cuen of the most ignorant and ve-riest idiothes. For our Lord hath giuen vs this insight by nature, that wee know true wiſedom to be an amiable thing. And our Lord decketh his woerde with that honorabile title, and telleth vs that if we profitere therein, it is the thing wherein our whole wiſedom consisteth. This then ought to inflame <sup>P</sup>greatly, to ſeeke the things that are contayned in the holy Scripture. To be ſhort, that we 50 may profit in the ſchoole of our God: we muſt needes have that, or els wee ſhewe our ſelues to reiect the thing which is to be desired of it owne nature, yea and that we would fayne be bereft of it. VVherefore let vs leарne to be enflamed with ſuch zeale to profit in the holy Scripture, as wee may preferre the doctrine that is contayned there, before all our owne fansies, and before all the vanities of the worlde that carie vs away. Furthermore it is not ynough for vs to haue ſuche a deſire to profit in the holy Scripture: but we muſt leарne alſo to honour it accordingly. VVe ſhal ſee many fantalſical persons in thſe dayes, which diſpife Gods word, because (as it ſeemeth to them) there is nothing but ſimple ſtuffe for the common people, and that it would be but a dulling of their wittes if they ſhould ſet their mindes vpon the holy Scripture.

But our Lorde payeth them as they are worthie. For if a maſtric what is in them: he ſhall find them double blind, and that our Lorde hereueth them of comon reaſon, ſo as they become the veriest fooles, doltes and Idiotes in the world. See (I pray you) what is the wages of their pryde, that make no account of Gods woerde. True it is that at the first blissh we shall see great simplicitie there. For our Lorde vseth no high stile, but rather tempereth himselfe both too great and small. Yet doth not that imbrace the Maestie of the holy Scripture at all. VVhy so? Shoulde Gods goodnesse deface his glorie? Ought it to barre vs from humbling our selues vnto him, and frō yelding him his due honour? No, but cleane contrarie. For what is the cause that our Lord speaketh so grossly in the holy Scripture? It is his infinite goodnesse: who seing our wittes so dull, stamereth with vs. Seing the case standeth so, let vs learne to yeeld reverence to the holy Scripture, notwithstanding that our Lord vse an ordinary maner of speach, yea euen such a grosse speach as serueth for homely folks that are vnlearned. But there is yet more, for S. Paule tellet vs, that we must so much the better beholde the heavenly power and godly maestie that is in the holy Scripture, sicing there is no paynting nor fild language after the manner of the worldlings that studie Rethorike, and colour their woordes with a fonde brauery. In the holy Scripture then, we finde grosse language: But behold, the Maestie of God sheweth it selfe therewithall. There is no fleshly nor earthly thing to set any gloso vpon it: but wee are conuineced that God discouereth his owne arme there, yea and we be constrainyd to seele it and to speake it. And therefore so litle ought the simplicitie of the holy Scripture to cause vs to despysye it, as wee see the proud slinking sorte do, which make no account of it: that it ought rather to make vs perceyue, that God needeth not to borow any helpe elsewhere, and that his power sheweth it selfe there, as it were to eyesight, to the ende wee shoulde be the more moued to honour him, and to submitte our selves wholly vnto him. Therfore let vs marke well that it is not ynough for vs to haue a good desire to profite in the holy Scripture: but also that we must come to it with all reverence, and desire nothing but to imbrace all that is contayned there, not hauing our tongues fild to prattle with God, nor bringing any doctrine or disputationes against the pure doctrine of the Scripture, but concluding generally, and saying: looke whatsoeuer is sayde to vs here, or whasoever wee reade here, wee know it to be the truth of God. Lorde, seing thou hast spoken it, it is ynough for vs: It is not for vs to replie, it is meete for vs to stande to that which thou hast vitered, without any gaynesaying. Yee see then, that the thing which we haue to note in this woerde VVifdone, is that where as menne are drawen away by their owne vayne imaginacions, when they buylde newe wisedomes in the ayre: we must say, that our Lorde hath not without cause intituled his woerde by the name of wisdome. For his qualifying of it after that sort, is to shewe vs that we must come thither, and submit our selues vnto it, and rest wholly there. And why? For it is the thing wherein lieth our whole perfection. And as touching that which is sayd of the feare of God: lyke as Golde and Siluer are tried in the fornace, or by the tutchstone: so muste wee bee tried, that it may bee knowne whether we haue profited in the holy Scripture, that is to say, whether wee be edified in the feare of God or no. VVee go to a sermon: and they that haue the commoditie do reade Holy Scripture also. Very well, it is a good and holy exercise, and woulde God wee were yet much more giuen vnto it without all comparison than wee be. But yct therewithall it behoueth vs to know whether wee haue bestowed our time well or no. And howe shall wee knowe that? Not by that wee can skill to talke of it, and give fayre answeres to mennes de-

maundes, nor that wee bee able to resolute all doubts that shall be alledged, nor that we can giue fitte expositons to the texte, to say, thus must they be vnderstood. True it is that these things are necessary: but that is not all. Howe then shall it be knowne whither wee haue profited eyther by Sermons or by reading of Gods woerde? [wee shall knowe it by this,] namely if our lyfe yeeld recordes of it. If wee feare God, it is a token that wee haue studied well in his schole, and that like as he on his side hath bene a good and faythfull schoolemaister, so wee on our side haue not lost our time. Thus muche haue wee to marke.

And furthermore wee see, that when the holy Scripture intendeth too giue a good and sure marke too discerne the faythfull from the despizers of God: it

Psalms. 22. f. sayeth, let them that feare the Lord prayse him: you that 24. & 115. feare the Lord enter into his house. Let them that feare b. 11. & 118. God be gladdē and rejoyce. Let men that feare God rest a. 4. & 60. boldly vpon him. Yee that feare God blesse the Lorde.

Ecclesiastes. 2. b. 7. This (I lay) is the true marke whereby to discerne Gods flocke from all the wilde beastes that rauge abroade.

So then if wee come to a Sermon, or haue the Bible in our handes: lete vs learne to knowe, that God meeneth not to piffe vs vp with vayne presumptiō of knowledge, nor to scratch our eares when they itch, nor yet to teach vs nyce pointes: but to edifie vs in his feare, that we may honour and serue him. If wee shooe at this marke: then shall wee not roue in the holy Scripture as wee were wont to do. For whereof commith this vice, that men cannot finde in their hearts to stoope to take holde of that which is for their profite, but euery man forgeth I wote not what by himselfe? whereof also proceede so many Errours, Heresies, and false opinions so far out of square? It is because we know not wherevnto God would guide vs by his woord: & that also is the cause why we cast the feare of God behind our backes, bearing our selues in had, that the holy Scripture is giuen vs to a farre other vse. Nowe seeing that men do so abuse Gods woerde, and euery man vnhaloweth it vngratiuously: so muche the more behoueth it vs to marke well this Texte, where the holy ghost giueth vs the manner of examination, whereby too trie who be of good and right vnderstanding. To bring this to passe (as I haue sayde alreadie) wee must know God as he is. For we shall never feare him aright, vntill that like as he sheweth himselfe to vs, so wee know him to be our God, our Master, our Sauiour, and our Father. And here

Proverbs. 1. a. 7. you see also why Salomon (in the text which we alledged out of the first chapter of his Proverbes,) sayeth that the knowledge of holy things is the true vnderstanding. After he had spoken of the feare of God, he setteth downe the knowledge of holy things. Seing then that the holy ghost hath knit these two things togither in vnseparable bonde: it behoueth vs also to knit them togither. Hereby he meeneth, that the feare of God will never be in vs, till we be come to the poynt that we speake of: which is, that we know Gods mercie as it is offered vs in our Lord Iesus Christe: Namely that wee be drawne vnto him by his goodnesse, where through he allureth vs, and that we haue the boldnesse to call vpon him as our father, so as wee returne vnto him euen when wee bee vtterly dis-

Jeremiah. 9. f. mayed. And this is the cause why he sayeth in Jeremie, lete not the wise man truste in his wisedom, nor the strong man in his strength, but lete such as rejoyce, rejoyce that they knowe mee, mee (sayeth he) that am the Lorde which executeth iudgement, rightuousnesse and mercy. After that Jeremiy the Prophet hath abated mens prude, and shewed them that all the wisedom whiche those thinke themselves to haue that dispise God and shrinke away from him, is but smoke and leasing: he bringeth them to this poynt, let not the wise man (sayeth he) boast of any thing but that he knoweth God. And how shall we know him? Is it by knowing the rule which he hath giuen vs, and which he hath apointed for men to followe? It is not onely by that: but by knowing him to be our Protectour, assuring ourselues that it is his office to gouerne the worlde, and that he holdeth all things in his hand: and therfore let vs pray him to receyue vs into his protection, and aboue all things to guyde and gouerne vs by his holy spirit, forasmuch as of our selues we should always be confounded: assuring our selues also, that for asmuch as there is nothing but want and wretchednesse in vs, he muste be fayne to watch for our welfare, and to bring vs to that perfectiō whervnto he willeth vs to tend and trauell al the time of our life. Thus ye see whervnto it behoueth vs to apply al our indeuour that we may profite our selues by this doctrine. For the meenes whereby God draweth vs vnto him, are his feare and loue. True it is that many lightheaded persons ca speake ynoch of the grace of our Lord Iesus Christ, and of the rightuousnesse that is giuen vs in him, and can babble well of fayth: but yet they neuer tasted what it is to haue the grace of God, except they were rauished to come vnto him, and that in so doing they haue the sayde feare that is spoken of here. And in good sooth seing that God hath bought vs so dearely, is it meete that euery man should be giuen to himselfe and to his owne lustes? is it not reason, seing that he hath purchased vs, that every one of vs shoulde dedicate himselfe vnto him, and become his true possession and heritage? Seing that he hath gathered vs as it were into his housholde: ought wee not to be obedient vnto him? Yee see then that the thing which wee haue too marke here, is that when our Lord calleth vs, (as he calleth vs now being here assembled to heare his woord, and as he calleth vs by giuing vs his holy Scripture, and by commaunding vs to exercise the same: wee muste come vnto him in such wise, as we acknowledge him to be our father and master, and learne to submit our selues to his obedience and seruice, and vnhalow not his holy Scripture, by seeking there for trifling things, but keepe on forward continually to the sayde marke of knowing our God to be such as he sheweth himselfe to vs, and as he vtereth himself by his woord, which is the measure that he will not haue vs to passe nor to turne aside from, whatsoever come of it. And herewithall let vs marke, that the feare of God ought also to teach vs to shunne euill, according as it is set downe here for a conclusion: namely, that such as desire to submit themselfes vnto God, and to rule

50 their life according to his will, must fight against euill, as the thing whervnto wee are inclyned by nature: and as we know that wee are beset with many temptations, and other things that turne vs from our God, so as wee haue greate neede to resist the temptations of our fleshe and all the allurementes of this worlde, and so to strengthen our selues, that our wicked affections prouoke vs not to stryue agaynst God, but that all things which stirre vs vp thereto, may rather bee cutte off and hewen downe.

60 And so lete vs marke briefly, that we cannot go forwarde in the feare of God, but by renouncing our selues. For what haue wee else in our nature but a Sea and bottomlesse pitte? But we muste cast off all that geare, and learne to excrise our selues in the things that God sheweth vs by his woord, to the end we fall not in the confusio whereof wee haue spoken, but maye walke in the obedience of our God, and profite more and more in his schoole, so as he may alowe vs for his schollers, and wee yeelde such triall of our seruice, as he on his side may accept vs for his children, and shewe himselfe a father towardes vs.

Now let vs fal downe before the face of our good God with the acknowledgement of our sinnes, praying him to forgiue vs our faults past, and to call vs in such wise vnto him, as we may be increased and settled more and more in the grace of his holy spirit, so as we may be rid frō all the vices of our flesh, and therewithall that he forbear vs in our imperfections, vntil he haue taken vs out of this present life, to make vs partakers of his euerlasting glorie. So let vs all say, Almighty God our heauenly father we acknowledge in our selues, and confess as truth is, that wee are not worthie to lift vp our eyes vnto heauen to come before thy face, and that we ought not to presume so far that thou wilt heare our prayers if thou haue an eye to that which is in vs. For our consciences accuse vs, and our sinnes beare witness agaynst vs, and wee know that thou art a righteous iudge that iustifieth not the sinners and vnrighteous, but punisheth the faultes of them that haue transgressed thy commaundements. Euen so Lord, in considering our whole life, &c.

The.ciiij.Sermon, which is the first vpon the.xxix.Chapter.

IOb tooke vp his parable againe and sayd.

2. VVould God I vvere as I vvas in tym past, vwhen God preserued mee.
3. VVhen his lampe shyned vpon my head, and I vwalked in the darke by his light.
4. As I vvas in the dayes of my youth, vwhen the Prouidence (or companie) of God vvas in my tent:
5. VVhen the Almighty vvas vvith mee, and my seruants round about mee.
6. VVhen] I vvashed my paths in butter, and the rocke povvred mee out Riuers of Oyle.
7. VVhen I vvent outto the gate of the Citie, and made a chayre to be set for mee there.

T seemeth at the first sight, that Job bewayleth here the time past, and is grieved that God had chaunged his state by afflicting him so sharply, whereas he had made him to prosper before: but his meening is not so. For he setteth himselfe agaynst those that had judged amisse of his affliction, as if he had bene a man forsaken of God. His intent therefore is to shewe, that those men iudged vntowardly, because they looked no further than to the things that were seene. For (as we shall see in the knitting vp) Job sheweth that if it were to be deemed so, they shoulde rather haue an eye to the time of his prosperitie. VVherefore lette vs marke, that Job repineth not here as one that was greeued for the losse of ali the goodes that God had giuen him: but rather that he reproueth his aduersaries, shewing them that they take a wrong way to iudge of him, because they thinke a man to be vtterly damned, by reason of the chaunge which they see in his state, and remember not at all, that in tymes past he had bene had in great reuerence as an excellent and chosen man among all others. Therefore by the reading of this text, lette vs learne too take example, not too be out of pacience though God afflict vs. For wee ought rather to remembere how wee haue herde Job say, that sith wee haue receyued good at Gods hande, why shoulde wee not be patient to endure the aduersitie also which he sendeth? For wee be vnthankefull to God, if the remembiring of his benefites affwage not all our grieves when it pleafeth him to exercise vs and to bring vs lowe. For then it behoueth vs to thinke, how now? hath not our Lorde dealt in such wise with vs heretofore, as it is good reason that wee should receyue whatsoeuer it pleased him? yea and it ought to confirme vs in Gods goodnesse, so as we should not doubt, but that he loueth vs, seing wee haue founde him so good vnto vs by experiance. And haue wee not cause to bee contented when God sheweth his loue towards vs, although things fall not out as we would wish? Thus then yee see howe and in what sort it behoueth vs to remember our former prosperitie, when God afflicteth vs, it muste not encrease our heauiness, nor pricke vs forwarde to any grudging: but it must rather bridle vs

if we stromed to much: and if our passions were over-heady, the sayd remembrance (say I) ought to affwage the miserie which we feele, in that God hath made vs to tast his goodnesse which is sufficient matter of comforte for vs. Agayne, seing he hath had such care of vs, it is good reason that we should yeeld our selues wholly vnto him, to suffer what soeuer it shall please him. And it is a right necessarie warning for vs, that when aduersitie pincheth vs, and wee be at the last cast, wee ought to call to minde, that God hath not pressed vs so alwayes, but hath had regarde of our feblenesse, and borne with it, and thereby wittnessed his loue towarde vs, to the ende that we should trust in him, and not doubte but that when he shall haue tried our pacience in that sorte, he will remedie our aduersities, and bring vs backe agayne to our former state. Behold (I say) how it behoueth vs to practise this doctrine in all our afflictions. But nowe lette vs returne to the principall poynt of Iobs intent. I haue tolde you heretofore, that here Job meeneth to shewe, that his aduersaries are as it were blinde and iudge foolishly, because they stay vpō the things which are seene with the eye. For, because Job was in so great extremitie, they imagined that God had forsake him, & that he was to be esteemed for a cursed man. But (as wee haue seene heretofore) wee must not go so to worke: but wee muste haue the wisedome that is spoken of in the Psalme, namely of bridling our selfe that wee haue compassion of suche as are in aduersitie. And furthermore, wee muste beginne at this poynt, that if wee see a man smitten by Gods hande, wee muste consider what his lyfe hath bene. If he haue bene a wicked and disordered person: then our Lorde sheweth vs the thing which he telletth vs so often, namely, that his threatenings are not in vayne, and that it behoueth vs to learne at an other mannes coste (as they say) to walke in feare. It will seeme nowe and then that God looketh not downe here, and that he suffereth things to go to hauecke: but when he executeth his iudgements, the same ought to teach vs righteousness (as it is sayd in the Prophete Esay) and wee muste consider that it is no playng with God. For although hee wincke at things for a tyme, he will in the ende call those too account which thought themselves too bee escaped, and of whom the worlde supposed, that they should abyde vnpunished.

Yee

Esay.26.b.9

Ye see then that we must not settle our iudgement simply vpon affliction, but consider what the life of them hath ben, whom God punisheth, to the end wee may acknowledge their chastygements according too their deserts, for the better profiting of our selues therby. For if wee see a good man punished in such wyse as God may seeme to haue forgotten him, yea and euen to persecute him: what ought we to say to that? It behoueth vs to suspend our iudgements: for it were an ouer greate rashnesse, for vs to iudge of things secret and vnknowne. Therfore let vs knowe, that our Lord intendeth to humble vs, and that we must confesse him to be righteous, although the reason of his doings bee not altogether apparent. And so ought Iobs frendes to haue iudged, which condemned him wrongfully: For inasmuch as they had seene him to be as a mirror of holynesse and al perfectio during al his whole life: when they sawe him so smitten downe as it seemed that God ment to ouerwhelme him vtterly. They ought to haue come to this point, to haue sayd, we knowe not what to say, our wittes are dazed in this behalf; this man hath liued holily, doubtles he was neuer any wicked man, any whoremonger, any drunkard, any periured person, any looce liuer, any cruell person, nor any proude man: there were none of all these things in him, why then doeth God handle him so rigorously? we cannot tell. And therfore God myndeth to humble vs here, to the end that we shoud knowe, that sometymes his iudgements are as a bottomlesse pit, and that it is not for vs to wade into the, but rather wee ought to glorie him, yea euen by shetting our eyes vntill he shew vs why he worketh so. Ye see then what the wisdome is

Psa. 41. 4. 1. wherof the Psalme maketh mencion when it sayeth, that the man is happie which iudgeth rightly of him which is in aduersity. But herewithall it behoueth vs also to apply this to our instruction. For (as our Lord sayeth) if

Luk. 23. 6. 31 God do make the greene wood to be burned after that sort, what shall become of the drie? Then let vs compare ourselues with such as we haue knowne to be good men and to haue God. And wee shall find so grosse faults in ourselues, as we shal be constreyned to say, alas I see well that God beareth with mee and pitith my weaknesse in handling me so gently: for I am worse thā such a man: I see that if I should be compared with him, I come farre short of walking in such vprightnesse: and yet notwithstanding see how God afflictest him, and I am still at myne ease and rest. And is this bycause I am worthy of it? No, but my God knoweth me to be so weake, that I could not beare such afflictions: by reason whereof he spareth mee, and therfore I must impute it to his goodnessse. But if I be striken downe, and be fayne to endure afflictions, I must not therfore cease to call still vpō God, assuring my self that it is for my profit and welfare: and when I do but heare of his threatninges, I must therewithal prepare my self to beare aduersity, to the end that when it shall please him to touche vs with his rodds, we may not think it straunge, bycause wee haue ben prepared for it a good whyle before hand. Thus we see nowe what Iobs meaning is, for he sheweth, that such as iudge by the present state of things, and by the outward appearance, shal be conuinced by experience, bycause he had walked after such a sorte, as he was vnlblamable, and every man did rather woonder at him, than cōdemne his life. Then must it not be concluded, that bycause God afflicted him so, therfore he was a reprobate, and that all that euer he had done was but hypocrisie: that were to vntoward a dealing. By the way, although Iob speake but to those that come to accuse him falsely: yet is this written for the instruction of all Gods children. So then let vs gather that which I haue sayd already of this text: namely that we must not iudge at randone of any of the chastygements and roddes wherewith God striketh men. Verely wee must hold this for a generall rule in all afflictions, that they be witnes of Gods Justice vpō our sinnes. For if we were vtterly pure and innoēt: vndoubtedly God would handle vs after an other fashyon than he doeth. Therfore wheras we see men so miserable, and tormented after so many fashyons: they bee the fruits of their sinnes aswell seuerally as in cōmon: but yet notwithstanding we must not measure all men by one meatyard as they say. And why? For there be diuers causes (as I haue declared afore) why God sendeth afflictions vpon the world. Seing then that God hath diuers respects, we must not wrap vp all together, nor make all to passe vnder one collect (as they say:) But we must bee wyse in this behalf, and as it were bridle our owne reason, that wee passe not our measure and compasse. VVherfore (as I sayd) let vs thinke vpon euery mas life: And if that those be afflicted which haue despised God & his word, and led a lawles life, giuing the selues ouer to all naughtiness: let vs assure our selues that our Lord instructeth vs in their persōs to the end we should open our eyes to see that our faults shal not escape clere without comming to account before the heauenly iudge. But if we see no cause why our Lord shoulde punishe this man or that, but rather, the cleane contrary: Then let vs learne to say, Lord thou art righteous howsoever the world goeth: true it is that we bee dazed in this behalf, and that our sinfull flesh prouoketh and inforcest vs to murmur against thee. Neuerthelesse wee wil not say as they do which demaund why God shuld be so mynded, and could find in them hartes to go to lawe with him: No: but we wil be quiet and pacient, and tarry thy leyisure, till thou shew the things that are as yet hidden from vs. Ye see in effect what we haue to remember in this text. But herewithall let vs marke also, that when we come to the iudging of ourselues, we must cal this doctrine to mind, to the intent we fal not in dispaire although God pressevs and we feele his hand ouerhard vpon vs: but that we take courage to call vpon him, and leauē not to comfort ourselues in him. Thus ye see how it behoueth vs to practise still this doctrine. Contrariwise, in time of prosperity, let vs not be so sotted in our owne ease & pleasure, as wee see the world is, which abuseth Gods goodnesse in such wise, as they become vtterly blind, except God constraine the by force to think vpon their sinnes. Then if God let vs alone in rest, we haue as it were a spirituall drunkennesse, so as our witts be rauished, and we play the restie lades. Let vs therefore vs from mounting after that sort into prude and presumption, when God maketh vs to prosper: and rather let vs knowe (as I haue sayde already) that he giueth vs leyisure to dispose our selues to the receyving of the aduersities which he shall send vs, being well assured that he will pity vs, and not handle vs rigorously. Likewise if we see that God letteth the wicked runne at rouers, and layeth the bridle in their necke, and destroyeth them not at the first brunt: let vs not thinke they make the better market for that, neither let vs be tempted to enuy their good fortune, as it is sayd in the seuen and thirtith Psalme: but let vs exercise Psal. 57. 4. 1. our faith in this easē, tarrying Gods leyisure, till he shewe vs his iudgements which are hidden from vs for a tyme, according as it is not for vs to determinye the day nor the houre. Then must the faythfull hold theriselues at a stay, as often as our Lord sheweth himself favorable too the wicked, and to such as haue deserued to be quite and cleane rooted and wyped out of the world. For a though he leauē them in prosperity, they are not therfore in his fauor: but it is to make them the more vnexcusabla: and needs must they pay deare for their abusing of Godspatiencie in that wise, when he calleth them to repentaunce by handling them so gently. Lo in effect what we haue to marke of this doctrine. And now let vs come to the particular words that Job vseth here. VVby (sayeth he) am I not as in tyme past when God kept me? In saying that God kept him, Job meeneth that he had as now forsaken him. Not that he was setled in that opinion, but for that he had an eye to his owne naturall vnderstanding, as all the faithfull do diuers tymes in praying vnto God. For they may wel vse this maner of speche to say, Lord thou haste forsaken mee: Lord how long wilt thou forget mee? Lord how long wilt thou turne thy face from mee? Lord how long will it beere thou ease me of my misery? whē the faythfull speak after that sort: it is not for that they think that God hath forsaken them: for it were in vayne and to no purpose to call vpon God, if he had forgottē vs. VVhat should we gayne by resorting vnto God and by desiring him to helpe vs at oure neede, if God would not kepe vs? I pray you were it not lost labour to say vnto him, Lord helpe vs! So thē the faithful in cōplaynning that God hath forsaken them, meene not that it is so: But there is in vs a double feeling and cōceivung. The one is by our naturall wit, the other by faith. But what are the things that our naturall wit doeth rest vpon and looke at? The things that we feele, see and touche. Therfore when God leaueth vs in such extremitie as we know not what shall become of vs, there seemeth to be a thick clowde betwene him and vs, and that we be no more vnder his hād & guiding. But yet notwithstanding see how God promiseth to be nere at hand to vs. VVhen we think he is furthest off frō vs: And when it shall seeme that his eyes are shut: he will haue vs to think thus, hath God spoken it? Let vs hardely hold vs to his promis. Now then we see that there is a double cōceivung in the faithfull: and it standeth vs in hand to practise this well. It is not ynoch enough to say it, but every man must put it in vre in himself. VVhe any aduersitie befalleth vs, we cānot but think that god hath turned his back vpon vs. See whervnto our nature drijeth vs. But afterward it behoueth vs to run immediatly to the promises of God who biddeth vs call vpon him in the day of our trouble. In that he willettē vs to call vpon him it is a token that we are in his keeping & protec̄tiō. So thē we see that faith must ouerrule our natural reason, to the end wee may bee quiet in the middes of all our miseries, wayting for Gods succour, & walking as he cōmandeth vs. According hervnto Job sayth here, VVhere are the times become wherin God preserued? For he meeneth that God hath shewed by effect and by very eysight, that he had preserued him, as if some mā shuld say, seeing that Job is so persecuted, is it to be sayd that God keepeth him? Is it to be sayd that God maaintaineth him? No, but rather that God hath forsakē him as a wretched creature. Job thē speaketh not here of the thing as it was in verye deede, as though god had at that time forgotte him: but he speketh of that which might seeme to mē, & of that which he perceiueth by his naturall wit, howbeit that he resisted it by the force of faith, resting himself vpō Gods promises, and fighting against the tētation that was put vnto him. Ye see then in what wise it behoueth vs to take this text, and therewithall to apply it to ourselues: and so let vs vnderstand, that if we be in prosperitie, we must not terme it good fortune (according to the maner of mē which always are so malicious, that they rob and bereue God of the honour that belongeth vnto him) but we must vse such lāguage as this, namely that God preserueth vs. VVhat is the cause then that God prospereth vs? what is the cause that we liue & are stil mainteyned whē we be beseged with a thousand deathes? It is because God pitieh vs & is our Protectour. Lo how it behoueth vs alwayes to resort to Gods prouidence, that we may yeeld him the prayse of al the benefites which he bestoweth vpō vs, yea euē in respect of this trāsitory life. And furthermore, whē our Lord chaungeth to outward apperance, and suffereth vs to be assaulted on all sides so as one mā pilleth vs, and an other defameth vs, & many aduersities light vpō vs: might it not be sayd to mās seeming, that God hath forsakē vs, & will no more come at vs? Yet notwithstanding let vs not cease to receive the promis which God giueth vs, yea and to hope euē against hope, as which is the lesson that is taught vs in the person of our father Abrahā, as S. Paule speaketh of him. But Job addeth, that in that time God had lighted his lampe vpō him, Eo. 4. d. 18. and that he had walked in bis light in the middes of darknesse. Let vs marke how it is diuers times sayd, that God inligh- teneth vs when he teacheth vs by his word, and for that Psal. 119. cause is it termed a lāpe. But in this text it hath an other Nom. 105. sense. For Job meeneth not simply that God taught him by his lawe, or by any revelacion of the holy Ghost. But that God had giuē him comfort in al his aduersities, and therewithal also a good and desirable issue of thē. VVhat then is this lampe of God? it was Iobs prosperitie, in that God stode by him, according also as we see that the scri- pture likeneth the afflictiōs of this present life vnto dark- ness. As for exāple, if we be in warre or be troubled with famine or pestilence: we are as it were in the night: Gods countenance is hiddē frō vs: and we know not on which side to turne vs. So on the contrarie parte, when our Lord hādleth vs louingly, it is asmuch as if the sunne did shine vpō vs, we see that the daylight maketh mē glad, and cōtrariwise that the night maketh men sad and heauy. Also when it is clowdie and raynie weather, we are after a sort beaten downe and euery one of vs shrinketh. Sothen let vs marke, that Job doeth here continue his matter, by say- ing that the lampe of God shyned vpon him, whē he was in happie state and euery mā laughed vpō him. VVherin is cōfirmed yet better, the doctrine which I haue touched: Esa. 5. g. 30 & 42. 1. 16. & 45. 4. 7. 40 namely that neede must not fater the prosperitie of this world vpon fortune, as we see these worldlings do, which looke not vnto Gods hād nother in weale nor woe. Thierfore we must not do so, but rather whensoever we haue any prosperitie, let vs consider that God shyneth vpō vs, and sheweth vs a louing countenance, and would haue vs to knowe him to bee our father, that wee might glorifie him. Behold then how our Lord sheweth vs his counte- nance in all prosperitie, to the end that by seeing him, we might haue occasion to prayse his goodnessse, and also be drawen vnto him by his gentle allurement, and that both of thē might giue vs courage to loue him and to yeld our selues to his seruice. Now we see that these manner of speeches are not superfluous, when instead of saying after the manner of the vnbēleuers, I haue had good fortune, I haue liued at myne ease: Job sayeth that God had shone vpon him with his lampe, and addeth, that God had giuen him lyght in the middest of darknesse. And he sayeth this, bycause it is not possible but that wee must bee in many inconueniences and daungers in this world, I meane even those which seeme to haue all things as they would wish. Although we perceyue some man to bee as it were exempted from all trouble: Yet notwithstanding so long as he is vpon earth he must needes walke among thornes. VVe shall alwayes bee threatnaed with many deathes: and though a man haue his Garners and Cellers full: yet is it not to bee sayd but that he may bee made poore in the turning of a hand. So thē let vs marke well, that in the middes of this world, we be alwayes as it were were in darknesse: that is to say we be besette with many troubles and daungers, insomuch that if our Lord prouided not for vs, we could not step one pace forward, no nor so much as stirre one finger, but wee shoulde stumbel into many miseries. But God remedieith all things by shewing v<sup>s</sup> his lampe, and by making it to shine vpon vs. Therfore let vs learne to yeeld him the prayse that he deserueth: which is that we cannot hold ouer in this transitory lyfe, vnlesse he do alwayes looke vpon vs and guide vs. And let vs pray him, that in guiding of vs he will also make vs feele by effecte, that he is neere vs, and that he hath vs after such a sort in his protection, as we be exempted from many miseries, bycause he suffereth vs not to fall into them. Now if God deserue to haue this prayse yelded vnto him in respect of all things that concerne the state of this life: I pray you what deserueth he in respect of the i<sup>n</sup>struction which he giueth vs by his word? So long as we liue here bylowe we liue as it were in darknesse as S. Peter sayth, and we be as it were blind wretches: and moreouer as in respect of our witts we be so grosse headded, as 20 of necessitie we shoulde fal into confusion at every steppe, if we were not inlyghtened by the lampe of Gods word. VV<sup>e</sup> see then that in this greate and thick darknesse, wee had neede too knowe Gods goodnesse, and to open our eyes to behold it, and to be diligent to marke it, to the end we may honour him for al his benefites, and not deuoure them, but depend wholly vpon his prouidence. Thus much haue we to marke in this sentence: Now it is consequently sayd, that Job in the tyme of his youth bad the prouidence of God also in his tent. The Hebrew word which he vseth here, doeth signifie a latter tyme: but by a similitude it is taken for youth, not for the youth of fifteene yeeres, but for the tyme of mans chif corage and lustinesse, as from the yeeres of fiftie and twenty vnto the yeeres of fiftie and thirtie. And why? For then is a man in his chief floure, not for begetting of children as some haue expounded it, (for that were to fond and grosse): but because that man is then in his full rypenesse to giue counsell and to do any thing that belongeth to mans life. For in that age we see that men do so dispose themselves as they may be put to the doing of some seruice. So then, like as the latter tyme bryngeth foorth his fruts: so also in that age man is fit to yeeld his fruts, that is to say, to bee employed to some seruice. But in this text, a man may well take that woord both in that signification, and sometymes otherwyse also by similitude: which is: I would I were as in my later seazon, that is to say, as in the tyme when men gathered the fruts of mine abundance. Lo what Job meeneth. VV<sup>e</sup> when it is spring tyme of the yere, we see how the blade that shal beare corne, shooteth foorth, and the vynes beginne to bud. Howbeit as yet there is nothing but hope: VV<sup>e</sup> see the meadowes spring vp with grene grasse: but in the latter season the cattell are fat and well fed, bycause they haue had pasture, and the ryches of the yearth are gathered and laid vp. Thus ye see the tyme of abundance. And so I dout not but Job ment to say, when I was in my riches, when God had giuen me so greate aboundinge of goods as they flowed in my house. And afterward he addeth, that the prouidence or company of God was vpon his tent, purswing the thatter which he had talked of already. The Hebrew word which Job vseth, signifieth prouidence or company, and both of them agree very well: therfore men neede not to trouble themselves much, for the sense continueth all one. Therfore [the meening of it is,] when I had the prouidence of God vpon my tent, that is to say, whē God watched ouer me to guide all my affaires: or else when God kept mee company, that is to say when I found him faurable vnto me, so as he was neere me to hold me as it were in his lap. Here Job conynueth his acknowledging of Gods benefits. And let vs marke well, that if a man which was tormented after that sort, was notwithstanding not so farre besides himself, but that he alwayes glorified God: what is to be sayd to vs, if we thinke not vpō God whē he letteth vs alone quietly in the middes of our easē? VV<sup>e</sup> know that when a man is pinched with aduersity, he is so dismayed as he remembreth nother God nor himself, but is caried away, and his wits be amazēd. And now in what state was Job? Haue we not seene, that there was neuer yet almost any creature, that was tormented after that fashion? And yet neuerthelesse it is seene, that he stil directeth hi nself vnto God, and glorifieth him by confessing that the benefits which he had receyued in times past, tell not to him by casuall aduenture, nor were purchaysed by his owne trauell and pollicie, nor that he was beholding vntoo men for them. How then? It is God (sayeth he,) who hath lighted his lampe vpon me, it is he that hath guided me, it is he that hath bē at hand with me. VV<sup>e</sup>hen Job speaketh so, ought it not to be a record to cōdemne those men double and treble which are not so dismayed, and yet neuerthelesse do forget God, and swallow vp his benefites without dooing him any honour at all? Then let vs learn to gloriſe God for all things, after the example of Job, both in prosperity and aduersitie. And in so saying, he addeth what his state was for the tyme that God was with him as his companion and gard, that is to wit, that his feete were bathed in butter, and tha: the riuers flowed into him with oyle. By these similitudes Job signifieth, that God had set him in such prosperitie, as he wanted nothing. And when he sayth that he trode in butter and bathed his steppes in it: it is as much to say, as that God made him too walke vpon all pleasant things, according as it is sayd in the fourescore and eleventh Psalme, that the faythfull shall be borne vp by the hands of Angels, so as their feete shall not stumble nor dashe against any thing amisse. After the same manner Job sayth in this text, behold, God hath delt so with me in tymes past, that I did not as it were treade vpon the ground, nother felte I the hard pauement vnder me, but rather God made me a path as it were of butter and all swete things. To bee short, he meeneth that in steade of being in the common state of men, he did as it were swimme in all pleasures. Not that he sorteth him self in them, as they do that: are rauished in loue with their owne case, and overjoy and overshoote themselves in all things, as gluttons, drunkeards, and wanton folke do: Job intended no such thing, but he meeneth that God hid him in so great prosperitie, as he was not able to expresse but by excesse of wordes. And herein it is to be seen, that he magnified gods benefits as much as he could, like as we also ought to do. And it is a point that we ought to mark wel, bycause that when we be inforced to confess the good that God hath done vs: our acknowledg<sup>i</sup>ng of it is not to magnifie it so hyghly, as so greate a benefit ought to be: but rather we diminish it through our owne maliciouſnes. Lo how God is abated of his due by vs, as though some man that cold not deny a whole debt, shou'd iay, ô I thought it not to be so much, according as we see, that these euill paymasters are not so shamelesse as to say, I owe you nought, when the thing vs knowne and evident ynowgh: but they could find in their harte, to make an hundred florens but shu<sup>r</sup>, if it were possible. Euen so play we with God: we nicke him through our vnkindnesse and vnsaithfulnessse, diminishing the gifts which we ought to magnifie. Contrariwise Job sheweth vs here, that whē god hath done vs any good, we must not thinke to discharge ourselues by saying in one word, I am very much behoiden vnto God, and this commeth to me of his grace, (these are to trifling ceremonies:) But we must learne to esteme Gods benefits according as they be worthy. And in good fayth what are we? I pray you, let vs consider our state, and from whence our Lord hath drawen vs. Let vs consider on the other side, if we haue deserued that hee should stretch out his hand to help vs and bestowe all his creatures vpon vs too doo vs seruice. Let vs marke these things a little, and surely we shall find the cleane contrary: that is to wit, that God ought to shake vs off altogether, and yet notwithstanding he ceaseth not to do vs good. Therfore let vs learne to esteeme this fatherly loue which he beareth vs, and to taste it more earnestly than we haue done hytherto. Lo what we haue to marke in this similitude of butter and oyle, as if he shold say, when I compare my self with others, I find my self so greatly bound vnto God, as it is not possible for me to acknowledge it sufficiently. And herevpon he sheweth the honour wherein he was. He had spoken of his riches, saying: that his feete were bathed in butter, and that the stones yelaid him bonnie, that is to say, that euen the hardest things were turned vnto him into pleasure: And nowe he sheweth that he was had in honour and estimation. The Gouernors (sayeth he) taried at the gates, there I made a chayre to be set for mee, and every man yelded mee honor and reverence. VVhen Job sayeth so, it is not in way of bragging, (for he beareth the shame that God had layde vpō him, with al humilitie) but he reproueth his aduersaries. As if he shold say, you iudge of mee as nowe that I am a damned and cursed man. And why? For ye see me a wretched carcasse, destitute of all helpe, and euery man scorneth me. But see whither ye iudge rightly or no. For it is not long ago since I was honored of all men, and the wold you haue doulked to me too. Therfore your iudge-mēt is not right and indifferent, bycause you stay vpō visiblē things, wheras you ought to looke further. Now you see what Iobs meening is. VVhersore according to that which hath bē declared, forasmuch as we cā go no further as now, let vs lerne as oftē as our Lord doth vs any good, let vs lerne (I say) to acknowledge that the same commeth not of fortune, but of the hand of God. And on the contrary parte, whensoeuer it pleasest him to afflicte vs, let vs knowe that his intent is too waken vs by that meanes, and that it serueth not to put vs out of hart, but to humble vs. And therfore let vs not cease to resort still vnto him, assuring our selues that when he hath beaten vs with his roddes, he can well cure vs againe, as he that knoweth the remedies that are fittest for our welfare.

Now let vs fall downe before the face of our good God with acknowledgement of our faults, praying him too make vs feele them in such wyse, that being har- tely sory for them, wee may seke nothing but to rid our selues of our fleshly affections, that we may be fully clothed with his holy spirit, to the end wee may yeeld our selues to his obedience. And that we may knowe howe to profit ourselues in such wyse, both by our owne afflictions, and by the afflictions of our neyghbours, as wee may be still instructed more and more in his feare, and gloriſe his judgements, and not be so wrapped in these presente things, but that we may alwayes looke hygher, and that in the middes of our afflictions, wee may not cease to resorte vnto our good God, trusting that he will continue his goodnessse towards vs, euen till he shew vs that thing in effect and experience, which he now war- ranteth vs by his word. That it may please him to graunt this grace, not only to vs, but also to al people and nations of the earth, bringing backe all poore ignorant soules from the miserable &c.

The .cv. Sermon, which is the second vpon the. xxix. Chapter.

3. VVhen the young men savve me, they hid themselues, the princes rose vp, and stooode vp̄ on their feete.
9. The Gouerners left speaking vwhen I spake, and laid their hand vpon their mouth.
10. The princes held their peace, and their young cleaued to the rooife of their mouthe.
11. The eare that heard me sayd I vvas happie, and the eye that savve vtinced vwith me.
12. For I deliuered the poore vwhen he cryed, I helped the fatherleſſe that vvas succorleſſe.
13. The blessing of him that vvas ready to perish came vpon me, and I comforted the hart of the vvidovve.

He more precious that a thing is, the warelier ought a man to keepe it, & the more wylfully to dispose it, and to put it to the better vſe: and we see that every man doeth so in respect of worldly goods: True it is, that some spare nothing, but wast all: and yet euen those do knowe, that it is a vice to be reproued, when men knowe not how to order a good thing, which they ought to ſet store by, howbeit herewithall, although wee confesse that honestie is a mannes cheef treasure: yet notwithstanding men make no ſpare of it, but ſell it for little or nought. For prooufe hereof, looke vpon them that be in moſt reputaciō, and to whom men make moſt courtesie: are they in estimation for th̄ir vertues? No: but cleane contrary, if a man a ke those that humble themſelues before the greate and riche ones, what moȝeth them ſo to do: they will not ſay, bycause they are worthie of it: For th̄ir owne conſciēce beareth them wiſeſſe, that the moſt parte of them are ſtarke naught. VVe ſee then, that honestie is quite ſhaken off, and yet notwithstanding, men can well ynough ſay, it is the moſt precious thing that can be: And that is a foule faulte, according alſo as we ſee, how ſaint James, not on- Lane.2. ly ſcorneth, but alſo sharply rebuketh thoſe that honour the wicked after that ſort: For it is a defiling of the thing, which God had dedicated to a good vſe. VVhat ought men to honour ſauing God, and that which proceedeth from him? Therfore when wicked men are had in ſuch reputation: the thing that belongeth vnto God is plucked from him, and giuen too the diuell. True it is that if a wicked man be in auſthoritie, men may well honour him, not in respect of his owne person, but in respect of his office. But when vices are had in estimaciō, and prayſed for vertues: Is it not a mingle mangle to ouerthrowe all order? Therfore we ought to marke well this text, that where as Job ſpeaketh of the honour that was done vnto him, he ſayeth not that it was by reaſon of his riches or of his credit: but for his vertues, The young men (ſayeth he) bid themſelues when they ſave mee. VVhat moued the young young men to hyde themselues: for if a man passe his bounds, young men will rather take the more boldnesse to do euill, when they shall haue such a shadowe and prop to beare them vp. Then if men stode so much in awe of Job, that they hid themselues from his sight: it is a signe that he had such vertues in him, as men were informed to honour him for them, and not for his riches. Lo what we haue to marke in the first place. But herewithall let vs marke also, that this word Hyde, importeth a shame which those had that feared not God. For yet neuerthelesse they were hild in awe before men, and were lothe to haue their leudnesse knowne. And specially if a vertuous man that hath some grauitie in him, do come in the way: they that meene to do euill, hyde themselues from his presence. To what purpose serueth such shamefastnesse? For it seemeth to be a superfluous thing. It is certaine that ys a man absteyne from doing euill, only in respecte of some person: therby he sheweth, that he hath not as yet profited: and it is also a slender honouring of God. But yet notwithstanding, there commeth double profit of it. The one is, that like as a child before he knowe what reason is, or haue any discretion, shall neuerthelesse be inured to good things: Euē so our Lord causeth this shamefastnesse (which of it self is naught) to serue to drawe those forward by little and little, which haue not yet proceeded so farre, as to loue vertue for it owne sake. As for example: loke vpon a man, that is vnconstant, and hath not the feare and loue of God yet rooted in him, but is altogether as it were dazeled, & taketh leauue to do euil, and to quershoote himself: Yet hath he still a bridle, and is not vtterly past shame. VVe shall see diuers which of themselues will commonly be ouerseene, when they are in euill company, and a man shall no sooner intice such to do amisse, but they will bend to and fro: and yet for all that, if they haue any shamefastnesse, as soone as a man whome they reuerence, doeth but cast his eye aside vpon them, they will be so abashed, as they could find in their hearts to bee buried: and if a man tell them their faults: they haue not a word to answere, but wil rather fall a weeping, than reply. Thus ye see it is some token that a man is not altogether past hope of amendment, when he keepeþ still this modestie of knowing the shamfulnes of his owne sinne. Neuerthelesse it is evident, that this shamefastnesse is not a vertue of it self. Howbeit such a man will come home by little and little, and our Lord causeth that medicine to serue him as a sirop for a preparatiue against some disease, to the end that the pacient may afterward receyue some strong medicine. Lo here a sirop which doeth but alter. And what commeth of it. It healeth not the pacient, but yet it is a good preparatiue, and when a man hath taken half a chaunge after that sort, so as he is redy afore hand for the medicine: the medicine hath the more force. In like case is it with shamefastnesse. For of it self it is not able to heale our vices nor to clese vs of them, nor to make vs to walke as it becommeth vs: but it prepareth vs, so as we do not vtterly passe our bounds. Thus then ye see one vse and profit, which our Lord picked out of the shamefastnes that is in wauering and lyght mynded folke: which (as I sayd) haue not such foundation as they ought to haue, and in whom the feare of his name is not well rooted. But there is yet one other vse, that is to wit, that all excuses are taken from vs, and that God giueth vs a marke, as if he ingraued it, and brened it in our forehead, to say that we cannot iustifie our faults. VVhy so? I will go hyde me from the presence of a man. And what is the cause of it? Shame. And whence commeth this shame? God hath printed it in mee, as it were with a searingron, insomuch that whereas otherwyse I would suffer the sunne, the heauen, the yearth, and men, to beare witnesse of my lewdnesse: Yet notwithstanding I am restreinde whē I see that men shal point at me with their fingers, and that I shall be hated and abhorred: For vice is cursed of it selfe. VVee see then that this shamefastnesse whiche mē haue, is as a processe, that God maketh against vs aforehande, as if he should charge a Jewrie, and take informations and inditements against vs, to the end we should be cast, and that notwithstanding all the shifts that we could alledge, yet neuerthelesse our brondmarke should bewraye that ali vices are vices, and worthy to be condemned. And so although a man bee otherwise blockishe, and not touched any whit with the knowledge of his sinnes: yet inasmuch as he hath shāfastnesse, by that meanes he is made vnexcusablie. Nowe then wee see what doctrine wee haue to gather of this streyne. The first is, that our Lord warneth vs, that when we haue any shame of euill doing, and shun mens presence, and would be loth to haue our leudnesse knowne: we must vnderstand, that thereby God aduertiseth vs, that it is not for vs to flatter our selues in our sinnes, nor to hide them, but rather that wee must learne to condemne them. Furthermore, if wee be so abashed before men: let vs assure our selues wee can not escape the presence of God. VVee maye w.l. locke vp our selues in our lurking holes, but wee shall gaine nothing by it. His eye must always see vs, and not only marke the woorks that are to be seene of the world, but also our secretest and deepest thoughts. Therfore let vs learne, not only to feare men, but specially the heavenly iudge that seeth vs: and also let not the said shamefastnesse gouern vs, for we must not stay there, as I haue sayd already. It were all one as if a childe should abyde alwayes in his Apree, or else as if a sick man should content himselfe with a preparatiue, and afterward die vpon it for want of taking further phisick. Then must not this shamefastnes raigne alone in vs, but it must leade vs further: that is to wit, that although men perceiue not our defaults, and that we might haue couerings to hyde our selues withall and to beguile the world: yet neuerthelesse our owne conscience may watche, and kepe ward, and the iudgement of God may presse vs, and that we may so dispose all our whole life, as wee may not desire only to be had in good reputation of men, but also to be allowed of our God. And for the bringing hereof to passe, we must not only absteyne from open euell doing: but our harts also must be cleansed, and we must haue our affectiōs corrected, so as wee may not haue any backenooke to hyde our filthinesse in. Thus ye see what we haue to remember in this streyne. But yet notwithstanding we see in what times wee bee. For now adayes, like as there is not any feare of God, so is there no shame of men: Iniquitie doeth so ouerflow, that they which bee most shamelesse, are most valiant. At leastwys, youth ought to haue some modesty: and vndoubtedly it is not without cause, that the Paynims did of their owne naturall wit, knowe that shamefastnesse is the peculiar vertue of young folks. And why? For young folke are not yet so well gouerned as were requisite. They are full of boylings that stirre them vp vnto euell, the fier is in their head, and therewithall their lusts are so violent, as it is very hard to represso the. Herevnto our Lord gineth a remedy: which is, that although young folkes be very heady: yet notwithstanding they are conuictid and constrainyd to know the selues, and they perceiue that they haue not yet such a stayednesse in the as were requisite: and that is the cause why they haue some shamefastnesse in the. But what is seene nowadayes? Ther wāteh no store of young ruffians: behold these young Cockerells, they are no soner crepon out of the shell, but byand-

by and by they must haue a sword by their side, and you shall see them vterly voyde of all shame. They think they ought to be like brothels of the stews, and that (what soeuer they do) nother reverence, nor Justice nor any things else ought to gouerne them. To bee short, wee see how youth is become allogither diuelishe, and that not only there is no feare of God, but also no honestie at all in them.

Sith wee see this, let vs assure our selues, that there is a floud of iniquitie, and that things are so farre 10 out of order, as they bee past remedie. For it appeareth, that the thing which ought to be imprinted by nature in all men, and specially in yong folke, (that is to say, shamefastnesse and modestie) is quite razed out, & young folks are vterly shamelesse and stubborn, and passe not though they be mocked for their vnshamefessesse. So then let vs learne to walke in greater feare and carefulnesse. For wee shall not bee excused by alledging that every man doeth as we do: for it is no meanes to acquite vs before God, to say, that other bee no better than ourselues, but 20 rather let the same be an occasion vnto vs to drawe backe, that wee bee not wrapped in the vices that reigne so in all men. And furthermore let vs remember how it hath ben sayd, that we must not walke as men that looke but only vpon the creatures: but let vs set God before our eyes, according also as we cannot scape his presence. True it is that through our inclination to hypocrisie, we seeke many wyndlasses [and startingholes,] but yet must God needs folowe vs euery where. Seing it is so, let vs learne to dedicate ourselues wholly vnto him, and to haue our 30 sight fastened vpon him.

And forasmuch as he inlightheneth vs by his word: let vs thinke also vpon that which the Apostle telleth vs in the Epistle to the Hebrewes. For there he declareth that the word which wee heare, is of the same nature that God himself is: which is to search our thoughts, and to try out all that is in vs, and to devide asunder the marie from the bones, and the vaynes, and all that is in vs. Seing then that when our Lord sendeth vs his word, he will make such a triall, that all that euer lieth hid in men must come too lyght: let euery of vs walke as in the broade day, and confidet that wee bee no more in darknesse, seing our Lord Iesus Christ reigneth among vs by his Gospell. Thus ye see what ye haue to remember in this text. And now Job addeith, that the Princes rise vp afore him, yea and that the clefe men and gourners bld their peace when they heard him speake. Here we see an order that nature teacheth, were it not that the malapertnes of men perverteth all things? And if we followe that which our Lord sheweth, I say even according to the order of nature: It is certayn that if there were a man that had the gift of teaching, and more judgement and knowledge than other men, he should be harkened vnto, and euery man would hold their peace when he spake. VVhat is the cause then that when a man shall speke good reason, and haue the gift to edifie others: he is not receyued, but despised: and many babblers thrust themselues foorth and will needes be heard with their tongues running at ryot, by meanes whereof the truth shall bee put backe, and thrust vnder soote? what is the cause thereof? It is for 60 that men cannot abyde that God should guide and gouerne them, but (as I say) they corrupt all the order of nature by their malapartnesse, or rather madnesse. For needes must wee become wood beastes, when we cannot abyde to submit our selues to truth and reason, and to admit them that are ordeyned ouer vs as it were in Gods fiede. Therefore let vs marke well this text. For Job meeneth not to imaginise his owne person only:

No vndoubtedly, it is not his meening. VVhat then yesterday I shewed you a peculiar reason, which hee had too speake so. But further wee may gather also a generall doctrine that God giueth vs by Iobs mouth: which is, that when there is an vpright and vertuous man, and therewithall indewed with wisedome: we must giue care too him, and receyue him among vs. For if wee folowe not the rule which is shewed vs heere, wee not only doo wrong vntoo a mortall man; but also God taketh the same wrong to be done as to his owne person. And not without cause: for if a man be able to gouerne vs with good doctrine, thinke wee that he hath it of himselfe? Every man can well ynough say, that it is the gift of God. Now when God auaunceth a man in such wyse by giuing him more largely of his holie spirit, is it to the intent he should purchase himselfe estimation, and not rather for the comon profit of all men? He that is so indewed with any greate gifts, is bound so much the more too his neyghbours, and must so bestow that which is giuen him, as all men may be partakers of it. But now if wee vouchsafe not too heare a man, when wee may profit vnder him: is it not a despising of the spirite of God? Is it not a scorning of his maiestie, which he would haue too bee knowne when he sendeth vs a mortal man after that sort in his name?

Furthermore this pryd is matched with vnthankfulness. Behold, God rayseth vp men that are able too teache vs: let vs but only heare them, and it shall bee for our welfare. If wee vouchsafe not too doo that: is it not a reiecting of the benefit that God offereth vs as much as in vs lieth. So then it is not for nougat told vs heere, that if there bee a vertuouse man which hath more skill than our selues, he deserueth to haue care giuen him, and that men should bee heedfull to receyue that which he shall say. For (as I haue declared already,) if men doe it not, wrong is offered vnto God, and we are also vnthankfull, in that we will not be gouerned by him. There is yet more: And that is, that if wee ought too heare men which haue some worldly skill: what ought we to do when they be purposely sent too bring vs Gods word, and are so furnished as they may say, that God sendeth vs the message of saluation by their mouthes? According as he serued his tourne by the Prophetes and Apostles during their lyues, and will haue the same order of gouernement to be at this day in his church, and there too contynue vntoo the worldes ende. Then if we refuse too heare Gods word when it is preached by such as are ordeyned to that office: Is it not a double rebellion? And shall wee not bee somuch the more too blame? So then wee be warned heere, too keepe silence when our Lord sendeth vs his woord, and bothe the greate and small too stoupe vntoo it, and to bee dumb, but not deafe. I say we must bee tungyde: for when God speaketh, it standeth vs in hand to herken without replying, and too receyue quietly whatsoeuer is sayd vnto vs, and to conclude with Amen, So bee it.

Again, wee must not bee deaf: but forasmuch as we see that by nature wee be so ill dispozed too heare God, and too obey his woord, wee haue too pray him too open our eares, and too correct the dulnesse of hearing that is in vs, and our slowenesse of obeying him, and specially too giue vs the vnderstanding of his will: for else wee bee so brutish, as wee should never conceyue the thing that is for our welfare, except wee were inlygheted by his holie Spirit. And therfore let vs learne too brydle, not only our toungs, but also all our affections.

For the thing that hindereth vs from the hearing of God, and from being taught by his woord, is not only that we be to talkatyue and to full of babbling and prattleprate: but also bycause we bee full of lusts and geynstriuings, which do as it were breake off Gods talk. Now then let every man looke well to himself. For when we come to a Sermon, or otherwyse looke vpon the holie Scripture, no doubt but wee shall well understand some good sayings and profitable sentences heere and there: But what? Byandby it slippeth from vs, and we forget it again. And whyso? For wee bee combered with our owne geynstryuings. Therfore it is all one as if there were a greate noyze in vs that brake off Gods word, so as it was not receyued.

Again, wee beare not away the hundredth part of that which is told vs. And why? Because wee bee fleshly, and our affections carie vs away. Sothen, (as I haue sayd) if wee mynd to fare the better by Gods word, wee must not only brydle our toungs which are ouer lauish: but wee must also brydle our affections, too the ende there may bee a peafable obedience yeelded too our God.

Thus ye see what wee haue to marke. Neuerthelesse wee must also haue the sayd sobernesse and modestie of not being too hattie to speake, but rather yeeld our selues teachable. It is sayd that the wyse man shall wex wyzer by hearing. Salomon speaketh not there of the ignorant and idiots: but for somuchas men take themselues to bee greate clerks and doctors at the first day, and beare theselues in hand that they haue profited ynough 30 assoone as they haue any little taste of the doctrine: (as in good soothe men will swell big ynough, euен like toades, howbeeit that all their swolnenesse is but wynd) forasmuch then as men haue such ouerweening of themselues: therfore Salomon sayeth that there is not so wyze a man, but he groweth wyzer by hearing. VVhat is to bee doone then? VVe must not be so forward too speake, but wee must also bee as readie too herken, and to heare what is told vs. Lo what wee haue too beare alwayes in mynd vpon this streyne. And verely seeing that Job sayeth expesly, that the gouerners, (euен such as were practyzed in wisdome, and bare authoritie among men,) had giuen eare too him bycause hee excelled: I pray you what shall become of them that cannot chalendge such skill too themselues, nor haue had the like practize, nor borne office wherby too get so much vnderstanding? And yet neuerthelesse wee see there are verye fewe now adayes that can abyde too bee taught, but euery man taketh vpon him to be a teacher.

And see how ill wee practyze the lesson that is giuen vs by Sainct Iames, where he sayeth, that wee must not couet too bee many maysters: for contrarywise there is none of vs all, but he thinkes himselfe able too guyde the whole world: and in the meane whyle there is not any man that can abyde to bee taught or told any thing, no though he bee but a yoong caſ. So much, the more then ought wee too marke this circumstaunce which I haue purposely touched concerning Job. The holye Ghoste prayseth the men that were wyse and in authoritie, who notwithstanding yeelded themselues peafable, and refuzed not to be taught. Seeing the holye Ghoste sheweth vs this: let vs vnderstand, that it is not only to commend the persons, for they are vnyknowne to vs at this day: but too giue vs example and instruction what wee haue to do. And this present admonition is not more than needeth, considering the pride that is in vs. For (as I sayd) every man will bee wyse, and no man can finde in his heart too stoupe so low, as too confesse that he hath neede to be taught by others. Thus the cause why the holye Ghoste setteth vs downe such instruction heere: is for that although wee were the excellentest men in the world, yet mult wee not imagin any such perfection in ourselues, but that wee haue neede too profit yet further. And herewithall let vs marke well the gifteſ of God. VVhen wee see a man ſent to vs to teach vs: let vs vnderſtand that God hath ſent vs his treasure too releue our want withall. It standeth vs in hand too receyue the fame of God, as who is the fountayne of all wiſdome. It is true: neuerthelesſe he maketh it to runne downe vnto vs, as it were by riuers and chanells. For when men receyue gifteſ at his hand it is to diſtribute them to vs by their meaneſ. And althoſh a man haue no greate gift: yet muſt wee giue him the hearing, if hee speake reason and truthe: yea though it were a young childe that told vs our faultes, yet is he a messenger of Gods ſending. Now if wee may not refuze a little child, no nor a ſilie Idiot that hath no authoritie nor any excellent gifte, but muſt receyue correction at their hand: I pray you muſt wee not needs bee out of our wits if wee reiect the manifest gifteſ of God which he would haue to bee magnified, by ſetting them in an open place too bee ſene. Or when muſt it not bee ſayd that wee bee ſtarke madde if wee reiect them?

So then for alſmuch as we haue neede to bee conſtantly ſtrengthened by receyuing doctryne and instructiō by al meaneſ that can be offered as long as we liue in this world: let vs accept Gods giftes (as I ſayd,) and wherſoeuer wee ſee them, let vs doo them the honour to ſub-mit our ſelues to them. Thus yee ſee what we haue to marke in this ſtreyne. Job declareth byandby after, that he had ben honoured and commended, not only for having a ſharp and ſuttle vnderſtanding. But also for mainteyning right among men. And that is a ſentence further well worthy too bee noted. True it is that when a man meddleth with teachiug his neyghbours, it is not enough for him to bee an honest man, and to haue a de-ſire too liue well, and to giue good example too all men.
But he muſt also haue a ſkilfulness, and God muſt haue giuen him wit and reaſon. Neuertheleſſe if a man were as ſkilfull as could bee wiſhed, and had his toung ready to vtter, ſo as there were no blemiſhe in his ſpeach, and yet were of an euill conſcience, ſo as hee were a ſcorner of God, or a heathenifh man in his lyfe: hee deserueth not too bee heard. For his lyfe makeſ him ſuſpected, ſo as men can hardly take any taſt of his doctryne. I meene not that the wickedneſſe of menneſ lyues, ought to diminishe the authoritie of Gods word, but I ſpeakē of the common iſfirnitie that is in vs, in ſomuch that if we ſee a man that is wicked and forward, and without al vp-rightneſſe, who in his dooings ſcorneth all vertue: if ſuch a man ſpeakē as an Angell, yet would not men voutſafe too heare him. For they woulde thiſke themſelues deceyued, bycause they ſee hee ſpeakē not from his heart.

So therfore it is a requisite thing for him that dealeth with teaching, too haue the ſayd vprightneſſe, that men may know he ſpeaketh from his heart, and not ſaynedly, and that he telleth not a tale in iest, like as a player may play his part in an enterludie, and yet when all is done, it is but a iest. And this is the cauſe why I ſayd that it is not ynough to ſpeakē well, but that he which myn-deth too teache others, muſt not only ſpeakē with his toung, but also deale ſo as men may knowe that the ſame commeth from his heart; and he muſt ſo ratifie and ſee all his doctrine by his dedes, as men may see that the thing which he speaketh is so settled in his hart, and so printed and ingrauen in him, that he speaketh as it were in the presence of God. Ye see then what we haue to marke in this sentence, when Job (after he had reported that he had ben comended, of the greatest and honorablest sort of me) addeth, that it was because he had succoured the poore, and afflicted, and that the blessing of him that was readie to perish had ben vpon him, and that he had ben the defender of the fatherles, and the Protectour of the widowes. So the this vprightnes purchased him autoritie, according as it is sayd in the fiftenth Psalme, that we must honour them aboue all men, which haue the feare of God. And surely (as was declared not long ago) seing that the feare of God is our wisdome, yea euē our true wisdome: we must also consider, whether a man deserue too be heard or no. Furthermore when a man walketh vprightly, and giueth good assurāce that his speche is not fained, and that he is no dissembler that doth but babble frō the teeth outward, and hath no affection at all in his hart: if a man be such a one, as that his whole life warranteth that he intendeth to teache other men in good earnest, to the intent that God may be serued and honored: let vs assure our selues that we must take such a one for a mirrour or looking glasse: for if we make no reckoning of the good life of such as ought to teache vs, we reiect the assurāce that God giueth vs of his doctrine. True it is (as I haue said,) that men cannot barre the word of God from continuing in his full state: for it dependeth not vpon the vertuous behauisour of men. But howsoeuer the world go, when God is so gracious vnto vs to teach vs by such men as witnesse by their liues, that their only seeking is that men should serue God, I say when we haue such a record: it is as it were a sealing of the doctrine, and it is alone as if God should relieue our infirmities by driving and pricking vs forward, because he seeth vs so negligent and slow to come vnto him. Is it not a signe that we be flouthfull beastes, if wee make no accompt of this? So then let vs marke well this sentence as it is couched here by Job: and therewithall let such as haue the charge to teach others loke well to themselues, that they behauē thēselues in such wise, as their life may be a paterne to all me, and beare witnesse that they speake not in vaine, but that they speake the word of god which is thoroughly ingrauen in them: and let vs also take warning in their persons, to haue the word of God in estimation, that wee may yeeld ourselues too his obedience as well as they. Thus ye see the thing which all ministers and magistrates, and such as haue charge to gouern the people, and generally all such as haue any degree or vocation of teaching, ought to think vpon: namely that our Lords wil is, that they shew the way, and that his calling of them to that office, is vpon condition that they shold not only speake, but also witnesse the same earnestly and truely by their life. Yea and this doctrine extendeth to all men in generall: for there is no man but he ought to teache his neyghbours, in tyme and place conuenient when neede requireth. Therfore let vs consider that in condemning other men, wee hyde not our owne faults, ne cause them to be forgotten. He then that would be a good correctour of his neyghbours, must first correct himself. He that will teache other men, must first be his owne schoolemayster: that is to say, he must begin at himself and receyue good doctrine. Also let vs not forget that which wee haue sayd: namely that wee must be ready to receyue instruction at every mans hand, and yeeld ourselues teachable without refuzing so greate a benefit, when our Lord goeth about to teache vs by any manner of person. As touching that which Job sayeth here: the effect of it is, that he hath shewed himselfe to bee a man that feared God. Such as are led with ambition, would fayne shewe themselues to be men of renoume, and they neuer do any thing, but they looke for some prayse and commendacions for it afore men. Contrariwise Job declareth here, that he bestowed his doings where was no hope of recompēce nor of purchasing any greate fame or renoume to the worldward: and that he indeuered to do good vnto men, euen when they seemed to be dead. Herby he sheweth well, that he was not led by vaine glory, ne sought his hyre here beneath in earth, but that he walked as in the sight of God. For if a man seeke his owne preferment: it is certayne that when he ought to do any man a good turne, he will looke twice vpon it, and see whether the partie bee able too counteruail it, and to render like for like. And thus ye see that none of the good turnes which are done in the world, are done frely, but rather for wages, and therfore their doings can not be sayd to be a vertue. For it is not charitiē that leadeth them to do good one to another, or to helpe such as haue neede: but every man hath an eye to his owne profit, and to see whether the good that he doeth vnto others, may retorne home againe to himself. But contrariwise, it is shewed vs here, that in serving of God, wee must not haue regard of any worldly recompence, nor couet to be commended and praysed, according as wee see how Job sayeth here, that the blessing of him that was readie too perish, came vpon him. Let vs marke wel this saying: for whē a man is at deathes dore, it seemeth to vs, that what soever good we shall haue don vnto him, it is as good as lost, and also as to the worldward it is all quite gone. And verely Job speaketh here of such as were vterly forsaken, and had no succour: insomuch that no man voutsafed to think vpon them. There is then as it were a buried man, or as it were a wretched coarse, and I succour him: If in so doing my respect bee to purchace any prayse among men, then is it certeyne that I will seke some man to blasē abroade my goodnesse, and to tel how much he is beholding and bound vnto me. But if I take a poore man, that is as good as half dead, and seemeth that he must perish out of hand: it is a token that I seke not the prayse of men. Againe, what is the hyre that I shall looke for. The man is as it were condemned to death and there is no more hope of him. So then, if we mind to procede in such vprightnesse, wee must thrust all ambition vnder foote, and there must no couetousnesse leede vs, but we must looke ryght forth vnto God. That is the thing which Job ment to betoken in effecte, and the same also is the cause, why he setteth downe here all the particulars that we haue touched, namely of wydwes, of fatherles children, and of such as bee dispossed of the whole world. For vndoubtedly these also are the parties which are specially recommended vnto vs of God. As for them that haue the meanes to recompence the good turnes which they shal haue receyued: they recommend themselues. But when a poore man is destitute of all fauor, and hath nother kinsfolke nor freendes nor goods nor authoritie on his side: if wee succour him, it is a signe that wee looke ryghtforth vntoo God: And if we do not, it is a token that there is no charitiē in vs. And truely forasmuch as every one of vs is so wedded to his owne profit: therfore doth our Lord exprefly commend vnto vs both the widowes, and the fatherles, and those that are in such extremitie and are not able to helpe themselues. God (I say) presenteth them vnto vs, to try our charitiē in that behalf. Yee see then a point in Job which it standeth vs in hand to marke, yea and to marke it in such wyse, as wee must assure our selues that all these these things are spoken for our learning. For (as I haue touched alredy) Job vseth no brauerie here, neither maketh he any brags to get himself estimation: but rather in his person the holy ghost sheweth vs what is to be esteemed: namely, not that which appereth outwardly, & hath the fayrest glosse afore men, for that oftentimes shal be but abomination before god. VVhat then? when a man walketh as hauing none other record but god, so as al his doings are leuelled at that mark, to say, my God hath commaunded it me, it is the thing wherin he will trie me, it is the thing whervnto he tasketh me, when a man walketh by that rule: it is all one as if he should banish all worldly respects to gather himselfe vnto God. And euen so also must we do. Let vs seke none other allowance but of god: and let that suffice and content vs, & let vs not be turned aside, nor drawen away by ambition or vainglorie. VVhe we intend to serue God, let vs not looke for our recompence at mans hande, but let vs serue God with such vnfeynednesse and soundnesse, as wee may not stay vpon the things that haue fayrest shewe, but vpon the things that are commaunded vs: and let vs fully conclude and be resolued, that wee ought to desire no further, but that God be obeyed. Therfore in all these things, let vs follow still the example of Job, and shew that we feare God: yea and let our shewing of it be, not by lwoe not what Ceremonies, wherin there is no substance, but by the things that oure Lorde commaundeth vs, especially in hys lawe : which are that wee shoulde execute iustice, rightuosnesse and mercie : that is to say, that wee shoulde yeelde euerie man his right, that wee shoulde absteyne from all euill, from all iniurie, craft, and violence , and indeuour to serue our neighbours cheefely in hauing pi-tie and compassion vpon those that are in aduersitie, too the ende to succour them after the abilitie that God hath giuen vs.

Nowe let vs fall downe before the face of our good 10 God with acknowledgement of our faultes, praying him to haue pitie vpon vs , and too make vs so to feele our sinnes, as wee may be humbled in true repentance , and come too seeke him in the persone of our Lorde Iesus Christ : and that when hee shall haue receyued vs too mercye , it may please him so to guide vs wyth his holy spirite , as his glorie maye shine in vs , and wee in the meane while may not conet too bee honoured of men, but holde oure selues contented , that his glorie shineth so in vs , as his name bee exalted : and that it maye 20 please him too make vs too walke in such soundnesse vnder his obedience, that such as wander and go astray, maye bee brought intoo the way of saluation by meanes of oure example, so as all of vs togither may serue him wyth one common accorde all the tyme of our lyfe.
And for the perfourmance heereof , it may please him too stire vppe true and faythfull Ministers of hys woorde, &c.

The. Cvj. Sermon, which is the thirde vpon the. xxix. Chapter.

13. The blessing of him that vvas readie to perishe, vvas vpon mee, and I comforted the vvy-dovves heart.
  14. I vvas clothed vvith rightuousnesse, I apparayled my selfe vvith iudgement as vvith a Robe or a Crovvne.
  15. I vvas the eye of the blinde, and the foote of the Cripple.
  16. I vvas the father of the poore, and I sought out diligently the cace that I knew not.
  17. I brake the chavvses of the vvicked, and plucked the pray out of his teeth.

E. beganne yesterday too shewe howe Iob giueth here a triall of the vertues of a man that feareth God: which is that he dooth good without regard of the world, or without seeking his recompence there, and is not led either with ambition or seite profit, but walketh as in the sight of God. For as for those which make a shew of vertue, and yet notwithstanding walke not vprightly: they in doing good, haue alwayes an eye whether men be able to recompence them.
And where they may be praysed & comded, & purchase credite by the meanes of it. But if a man give himselfe to do good freely, that is to say, without hope of recópence in this worlde: the same sheweth, that hee is minded too serue God. And therfore Iob declareth, that he regarded not whether those to whom he did good, were able to recompence him or no. For he did rather imploy himselfe vpon the poore, the fatherlesse, the widowes, the lame and the blind. Herein then he sheweth that his whole intent was to serue God. Besides this, he shewerh that he was not led by ambition, ne sought that men should comend him. Howe so' for hee holdeth him selfe contented, that the blissing of him which should haue perished was vpon him. And this importeth as much as if he should say, that he had a desire to succor those that were already as good as halfe dead. It seemed that if he shewed them any fauor or did thē any good, the same should be lost, & it shoulde neuer be spoken of. But this respect hindreth not Iob fro 40 doing well, because he was sure that although men die, God kepereth a reckening of our doings, and they cōtinue in his regesters. To be short, we see alwayes that Job was none of those, that are drawne hither & thither by fleshly affection: but had alwayes his eyes vpon this marke of regarding and folowing the thing that god aloweth. And here ye see how we ought to rule our life : for Job heere preacheth not his owne prayses, but sheweth vs how we ought to behauie our selues. And as much as there is nothing easier than to aduaunce ourselues when the world 50 laugheth vpon vs, and men prayse vs, and we be in reputation and credit : here Job bringereth vs vnto God, and telleth vs, that as he onely is our iudge, to whom perteyneth the authoritie to gouern vs, & to be our lawmaker: so also we must seeke to please him onely, and to obey him in all that we do and say. Marke this for one poyn特. Herewith-all let vs marke also, that God(to trie the loue which we bear him)offerereth vs such persons as haue no meanes to recompence vs For behold the true proefe that we serue god, is that we serue our neighbors when they haue nei-60 ther pleasure nor helped vs afore, or when it shall seime that we haue lost both our labor and our cost, & yet notwithstanding ceasse not to imploy our selues still VVhy so? For it is inough for vs that God aloweth our doings.

That is the thing which wil make vs not to play the hirelings. Now seeing it is so, let vs be weladuised, that whensoeuer we see any pore men in aduersitie or misinreated, (as whēsome are in necessitie for want of worldiy goods, some are wrested and wronged by other men, some stand in neede of counsell, and othersome lacke helpe:) then doth God meane to trie our charitie, then putteth he vs to the touchstone: and if we shrink aside when the poore crieth, and giue no eare to him: thereby we shew that we are neither zealous nor willing to serue God. And let vs assure our selues that this threat (the poore cried, and thou wouldst not heare him, and therfore thou shalt crie and not be heard, neither shall any man pitie thee) shall be executed vpon our heades: for we shall find no mercy neither before God, nor before man, when we haue bin 10 pitilesse to such as God hath sent to vs to bee succoured. And thereafter as our hart shall haue beene hard and vnkinde: so will God shet the eyes of such as see vs in pouertie, so as they shall haue no remorse of vs: wee may well complaine and smart, but no man shal regard it. And why? For it is the payment that we deserued, whē we had not compassion of those that were in distresse: specially seeing God sendeth vs such a triall, of purpose to knowe whether we be willing to serue him or no. To be short, we see here, that mercy is one of the principall partes of 20 our life, if it be ruled by gods order. And what importeth this saying? Euen that whē we see any man in aduersitie, and that he hath need of our helpe, we should be sorie in our hart, & suffer with him in our own person, & therby be led to do for him according too the abilitie that God giueth vs. For it is not inough for vs to help such as haue need of our aide, but we must also do it of a hartie loue. The word almes importeth asinuch as mercy. But men think they haue done an almesdeed, whē they neither regard nor esteem the person more than a dog, nor suffer any part of his greef, nor (to be short) haue any compassion on him, prouided only that they giue him somwhat: but (to speak properly) that is no almes at al. Truly it is a witnessesse of almes, that is to say of mercy: but yet is it but a false witnessesse when a man hath not the said compassion & hartie affection that I speake of. So then let vs marke well, that god will the a low of our life, whē we be hard harted, in pityng such as are in aduersity, & therby are moued to succor the to the vittermost of our power. Such as deal so, may wel say that they are gouerned by gods spirit, & that their life is allowable. True it is that God comaundeth vs many other things in his law, nother said I that this is all, but that it is one of the principal parts. Yet notwithstanding a man may be as it were a little Angel in the residue, & the world may haue him in admiration: & yet if he be cruel as a wild beast, & so hardharted as he careth not for the pore, nor for such as be in aduersity: it is certaine that god wil abhor all bis exerces, which might be had in estimation. So the, are we desirous that in liuing chastly and soberly, in yelding euery mā his right, & in offring no mā wrong, violence, nor deceit, are we desirous (I say) that our Lord should take al these things in good worth, and that our doing shuld be an acceptable seruice vnto him. The let mercy be matched inseparably with them. For like as meates are vs sauery without salt: so also when we be not pitiful to relieue our neighbors, & to reach out our hand to such as seeke our succor: it is certaine that god taketh neither taft nor sauer of all the rest. Thus yefee what we haue to bear away in this text, whē Job saith, that the blis sing of him that was redy to perish, was vpon him, and that he bad bin the father of the widowe, and the defender of the fatherleſſe. And furthermore let vs mark wel, that according as we see the wants & necessities of our neighbors, so is it all one, as if he should say to vs, Behold, I shew you, that I would haue men to comunicate togither. For God could wel inough bring to passe, that every man should be contented with his owne person, & to liue alone by himselfe. But we see that ther is none of vs al which hath not need of others helpe, I speake euen of the richest & those that haue most ease. Let vs take a man that is helthful & lusty of his body, & haue store of goods and welth, so that he shall seeme to haue all things to his own liking: & yet notwithstanding, he hath need of other men. All me cannot be husbandmen, al me cannot be Clothiers, al men cannot be Tanners, & so of all other handicrafts. To be short, we see that god bindeth vs one to another by force, and that necessarie is as it were a cheyne to hold vs fast tied and knit together. And besides this, we see that our lord cōstreineth vs yet better, whē he sendeth one man sicknes, & another man pouerty, & one man this, and another that, so as the rich are no more priuileged than the pore, but we are ofteimes set in such perplexities, as we know not on which side to turn vs. I say that God bringeth the thither as they neuer thought of, euen them I say, which (to their owne seming) had the world at will. And what is the cause hereof? As I sayd afore, God perceyuing that men would set light one by another, and evry one liue to himselfe (if it were possible) draggeth vs as it were by the heare of the head, and sheweth vs that it is an ouergreat folly to desire to exempt our selues from the state wherein hee hath set all mankind. And therfore let vs marke wel, that when any of our neighbors wanteth, (according as it is said here, of the lame, of the blind, of such as were redy to perish, of the widowes, & of the fatherleſſe.) evry of vs ought to consider, go to, how ought I to behaue my self in this case? For if god haue giuen vs wherwith, he bindeth vs out of had to help such as want. And if we haue not that consideration with vs: it is a disappointing of our neighbors, & we rob the of the thing that god hath ordeined to helpe the with: & further we must yeld an accōut for keping back of that thing which god had cōmitted vnto vs to the vse & ende, that such as want it should be succored by it. So then let evry of vs consider wel the abilitie that is giue him: for we shall pay deare for Gods gifts, if they be not bestowed as they ought to be: specially, if we consider not that they be precious in gods sight, & therupon do vse the purely as he comaundeth. There is not any of gods gifts so smal which is not worthie to be had in estimation: & that is the done, whē we applie them to their right & lawful vse. Therfore when God indueth a man with any gift: it behoueth him to thinke, this is not for my selfe alone: true it is, that God will haue me to vse it with thanks giuing: but his giuing of it is also to the end, that I should haue wherwith to helpe my neighbors: and therfore I must steyne my self thervnto: and if I play the niggard in that behalfe, god eā wel shew that I am but as a steward of their goods, & that they are not mine to dispose as I list, but that the dealing of the only is committed vnto me. VVherefore let evry man consider in what wise god will haue his gifts esteemed, & let evry of vs so drinke of his owne waters (as Salomon saith) that our riuers may flow forth to our neighbors: let vs not play the gluttōs by our selues alone: Pro.5.c.15. but let vs haue such a spring as may both satisfie our selues, & also releue such as wāt. Let vs drink of the fōntain that God hath giue vs: but yet therwithal let vs so deal, as other men also may feele of it, & let vs not be like wilde beastes. Thus yefee what we haue to remember in this sentence. And furthermore let vs also marke on the other side, that if wee bee not too cruell, the verie necessities themselues ought to moue vs to succor our neighbours. And truely though wee had neither lawe written, nor the Prophetes, nor ought else: Is not nature her selfe a sufficient good mistresse too bowe vs, and too soften our heartes, when we see men in any necessitie? Beholde, one man is blinde, another lame, and the thirde lacketh the goods of the worlde, and another wanteth defence, and

Esa.58.b.7 and another hath need of counsel: in this case we see our owne flesh (as the Prophete Esay sayeth) wee cannot renounce our owne nature. Therefore when we see men which are made after our owne likenesse in necessitie: if we succor them not, are we not as ill or worse than brute beastes? So then let vs bethinke our selues: for we may perchance alledge this and that, but no ignorance can excuse vs. For although we had not one worde of teaching: yet doth very kind it self shew vs, that we are blameworthy, if we indeuer not to help such as are in extremity. And the very heathen men bear sufficient witness, that the very nature of man teacheth vs in this behalf as much as is needfull: yea & every one of vs is sufficiently conuinced by experience. For whē we see any man in aduersitie: it is certain that we haue thē an instinct & motion within vs, so as if it be possible, wee must needs run thither. But what? Every of vs stoppeth his eyes, wee turne our backe at it, and we plucke our heades out of the collar by some vain & trifling shift or other. Neuerthelesse the said inward motiō of ours shal be as a proces against vs afore God, for that we haue not indeuered to help the necessitie of our neighbors. For (as it hath bene said alreadie) we must not think that mens wanting of ayde after that sort, commeth by casual chaunce. God hath appointed it after that fashion, to the end that our charitie might be tryed, or else that we might be conuinced to haue bene to cruel. Now Job addeth, that he bad made inquisition of the case that was not knowne vnto him, because he was minded too know the truth out of hande. He speaketh here, not in his owne priuate person, but as one that had authoritie too do iustice, as we haue seene afore. And this is a poynt wel worthie to be noted of such as are in office of iustice. For here he sheweth, that they ought to be watchfull in searching out every mans right, to the end they suffer not any to be oppressed, nor yet to do any deceit or wrōg. True it is that herepon we haue also a generall doctrine to gather. But first and formost, it behoueth magistrates and men of authoritie to knowe, that the holy ghost intended here to shew them their lesson, and give them a sure rule, to the end they might faithfully discharge their dutie, if they listed to bend themselues to it: and contrariwise that they might be left without excuse, if they discharge it not. This is it that is conteyned here. Therefore let vs marke well, that it is not inough for a Judge too doo no man wrong willingly, & to pronounce sentence according to that which he seeth: but also he must be diligent in boulting out of things. It is not inough for a iudge to tarie till men haue made the way ope afore him, & pointed him to the matter with their finger: but he must haue a care too spie out things himselfe: and if the matter be darke and doubtfull, he must bend all his wits about it, to the ende to be wel informed of it. Now if such diligence be required in all Judges. I pray you what shall become of them when they shut their eyes willingly, & let things passe for fauour, or for hatred, or for bribes, so as they be caried away to spoyle one man of his goodes, and to fauor another man, & to incumber the third? VVhat & how horrible damnation shal they haue whē they deale so? Therefore let vs take good heed to this doctrine. For if a man intend to serue god faythfully, & to performe the charge that is committed vnto him, when he is called to office in the common welth: he must first understande, that hee is not set there as an Idol. And in good sooth why hath god promised to giue the spirit of discretion to kings, princes, and magistrates, but because they haue neede of it, as of a singular gift aboue others? Therefore such as are in that state, haue need to pray vnto God, so to guide thē as they may haue such wisdome and right vnderstanding to trie and discern things, as they may not in any wise deale vn-advisedly. And are they once so commended vnto God? Then the second point is, for them to be diligent to finde out the truth of things: and when a matter is vnkowne vnto thē, they must not thinke themselues discharged by saying, I knew nothing of it, for that negligence of theirs shall cost them deare before god. Therfore the iudge that intēdeth to performe his dutie, must be vigilant to know how things go, and get instruction of the truth to the vt-ermost, so much as is possible for him by any meanes to do. Hereby it is seene, that it is a fond excuse to say, I wist not of it. Yea, men will go about to enforme thē with lies which sit in Gods seat: and I pray you, if they will bee deceyued willingly, and bee contented too list the matter no further, but let the mischeef slip (as truly oftentimes they shut their eyes:) is it not a very iōnd shift? They occupie Gods roome: and is God an Idol that hath a curteyn before his eies, so as he cānot judge betwene white & blacke? But what dishonor do such Judges to their maister, whē they be wilfully ignorāt, or when they fal so aslepe, & can find in their harts that men should beguile thē? Beholde, there is a man that haile the worst case in the world, & he goeth about to blere the judges sight, as if he should cast a handfull of ashes in his eies, or set some other let in his way: and the judge is contented with it, & sayth, I see not awhit: & what a trayterousnesse is that! Gods seat ought to be holy, and men go about to defile it as much as they can. For there is not a more villanous defiling, than lyes, when men suffer thē to peruer judgement & right after that sort. Peraduēture they will say, there is a reaon. And what reason? A stark lie. Thē if Judges be double minded, that men may bend thē like Reedes that wauer with eury wind, & that the Judges like well of it, so as there is no stedfastnesse nor firmnesse in them: I pray you shall they therfore ceasse to be guiltie before God? But we shall see many, which not only are well at ease, when men beguile them, & desire no better than to haue some colour and gloze, but also become thēselues aduocates of vntruthes, & fall to foysting in of lies to ouerthrow the right. Per-chance some case shal be so throughly clere, that euē little children(if they were set there) could tel how the matter goeth according vnto truth: and yet the judges shal cast I wote not what doubtes, the case shall bee true and cleare inouge of it selfe: and one shall come and alledge I wote not what, to intangle all the matter. The Judges (I say) tary not til some Proctor or Aduocate come to bring in his lies, and lewd allegations to turken the whole case: but they themselues are readie ~~to~~ tushe it is thus and thus. The case shal be verie good & vtterly cleare and e-vident: and yet notwithstanding, they will thrust in their lies to snarle and intangle it vtterly. To be short, there is nothing to be seene but so villaynous shamelesnesse, that the very babes may iudge of it. And wil God do nothing in the meane while? VVill hee suffer men to scorne hys Maiestie after that sort, and too defile his sacred seate which he had dedicated too his owne name? No no. So then wee see that suche as are set in the seate of iustice, shall haue a terrible account to make, and that there is a dreadfull curse prepared for them, vntesse they bee vi-gilant in searching out of things, so as they iudge not at aduenture, ne verisie the Prouerbe whiche sayeth, a foolish iudge giueth a hasty sentence, but doo their indeuer too learne howe things go, so as they maye al-wayes protest before God, and also shewe by theyr deedes afore men, that there was no lette in themselues, that they were not fully ensoumed, and that the truth of matters was not knowne vntoo them.

Nowe if this negligence be punished so roughly, and

Kk.ij. that that such as haue drawne the curteines before them, can not scape the hande of God, what shall become of those which through an euil conscience corrupted with bribes, and forepossessed with parcialitie or hatred, fail to flinging after that sort like wild beastes, and ouerthrowe all as much as in them lieth, insomuch as men know not where they are; & when they flie to iustice for refuge, they are there in as good plight as among a sort of theeuues. And I pray you when they be come to that point, how shall they appeare before god, although he wincke at the for a time? Now then we see, that there is not a harder thing, than to minister iustice, seeing that god requireth such watchfulnes in it. And therewithall let vs mark also, that euery man particularly (so much as in him lieth) ought to make inquiry of good & euil, to the end we grieve not our neighbors. For although we be no iudges to prouounce publike sentence: yet notwithstanding we oftentimes do our neighbors wrong by judging amisse of the, & we may do them harme many wayes for want of true information. Therefore let vs set our minds throughly to try & serch out the truth, that we be not deceipted with lying, and thereby do wrong to any man. Furthermore, when Job hath treated of the wisdom & carefulnes which ought to be in men of authoritie: he addeth one other vertue, which is as requisite in the, that is to say, vncorruptnesse of cōscience, so as they set theselues against all wrongs & violence, & suffer not any outrage to be done to any man, without redressing it as much as in them lieth. And that is the cause why Job protesteth, that he brake the chaynes of the wicked, and plucked the pray frō betwene his teeth. But this cannot be done vnto lesse the Judges and Magistrates haue such a stoutnesse in the, as they cannot abide any euil without resisting it. And this vertue is also a speciaill gift of god. For although a man be of stout courage: yet notwithstanding whē he seeth men fal into many inconueniences, by purchasing folks displeasure: it plucketh him backe, & cooleth him. True it is that there are many examples to be found, yea euē among the Paynims, and those which never knewe God, that they bowed not for any cause, but mainteyned the right, and gave their hand and succour, to such as were wrongfully oppressed. A man may wel see many examples of this. But God worketh after that manner in that behalfe, to the end to take away all excuse frō the, which pretend his name, when they haue swarued or dissembled and suffred good men to be oppressed and wronged, and the wolvess to devour the shepe. Yet notwithstanding (as I saide afore) this vertue of invincible stoutnesse or cōstancie, is the speciaill gift of God. And so they which are set in the seate of iustice, after they haue desired God to giue them wisdome to judge rightly, and indeuoured theselues to the vttermost to discharge their dutie, and to retch their hande to such as are troden vnder foot, ought to set theselues as sheldes agaynst such as woulde take away other mens goods by force, and set their feet vpō poore mens throtes: judges ought to applie theselues to this. True it is, that when men see wicked folke haue the bridle lie looce in their neck, and no body resisteth them, they wil say what can I do to it? I cannot redresse it: but such excuses are to no purpose before God. I see (will some men say) that no man beareth me companie, al drag behind in that behalfe, if I would do my dutie, they that should ioyne with me will leau me there: if a lewd fellow or twain do but gree at me, I quake for feare, and I wote not what to do, and so it is not my fault, I woulde faine it were remedied, but I cannot do it alone. These reasons may wel carry some colour before men: but needs must they fal to the ground before God. For (as I haue declared) here the holy ghost giueth a common lesson too all such as haue that charge committed vntoo them: which lesson is, that they must shewe theselues flat enemies to the wicked: and when they see them so like madde beastes, and that their teeth be sharpened to eate vp one, and too byte another: they must barre them of their doings, and step before them, employing against them the credite and authoritie which God hath giuen them. For it is no small saying when it is said here, I haue broken the Chaynes of the wicked, and plucked the pray out of their teeth. But now let vs mark, that when God ordeyneth magistrates, that is to say, when he calleth me to the office of iustice, and armeth the with his sword, in so doing he bindeth them to mainteine the good & the innocent, and to take vpon them the defence of right, & also to set theselues against al wrongs, misdealings, and violences. Now if a Judge say, I know not who had right or wrong: who was to blame for it? For first of all God will never faile to giue wisdome to such as aske it: and again, he wil also blisse their labor, which trauel faithfully to seke out the right. But what Judges are so farre off frō making inquisition for such as are oppressed: that if men do so complaine vnto them, that the ayre shall ring of it, yet notwithstanding in the meane while the cares of such as ought to set to their hands to remedie it, are deafē? If a man haue paciently put vp a wrong, & the Judge be made priuie to the case, he is not to be excused, he cannot say, he came not to complaine to me: no, but the fault was committed before thine eies, and it was thine office to redresse it, but thou hast made no account of it, and thinkest thou to escape cleere before God? But yee shall see poore folke complaine, and come shew their right, & yet can haue no redresse. And cōtrariwise, where no euil hath bin done, there the sword must be drawne, and the matter must be hādled with vehemēcie as if he were mad. Some man wil say, it is but the zeale of iustice. It is much to the purpose: no it is to vilanous a shamelesnesse wherin there is neither rime nor reason, whē they suffer a poore man to be troubled, & in the meane while deale with al the rigor that may be in a matter of nothing. If a poore man that is wronged do complaine and lay forth his right, tushē it is nothing, come againe a seuennight hence: and then hee shall be delayed so long, that he shall be tired. If a plaine man haue not rents and reuenues to liue vpon, if he haue not men at his beck to solicite his matter, if he be a handicrafts man: hee must sterue for hunger, if hee will recouer right in a matter that is never so evident. He hath wrong done him, the worlde seeth it, the matter is apparantly knowne, and yet in the ende will hee haue right? then must he haue a full purse, he must shet vp his shop, and he must make his account to be idle halfe the yeare. And when he hath folowed his matter a good while: yet shall he be but laughed to scorne. VVē see this disorder at this day: and therefore how can they make their account afore God which are placed in the holy seate of iustice? True it is, that they will cleare theselues before men, but yet shall not this doctrine be disanulled for them. And so (as I sayde) it were a very ofward thing to be inquisitiue, sith we see, that when things are brought to light, there is no zeale to succor those that are so misused & oppressed, yea and it is also sene, that the wicked becom the bolder, euen by reason of the libertie that is giuen them whē they shall haue comitted any euil & scape vnpunished: it is all one as if libertie & priuilege were giuen them to do harm to all men. VVē then, they vse it, and abuse it, and therupon proceed further and further: and in the meane while the Judge can stil say, indeed such an euil was committed: yea and there happened a seconde, a thirde, and a fourth, insomuch that at length al is out of order, and yet in the meane while, where is the redresse? VVill not God

God haue his seat to be honored? And how can that be, except there bee the sayde vertue of stoutnesse and constancie to represso the euill? Therefore if there bee such libertie, as the wicked sort may play the Lions, Beares, & other wood beastes: let such as be in the authoritie of God remember with themselues, I ought to serue my maister, and how shall I discharge my selfe? If I do my dutie, then shall I haue him on my side, and I shall be vphilde by his hande. Ye see then wherevpon a iudge ought to thinke, and then shall he haue a Lions heart too set himselfe against the woode beastes, and to plucke the pray out of their teeth, and too breake their Chawes. And in good faith let vs mark, that these maner of speeches are not superfluous: for in effect, Job (or rather the holy Ghost by his mouth) met to declare, that such as will execute justice duly, shal never bring it to passe, except they vse the sword which God hath put in their hand to breake the chawes of the wicked: that is to say, except they vse sharpnesse & rigor. For if a iudge be effeminate, and that whē it commeth too the punishing of offenders, he fall too saying, I wote not where I am, I wote not what to say, and so bee destitute of stoutenesse too redresse matters that are out of order: it is certaine that hee shall never performe his dutie. Therefore whereas here is mention made of the breaking of wicked mens teeth: let vs vnderstande that our Lorde warneth those to whome hee hath giuen hys sworde, to vse it stoulty agaynst the wicked, which commonly are ouerhardie: and that like as they are brute beastes, so the Iusticers also muste haue a stedfast, and stoute heart to represso all their violence and rage. Thus 30 ye see what we haue too marke in this streyne. Nowe for a conclusion let vs marke this sentence whiche Job setteth downe: which is, that hee had clothed himselfe wyth his rightuousnesse, and that hee had made Justice (that is too say vprightnesse) as his Robe or Crowne: that is to say that he was decked with vertue, and not with brauerie, as those be whome God hath aduaunced to some credite, who beare themselues in hande, that the worlde is not worthie too looke them in the face: they play the Peacockes, and spread their wings abroade. Ye see then the 40 decking of those which at this day are in authoritie and state of Justice: for there is nothing to be scene but pride, there is nothing but pompe and brauerie, and yet they thinke themselues not to bee mortall men. But contrariwise it is sayde heere, that the man whiche regardeth God, and indeuerereth too execute his duetic faythfully, taketh rightuousnesse for his Robe, and vpright dealing for his Cloake or apparell. I pray you if it were but for honestie sake, woulde a man suffer his coate and cloake too bee plucked from hym, and himselfe too bee sent too picke pagles, as the prouerbe saith? If it were neyther whote nor colde, woulde he not keepe his cloathes still, to the intent he might honestly keepe company among men? But if a man bee stripped, and chaunce to bee in the rayne and winde, so as hee is left readie too starue for colde, or too swelt for heate, and his coate is pluckt in peeces: will it not greeue him at the hart? And yet notwithstanding, rightuousnesse and vpright dealing are our verie cloathes, and coates wherewith we bee apparyled. And if a man haue behaued himselfe faythfully in dooing his duetic: God mainteyneth him, and he is fenced by protection from aboue, hee shall bee in Gods fauour, althoough no man made him good countenance among men. Yee see then in what sort wee ought to be cloathed and apparelled before God and his Angels: namely by keeping the said rightuousnesse and vpright dealing, so as wee haue not beeene spoyled and destitute of it. Then although that diuers tynes either by flatterie, or by briberie, or by threatening, or by hatred, or by some other temptations, men labour too get away this clothing and apparell of rightuousnesse, and vpright dealing from vs: let vs take good heede that we bee not spoyled of it, except wee will haue our shame and dishonestie shewed openly before God and his Angelles. Furthermore, as touching the worlde, and this present life, let vs bee well ware, that wee lay not our selues open to the colde or heate: that is too saye, that God suffer vs not to fall into manie wantes, and therewithall sende vs no succour. And why? For when wee haue beeene so cowardely or slouthfull, too suffer our selues to be spoyled of oure cloathes: It is good reason that wee shoulde smart for it afterwarde. I had a cloake to couer me, and keepe mee from the raine: and I haue let it go at aduenture. Nowe, am I not woorthie to be wette too the skinne, seeing I hilde scorne to cast my cloake aboue mee. Beholde, God declareth vnto vs, that to the intent wee shoulde bee well clad, hee himselfe hath cloathed vs with his owne rightuousnesse. And wee cast away that rightuousnesse as a thing of no value: we make no account of the sayd vpright dealing and equitie which he commendeth so greatly vntoo vs: But wee cast it away as it were into the winde. Seeing then, that wee vn-clothe our selues after that sort; I pray you, deserue wee not that our Lorde shoulde giue vs vp to all shame, to be mocked and scorned, and therewithall to bee left viterly destitute of all things, and finally too haue no ayde nor succour, neyther of God nor man? Lo what wee haue to marke in this text. But truely we can neuer discharge our selues throughly of that duetic: I meane not onely the Magistrates whiche haue so highe and harde a charge, but also them which haue no more to gouern but them-selues, and theyr housholdes: It is vnpossible that they shoulde haue suche perfection, as to bee garnished with rightuousnesse and vpright dealing in all poyncts. VVhat haue wee then to doo? VVee muste then resort to oure Lorde Iesus Christ for twoo causes. For first wee finde not in our selues the things that are conteyned heere: we bee slowe vnto goodnessse, and swift vntoo euill: there is neyther wisedome, nor discretion in vs: and therfore it behoueth vs too drawe it out of Iesus Christ, to whom the spirite of wisedome and strength is giuen, as it is sayde in the eleuenth Chapter of the Prophete Esay. Esay.11.2. Then if we be clothed with the rightuousnesse of oure Lorde Iesus Christ, and with the vprightnesse and wisedome which he will giue vs by his holy spirit: then shall wee bee garnished and decked conueniently to appeare before God. But forasmuch as in this present life, there will alwayes bee some imperfection in vs, and somewhat will alwayes haue amiss. Our Lorde Iesus Christ must of his meere grace couer all our faultes, so as they may bee pardoned for his sake, and hee supplie our wantes, and therewithall continually increase the giftes of his holie spirite in vs more and more, and guide vs by the power of the same, vntill hee haue cleare ridde vs from all the infirmities and corruptions of our flesh, and that wee bee come to the marke wherenvnto we be going.

Nowe let vs fall downe before the face of our good God, with acknowledgement of our faultes, praying him too make vs so too feele them, that beeing viterly dismayde in in our selues, we may make our recourse vnto him, trusting that the same shall not be in vaine, because he is willing and readie to helpe all them that seeke him. And so let vs all say, Almighty God our heauenly father, wee acknowledge and confess according too the truth, that we be not worthie to lift vp our eyes to heauen, too present our selues before thee, &c.

The. Cviij. Sermon, which is the fourth vpon the. xxix. Chapter.

- * Some read 18. I sayd, I shall die in my nest, and I shall multiplie my dayes as the sande, as the P<sup>ke</sup> 19. My roote is spred out to the vwater, and the deavy shall lie vpon my haruest, and it shall bee vix. verie great.

23. They vwayted for it as for the deavve, and they opened their mouthe as after a desyred raine.
24. If I laughed vwith them they beleueed me not, neyther suffered they the light of my countenance to fall.
25. VVhen I came in vway, I had the cheeze rooine, I vvas among them as a king vwith his armie, and as a comforter of them that mourned.

Ob hauing spoken of the authori-tie that hee had purchased by his vertues, and by the giftes of grace that god had put in him, doth now adde that it seemed that his state should never haue chaunged. And therin he sheweth that he was not like those which reigne ouer men whether they will or no, and are always in doubt and vncertaintie: according as we see that such as attaine too horiour and authori-tie wrongfully, may well beare great sway, and make all the worlde too quake vnder them, but assoone as the winde turneth, the least chaunge in the worlde over-throweth them. VVhy so? For as they be feared, so are they hated, and such as crouch and creepe to them, wishe with all their harts to see the ouerthrowne, & to be short, they haue no foundation at all. But Iob sheweth that hee had not a fletting credit, that should continue but for two or three dayes: but that it was so well grounded, as a man mighthaue sayde, that his state should never haue beeene chaunged it was so wel vnderpropred on all sides. Lo what his meening was. Yet notwithstanding, God smote him in such wise, as hee became the miserablest creature in the world. Therefore it is no maruell though he were in such anguish as he could no more: for he fel into an aduersitie that he never looked for. And that is the cause why he o-uershootes himself oftentymes in his talke: and although he haue alwayes an eie vnto God, yet is he excessiue, and that to too much. This therefore must not bee thought straunge, considering that the miserie which he indured was incomprehensible, and such a one as men had never thought on afore. But this must serue for our learning, that we may alwayes stand vpon our gard. If God send vs any prosperitie, let vs not be too sleepe, but let vs consider that this mortall life is subiect to all the chaunges that we can devise, yea truely notwithstanding all the propes that we can haue. And although the whole world seeme to fauour vs, & that we haue a hundred thousand shoulders to beare vs vp: yet must we neverthelesse think, that there is no settlednesse here bilow, but that all things are transitorie, so as all things are chaunged in the turning of a hand, and those that were lifted highest vp, are cast lowest downe. Beholde (I say) the lesson that we haue to gather of this text. And it is a verie needfull doctrine for vs. For there is nothing easier with a man, than to make himselfe beleue, that he shall alwayes continue in hap-pie state, when hee is once in it. VVee see what Dauid Psal. 30. 4.7 himselfe confesseth, VVhen I was in my prosperitie (sayeth hee) I sayde I shall never bee remoued. True it is, Psal. 10. 6.6 that in the tenth Psalme, he putteth it ouer to the dispizers of God. For in speaking of their prosperitie, he sayeth, that they beare themselues in hande, that althoughe the whole world should be turned vpside downe, yet are they so exceedingly well fenced, that they shall continue safe still. Ye see then, that the worldlings and vnbelieuers presume vpon their owne power, and take themselues to be so well armed on all sides, as nothing may hurt themē, according also as all the holy Scripture speaketh of that pride of theirs. But Dauid in his own person (in the fore-alleged text of the thirteenth Psalme) sayeth that he fel a-sleepē since the time that God had settled him in the kingdome, and made him too prosper, and giuen him the vpper hand of all his enemies: and that therupon he made his reckning, never to remoue from that state. But (sayth he) Lord thou hast well taught me by experience, that the only fauor of thy good will aduaunced me after that maner. For as soone as I fel thy hand, beholde I was in such plight, that I was vterly at my wits end. Dauid the sheweth, that euē the children of god, although they be not puffed vp with pride that is in the vnbelieuers, do set themselues in their good fortune as they terme it, and are notwithstanding not able to stay frō promising theselues more than is needfull. For they imagine that their good days shal last for euer, & that their prosperitie shal never fail. Sith we are inclined to such vice, insomuch that evē Dauid was not altogether clere of it, what haue we els to do but to take heed to our selues? And in what sort? Da-uid in marking this vice, doth also shewe the remedie of it, when he sayth, Lorde the surenesse and safetie both of me, and of my kingdome, are grounded vpon thine one-ly goodnesse. If wee acknowledge that all our welfare dependeth vpon Gods good pleasure: we shal conclude, that there is no certaintie nor certeintesse in our selues.

So then let vs call vpon God, and wayte at his hande for whatſoever ſhall please him to ſende vs. And although wee hope that hee will continue his goodnesse towardes vs: yet notwithstanding let vs not ceaſe too prepare our selues whensoeuer it ſhall please him to meeken vs, and too exercise our pacience by aduersitie: but let vs alwayes be in a readinesse for it, and not thinke it ſtraunge when it commeth. Furthermore let vs marke well howe Dauid ſayth, that he was troubled. And why? For it is alone, as if he ſhould come vpon a man that is fast aſleepē.
VVill not we then be in like trouble when the hande of God striketh vs? Let vs diſpoſe our selues to it aforehad, and let vs preuent all the changes that are to be ſene with the eye, and which God ſheweth vs to the end that every of vs ſhould kepe good watch. Thus ye ſee, why I ſay that the doctrine which is contained here, is very neceſſary for vs: which is, that we muſt not think to dy in our nest after the maner of the ſimilitude which Iob vſeth here: but muſt be as birds vpō a bough to remoue at gods pleaſure that when

when we are enriched, we may be impouerished if he list: and when we haue bene in great honor and estimation, we may come to such reproch and shame, as in maner all the whole world may mock vs, if it be his pleasure: and that we may take all in good worth, and (as I sayd) be in a readinesse before hande, to the ende we be not troubled when our Lord shall visit vs in that maner. And we haue speciall neede to bee warned hereof, because the state of Chritians is to be chaungeable. For S. Paule sayth that both himselfe and his fellowes were without rest. He vsseth that word, not that we ought not to be constant. For it behoueth vs too determine with our selues, never too swarue. But as touching the outward and visible state too the worldward, we mult be faine to be fleeting, and without any rest. So then, seeing that god hath called vs therunto. Let every one of vs take heed that he make not his reckening without his host, ne beare himself in hand that he shall continue, alwayes in one state. And why? For he warranteth himself that which he cannot performe. Behold here two things which we haue to marke. The one is, that what prosperitie soeuer we haue, the same is no certayne and abiding state. And why? For so is the good pleasure of God: like as if a Prince shoulde giue a man the possession of some Lordeship, not in feesimple, but to holde of him as Tenant at will. He hath it but from day to day, and the Prince may reuoke his graunt when it pleaseth him. In like case is it with all the things that God giueth vs in this worlde. For the condition of them is not that we should inioy them both in life and death, but onely when it pleaseth him, according also as hee knoweth what is expediet for vs. Lo here the first point. The seconde poynt is, that we must consider it to be the good will of our God, to remoue vs from time to time, so long as we be in this world. And why? For if he should suffer vs to settle long, surely we would as it were gather rust, and drawe much superfluous baggage to vs. God therefore remoueth vs, that is too saye, hee chaungeth our state, he afflicteth vs, hee maketh vs poore, and after he hath lifted vs vp, hee casteth vs downe: and all is too the ende we shoulde not bee snarled in the goods of this worlde, nor become so folish, as not to keepe on our way continually to the heauenly life. Thus ye see what we haue to beare away in this text. Furthermore, let every of vs inre himselfe too consider the turnings that wee see in this world. For our Lorde sheweth vs them, to the intent wee shoulde fare the better by them. And specially if wee see any thing that was never mistrusted nor looked for afore: as if some man were aduaunced to great credit, and nothing went against him, but he had both wind and weather at will (as they say) so as hee shall haue gathered great riches, and gotten great freends, & haue alied himselfe well, and gotten infinit stayes: if we see such a one fall, because God layeth his hand vpon him to beate him downe: let vs bethink our selues, that it behoueth vs then to wake, and that God declareth vnto vs, that there is nothing certayne in this world, to the ende we should come hide our selues vnder his wings, and also dispose our selues to aduersitie, whensoeuer it shal please him to send it. And if we happen to fall: let vs not be too much astonied and dismayde, because we haue minded it a long time before hande. Verely sometimes God maketh alterations, not onely vpon men, but also vpon Cities, Countries, and Kingdomes. VVhen any of these great Courtiers that were had in such reputation, as men thought them to be aduaunced aboue the Clowdes, are seene to come to decay: that is a chaunge right great and wonderfull. But if you see a Citie, a Shire, yea or a Realm ouerthrowne (as I sayde afore) where a man would haue thought there had beene so much helpe as it had beene vnpossible too haue come vnto it: I say if we see all this ouerthrowne: let vs vnderstand, that our Lorde setteth that looking glasse before our eies, to the end that euery of vs should think the better vpon his own frailtie, & not fall asleepe in any presumption orvaine trust. Thus ye see howe wee ought to profit our selues by this text, & by the experience which our Lord giueth vs of it al our life long. But Job vsseth the mo similitudes to expresse that which he had sayd, that is to say, that the dew shall lie alwayes vpon his barkest, or vpō his brāches: (for the Hebrew word importeth both twain, & all cōmeth to one end.) And again, that his dayes shall be multiplied as the sand. As if he should say, without nūber. And again, that his glorie shall be renued, and that his bone shall not be beaten downe. True it is, that some men vnderstand these sayings to concerne the hope of the resurrection: but men may see by the whole proces of the matter, that Job treateth of the state of this present life. Therfore wee must not clime so hie, nor seeke so curious a gloze: but content our selues with the naturall sense whiche I haue set down alredy: which is, that Job meneth here to say, that his state was well setled, so as men thought not that euer they should haue seene it fall into so miserable a plight as it was then. And (as I said) that is a circumstance to make many men to woonder. For when we see such changes: we fall to reasoning with our selues, how happeneth it that God thundreth vpon so hie mōtaynes, and smiteth so great heades? Is it possible? we cōsider not that God intendeth to vtter his power in that case, to the end that men should not trust so much to theselues, but learne to referre theselues wholy vnto him, & to rest altogether vpō his goodnessse, & not to promise theselues any thing after their own imaginatiō. So much the more the behoueuch it vs to marke wel this circumstance, that Iobs awauncement was not only for a day, two, or thre, or for som short time: but that he seemed to be viterly exempted from all dangers, & to be no more in peril of any misfortune: and yet notwithstanding, that god smote so roughly vpō him with his hand, as he was vtterly defaced. VVherefore let vs understand, that god ment to giue vs a notable lokkingglas here, to the end we should alwayes kepe good watch: and whē we haue calid vpō god, if it please him to send vs any affliction, we might receiuie it paciētly, inasmuch as we had after that sort forsene it. And surely whatsoeuer vertu: there be in vs, the same must not stir vs vp the more, when there hapneth any change: but we must vnderstand that according as our Lorde hath giuen vs of his gratiouse gifts, & specially after as he shall haue gouerned vs by his holy spirit, to rife them well, and as it becommeth vs: the same must serue to stablish vs in p̄sidentnes, notwithstanding that we be weakened, yea & viterly beaten downe in our bodies. Then let vs assure ourselues, that God will come to vtter the strength of his spirit in susteining vs, to the end we may fight agaynst such temptations, and that the victorie which we shal haue gotten, may be so much the more glorious, because his goodnessse hath beene the more increased towards vs. Lo here what wee haue too maake. And now Job goeth on with his matter which he had delt in before: which is the great authoritie that hee had gottē, not through vain reputatiō, but by his wisdom and grauitie, & because he had so gouerned himselfe, that euerie man reuerenced him. Therfore he sayth exprefly, that all men berkned to him, yes and that they berkned in such sort as they wylted for his wordes, and euery man gaped, as a man that is athirst, or as we see how the earth when it is very dry doth crany, as if so be it desired rain to drink. Job the declareth, that he himself was such a one: that is to wit, that he was as the rain & the dew, & that al such as herd hi, were as it were altered at his wordes, and hung vpon his talke as vpon an vnreouable iudgement. And this is declared vnto vs purposely, to the ende we shoulde knowe first what a man Job was, whome we see so sore smitten by Gods hand. Therfore let vs not complaine & grudge against God, nor accuse him of crueltie, whē he afflieth vs. For we see what Job gayned by it : namely that he abode vanquished and confounded when he went about to striue against the chastisements that God sent him, and yet neuerthelesse, ye see what holinesse of life , and what perfection was in him. Therefore let vs learne that God is alwayes iust in afflicting vs , and that if we compare our selues with Job, we shal find our selues to be far short of the perfection that was in him, and yet was he beaten more sharply than we be. So then we haue none other shift, but to receiuē Gods stripes with a lowlinesse & pacience. Mark that for one poynt. And herewithal we see in Iobs perso, what reuerēce we ought to beare to such as God sendeth to teach vs faithfully. It is sayd that men hearkened to him with longing: wherin he sheweth that me ought to haue a desire to profit in knowledge, & that seeing nature prouoketh them to desire to eate & drinke for the nourishment of their bodies: they must not dispise the food of their soules, which is the knowledge and lerning of goodnesse, wherby they differ from brute beasts.

VVhen we know a thing to be good to mainteine vs: we need neither maister nor teacher to teach vs to couet it: neither need we any prouocation to it, or any body to put vs in mind of it. Euy man(as I sayd) can skill to couet to eate and drink, every man can desire to be clothed. VVhy so? For we know that those things concerne our life. But now, is not our soule the excellentest part of vs? And how ought that to be interteyned? Not with eating and drinking: But there is a thing agreeable too the nature of it, which is to haue reason & vnderstanding, that our life be not brutish, but that we may shewe our selues to be creatures formed after the Image of God. So then, in this verse it is shewed vs, that if we bee not to blockish (or at leastwise if we haue any reason at al in vs) we ought continually to devise how we may profit, by knowing to what end man is borne in this worlde: namely to be more and more stablished in the knowledgē of God, after we haue once receyued it. But we see many so retchlesse, as they passe not to haire any thing: & we see othersom that can not be satisfied with despising the doctrine , but they also hate it & vterly absent themselves from it,asmuch as they can. And do such folk deserve to be counted men? No: for the thing wherein we differ from brute beasts, is that we haue some reason and vnderstanding. Howbeit although God hath put some ſcale of vnderstanding in vs, to diſcerne betwene good & evil: yet notwithstanding there is ſuch groſnes & infirmitie in our wits, as we haue need of furtherances. Yea & though we had al the furtheſſe that could be wiſhed: yet is it apparent, that there is ſtil default in vs. For what is the cauſe that we reiect al the benefits that god offreth vs, but because we be worse than beaſts? So then we muſt nedes concluſe, that if a man knewe the end of his creation, and why he liueth in this worlde: he would always be moued to profit in knowledge, as to ſet his mind therupon, & he would neuer refuſe the meaneſſe whē they were offred, but would think with himſelf, beholde, god intendeth to teach me, & therfore it behoueth me to yeeld my ſelf willing to lerne, & to giue eare to his doctrine which he ſetteth afore me, as which is good & available for my ſaluation. Lo what deſire ought to be in vs. But now let vs loke vpō our owne retchlesneſſe: For God is ſo gracious vnto vs, as to giue vs his word, and not only ſendeth vs ſome man that hath a good wit & vnderſtanding: but also is willing to do the dutie of a maister himſelfe. And although he come not downe from heauen in his own visible person: yet haue we his law, his Prophets, & his gospell, which giue vs infallible assurance & record that it is he which ſpeaketh there. Then ſeeing that God openeth his holy mouth to teach vs, although he vſe mortal men as his instruments: I pray you are not we too vntankfull, if we vouchſafe not to profit in his ſchoole. And yet neuertheleſſe, we ſee howe wee fare in that behalfe.

VVherefore it behoueth vs to remember well the lesson that is ſhewed here, in respect that God vþbraydeth vs, according also as Ieſus Christ hath done the Jewes and hypocrites, ſaying, you can ſkill to diſcern the ſeasons, Mat.16.4.3. you can tel when the Sun wil cheere the earth, you know Lu.12.9.55 when the weather will be cleare and fayre, ſo as you may go about your buſineſſe. And why diſcern we not that which belongeth to our ſoules? Because we are too much wedded to this preſent life. There is none of vs but he wiſheth for raine whē he knoweth it to be needfull, ſaying:

O, now it were good for the earth to be watered. Again, if we haue need of heat, or of faire weather, or of any thing else: we can ſo good ſkill to forecaſt the things that concerne the commodities of this temporal life, as there is no lacke at all in vs in that behalfe. But behold, God ſendeth vs his worde, and we know not the due time of his viſitation, to enter when the gate is opened vs: he calleth vs on all ſides, and we take ſcorne to come in. Furthermore let vs marke well, that this ſimilitude is not ſet downe without cauſe, where Job ſayth, That his wordes were wiſhed & wayted for, as the raine or deaw. And Moyses alſo vſeth the ſame in his ſong: ye heauens (ſaiſh he) let my words drop Deu.22.4.2. as the deaw, or the raine in their ſeafon. Now for the vnderſtāding hereof, we muſt not only conſider the rain in it ſelf, but also marke the vſe and profit that it bringeth vs. Rain in ſome reſpeſt may be hurtfull, as vnto the that are wet to the hard ſkin, when they go abrode in the feedls: and to al other men alſo, when it keþeth them within the doores. But yet for all that, a ſeafonable raine bringeth vs ſuſtenance by moysting the earth which coulde yeeld no frute without it. Thus ye ſee why raine is to bee desired. And ſo let vs vnderſtande, that we on our part are much more barren than the earth. For prooſe hereof wee can bring forth nothing but ſhrewd weedes. True it is that in reſpeſt of euil we be too frutefull: but in reſpeſt of good, we cannot bring forth ſo much as one graine of corne, or one braue che of good hearbe, and much leſſe can wee bring forth any one good nouriſhing frute wherwith to feede our ſelues, or ſhoot forth one blade of good corne, vnu l God haue chaunged our naſure. But hath God put good into vs? He muſt alſo be faine to water it, or elſe it will be either choked with briars, or elſe grow wilde. Our Lord then muſt worke in that behalfe. And beholde the meane that he intendeth to keepe, is that he ſendeth vs his worde as raine, to the ende that being ſo moystned, we may ſee what his working and cheerefulneſſe is, and that the good roote which he hath planted in vs, may not periſhe, but increase more and more, and bud and bring foorth good frute. Furthermore let vs take heede we become not like ſtones and blockes, when God rayneth ſo vpon vs. The raine doth the earth good, when it is well tilled, but will it do any good to a rock? No, none at al, the raine is but lost vpon it. Euen ſo is it with men. If we bee well tilled, and minded too yeeld vnder the obeſtience of our God, when he maketh his worde to raine vpon vs. Certeinly it will enter into oure hear̄es, and wee shall feele the woorking of it, ſo as wee shall bee the more diſpoſed vnto goodneſſe, and our good workes ſhall ſhewe that wee haue not beeene watered in vaine,

and that Gods mynd was not that his graces should be loste vs. But yf wee contynue alwayes in oure cursed nature, as many men do which are wilfull and froward: then shall we be like rocks, hee will raine vpon vs, but what for that? VVe shall haue no disposition to receiue the raine, and that will cost vs right deere. Therefore let vs vnderstand, that it is a raine of Gods sending, when he will haue his word preached vnto vs. And that if when it streameth downe vpon vs, we make it to vanish in the aire, and suffer it not to light vpō the ground, we may be sure that such vnthāksulnesse shall not scape vnpunished. Thus ye see to what end it behoueth vs to applye the similitude that Job vseth heere, when he saith that his wordes were waited for, and longed for as the rayne and dew. That is to wit, wee must assure ourselues, that the good doctrine which God sendeth vnto vs for oure welfare, commeth to vs from heauen, and that although we heare it at a mortall mas hand, yet notwithstanding it is of Gods sending. Ye see then how Gods desire is too water vs. To o what intente? To make vs receiue good seede out of hand, and to bring foorth good frute according as it is added heere. For Job not only saith that hys words were longed and waited for: But also that men receiued them immediatly with great and earnest good will, and also that there was no more replying to the contrarie. Then if it please God to teach vs, and (for the doing thereof) to raise vp meete mē indued with the grace of his holy spirit, vnder whome we may profite. Let vs giue eare to them with all reuerence, and yeld too their good doctrine without any constraint. True it is that we ought to examine spirits, and that we must not at all aduenture receiue all doctrines that are set afore vs, vntill we be sure that they are of God. But when we knowe that it is God that speaketh, that is to say, when we are sure that we be taught in his name, and as it were by his mouth: then is there no replying, but wee must doo him the honoure to settle ourselues fully vpon his word, so as we may yeld ourselues obedient vnto it, and it may haue full course and authoritie among vs. True it is that many can finde in their harts to suffer God too speake without kicking against him, so as they know the things to be good which are preached vnto the: but yet do they striue agaist him in their life. And that is the thyng wherein our Lord intendeth to try whether we be his or no. Haue we heard Gods word? VVe must not reply against it, but we must glorify God, assuring ourselues that there is nothing better for vs than to obey hym. Haue we once acknowledged that: Let euery of vs (whē we be retourned into our houses) shew by oure deedes that we haue borne away the doctrine, and do allow it as good. For he that doth contrarie to that which he confesseth, is double condemnnable. And surely as there bee folke that do much worse in secret than if their wickednesse were opened to the world: So also, their replying against God, extendeth not only to the mouth, but also to the life. Therefore when folke liue not as they are taught by the Gospell: their works replie sufficiently against God. VVhen any man troubleth his neigbour, so as he riseth vp openly against him and doth him any violence, it is certaine that suche outrage shall not bee borne withall but shall be punished at Gods hand, howe long soever he tarrie. And although our going about to annoy our neighbors, be by suttletie and as it wer by vndermining, so as our slightes be cheefly conueyed and couered, and we cannot be reprooved of men, neither can any man (to our seeming) find fault with vs: yet notwithstanding, the cry mounteth vp to Heauen, and craueth yengeance at Gods hand for the extortio[n] that we haue so committed in secret. VVherefore let vs marke well, that although we haue yelded such reuerence vnto gods word, as to heare it as good and holy doctrine, and to receiue it as the very foode of our soules, and as the meane too bring vs too the euerlasting life and the saiuacion which we pretend to desire: yet it behoueth every one of vs to take good heede to himselfe, that he replie not against it by his life. And now let vs consider a little, if a man may euer find this vertue in the world. Behold Job speaketh in suche a time as Gods doctrine was yet very darke: for it is not well knowne whither hee liued after the law of Moyses, or before: howbeit it is certaine, that he was auncienter than the Prophets. For when hee is spoken of in the Prophets, he is spoken of as a man that had bin of auncient time. Now seeing it is so, I pray you ought not the world at this day to be more giuen to receiue Gods doctrine, than at that time? For (as I haue said) the doctrine of God was very darke in those days, and God sent it but as it were drop by drop, euē as whē there falleth a small dew i[n] the night. To be short, men are taught it but slightly in comparison of the abundance of grace whiche God sendeth into the worlde in these days. For in the Gospell we haue infinite treasures of wisedome and knowledge, God sheweth himselfe familiarly vnto vs, he will haue vs to be filled, and throughly filled with all perfection of his doctrine, and he giueth so cleere and certain vnderstanding as can be possible. And yet for all this, where is the reuerence that Job speaketh of? where is the desire? where is the amiable obedience? Nay contrariwise wee see skornefulnessse as I haue touched already. Again, when the doctrine is preached, how many are there that giue a[ttent]ive care vnto it? Nay the most part are busied about their owne fancies and earthly cares, where they haue I wote not what matters with-in them, that shut God out of dores, so that they play the resty iades in kicking against the doctrine. Their coming to Sermons is but for fashion sake, and they retourne home from them as wise as they went thither. So then there are very few folke in whom the reuerence is to be found that is spoken of here. And as for cōforming themselues fully vnto it, that is a very rare vertue. For every man wil be wise and cunning, and after what sort? In not obeying God, and in not cōning to the knowledge of the holy scripture: nay mary say they, I thinke thus, and thus it seemeth to me: And men are not ashamed to alledge their weenings before God: and it is the cheefe articles of the saythe of the Papistes at this daye, that in their opinion God ought no set greate store by them for this theyr ouerdiu[i]sh pride, in that they woulde haue all men to holde themselues to al their deuises. And they that blasphem[e] not so openly with their mouthes, are neuerthelesse seene bytheir deedes, that they rebell against God. For wee see howe God dothe nowe adayes set out the whole perfectio[n] of wisedome in the Gospell, & cōmeth so familiarly vnto vs, desiring to fill vs to the full. And yet notwithstanding wee finde no tast in his worde, but vtterly despise it, and when it is declared vnto vs, wee go about to resist it, or at leastwise to deface it by our doings. Seeing then that wee are so maliciose, shall not they that heare Job, beare witnessse against vs? Shall they not vpbraid vs with the obedience whiche they yelded vnto Job, who in deede was a Prophet of God, but yet had no such record of his calling, as our Lord Iesus Christ hath giuen to those that preach his gospel in these dayes? And therefore let vs marke well this text. For like as it is said that the least in the kingdome of Heauen (that is to say of them that preach the gospel in these days) is more excellent in his ministe[r]ie, than

ry, than Iohn Baptist and all the Prophets: so on the contrary part, when we despise the doctrine that God sendeth, seeing that he commaundeth it to be so honoured: it is certaine that we shall be double giltie. Thus ye see what we haue to marke in this text. And it is said imme-diatly, that if Job iesteth with them, they beleue not. VVhereby hee meenth, that he had such a grauitie in him, as men durst not beleue that hee woulde iest, by-cause that in all his conuersation he shewed himselfe as a Prophete of God, and had gorten so great credite, as the very reuerence whiche men beare vnto him, was a cause that men thought not that he would abace hymselfe to become fellow like and companion with others. And afterward he addeth, they confreynd me too let the light of my countenance fall: that is to say, they compelled me to hide my chearefull countenance, bycause that although they were glad to see it, yet durst they not shew like countenance agayne, for feare of offending him by any maner of way. This serueth to confirme the matter more which was spoken of already. For the holy Ghost sheweth vs as it were in a looking glasse, what the reue-rence of the whole people was in those dayes, towards a man that was indued with excellent giftes, notwithstanding, the same spirit that rested in him, speaketh at this day vnto vs. Then if men honoured him in suche wise as they durst not shew lyke countenance when hee laughed, for feare of displeasing him: It sheweth well the obedience which wee shoulde yeld to Gods worde, and that we ought to esteeme and honour the doctrine, inasmuch as wee knowe it proceedeth from him for oure welfare. And herewithall Job sheweth also after what sort he behaued himselfe among those that honoured him so and gaue him the cheefe iooke as vnto a king: namely that he bad bin a comforter of the afflicted. Therefore he sheweth that for his part, hee abused not the authoritie that was giuen him by taking vppon him as a Lord, after the manner of false Prophetes (according as EZ.34.4 it is sayde in Ezechiel) whiche vse suche and extreame sternnesse as though they woulde set their feete vpon the necks of those that feare God, by thundring and storming against them, and in the meane whyle haue not any humanitie in them, nor regarde too reache out their hand to such as are afflicted.

Job then declareth, that his grauitie was not tyrant-like, that is to say it was not a sturdy stateliness to daunt poore folke, and to make them afraid: but although hee shewed himselfe familiar too them, yet they stode in awe of him, and durst dallie with him, bycause they knew he had receiued Gods spirit abundantly. VVherefore let vs understand, that like as he had bin milde and courteous vnto all men: so also it is a lesson for al those whome God hath called too the teaching of theyr neighbours, and generally for all the faithfull, euery man in his owne behalfe. Then if God giue vs any authoriti, or so replenish vs with this holy spirit, as wee bee honoured among other men: It is not for vs too aduaunce ourselues, nor to ouerrule them like Lords (for that were an abusing of Gods gifts, and a wresting of them cleane contrarie to his meening:) but it behoueth vs to knowe, that our Lorde employeth vs too the comforting of the poore that are afflicted: that is to wite, that such as seeke 10 too serue God with all lowlinesse, may bee cheered by heering and seeing vs. For like as Gods worde is hated of the wicked sort, and of the despisers thereof, bycause it telleth them of their destruction: so also they that are cast downe in themselues and are not aduaunced with pride, presumption or stubbornnesse, but are always lowlyminded, and to bee shortall the schoollers of Iesu Christ, must needs be cheered at his doctrine, according to his saying, come vnto me all ye that laboure and are heauy laden, and I will refresh you. So then let suche as 20 haue the charge to vter Gods word, looke wel that they make the doctrine which they carrie, to be found sweete and amiable to all suche as are oppressed and overwhelmed in themselues through the knowledge of their own wants and miseries. And therewithall, if they deale roughly: let it be towards those that have neede to be roughly handled and tamed by reason of the hardnesse that is in them.

Now let vs fall downe before the face of oure good God with acknowledging of our sins, praying him that 30 when he hath made vs perceiue them, he will also gyue vs such repentance as wee may hartely desire to be healed by the remedies that he sendeth vs: and that for asmuch as his word is the true medicine to purge all oure diseases, he will make the same to worke effectually: and when he hath giuen vs health, hee will feede vs with the selfesame foode, and strengthen vs more and more thereby, so as we may shew by effect, how it is hee that lyueth in vs, and therefore that we may not liue any more after the worlde and the flesh, notwithstanding that we dwell 40 heere: but that our liuing may only be to feed our soules with his worde, vntill hee haue called vs into the kingdome of Heauen with his Angells, where we shall neede no more teaching, nor to haue the meanes which are requisite for our infirmitie as now. That it may please him too graunt this grace not only to vs, but also too all people and nations of the earth, bringing backe all poore ignorant soules from the miserable bondage of errore and darknesse, too the right way of saluation, for the doing whereof, it may please him to raise vp true and faithful ministers of his worde, that seke not their owne profite and vaynglorie, but onely the aduaancement of his holie name.&c.

The cvijj. Sermon, which is the first vpon the xxx. Chapter.

1. NOvv they mocke me vvhich are yonger than I, vvhose fathers I haue refused to set vwith the doggs of my flocke.
2. For vwhereto did the strengthe of their handes serue mee, seeing that ag evvas perished in them?
3. They being destitute by meanes of dearth and famin, fled into the place that was solitary, dark, desolate and vvaſt.

5. They vvere chased from among men, and men shouted after them as after a theefe.

2. But

- ¶. But now am I their song and their matter to talke vpon.
¶. They abhorre me and flee farre from me: and forbear not to spit in my face.

E haue seene the honoure wherin Job had bin for a time: and his rehersing of it is, to the ende that by comparing it with the reproche wherein he was, hee mighte shewe how he had the more cause too be sad, and that it was an intollerable greefe to see himselfe scorned with extremitie, euen of those that had feared him and stode in awe of him afore. Now when a man hath bin aduaunced to great honoure and high estate, and afterward seeth himselfe despised, it is a naturall thing for him too bee greeued the more therat. For he looketh not vpon the thing that is left him, but vpon the excellent state from whence he is falne. A poore man that shall haue liued at home in the countrie, and neuer tasted of honoure and pomp, is always at a poynt with himselfe, when men skorne and disdaine him, or shew any token of contempt towarde his person. The good men also which shal haue liued in simplicitie, will not be so greatly greeued at it, but will ouerpasse it. But as for him that hath bin brought vp in pleasure, and hath had abundance of riches, he can abide no shame without deadly wounding to the hart, because men hild him in some estimation. And although men come not too spite him to his face: yet if there bee any crooked dealing that tendeth to the shaking of him off, and to his contempt, it greeueth him sore. Ye see then how it is a natural thing for such as haue bin in honour, to be vnable to bear their owne defacing, and to be the more greeued at it. And that is the thig that Job declareth heere. For like as he had declared the reuerence that me bare vnto him, in somuch that all men gaue eare to him, not in respect of his riches, but bycause God had giuen him wisedome and discretion aboue other men, so as they might rest vpon him, and he was as a mirroure and patterne of all vertue for the to take example at throughout his whole life: So now when he saw himselfe skorned, and every man pointed at him with their finger, it is a crosse much heauier and bitterer for him to beare, tha if he had neuer bin aduaunced heretofore. But heereof we haue a good lesson to gather, which is, that commonly when a man is noozled in pleasure, therby he waxeth ouertender: in somuch that it is not for our profite to be so brought vp in honoure, so as men should neuer displease vs, nor speake any thing to vs that shoulde not rather tickle our eares than scratch them. VVhy so? For we know that our Lord commendeth vs aboue all things, if we be pacient and acknowledge our faults when we bee blamed to our faces. If men yeld vs no honoure, but rather scorne vs: let the same put vs in mind, that we haue not honoured our God to whom he al honoure belogeth, and therefore it is good reason that wee should receive such reward of shame vpon our heads. God then intendeth to trie our lowlinesse in this behalfe, by our meeke receiuing of the iniuries that men do vnto vs withoute stomaking of them. For this delicate bringing vp of vs in pleasure (as I said) causeth vs to be vnpacient, so as wee cannot beare any thing: but as soone as a man doth but pointe at vs with his finger, it greeueth vs, yea and it is such a corzie to vs, as we wote not which way to turne vs. Then if our Lord inure vs to the suffering of wrongs and reproches: let vs learne that therin he procureth our welfare and profite, to the intent we should be all whole and sound as they say. And this is the cause why Sainte Paule saith that it behoueth vs to be a man on both sides, that we may passe through shame and reproch, as well as through honour. If God list to haue vs in estimation, let vs not therevpon gather, that we shall always continue in that state, nother let vs sorte our selues with vaine glory and ambition. But let vs understand that our Lord bindeth vs so much the more vnto him, for the good edifying of our neighbours. VVhen a man is in any pre-heminence, he ought to consider, that all men looke vpon him, and that our Lord hath set him as a candle on a cubbard, or a table, to giue light. Therefore it standeth him in hand to walke the more carefully, and to beware that he giueth no occasion of stumbling vnto any man. Thus yee see how the honoure whiche God giueth vs ought to be applyed, not to our owne vaine glory, but to the edifying of our neighbours. And on the other side also, let vs marke how Saint Paule saith, that it behoueth 2 Cor.6.b.8

vs to be thoroughly acquainted with reproches, & to haue our eares beaten with them. If men flauder vs, let vs neuerthelesse take all in good woorth, and yet notwithstanding let vs take good heed, that their scoffing at vs may not he for our faults. Furthermore, if our conscience be cleere before God, so as we be sure that they whiche raille vpon vs and backbite vs, do it of malice & without cause: let vs put it ouer wholly vnto God, and contente ourselues with his allowance. And therewithall (as I said) let vs be vtterly inured therewnto a long time before had. For it is a lewd thing, when men be so tender and haue their eares so nice, as they are able too beare no misreport.

Thus ye see what we haue to mark in this text. But forasmuche as this doctrine is hard to practise: lette vs also marke the examples that are giuen vs in the scripture. Behold Dauid, for we will take a man renouned amog others. After he had bin king and continued in such prosperity as it was opēy seene that God guided him with his had, & that he was not auanced by worldly meanes, nor by his owne pollicie, but after such a sorte as God meant to shew a speciall working of his owne power in him: After he had bin so honoured: behold he was afflieted in the turning of a hand, yea and that by his owne sonne. Stones were thrown at his head. Semei his own subiect persecuted him both in deedes and words, & spited him saying, thou murtherer thou receiuest thy payement. VVherein he vypbraide him as if God had sent him the reward due for the cruelties which he had committed against the house of Saule. Neuerthelesse, Dauid who might well haue bin inflamed with anger agaist Semei, specially considering the circumstancies whiche we haue touched, in that he sawe his owne subiect bend himselfe openly against him being so excellent and renouned a king: Firste and formost calleth too mynde, that it was God which had exalted him, yea and that hee had done it of his owne meere grace, and that wheras he was now cast downe: the same came not by any cauallitie of misfortune, but of Gods will, who woulde haue hym bayted by men. It is God (saith hee) whiche hath appoynted hym too doo so: not that Semeis outrage and pride was allowed of God, but bycause Dauid knewe that the same came not too passe withoute the heauently prouidence. And therefore hee humbleth himselfe too the furtheraunce heereof: it booted hym greatly that he had bin brought vp as a poore country cloyne or a shepherd or a neatherde with his father: For in his youthe hee kepte his fathers lambes, and 1 Sa.16.c.11. was not broughte vp so dayntly, as not too knowe 17.c.34. what

Mat.5.b.11. we know that our Lord commendeth vs aboue all things, if we be pacient and acknowledge our faults when we bee blamed to our faces.

1 Pet.3.c.14 If men yeld vs no honoure, but rather scorne vs: let the same put vs in mind, that we haue not honoured our God to whom he al honoure belogeth, and therefore it is good reason that wee should receive such reward of shame vpon our heads. God then intendeth to trie our lowlinesse in this behalfe, by our meeke receiuing of the iniuries that men do vnto vs withoute stomaking of them. For this delicate bringing vp of vs in pleasure (as I said) causeth vs to be vnpacient, so as wee cannot beare any thing: but as soone as a man doth but pointe at vs with his finger, it greeueth vs, yea and it is such a corzie to vs, as we wote not which way to turne vs. Then if our Lord inure vs to the suffering of wrongs and reproches: let vs learne that therin he procureth our welfare and profite, to the intent we should be all whole and sound as they say. And this is the cause why Sainte Paule saith that it behoueth vs to be a man on both sides, what it was to be scorned: that bringing vp therfore did greatly profite him. And heere ye see why I said that if God shold not waken vs, but rather suffer vs to be alwaies flattered by men: if it woulde not bee for oure behoofe. VVherefore let vs vnderstand, that when mevse such missayings and raylings against vs, god doth by that meanes prepare vs, to the ende it shold not be straunge to vs, if he listeth now and then to abace vs. Now then when such extremities betide vs, our Lord prepareth vs to pacience. And therupon let vs marke the example of David, who was a man subiect to passions as we be, and yet notwithstanding submitteth himselfe willingly, whē he perceiued it to be Gods will that hee should bee as it were borne in peeces, yea though it were wrongfully. For that is not the matter that must greeue vs: but rather we must be of good cheere when our consciences aunswere well for vs before God, and when wee knowe that men persecute vs wrongfully. This (saye I) is a thing that ought to vphold vs the better: for we must not be so foolish as to say, what now, what cause can men find too scorne me after this sort? True it is that if we be reproched for our sinnes sake, the same ought to frame vs so much the more vnto pacience. But if our Lord suffer vs to be slaundered by them, & to be scorned by thē, when notwithstanding we shal haue liued wel, & not haue giue occasion to the wicked and to backbiters to do vs injurie; let vs assyure ourselues that our Lord hath graunted vs a singular grace, in exempting vs so frō the spitefulness of me, as al their il wil towards vs is without cause. And therfore if he wil haue vs to suffer vniustly, let vs passe thorough it, and not think it strange. Thus ye see the doctrin which we haue to gather vpon this text. But now if behoueth vs to marke, that although the gracieuse gyftes and benefytes which we shall haue received at Goddes hand ought to comfort vs in our afflictiōs: yet notwithstanding it is not possible, but that if we haue ben in estimation, it will be a great greefe and a dubble hart sore to vs, to see our selues scorned afterward: but yet behoueth it vs to resist such temptations. Our pacience must not be a senselesnesse: but it consisteth in this, that when we feele the things which are declared heere by Job: yet neuerthelesse we take courage too walke still as before God: and if it please him that wee shall bee wrongfully slaundered, we arme ourselues against such battels, that we may not be foyled howsoeuer the world go. For the thing that Satan practiseth by stirring vp maliciose folke, and by inforsing them to slaunder and backbite vs, is that wee shoulde conclude that wee haue lost oure time in doing good. VVhat? I haue indeuered too lyue without blame. I haue streined my selfe to do good to every man. There is no man that can say that I haue eyther done him hurt or harme, and yet I see I am persecuted after this maner. VVhat haue I gayned then by walkeing vprightly? Thus ye see that the craft and policie of Satan, is to make vs beleeue that we lose oure laboure in doing good: and therupon to carrie vs so away, as we shoulde no more sticke to anoy or hinder men. And on the other side let vs marke, that mēs vnkindnes ought to prouoke vs so much the more to remit ourselues wholly vnto God, being sure that it is he to whome we must yeld our account, and that his allowing of vs ought to suffise vs. Do we then see men vnthankfull towards vs, so as when we haue indeuered too do them good, they turne and spit in oure faces, and burden vs with false slaunders? Let vs assyure ourselues that thereby God calleth vs too him, as if hee should say, I will haue you too walke as it were before my face, and therefore you shall not be recompenced now heere bylow, but be you contented to haue obeyed me in all points. VVhereas me do so rail upon you: it is too the ende you shoulde not stay yourselues, neither vpon them, nor vpon their opinion, nor be led with such fondnesse as to say, you haue well deserued that men shoulde praise your vertues. Thus ye see after what sort we ought to fight against this temptation which is spoken of heere. And by the way let vs marke, that our Lord ment to giue vs a singular iastruction by these chaunges heere: I intane by the chaunge that happened vnto Job, and by all the other chaunges which we see in the holy scripture, and which we behold dayly with our eyes and reade in heathen stories. And why? First of all (as was declared yesterday) they that are aduaunced too honoure and dignity, haue a bridle too reine them backe from warranting themselves to continue always in that state, and to make them knowe, that in the turning of a hand, God not only can shake them, but also vtterly overthrows them from the highnesse wherein he hath set them: So that in stead of the honour which he hath giuen them, they shal see themselues as faulted on all sides with wrongs, scorning, and slanders. Ye see then that all such as feare God, ought too bridle themselves when they are in such state and dignity, and make their account that early or late all may chaunge. For God to proue their meekenesse, will giue men libertie to scorne them, and to do them many outrages. Also we see that the very Paynimis knew this, and that they haue made many common Proverbes of it, whiche serue to take away al excuse from vs. True it is that they did ill put them in vre. And why? Because it is hard for men to hold themselves sober whē they haue the world at wil and that fortune (as they terme it) doth smile vpon them. It is too common a vice among men to besotte themselves in their prosperitie, and wee can wellynough say it, but there be few of vs that take heede of it. Althogh then that those sayings be ordinarie euery where, and all men confesse them to be true, namely that a man ought not to glory of his prosperitie, nor to solte himself in it: nor to beleeue that it shal tarrie with him for euer: but that he ought to thinke vpon the chāges and alterations that may happen: yet notwithstanding no man applingh his indeuer to do so: and therfore so much the more behoueth it vs to take paine, bycause we see ourselues so soone ouertaken with the delights and glorioufulness of this world. To the end therfore that no man suffer himselfe to be caried away by his inordinate lusts, it behoueth vs to marke the doctrine so much the better which is set downe heere. And so let all men that feare God bethinke themselves while they are in honoure, that God is well able to bring them downe, yea and that they must not promise themselves either monethes or dayes, but dispose themselues every minute to haue their shoulders ready too beare the burthen of reproch, whensoeuer it shal please God too put them too shame before men. Marke that for one point. And surely considering the frowardnesse which we see in the world nowadayes, it standeth vs so much the more in hand to take warning heereof. For it is a wonder that a mā which walketh vprightly can be honoured at this day. True it is that the wicked may be held so short spite of their teeth, as they shall be fayne to leaue vertue: but yet misse they not afterward to fall againe to such outrage, as to slander the good, and to turne light into darknesse. Although thē that God haue ingrauē such an insight in the despisers of his maiestie, that they commend al things which they know to proceede of him: yet neuerthelesse they by and by after fall to such a rage, as they shut their eyes, and become brutish wilfully. And why? the intent to spew out their their blasphemies and railings against God, and against the gifts and grace of the holy spirite. Therefore it is no wonder though such as feare God and walke in soundnesse of life, bee subiect to many slanders and reuylings : specially seeing that Satan thrusteth forward the wicked after that sort, bereauing them of all modestie, yea and inflaming them as it were with a firie rage. VVe see these things too commonly : and therefore it behoueth vs too bee warned, to passe through the wrongs and slanders of this worlde.

By the way, whensocuer God listeth too haue vs reuyled after that sort, if it bee by reason of our sinnes as I sayd afore : we haue so much the more cause to hold our tungs, and to beare the reproche quietly whiche wee haue deserued as the iust hire of our faults. And theraypon it behoueth euery man too bethinke himselfe aduisedly: and assoone as any man shall backbite vs, or mock vs, or make vs as it were a tale and laughing stocke , wee must learne to acknowledge, that God putteth vs in mind to make our owne accusation. Euen the heathen men could well skill to say, that our deadly enimies do often-times profite vs more than our frends : And why ? Our frends beare with vs, and that causeth vs to feede oure owne vices. For although their intent bee not to flatter vs, yet notwithstanding the gentlenesse whiche they vse in bearing with vs, is a cause that we thinke not vpō our imperfections to amend them. But our enemies do prie vpon vs, and seeke all the meanes that can be, to lay open all the faultes that are in vs. Therefore when any man findeth fault with vs, and scoffeth at vs , it behoueth vs too thinke thus: goto, I see here that God citeth mee to make mine owne proces, and to accuse my selfe, so as I may be mine owne iudge to condemne my selfe, that by so doing, my shame may be couered and buried. Lo howe wee ought to deale in this behalfe. And if we know that such as speake euill of vs, haue any reason so to doo, although they do it of malice : yet notwithstanding, let vs not replie to say, this man is led with desire of reuenge. Let vs not looke at any such thing, but let vs pleade guiltie, and pray God to blot out all our offences, to the end we may be quit both before God and the world . Yea and if wee know not any reason why the partie shoulde speake euill of vs in that behalfe: yet let vs acknowledge, though I be not faultie in this poynt whereof I am blamed , yet are there many other vices wherof I am guiltie, but my God spareth me, and will not haue them come to the knowledge of men : if it pleased him to stur abroade all my filthinesse : what a stinke would there be? Let vs consider(I say)that by that meanes God intendeth too set secretly before our eyes the sinnes whiche wee woulde haue cast behind our backe, and that is to make vs too hate the euill that is in vs , withoute any flattering of oure selues. Marke that for the second point. And finally, if our consciences be cleere: not that we can in ali points and all respects be vtterly faultlesse, and like the Angelles:but by cause that wee see that men haue no cause too persecute vs, but that they do it wrongfully;and our suffering is for that we haue followed Gods word, or for executing our office and duetie faithfully: I say if men do blame vs for it (as in deed they be full of ranceur & malice) let vs assure our selues that our Lordes will is , that our receyuing of such reward, shall be to the ende we shoulde looke for a better at his hand, as I sayd afore. And if we see no cause at all, but are vtterly abashed in our selues:let vs not therefore ceasse to say , Lorde thou art righteous, whatsoeuer come of it. Thus ye see to what point it behoueth vs to come.

And heerewithall lette vs indeuer too profite oure-

selues by all the chaitizementes whiche God sendeth vs from day to day : and let vs vnderstand that therby God intendeth to fashion vs to yeld him the prayse, and too glorifie him , euē when we see good men had in reproch. For like as euerie of vs ought to bee pacient, and by his pacience to prayse God in all things that he suffereth : so also must wee not blame hym , when wee see him suffer good men to be slaudered. VVherefore let vs not be to muche greeued when wee see an honest man slaudered and reuyled, so as menstungs run riot against him. VVe see what happened vnto Job . He was (as I haue saide) a patterne of all holiness: And yet notwithstanding wee see him in such reproch, as he seemeth to be vtterly past recouerie. Can we blame God in this behalfe ? or can we skorne against him ? Nay,rather when wee see such afflictions happen vnto a vertuous man: we ought to humble our selues. And although the reason why God doth so, be not apparant vnto vs : yet notwithstanding let vs assurē our selues, he doth it not without cause, and therfore we ought to glorifie him in al his iudgements,although they be incomprehensible to vs. Marke that againe for one other poynt.

But let vs come too those that are so proude , as too disdaine, and not onely too disdaine, but also villanously to revile those whome God hathe honoured by giving them excellent vertues. Heere we see in the person of those of whome Job speaketh that it is a detestable vice. Is there any man that condemneth not this pride, or rather this shameful beastlinesse, that rascalls and naughti-packs should so lift vp themselves against a man whome they ought too honoure and reverence for his vertues ? Behold,these doggs barke, yea and they bark where they cannot bite. For(as we haue seene already) Job was none of those that are in credite for their riches or authoritie, or any worldly respect : but for his vertues , because men saw as it were these marks of Gods glory in him:and yet ye see heere, that rascalls, and ribawdes, and such as haue no skill either of honoure or honestie, do rushe agaynst him, and raile vpon him with their tongues. See yee not what an intollerable villanie is this ? And may not a man compare them to curre dogges whiche barke and gnashe their teeth although they cannot bite. So then this vice is not to be borne withall, but we be conuincid by verie truth and reason, that it is to be condemned. VVherefore let vs learne, not to follow that thing whiche we mislike and condemne in others. And so when God maketh any changes, so as man falleth downe whereas hee had beene in great estimation afore: Let vs not bee so farre ouer-seene, as to cry out against him : but let it come too oure remembrance, that by making suche alterations in this worlde , God intendeth to waken euerie of vs, that wee shoulde not bee presumptuous according too oure owne nature, whiche is too much inclined therewnto. But I am a poore man , I was neuer in credite or estimation , the worlde hath not heard any talking of me : Nowe if I see a great personage cast downe, it is as if a mountaine fell downe: and what else shoulde I thinke of it , but that our Lorde intendeth too set so much the greater brightness vpon his iudgements, too the intent that I shoulde consider what I am my selfe? I am heere as a sillie woorme , I do but creepe vpon the earthe , and suche a one did as it were soare aboue the Cloudes: and yet notwithstanding I see that God hath cast him downe before mine eyes.

VWell then : art not thou a starke foole if thou prayse and esteeme thy selfe ? Yee see howe the little ones ought too take warning too walke in feare and carefulnesse , and that when oure Lorde deoth so cast downe the great ones before their eyes, they muste consider on their partes, that he can cast them downe likewise whensoeuer they go about to aduaunce themselues, how stately souer men be, God is able inough to pluck them out of their high nestes. And when they be setled in such degree, as it shall seeme vnto them, that fortune cannot do any thing agaynst them : God will shewe that it is to no purpose for men to fancies a fortune as they do, but that God stretcheth out his hande through all things. Nowe if the Princes and great men of this worlde, ought to be 10 afraide when they see God thunder vpon the mightie ones, and such as are aduaanced to hie degree: I pray you what ought the meanest sort too do ? And furthermore, let vs be well aduised also, that wee lift not vp our selues agaynst other men. And in good sooth is it not a thing agaynst nature, when a man that hath nothing in him worthie of commendation, doth so vaunt himself against others ? For men may alwayes say, what art thou ? Put the case that this man deserue to be set light by : yet is it not for thee to do it. For if we despise a man because hee 20 is not rich, or because he is not wise, or because hee hath no commendable qualities, or because he is not a gentleman: we shall finde that there are no more of these things in vs, than in him. VVhat is too bee done then, but that they which are of lowe degree should behauie themselues lowly ? Though wee were great : yet behoued it vs to stoup, according as Saint Paule admonisheth vs, that if Ro..12.d.16 Pbil.2.a.3. we be Gods children, he that is in hie degree must stoupe too make himselfe equall with the little ones , yea, euen with the least. But nowe if I bee destitute both of vertue 30 and knowledge, and nobilitie, and worldly goods , so as I haue nothing to boast of, and yet do rush agaynst a poore man, that is as it were troden vnder foote : do not I deserue to be abhorted of the whole worlde ? So then, let vs take warning by this text, to looke well to our selues : and if any man bee brought to contempt, let vs consider that as much or more might befall vnto vs, and therefore let vs holde our tonges. This is the instruction which we haue to take. Nowe had we this lesson well printed in our minde, wee shoulde not see so many backbitings, raylings, and scoffings as are in the worlde. For euerie of vs woulde take himselfe by the nose ( as they saye.) And truely though a man haue in him some vertue, ryches , or authoritie , yet notwithstanding no man shall finde himselfe so perfect , but that God giueth him many causes to hang downe his heade. Therefore if every of vs examine throughly what is in himselfe : Surely wee shall bee hilde within the boundes of modestie , so as wee shall not despise those that are vnder foote , nor 40 vaunte our selues agaynst those whom our Lord putteth to reproch. Thus ye see what we haue to beare in minde. But nowe let vs come to Iobs woordes : he sayth, that the yong folke mocked him, yea euen those whose fathers he woulde not haue vouchsafed to haue made his dogkeepers. It should seeme that Iob speaketh here with great scornfullnesse. For he gathreth togither al that is possible for him in disdain of those that scorned him: as whē he sayth, their fathers were beggers, I helde scorne of their service, they were rascalles, and poore steruelings that scraped vp the earth with their nayles to gather rootes, and they did eare the 60 berries of Juniper in the woodes : and nowe I see my selfe scorned by thē. It seemeth (I say) at the first blush, that Iob is inflamed with some scornfullnesse & presumption. But like as I haue declared heretofore that hee expressed the temptations which he felt , but yet consented not vntoo them: so it behoueth vs to remember in this text, that Iob looketh vpon the thing as it is, & yet in the meane while ceaseth not too fight agaynst the gripes that gnawed his hart and his maree, to the intent he might paciently beare such reproches. For surely whē we be scorned by such as haue not any commendable thing in thē: that is much more hard and strange to vs. VVe bee despised at honest mens hands, we consider that we must not sooth our selues in this case for to make excuse: for there is some cause why, seeing that such men do find fault with vs. But if they that be wicked & vnruley, & full of al shamefainesse, do mock vs: surely such an extremitie maketh the reproche seeme the greater, so as we be the more grieued with it. Thus ye se what Iob looked at, in saying that those which were such abiects, had lift vp theselues against him. And let vs mark well howe Iob hath declared heretofore, that he was not honored for his riches, for his high estate, or for his noble birth: (those are not the things wheron he groūded himself) but because he had walked in so great vprightnesse & perfection, that at the sight of the vertues which God had put into him, men were constreyned to yeelde him reuerence, & he had not abused those graces. Now thē ye see why he thought it a very hard & grieuous case to be despised by those in whome there was nothing worthie of praise. Howbeit forasmuch as we see that Iob was broght so low: let vs understand that if our Lord send the like in these dayes, it behoueth vs to be strengthened by this exāple. And therfore although the thing be heuy & hard for vs to beare: yet notwithstanding let vs bee so milde as too stoupe as often as it shall please God to afflict vs. Verely there is euē a natural reason which ought to teach vs this. As how? VVe must not think it straunge, though verlets and such as haue neither honestie nor good qualitie , nor maners in them, do rush out into rayling. For we see this come to passe dayly: and the thing that is of custome and ordinarie with vs, ought to seeme no noueltie : but wee ought to be throughly acquainted with it. But besides this naturall reason, let vs also cōsider (as I haue touched already) that it is our Lords intent to trie our pacience the better, when he casteth vs after that maner into contempt, not only of those that are in authoritie & estimation, but also of those that are the veriest shakerags, so as we wold thinke our selues to be assaulted rather of brute beastes, than of men. Therfore when our Lord afflicteth vs by any such meanes, it is to meken vs: VVe see it is a general thing, euen vnto all mankind. Howe hapneth it that lice, flees, and flies, and such other vermine make warre both against great and small? For no man can exempt himselfe frō them. And although al men be not combred with filth and stinch, yet notwithstanding our Lord maketh vs subiect to those wormes, as it were to annoy vs, euen though we be kings and princes, so as every one of vs must abide it. And wherfore is it so, but only to humble vs the more? So then let vs marke it to be gods will, that when he putteth vs to such extremitie, that persons of base state vāut theselues agaynst vs. It is alwayes to the end to take away all vainglorie and presumption from vs. VVherefore in that behalfe let vs be as men that have put theselues into the hands of God, and say: Lord I see my self vterly vnderfoot, and as it were at the last cast : But vouchsafe thou to slake thy hand, & to draw me out of the reproch whervnto thou hast put me. But herewithall it behoueth vs also to be redie to behauie our selues well in the thing whiche wee see ordinarily : whiche is, that those which crouch and creep & play the liamhounds to a man when he is in authoritie & credit, are redie to leape in his neck, as soone as his state is chaunged, that they see him overthrowne : and they do it with such excesse, as they seeme to take plesure in it. And hereby ye see the maliciousnesse that is hid in them. Therfore like as euerie of vs ought to be armed afore, and to lcaue such reproches paciently: so also also let every of vs trie himselfe, to the ende he may behauie himselfe wisely in that case. For sometimes we honour those whom God abhorreth, and wee perceiue not that in so doing there is a peece of hypocrisie in vs: insomuch as if God ouerthrow them, oftentimes we will be the first that shall runne vpon them. VVe see such examples in stories of Souldiours that haue risen agaynst their own Princes. Loke vpō the great Capitaynes which haue borne such sway, as they made all to quake, and yee shall see that when a great Prince hath beene ouerthrowne, 10 even they that had hazarded theyr lyues in his defence, shal(either to gratifie his successour or his enemie) fal to practising of treason, & to committing of such cruelties, as his enemies would not haue done. For where the enemie would haue shewed pitie: they which earst had hazarded their liues for his safetie, doo passe intoo all outrage so much the more cruelly and furiously. VVhen we see such examples, let vs call our wittes about vs, and beware that we be not infected with any such vice. Moreover a man might say heere, that Iob seemeth to be contrarie to himselfe, when he sayeth, that bee wold not haue vouchsaſed to haue ſet their fathers to be keepers of the dogges of bis flockes. For in the laſt Chapter hee had shewed himselfe too bee of so great curtesie, as hee was not onely the father of the fatherlesse, and the defender of the wydowes: but also the eye of the blinde, and the foote of the lame: that is to say, that hee had had compassion of all poore folkes, and vſed kindenesse towardes them in succoring them. Now therfore to say that he vouchſafed not too matche their fathers with his Dogges, it see- 30 meth cleane contrarie. But let vs marke, that Iob speakeſt not heere, of his owne diſpoſition towards them, but of the thing as it was in it ſelſe: as if hee ſhoulde ſay, that the worlde counted not the fathers of them woorthie too keepe Dogges. Thus yee ſee in effect what Iob ment too ſignifie. But yet wee muſte beare in minde, that although men haue not any thing in them worthy of estimation, wee muſt not therefore diſdeyne them, but knowe them to be Gods creatures, and ſuch as reſemble our ſelues. Therefore let vs honour them: for 40 whoſoever is hielſt in degree, may perhaſe alledge this and that, to ſort out himſelfe from the reſt of men: but yet notwithstanding though he bee a king, he muſt haue brotherhood with the pooreſt ſhepeherds and neatherds in the worlde, except hee can put off his owne naſure. And oute of doubt, as for the cheefe and excellentef thing that a king hath in him, that is too ſay, manhood: hath not the ſhepehearde it as well as hee? O (ſayeth the king) I am come of ſuch a princely ſtocke. My freende, are not all men deſcended of Adam, and afterwardeſ of Noe? Surely as touching linages, the worlde ſeeth howe they go. For the nobleſt and moſt renowmed linages, are not the beſt. Inſomuche that oftentimes, it 50

were better to be a ſhepeherdes ſonne of the Coun:rey, borne of honest father and mother, than to be the ſonne of ſome great perfonage that is had in estimation of the worlde. For ſo may hee oftentimes bee the ſonne of a theefe, or of a brothell, notwithstanding, that they bee aduaunced too ſo highe degree: and therefore that is not the thing wherein they ought too glorie. Contrarywife, wee muſt come backe againe too the poyn̄t that hee ſpake of: which is, that the excellentef thing that a king hath in himſelfe, is that hee is a man: and that haue the neateheerdeſ of the Coun:rey, as well as the king. Therefore let the great and honourable perfonageſ of the world: boast themſelues as muſche as they liſt. They may make great bragges in that behalfe: but yet ſhall they bee but men ſtil: and the veryeſt rafeſcalles and miſerableſt men whome they diſpyle, are ſo as well as they. VVherefore let vs conſider, that God hath made vs all of one ſelue ſame naſure, and ſet an vniōn among vs in that behalfe, too the ende to binde vs one to another. Thus ye ſee what Iob ment in this text. And therefore let vs marke, that in all this rehersall he maketh as it were a huely picture, wherein God ſheweth vs the chaungeſ and alteraſtions of this worlde, to the ende wee ſhoule not bee weddeſ too it, but paſſe further longing for the heauenly life, where wee ſhall haue a continuall ſtedfaſtneſſe. Alſo let vs leaſne too knowe, that in this preſent life, there is nothing but ſrayletie, and miſerie, and that wee ſhall alwayes bee ſubiect vntoo them, vntill God haue taken vs hence too make vs partakers of the euerlaſting reſt, whiche hee hath prepared for vs in heauen.

Nowe let vs fall downe before the face of our good God, with acknowledgement of oure faultes, praying him to make vs feele them in ſuiche wife, as wee maye leaſne too condenme them in our ſelues, according as in deede wee haue all curſedneſſe: and therewithall, that if he affliſt vs, wee may by that meanes bee inured too bee ſorie for our offeſces, and to mourne for them, referringe oure ſelues vntoo him, and praying him too deface the faultes that wee haue committed, and to wipe them out of remembrance, not onely before him, but alſo before men, to the intent that our life may not bee a ſtumbling-blocke, but an edifying vntoo all men. And that all of vs both great and ſmall, may leaſne to frame our ſelues too his obedience, that hauiing muthal fellowſhip one with another, wee may liue together in good peace and brotherly loue, and by beholding the chaungeſ of this worlde, be led further to the hope of the heauenly life, to the ende we may paſſe heere bylowe as through a pilgrimage, wherein hee will not haue vs to reſt. That it may please him to graunt this grace, not onely to vs, but alſo to all people and nations of the earth, bringing backe all poore ignorant ſoules from the miſerable, &c.

The Cix. Sermon, which is the ſeconde vpon the xxx. Chapter.

- 11 Because the Lorde hath broken my corde and affliſted me, they alſo haue broken their bridle agaynst mee.
12. The yong men riſe vp at one ſide, they pinched my feete, yea and they did beſet my pathes vwith their ſtumbling blockes.
13. They marred my vvay, and indeuered to hurt me, and no man helped me.
14. They came againſt me as an ouerflowing riuer, & perſecuted me wrongfullly by reaſon of this calamitie.
15. Feare turned vpon me, they pursued mine excellencie as the vvinde, and my welfare paſſed avvay as a clovyde.
16. My ſoule vvas poured out vpon me: the time of aduersitie caught holde of me.

17. My bones are perced by night, and there is no rest in me.
18. My clothing hath chaunged colour through the greatnessse of my miserie, and the hemme of my garment cleaueth to me.
19. He hath cast me to the ground and I am become as dust and ashes.
20. VVhen I cry vnto thee thou hearest me not, and though I vvaite, thou regardest it not.
21. Thou art become cruell vnto me, and art against me vwith the strength of thy hand.

Ycause Job had heeretofore declared, that men of more value had stepped vp so malapertly agaynst him: hee addeth, that such thinges coulde not haue bin done vntoo him, if God had not broken al his strength in suche wise, as hee was weakened, yea & vtterly made feeble to the woldward, so as every man might despise him. For that is the thing which he meeneth by this similitude, that God had broken his sinew or cord. His meening then is, that whē we be vphild by the hand of God, we haue as it were a strōg rope too hold by: but if it like God to breake that rope, we slide away, and can no longer abide, but all goeth to wrecke with vs. Thus ye see how Iobs meening is, that the rascalles, and such as beare no countenance at all, had not assailed him so malapertly, ne durst haue set themselfes againste him, vrleſſe God had bereft him of hys strength, and left him nothing to maainteine him in hys state. True it is that ſome expound this texte, as if Job ſhould ſay, that mē made a beast of him, ſo as one while they let him looce, and another while tied him vp again: but that is too much ſtreined. VVe ſee then what the naturall ſeſe is: and it is a point well worthy to be noted. For when men do rail after that forte againſt vs, it behoueth vs alwaies to come backe to this similitude, that God hath as it were loozened vs, ſo as there is no more knitting: but we are in cace as if our body were without ſinewes, like as if a fagot or a ſheaf of corne or ſo. ne ſuch like thing were vnbond. The thing that cannot holde together of it ſelfe, had neede to be gathered vp and hild together otherwiſe. Now of ourelues we haue not any thing that can keepe vs together. And therefore it behoueth oure Lorde too binde vs vp. Marke that for one poynete.

On the contrary part alſo, when it pleaseth him to vnbind vs, by and by we fall afunder, and there is nothing that can maainteine vs, in ſomuche that men ſhall haue their ful ſcope oner vs, I meane euen the verie rafeals.

Iob. 12.c.18. VVe haue ſene heere before, how it is the office of God to gird kings with their girdles and alſo to cut their girdles afunder: wherby it was ſignified vnto vs, that where as kings and princes are in authoritie, it is bycause God hath committed the ſword vnto them, and holdeth the fast, and will haue them ſo reucrened. But contrariwile when God liþeth to cut their girdle afunder, there is no more power, ſtrength and authority in them than in women, but much leſſe. And heere wee haue a generall doctrine, which euery man muſt applie to himſelfe: which is, that if we haue any apparent vertue or ſtrength, wee muſt not imagin it to come of ourelues, but bicaue god ſtrengthneth vs.

Therfore lette vs alwayſ ſubmiſt ourelues vnto him, too the ende wee bee not touched with vaine presumption. For when God ſeeth men imagine that they haue that thing of themſelves which he hath giuen the: he bereueth them of it to make them better aduised too know what his grace is, and how they ought to haue eſteemed it at ſuche time as hee made them too feele it. VVherefore (as I ſaid) let vs leaue, not too ſurmize any vertue or ſtrength in our ſelues: but let vs acknowledge that we be vphild by the hand of God, like as a ſheafe of corne is held togither by the band. Therewithall let vs know also, that if our Lord liſt to vnbind vs, and to vntie our cord, immediatly we ſhall fall afunder, and not haue any abiding ſtate, further foorth than it pleaſeth him to continue his grace towards vs. And if we happen too bee trampled vnder foote, or to bee troubled and incombered, and yet haue no helpe nor meane too reuenge our ſelues, let vs call too remeberance, that men ſhould haue no ſuch aduantage of vs, except it were giuen the from aboue.

For aſmuſche then as oure Lorde maketh vs despiſed, every man can lift vp hym ſelfe agaynſte vs: and it behoueth vs too bear this leſſon well in mynde, too humble ourelues withal. For vntill wee haue the ſkill too knowe that it is God whiche putteſt vs too reproche, and alſo whiche gyueth men leaue too perſeſute vs: wee ſhall neuer bee tamed as wee ought to bee. Marke that for one point.

But after that Job haſthe ſpoken ſo, hee addeth other like complayntes: that is to ſay, that the yong men whiche had as it were couched down before him heretofore, roſe vp at one ſide, and tripped vp his heeles to make him fall, or caſt ſtones in his way for him too dash or ſtumble at. Heereby hee meeneth that hee was mocked on all ſides, and had no more the reuerence that hee ſpake of beſore. Too bee ſhort, hee meeneth that God had layd hym open too all iniuries. And afterward hee addeth, that his ſoule vexed him: VVherefore hee ſheweth that hee was wounded through and through. For it might fall out that a man ſhould bee mocked and not paſſe greatly for it. But Job ſheweth that the reproches and iniuries whiche men did vntoo him, touched him too the hart. And that is the cauſe why hee ſaythe, That his ſoule had bin perſecuted, and his welfare as it were plucked from him. The Hebrew word whiche hee vſeth dothe properly ſignify Royall, Princely, or excellente: and alſo bountifull, liberall, willing, or freebartered: and the worde Soule is not exprefſed.

Therefore it ſcemethe that Job meant too name hys ſoule, and too terme it Royall or princely, as the nobleſt, freſt, libralleſt or bountiſtleſt parte, like as kings and Luc. 22.c.25 princes are termed bountifull or liberall, bycause they be full of liberalitie, and haue wherewith to do it. Howbeit for aſmuſche as it is the manner of the Hebrew tung diuers times to repeate one thiſc twiſc: or elſe to ſet down two wordes that are neere of ſignification the one too the other, and tend both to one end: the very meening of this text is, That Job ſaythe that his bigneſſe was ouerthrown, and his welfare taken quite from him. First therefore he ſetteth downe the word Excellencie or Highneſſe, and afterward addeth the word Welfare which haſthe a further ſcope. The naturall meening then is, that whereas he had bin in greate dignitie before: nowe all was quite dashed: And whereas hee had bene well gaſted, ſo as it myghte ſeeme that no aduersitie coulde euer haue touched hym: hys welfare was ſo appayred and oppreſſed by men, that hee is become almoſt vtterly deſtitute of the comforte of all thone whome he had he had vsed theretofore. And hereby we are alwayes put in mynd, (as I touched yesterday) to fense our selues against such chaunges, seing we haue the example of Job. He was excellent among men for a time, and his state had ben as noble as any mannes. And now behold God setteth him as a horrible gafingstock : Euery man had ben ready to serue him, and it seemed that the whole world should haue fauored him. And yet notwithstanding euen they that had erst ben his frends, bosome as wild beastes, and raged against him to bereue him of his welfare. Forasmuch as we see this, let vs prepare ourselues, if it please God to affiict vs after the same sort. And if he do it, let it not trouble vs out of measure, seing that the same happened vnto Job. For although God exercised his seruant in such wise for a tyme, as he might seeme to haue vtterly forsaken him: yet notwithstanding we see that he looked alwayes vpon him with pitie, and the issue sheweth that it was not in vaine for him to haue wayghted his leasure, at whose hand he had receiued so many benefits before: and to haue called vpon him, and to haue fled to him for refuge. Therfore let vs do the like, let vs repose our selues vpō Gods goodnesse: and let vs hold vs always to his promise, and he will make vs feele that the end shall be none other towards vs, than it was towards Job. Furthermore although I stand not vpon euery word: it behoueth every of vs to minde the things that are treated of here. For Job ment to expresse vnto vs, that his state was so miserable, as it was able to make our heares stand vp vpō our head. And why? First and foremost (as I haue shewed) he excuseth himself of his impaciencie and of his tormenting of himself, bycause his afflictions greeued him: For the excessiuenesse of them caused him too do so. In the meane whyle let vs not doubt, but that the holye Ghoste speaketh by his mouth to the intent that if our aduersities seeme greate and vnable to be borne, we may compare the with the things that happened to Job. And seeing that he was scourged much more thā we can be, we must not be so nyce (and as it were childishe) when our aduersities pinch vs, as to think that God afflieth vs to sore. [But let vs say] how now? did there not happē as much vnto Job. Yea and was not the miserie which he indured much more excessiue and outrageouse than this? Ye see then how we must learne pacience by that which is declared here at length, touching the aduersities that Job suffered. And herewithall commeth to this purpose the thing which I haue touched: that is to witte, that the miserie which Job indured, was with in him, and that he was not only mocked, scorned and wronged by men: but also was cast downe in himself. For although a mannes enimies mock him, and he perceyue well that they backbyte him on all sides: yet if he be at rest in himself, such a man shall not be so greatly tormented, as he that is vtterly dismayed and can indure no more. And vndoubtedly if a man see such crueltie in men, as they are not satisfied with the miserie that he indureth, but also fall to blowing of the fire, and to greeuing of him further when they see him as good as half dead already, so as every man striketh at him to murther him and to increase the torment wherwith he is already afflicted to the vttermost: that augmeteth his grief and anguish much more. Thus ye see what Job ment in this streyne when he sayeth that terror tooke bold on him, that he had no rest; that his pulses did beat continually, & that he had no releef at all: lyke as a man that is in a continual agewe, or that is so tormented as he hath no leasure to take his breath. Job then by such complaints signifieth, that he is not only mocked as diuers are, which yet for all that forsake not their meate and drinke and myrrh, nor as they that are able to defend theselues, so as though men pactize euill against them, they are not able to bring it to passe: but contrarywise he sheweth that he was so afflieted, as he stode in feare of it. And vnder this woord Fear, he comprehendeth all the anguishes that we can feele, whē eyther our Lord God, or men, do set themselues against vs. Yea and that word importeth much more than heauinesse or anguish: for beauinesse is a greef for aduersities present: But when we are in feare, it is as if we sawe death threaten vs, and that wee were besieged with many daungers. For then we imagin, how now? Indede I am in miserie already: but that is nothing. For such a misery may happen moreover: and peraduenture also an other on the other side, and yet another to that. Therfore when we foresee such daungers, and it seemeth vnto vs that when we be escaped from one death there commeth a second, and a third, and to be short, we are assayled on all sides: that is a thing that striketh our hart dead: and that is it which Job meeneth by saying that feare had caught bold of him within: And this text ought to be well marked if vs. For the chief benefit with wee haue and which men do also naturally desire, is to be in safetie: and God also when he speaketh of his blessings, doeth aboue Lxx. 26.4.5.6. all things promise vs rest, and that when we be in his custody, we shall sleepe at our ease without feare of being waked, so as we shall not feare to sleepe, euen vnder a tree or by a high wayes side: and although wee had nother dore, nor barre, nor lock, nor key to our chamber, yet we shall be safe vnder his protection. Neuerthelesse wee see how Job sayeth, that he was possessed with feare. It seemeth then that he had no more trust in God and consequently that he was bereft of the souerain benefit that we desire, and which God hath promised to all his children. And verely the faithful shall always haue finally such rest Psalm. 3.6.6. in theselues, as they may be cheerfull in their aduersities: and that is bycause they rest vpon Gods goodnesse, and know wel that he will neuer forget the. Ye see then a rest which cā neuer fayle al the faithful, solong as they trust in God: and that did Job wel feele in parte. But herewithall let vs marke, that now and the God will cast his seruants in such trouble (I meene for a litle whyle) as they shal not know where they be. And this ioy of the holy Ghost is as it were ouerwhelmed and choked in the, so as they cānot resort vnto God, nor warrant theselues that he watcheth ouer the, nor be sure to say, no, no: Howsoeuer the world goeth, yet will my God perserue mee: indeede I perceyue not that he is minded to succour mee: but yet will I tarry his leasure patiently. The faythfull then may at tymes be scarce fully out of doubt: and they shal bee tossed with so greate waues and stormes as they shal not know where to become, but shall be caried with such violence, and tossed and turmoyled after such a fashion, as their rest shall be turned into trouble: and what is to be done then? It behoueth vs to vnderstand, that first of all, to be peaceable, yea euen in the middest of all our aduersities, it standeth vs in had to flee to our God, & to be out of doubt that his promising too bee alwayes with vs, is not vaine. Therfore let vs mind Gods promises, that we may be armed with them on all sides, so as we may be quiet in the middest of our aduersities. For there is none other safetie for vs: but the hope of succour at Gods hand. So long as we haue that, we cannot but fall vpō our feete, as the proverb sayeth. But assone as we be turned away from God, and cānot beleue that he will helpe vs, and hath a fatherly care of our welfare, we are vtterly dismayed and so amased, as we knowe no meanes in the world to quiet our selues. And therfore let vs learne to settle our selues in Gods promises, if we will not be ouerwhelmed with trebling and fearfulness in the middes of our aduersities.

Furthermore if now and then we be so sore oppressed as we knowe not where to become : yet let vs not ceasse to resort to our God, hoping that he will chace away our darknesse, and not suffer vs to continue alwayes in such distresse, as there should be no remedie nor asswagement of our sorowes. Now sith wee see that the like happened vnto Iob, and also vnto Dauid, who are twoo myrrors of pacie, fayth and hope : let vs not be too much discomfited, when it seemeth too the infirmitie of our fleshe, that we be vterly ouerwhelmed with aduersitie, and seazed with such feare, as we be vterly forlorne. For surely God will worke continually in his faithfull ones, and although his woork appeare not to the eye : yet shall they feele it. And truely although the faithfull be in such anguish and feare, as there seemeth to be no more hope for them in the goodnesse of God: yet shal they not quayle, but be succoured by him, notwithstanding that they be not able to perceiue his succour by their natural reason. Thus ye see how we ought to procede in our heauiness, and how wee ought too practise this doctrine to profit our selues by it. And when as Iob addeth, that God had cast him to the ground, and that he was become like dust and ashes (for he had erst sayd, that his garnets were chaged and cleaneed as it were to bisskin:) Therby he sheweth that he was vterly ouerthrowne, and that there was not one sparke of hope of lyfe left in him, insomuch that it might haue ben sayd: behold a man vterly consumed, in whom there reigneth nothing but death. For by these words earth, dust, and ashes he not only meenech that his strength fayled him: but also that he was become as a dead coarse, yea even as good as half rotten. Iob then sheweth right wel, that there was no more token of life in this extreme affliccio which he endured : But rather that he was condemned, yea even of ali men, wherin it is shewed vs, that our trust must not bee tyed too the things that are seene, but that wee must trust in God, yea even in the middest of death. And that when we seeme to bee past recovery, yet notwithstanding wee must take hold of the lyfe that God hath promised vs, and continually imbrace it. And herewithall let vs marke also, that Gods power is not subiect too any humane or worldly meanes: but that he worketh after such a fashion, as is incomprehensible and secret vntoo vs. Lo here the twoo things which wee haue too marke in this text, which goe ioynly one with an other. For why haue wee sayd that fayth must not bee inclosed in the things that wee see, but because it is grounded vpon the power of God? But this power is infinite and may not be compassed or ruled by worldly meanes, or by ought that can be seene. For God is able to worke after such maner, as is vnowne to vs. Seing it is so, it behoueth our fayth also too bee enlarged likewise.

And so, for the better vnderstanding of this doctrine, let vs begin at the second point which I haue touched: which is, that Gods power wherby he intendeth to work for our welfare, is not booud within these lower things: and therfore that we must not say, that God will do thus or thus bycause the order of nature is so, or bycause wee see some li'elhold of it, or bycause there is such a meane or helpe to compasse it. For that were to do him greate wrong, inasmuch as the things that are in him are infinite. Therfore we must not inclose Gods mightie power within our imaginacio and vnderstading. Like as Gods goodnesse is endlessse and a botomlessse pit: so also are his wisdome and righteousnesse, and the same is to be said of his power. Now if we woulde comprehend this mightinesse and power: I pray you are weable too inclose it in our brayne? It is vnpossible. So then let vs marke well, that when God intendeth to saue vs, he doeth it not after the commen fashion, but worketh by miracle towards vs: insomuch that he will rayse vs euen from death. And that S.m.2.2.6 is the cause why he chalengeth the office of sending men S.p.16.b.13 to the graue, and of calling them back againe. Also it is sayd in the Psalme: that the issues or outgoings of death Psa.68.d.2. are in the hand of our God. VVhen it i, sayd of our God, it is to the end that the faythfull should taste the neerenesse of God, and that he should make them feele the thing by experience, which is conteyned heere: namely, that he hath the issues of death [in his hand]. And what are those issues? It is that when death shall haue reygned ouer vs, and we seeme to be vterly ouerwhelmed, so as there is no more hope of life: our Lord can well quicken vs, yea euen after a wonderfull fashion vnowne vnto vs, and which men cannot perceiue vntill it be shewed by effect. And this is the cause also why Ezechiel had this Eze.37. vision giuen him, that when God vttered his word, the bones that were drye before, and wherein there was no substaunce, came togither, and the sinewes did knit againe, and breth and liuehnesse came intoo them, and so they became living men. Thus ye see how we ought to be grounded vpon the inestimable power of our God: that is to wit, that when ir commeth to the trusting in him, we must not fal to reasoning: Hath God any meanes to do it? Are the things lykely? or haue we any thing in vs to further him? No no, but God knoweth how too deale, and therfore let vs wayte at his hand. But now (as I sayd) it behoueth our fayth to be enlarged vpon the mightie power of God: and seeing that Gods mightie power is not to be measured nor to be inclosed and made subiect to woldly and naturall meanes: our beleef also must stretch out both hie and lowe, and become infinite. Verely it will never be so perfect as it ought to bee: wee shall but only haue some little pece of it. But yet must we labour forward: and although our beleef be weake, and that we haue received it by measure, yet must we always tend to that marke. VVhat marke? Euen to rest ourselues on God, and to wayte for helpe at his hand. And how shall wee waite for it? must wee rest vpon these earthly things? No no, but every one of vs must sturre vp l.i.mself and consider: well Lord, thou art Almighty. Therfore thou wilt saue vs by thy mightie power which is vnowne to vs as yet.

Lo what is shewed vs in this streine. So then, seeing that God hath giuen vs such a proof of his mightie power in the person of Iob: let the same confirme vs so much the more. In the end, after that Iob hath spoken of the wrongs and reproches that were done vnto him, and complained of the seare wherewith he was seized: he directeth himself vnto God, and sayeth that although he turned himself vnto God to call upon him, he was not heard: yea and that when he hild on and rayted Gods leysure: God pittied him not, ne made any countenance to regard him, but which worse is, turned toward him as a cruel person. Surely this is the greuousest temptation that might bee. For if any aduersitie happen vnto vs, wee knowe that Gods setting of vs in this world, is with condicione that wee should be tempted diuers wayes, and martyred with many miseries, too the intent too shew vs that this transitorie lyfe is nothing woorth: and againe if we haue some sorowe, our frayltie beareth it, and if wee bee not stout ynough to comfort oureselues, we impaire it still to the feblenesse of our nature. But when we flee vnto God, and yet feele no ease at his hid, but rather that he dissembleth, so as the tyme seemeth to be lost in praying vntoo him: then are we at an vter extremitie. VVhy so? For it is a soueraigne remedie which Godgiueth vs, when he sayeth sayeth, come vnto mee when you are at an afterdeale, yea and as good as dead, and you shall perceyue that I haue power to quicken you. I recouer those that are quayled, I rayse vp them that are dead, and I fetch them out of their graues which were sunken in it, yea euen so depe as it might seeme that they shold neuer come out again. God therfore is liberal ynoch to promise vs that he wil neuer refuze our prayers: but come we to seke him, he shrinketh away and seemeth to be deaf. This is a temptation that is able to ouerwhelme vs vtterly. Therfore let vs marke well this text, how Iob meant to declare that he was come euen vnto hell, and that he was not chastised after the common fashiō, but that God (to outward appearāce) had so forsakē him, as he might cōclude, I haue hetherto bē deceiued in seruing God, & I haue beguiled myself in hoping that he wold helpe me and be my sauour: and why? For in deede he sayth that his seruants shal be afflicted, howbeit he calleth thē to him, saying, cal vpon me in the day of thy trouble, and I wil heare thee, and thou shalt gloriſie me for the fame. Thē ought we to hope for life eue in death, through his power. For behold, God openeth vs the gate when he sayth that he is nere al those which cal vpō him in truth.

But now (faith Iob) if I seeke thee I find thee not, if I call vpon thee thou ansWEREST me not, I knock and the gate is still kept shut: VVhy sayth he so? For a mā might first demād whether God hath not performed the said promise which he made to al the faithful, of being nere to al those which call vpon him. For although those texts were not yet writte: yet did not God cease to haue pitie vpō his cōtinually. Howbeit in causing thē to be written afterward, he had declared what a one he is, and what a one he hath always shewed himself to be. Then if Iob had lost his labour in praying vnto God: these promises shoud haue ben false, that God wil be nere vnto all those that cal vpō him in truth: and that he will heare all those that call vpon him, and graunt whatsoeuer is asked him in the name of

Job. 15.c. 16. our Lord Iesus Christ: yea and that he wil be ready to succour vs before we open our mouth. But let vs marke wel, & 16.c. 23. that although Iob did not as then perceue that God wold

Ezai. 65. d. succour him: yet notwithstanding he knew it in the end, &

24. God also made him to feele it, according as we see eue by that which is come to passe. Let vs marke I say that wee must not judge of Gods helpe, according to euery momēt of time. For that were to great a restrayning of it: but wee must tary the end, and though we see that our Lord openeth not his eares to our requests, yet shall the end of our afflictions be always happy, if we continue in calling vpon him. So then howsoeuer the world go with vs: let vs not surmize that he wil not heare vs whē we besech him. For

1. Sam. 8. d. why? we see what happened vnto Iob, when he sayth they shal cry and not be heard, it is a threatening that cā light vpon none, but the vnbeleuers. For if wee cry, namely in

18. & 2. Sa. 22.d. 42. faith and hope: it is certain that the promise which was spokē of shal be vnfailable. But forasmuch as the crying of

Ier. 11. b. 12. the faultheſſe is but a howling and roaring without any trust in God: and that although they know that without him they be but forlorne & fordone, yet they set not their minds vpō him: therfore they are not heard. VVherefore syth we see this temptation of crying and not being heard did light vpō Iob: let vs cōclude that if God make not coutenāce to heare vs, it is not for that he reiecht our prayers or passeth not for thē: but he holdeth aloof to make vs cōtinue in praiere. For it is not enough to haue praied once, and to haue said, alas lord wilt thou not pity mee? But we must hold out in it, and if he delay, wee must not cease to passe yet stil further, vntill we know that he hath heard vs. Furthermore let vs mark wel, that althogh god pretēd not to heare our prayers: yet notwithstanding he sheweth that he heareth thē. And that it is so: behold, Iob who complai-neth that he cried & was not heard, had ben vtterly ouerwhelmed if our Lord had not heard his request: howbeit that he perceiued it not, and thus yee see how our Lord worketh oftētimes in vs, and yet to our imaginatiō we cā-not discerne that he helpeth vs, and why? For if we stand scanning after what maner God helpeth vs, it entreth not into our vnderstāding. VVhy? for we be rude and grosse, neuertheleſſe our lord sheweth vs in time, that he ceassed 10 not to be neere vs, eue when we thought he had forsaken vs. And although his neerenesse were secret: Yet ceassed he not to make his power droppe down into vs cōtinually.

So then let vs inure ourſelues with these temptations: namely, that whē we pray vnto God in our troubles, and feeble no ease but, rather that the mischeif increaseth, & that God wheteth himself against vs, to greue vs the more when we seeke vnto him: we must not therfore be out of hope, but tarry his leysure paciently, and say: Truth Lord, this battayle is right sore: But what for that?
Seing that Iob which was a weake man as wee bee, hath passed that way: let vs pray God to strengthen vs by his holy spirit. For the grace which he shewed to Iob at that time, and to Dauid in his time, and to all the rest of the faythfull in their tymes: is not abated at this day. Ye see then that it behoueth vs to fight till we haue fully gotten the vpper hand of this temptation which is greatest of all others: which is, when we call vpō God and are not herd.
But there is yet more when Iob sayth, thou hast turned thy self agaynst me, and art become as though thou wert cruel.
By this saying hee meeneth not only that he was not deliuered from his miseries and aduersities, nor eased of them: bnt also that the fire seemed to be the more kindled, that the gulfes seemed to open the wyder, and (to be short) that he appayred his cage by calling vpon God, as though he did put God in mynd too punish him the more. You may see now, that it is a greate temptation for a man to pray in his calamitie and not to be herd: and as Iob hath felt that, so may we also oftentymes feele it. But it is a farre greater greef when we looke to neere vpon it 40 (that is to say) when our calling vpon God doeth so little attayle vs, as it seemeth rather to prouoke him more, and that our so dooing maketh him the feerer against vs. How so? As thus: ye be importunate vpon mee, and I will giue you as much as you are able to beare: my rod-des were light before, I did but as it were tick you with my little finger: but now I will lay on you with mayne stroakes, I will drawe my sword and beate you downe to the ground. It seemeth then erewhyles that we gayne nothing by praying, but only put god in mind to be more rough and sharp with vs, and to vex vs the more, and to make our afflictions the greuouſer, and to excede so farre asto consume vs vtterly. Lo what shall seeme vnto the faithful, as every one of vs shall find in himself. But what is to be done herevpon? let vs marke well how it is declared here by Iob, that we must not think it strange whē God listeth to try our faith after that sort, nor say that we faynt, and that the miserie shall but increase by it. For although he heare vs not at the first, but pretend to be as yet still more stirred against vs: yet notwithstanding although ſuch things come in our mynd, let vs trust that he will ſuccour vs, and that according as our troubles increase: ſo also he will ſuccour vs in ſuch ſort, as he will not ſuffer vs to quayle. Then ſhall we be continually upheld by his hand, howbeit after an vñknowne maner: and when he ſhall haue thoroughly exerciſed our faith, he will make vs to feele, that he was not alienated from vs when he afflieted vs. Thus yee ſee how it behoueth vs to practise this ſentence, to the end that if wee ſeeme not to be heard, we may not faint, nor be dismayed and overcome, but hold out to the uttermost, whatsoeuer temptation God sendeth vs. Yea and though wee see death present before our eyes, insomuch that we be as it were drowned in the gulf of hell: yet let vs not doubt, but that like as our good God heard his servant Job: so also in the end he wil give a good and happy issue to all our aduersities.

Now let vs fall downe before the face of our good God with acknowledgement of our faults, praying him to touche vs in such wise, as we may turne to him with true repenteance, and that by being exercised in the manifold wants, miseries, and afflictions that linger vpon

vs in this temporall life, we may be rightly humbled vnder his obediēce, to giue ourselues wholy to his seruice, and to put ourselues intoo his hand, acknowledging that he hath all power and auctoritie ouer vs: and that in the middest of all the distresses wherewith we be combred, it may please him so to assuage all our greeves by the grace of his holy spirit, as wee may still reioyce in him, and alwayes trust in his goodnessse, euē till he haue deliuered vs from all the necessities and miseries of this mortall life, and called vs to his heauenly rest. That it may please him to graunt this grace, not only to vs, but also to al people and nations &c.

The cx. Sermon, which is the third vpon the xxx. Chapter.

21. Thou art become cruel vnto me, and hast caught mee vp vwith the force of thy hand.
22. Thou hast lifted mee vp aboue the vynd, and caused me to ryde vpon it, and made my vvit to fayle.
23. I knovv that thou vvilt put mee into the graue, in the house appointed for all that liue.
24. Yet shall none stretch out their hand thither, although many cry in their affliction.
25. Haue not I vvept vwith such as had hard dayes, and hath not my soule bē sory for the poore?
26. I haue looked for good, and euill is come vpon mee, I vvayted for lyght and behold here is ddarkenesse.
27. My bovvels boyle, and there is no rest in the tyme of the aduersitie that hath caught holde of mee.
28. I go mourning, and cry out in the congregation.
29. I am as it vvere a brother to dragons, and a companion to Estriges.
30. My skin is become black vpon mee, and my bones are dried vp.
31. My harp is turned to vveeping, and myne organs to the voice of lamenting.
